Dr. Ming Tsuang, Chief of Psychiatry at the West Roxbury (MA) VA Medical Center, testified that, although a high percentage of VA bed days were devoted to veterans with psychiatric problems, psychiatric services within the VA have been "traditionally understaffed and underfunded * * * and that recruiting (VA psychiatrists) is getting more difficult." Dr. Tsuang also stated that MIRECC's would "have a positive influence far beyond their proportionate cost, in view of their high visibility and their potential for attracting 'critical masses' of scientists and clinicians to work intensively on the mental health care issues confronting the VA."

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 86

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. MENTAL ILLNESS RESEARCH, EDUCATION, AND CLINICAL CENTERS.

Section 4101 of title 38, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(g)(1) The purposes of this subsection are (A) to improve and expand the capability of the Department of Veterans' Affairs health-care facilities to respond with the most effective and appropriate services possible to the needs of veterans suffering from mental illness, especially from service-related conditions, and (B) to advance scientific knowledge regarding mental illness, especially service-related conditions, and regarding such needs and the methods of meeting them by facilitating higher quality care for eligible veterans suffering from mental illness, especially from service-related conditions, through research, the education and training of health personnel in the provision of health care to such veterans, and the development of improved models of clinical services for eligible veterans suffering from mental illness.

"(2)(A) In order to carry out the purposes of this subsection, the Secretary, upon the recommendation of the Chief Medical Director and pursuant to the provisions of this subsection, shall designate not more than five health-care facilities of the Department of Veterans' Affairs (at least one of which shall be designated before July 1, 1990) as the locations for centers of mental illness research, education, and clinical activities and (subject to the appropriation of sufficient funds for such purpose) shall establish and operate such centers at such locations in accordance with this subsection.

"(B) In designating facilities as the locations for centers under subparagraph (A) of this paragraph, the Secretary, upon the recommendation of the Chief Medical Director, shall ensure appropriate geographic distribution of such facilities.

"(C) The Secretary may not designate any health-care facility as a location for a center under subparagraph (A) of this paragraph unless the Secretary, upon the recommendation of the Chief Medical Director, determines that the facility has (or may reasonably be anticipated to develop)—

"(i) with an accredited medical school which provides education and training in psychiatry and with which such facility is affiliated, an arrangement under which residents receive education and training in psychiatry through regular rotation through such center so as to provide such residents with training in the diagnosis and treatment of mental illness;

"(ii) with an accredited graduate school of psychology which provides education and training in clinical or counseling psychology or both and with which the facility is affiliated, an arrangement under which students receive education and training in clinical or counseling psychology or both through regular rotation through such center so as to provide such students with training in the diagnosis and treatment of mental illness;

"(iii) an arrangement under which nursing, social work or other allied health personnel receive training and education in mental health care through regular rotation through such facility;

"(iv) the ability to attract the participation of scientists who are capable of ingenuity and creativity in research into the causes, treatment, and prevention of mental illness and into models for furnishing care and treatment to veterans suffering from mental illness;

"(v) a policymaking advisory committee composed of appropriate mental health care and research representatives of the facility and of the affiliated school or schools to advise the directors of such facility and such center on policy matters pertaining to the activities of such center during the period of the operation of such center; and

"(vi) the capability to conduct effectively evaluations of the activities of such center.

"(3) There are authorized to be appropriated for the basic support of the research and education and training activities of the centers established pursuant to paragraph (1) of this subsection $3,125,000 for fiscal year 1990 and $6,250,000 for each of the next three fiscal years. The Chief Medical Director shall allocate to such centers from other funds appropriated generally for the Department of Veterans' Affairs medical care account and medical and prosthetics research account such amounts as the Chief Medical Director determines appropriate.

"(4) Activities of clinical and scientific investigation at each center shall be eligible to compete for the award of funding from funds appropriated for the Department of Veterans Affairs' medical and prosthetics research account and shall receive priority in the award of funding from such account insofar as funds are awarded to projects for mental illness.

"(5) The Chief Medical Director shall ensure that research activities carried out through such centers include an appropriate emphasis on the psychosocial dimension of mental illness and on models for furnishing care and treatment to veterans suffering from mental illness.

"(6) The Chief Medical Director shall ensure that useful information produced by the research, education, and training, and clinical activities of such centers is disseminated throughout the Veterans Health Services and Research Administration through the development of programs of continuing medical and related education provided through regional medical education centers under subchapter II of Chapter 73 and other means.

"(7) The official within the Central Office of the Veterans Health Services and Research Administration responsible for mental health and behavioral sciences matters shall be responsible for the supervision of the operation of the centers established pursuant to paragraph (1) of this subsection.".

SEC. 2. REPORTS.

Not later than February 1 of each of 1991, 1992, and 1993, the Secretary of Veterans Affairs shall submit to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and House of Representatives a report on the experience during the prior fiscal year under the centers established pursuant to the amendment made by subsection (a). Each such report shall contain—

(1) descriptions of (A) activities carried out at each center and the funding provided for such activities, (B) the advances made at each center in research, education and training, and clinical activities, and (C) the efforts to disseminate throughout the Veterans Health Services and Research Administration useful information produced by such activities; and

(2) the Secretary's evaluations of the effectiveness of the centers in fulfilling the purposes of subsection (g) of section 4101 of title 38, United States Code, as added by subsection (a).

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, I am most pleased to be an original cosponsor of Senator CRANSTON's bill which would require the Administrator of Veterans's Affairs, upon the recommendation of the Chief Medical Director, to designate not more than 5 VA medical centers as the locations for mental illness research, education, and clinical activities centers [MIRECC's]. These facilities would serve as "centers of excellence" for mental illness treatment, research, and education.

I also joined with Senator CRANSTON as a cosponsor of similar legislation last year. On August 1, 1988, the Committee on Veterans' Affairs favorably reported S. 2011 to the Senate which contained the aforementioned legislation. (Information on this provision can be found in S. Rept. 100-439, p. 129-132.) The Senate passed S. 2011 as an amendment in the nature of a substitute to H.R. 4741 on October 18, 1988. Unfortunately, the House did not accept this provision and, therefore, it was not enacted into law last year.

Mr. President, I applaud Senator CRANSTON for his continued interest in improving the VA's ability to address the needs of veterans with mental illnesses. I support this effort to ensure that the VA serve as a leader in mental illness research and treatment. I urge my colleagues in the Senate to join as cosponsors of this important legislation.

I thank the Chair.

S. 87. A bill to amend title 18 to limit the application of the exclusionary rule; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

EXCLUSIONARY RULE LIMITATION ACT OF 1989

● Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, today, I rise to introduce a bill which would codify the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule that has been recognized by the Supreme Court.

The legislation that I am offering today is similar to a measure that overwhelmingly passed the Senate by a vote of 63 to 24 in the 98th Congress. I reintroduced that bill in the 99th and 100th Congresses. Although the House passed similar legislation during the 100th Congress by a vote of 259 to 134, no action was taken in the Senate.

The exclusionary rule is a judicially created remedy for violations by law enforcement officers of the fourth amendment prohibition against illegal searches and seizures. More simply, if evidence is obtained by a law enforcement officer in violation of the fourth amendment then that evidence will be excluded in a criminal trial. The exclusionary rule is an important principle since it helps to insure that law enforcement officers should not be allowed to randomly enter our homes or private places and search without just cause.

However, since the creation of the exclusionary rule remedy in 1914, in Weeks versus California, the Supreme Court has recognized exceptions when the exclusionary rule should not apply. This measure addresses one of those exceptions. This legislation codifies the Court's holding in United States versus Leon to provide that evidence obtained pursuant to a warrant which is later found to be defective will not be excluded if the law enforcement officer acted in objective good faith. Objective good faith would be established if the circumstances surrounding the search justify an objectively reasonable belief that it was in conformity with the fourth amendment. This bill also extends this exception to warrantless searches.

Mr. President, the bill that I am introducing today neither authorizes nor encourages law enforcement officers to disregard the fourth amendment and randomly search a person's home. What it does is address the legal loophole that often allows a criminal to go free, irrespective of guilt or innocence, when evidence crucial to a criminal proceeding is suppressed. The goal of the exclusionary rule is to deter law enforcement conduct that violates the fourth amendment. Therefore, if a law enforcement officer's conduct in executing a search is in conformance with the fourth amendment, applying the exclusionary rule does not serve as a deterrent. It should be noted that the determination as to whether the officer conducted the search in objective good faith would be made by the Court based on the circumstances surrounding the search. Of course if the officer's conduct did not exhibit objective good faith, the evidence would not be allowed. This amendment is a reasonable extension of the exception currently recognized by the Supreme Court.

We are well aware of the fact that the exclusion of evidence most often results in the release of the accused. This is a high price to pay for nonconstitutional violations. Therefore, I think it wise to preclude the use of the exclusionary rule in these situations unless Congress so provides. This legislation will aid in the apprehension and prosecution of criminals without sacrificing the principles of the fourth amendment. I strongly urge my colleagues to support this vital measure and hope that we will act without delay.

I ask unanimous consent that the full text of this bill be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 87

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Exclusionary Rule Limitation Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. (a) Chapter 223 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding the following two sections:

"§ 3508. Limitation of the fourth amendment exclusionary rule

"Evidence which is obtained as a result of a search or seizure shall not be excluded in a proceeding in a court of the United States on the ground that the search or seizure was in violation of the fourth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, if the search or seizure was undertaken in an objectively reasonable belief that it was in conformity with the fourth amendment. A showing that evidence was obtained pursuant to and within the scope of a warrant constitutes prima facie evidence of such a reasonable belief, unless the warrant was obtained through intentional and material misrepresentation.

"§ 3509. General limitation of the exclusionary rule

"Except as specifically provided by statute or rule of procedure, evidence which is otherwise admissible shall not be excluded in a proceeding in a court of the United States on the ground that the evidence was obtained in violation of a statute or rule of procedure, or of a regulation issued pursuant thereto.".

(b) The table of sections of chapter 223 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof:

"3508. Limitation of the fourth amendment exclusionary rule.
"3509. General limitation of the exclusionary rule.".●

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my distinguished colleague from South Carolina, Senator THURMOND, as an original cosponsor of a bill to codify the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule.

In the 1984 case United States versus Leon the Supreme Court articulated what has become known as the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule. Simply stated, the exception vitiates the exclusionary rule's impact in situations where facially valid searches turn out not to accord with fourth amendment probable cause requirements. This measure would codify the Leon standard and its progeny.

The purpose of the exclusionary rule is to deter law enforcement officers from violating the fourth amendment rights of crime suspects. By suppressing from trial illegally obtained evidence, law enforcement authorities are precluded from profiting from their illegal conduct. The rule does not seek to reward the accused at whose trial evidence is suppressed, rather it is to demonstrate the uselessness of illegal searches and seizures and deter such conduct in the future.

Given the Supreme Court's rationale for the exclusionary rule, it is plain why a good faith exception is necessary, as well as logically consistent. Since deterrence is effective primarily against international conduct, and to a lesser extent reckless conduct, the exclusionary rule must be limited to such situations. For instance, if an officer believes, with objective good faith, that the search or seizure he is conducting comports with fourth amendment requirements, if in fact it does not, no amount of deterrence will affect his conduct. Thus the exclusionary rule cannot rationally control in such situations.

If it would be allowed to control, the rule will engender contempt for the law and cynicism for the criminal justice system. Law enforcement officers would be much less inclined to fastidiously observe fourth amendment commands and criminals would further flout the law.

As the Leon court made clear, however, the good faith exception must not be allowed to swallow the exclusionary rule. Codification of the Leon standard would in no way diminish our concern for the rights of the accused. It would be simply a recognition of the need to balance the rights of the accused with the demands of the criminal justice system. For too long, prior to Leon, palpably guilty defendants have been set free to prey on our communities despite the good faith compliance by police officers with fourth amendment precepts. This must end.

I ask my colleagues to join us as a cosponsor and to help enact this needed initiative.

By Mr. THURMOND (for himself, Mr. HATCH, Mr. D'AMATO, Mr. HELMS, Mr. WILSON, Mr. GRASSLEY, Mr. DECONCINI, Mr. SIMPSON, and Mr. DOMENICI):

S. 88. A bill to reform procedures for collateral review of criminal judgments, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REFORM OF FEDERAL INTERVENTION ON STATE PROCEEDINGS ACT OF 1989

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, the bill I am introducing today would reform Federal habeas corpus and collateral attack procedures. This legislation will minimize Federal judicial interference with State criminal convictions, and deal with common abuses typical of habeas prisoner petitions. In the 97th Congress, the Senate passed a bill identical to the one I am introducing today by a vote of 67 to 9. I introduced that bill in the 98th, 99th and 100th Congresses and no action was taken on these bills. However, as a part of the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988, the Senate did adopt procedures for the expedited consideration of habeas corpus reform legislation. After Congress receives the report and recommendations of the Special Committee on Habeas Corpus Review of Capital Sentences, which is chaired by Justice Lewis Powell, the Senate will consider habeas reform legislation. The House agreed to give fair and expeditious consideration to the report and legislation.

This bill proposes amendments to various sections of chapter 153 of title 28 of the United States Code, and a related rule of appellate procedure. Its objectives are to establish a more appropriate scope and function for Federal habeas corpus for State prisoners, accord more appropriate weight to State procedures in criminal adjudication, improve the efficiency of habeas corpus litigation and appellate review of such litigation, and effect certain corresponding improvements in the operation of collateral remedies for Federal prisoners. The proposed amendments would change the operation of Federal collateral remedies in several respects.

First, the proposed amendments would preclude granting relief with respect to matters that have been full and fairly adjudicated in State proceedings. This important change would enhance the finality of State criminal adjudications and avoid duplicative litigation of claims that have already been adequately considered and decided.

Second, the proposed amendments would generally bar the consideration of claims that have not been properly raised in State proceedings, provided the State has afforded the petitioner an opportunity, consistent with the requirements of Federal law, to raise his claims in the State proceedings.

Third, the proposed amendments would establish a 1-year limitation period for the filing of habeas corpus petitions by State's prisoners, which would generally run from the time the prisoner exhausts his State remedies. This limitation period would bar petitions in cases in which the passage of time has made reliable adjudication of the petitioner's claim, or retrial of the petitioner, difficult or impossible. The limitation period would also advance the policies supporting the finality and repose in criminal adjudication.

Fourth, the proposed legislation would clearly state that a Federal habeas court can deny a petition on the merits without requiring prior exhaustion of State remedies. This would avoid the waste of judicial resources that result when a person presenting a frivolous petition is sent back to the State system to exhaust State remedies.

Fifth, the proposed amendments would vest in the judges of the courts of appeals exclusive authority to issue certificates of probable cause for appeal in habeas corpus proceedings. This would entrust the decision concerning the propriety of an appeal to the judges who are in the best position to determine if there is a realistic likelihood for reversal. It would also avoid duplicative consideration of the suitability of a case for appeal, first by a district judge and then by a circuit judge.

Finally, the proposed amendments would make similar changes in the law governing applications for collateral relief by Federal prisoners pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 2255 in the areas of appeal, procedural, default, and time limitation.

Federal habeas corpus and collateral attack procedures are in dire need of reform. This is evidenced by the glut of habeas petitions in the Federal system and by the Supreme Court's creation of the Special Committee. The Senate should consider legislation to resolve this problem.

I ask unanimous consent that the full text of this bill be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 88

SEC. 2. Section 2244 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"(d) When a person in custody pursuant to the judgment of a State court fails to raise a claim in State proceedings at the time or in the manner required by State rules of procedure, the claim shall not be entertained in an application for a writ of habeas corpus unless actual prejudice resulted to the applicant from the alleged denial of the Federal right asserted and—

"(1) the failure to raise the claim properly or to have it heard in State proceedings was the result of State action in violation of the Constitution or laws of the United States;

"(2) the Federal right asserted was newly recognized by the Supreme Court subsequent to the procedural default and is retroactively applicable; or

"(3) the factual predicate of the claim could not have been discovered through the exercise of reasonable diligence prior to the procedural default.

"(e) A one-year period of limitation shall apply to an application for a writ of habeas corpus by a person in custody pursuant to the judgment of a State court. The limitation period shall run from the latest of the following times:

"(1) the time at which State remedies are exhausted;

"(2) the time at which the impediment to filing an application created by State action in violation of the Constitution or laws of the United States is removed, where the applicant was prevented from filing by such State action;

"(3) the time at which the Federal right asserted was initially recognized by the Supreme Court, where the right has been newly recognized by the Court and is retroactively applicable; or

"(4) the time at which the factual predicate of the claim or claims presented could have been discovered through the exercise of reasonable diligence.".

SEC. 3. Section 2253 of title 28, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"§ 2253. Appeal

"In a habeas corpus proceeding or a proceeding under section 2255 of this title before a circuit or district judge, the final order shall be subject to review, on appeal, by the court of appeals for the circuit where the proceeding is had.

"There shall be no right of appeal from such an order in a proceeding to test the validity of a warrant to remove, to another district or place for commitment or trial, a person charged with a criminal offense against the United States, or to test the validity of his detention pending removal proceedings.

"An appeal may not be taken to the court of appeals from the final order in a habeas corpus proceeding where the detention complained of arises out of process issued by a State court, or from the final order in a proceeding under section 2255 of this title, unless a circuit justice or judge issues a certificate of probable cause.".

"RULE 22.

"HABEAS CORPUS AND § 2255 PROCEEDINGS

"(a) Application for an Original Writ of Habeas Corpus. An application for a writ of habeas corpus shall be made to the appropriate district court. If application is made to a circuit judge, the application will ordinarily be transferred to the appropriate district court. If an application is made to or transferred to the district court and denied, renewal of the application before a circuit judge is not favored; the proper remedy is by appeal to the court of appeals from the order of the district court denying the writ.

"(b) Necessity of Certificate of Probable Cause for Appeal. In a habeas corpus proceeding in which the detention complained of arises out of process issued by a State court, and in a motion proceeding pursuant to section 2255 of title 28, United States Code, an appeal by the applicant or movant may not proceed unless a circuit judge issues a certificate of probable cause. If a request for a certificate of probable cause is addressed to the court of appeals, it shall be deemed addressed to the judges thereof and shall be considered by a circuit judge or judges as the court deems appropriate. If no express request for a certificate is filed, the notice of appeal shall be deemed to constitute a request addressed to the judges of the court of appeals. If an appeal is taken by a State or the government or its representative, a certificate of probable cause is not required.".

SEC. 5. Section 2254 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by redesignating subsections "(e)" and "(f)" as subsections "(f)" and "(g)", respectively, and is further amended—

(a) by amending subsection (b) to read as follows:

"(b) An application for a writ of habeas corpus in behalf of a person in custody pursuant to the judgment of a State court shall not be granted unless it appears that the applicant has exhausted the remedies available in the courts of the State, or that there is either an absence of available State corrective process or the existence of circumstances rendering such process ineffective to protect the rights of the applicant. An application may be denied on the merits notwithstanding the failure of the applicant to exhaust the remedies available in the courts of the States.";

(b) by redesignating subsection "(d)" as subsection "(e)", and amending it to read as follows:

"(e) In a proceeding instituted by an application for a writ of habeas corpus by a person in custody pursuant to the judgment of a State court, a full and fair determination of a factual issue made in the case by a State court shall be presumed to be correct. The applicant shall have the burden of rebutting this presumption by clear and convincing evidence."; and

(c) by adding a new subsection (d) reading as follows:

"(d) An application for a writ of habeas corpus in behalf of a person in custody pursuant to the judgment of a State court shall not be granted with respect to any claim that has been fully anf fairly adjudicated in State proceedings.".

SEC. 6. Section 2255 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by deleting the second paragraph and the penultimate paragraph thereof, and by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"When a person fails to raise a claim at the time or in the manner required by Federal rules of procedure, the claim shall not be entertained in a motion under this section unless actual prejudice resulted to the movant from the alleged denial of the right asserted and—

"(1) the failure to raise the claim properly, or to have it heard, was the result of governmental action in violation of the Constitution or laws of the United States;

"(2) the right asserted was newly recognized by the Supreme Court subsequent to the procedural default and is retroactively applicable; or

"(3) the factual predicate of the claim could not have been discovered through the exercise of reasonable diligence prior to the procedural default.

"A two-year period of limitation shall apply to a motion under this section. The limitation period shall run from the latest of the following times:

"(1) the time at which the judgment of conviction becomes final;

"(2) the time at which the impediment to making a motion created by governmental action in violation of the Constitution or laws of the United States is removed, where the movant was prevented from making a motion by such governmental action;

"(3) the time at which the right asserted was initially recognized by the Supreme Court, where the right has been newly recognized by the Court and is retroactively applicable; or

"(4) the time at which the factual predicate of the claim or claims presented could have been discovered through the exercise of reasonable diligence.".

By Mr. SYMMS (for himself, Mr. BOSCHWITZ, Mr. GRASSLEY, Mr. HELMS, Mr. KASTEN, Mr. GARN, Mrs. KASSEBAUM, Mr. DOLE, Mr. PRESSLER, Mr. ARMSTRONG, and Mr. COCHRAN):

S. 89. A bill to delay for 1 year the effective date for section 89 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986; to the Committee on Finance.

DELAY IN EFFECTIVE DATE OF CERTAIN TAX PROVISIONS

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I am introducing a bill to delay for 1 year the implementation of a provision of the Tax Reform Act of 1986 that must, upon further consideration, be considered as perhaps the greatest misconception of how to achieve an otherwise praiseworthy objective that this Congress has attempted.

Section 89 of the Internal Revenue Code, which directs employers with nondiscrimination rules for welfare plans and overhauls the rules, has missed sorely the intent and desire of this body to provide equal benefits for all employees. The Department of Treasury report, due last November, on the administration of these new changes has failed to be completed as of today. I ask my colleagues, how can we proceed with this program when no ground rules have been created?

Under section 89, employers would be required to demonstrate through a group of complicated tests, that their benefit programs do not discriminate against "nonhighly compensated" employees. Employers also must ensure equal use of the program by all employees. Section 89 is just another step in the direction of federally mandated, employer-provided benefits.

In addition to the overindulgence of Federal regulations, we must remember that increased Government interference costs businesses thousands of dollars to administer in order to comply with section 89. The end result is that the cost-conscious business will take a position that will lead it to either dropping plans or accepting penalties.

Most employers wish to provide certain benefits to all employees. It would be a tragedy if section 89, designed to help certain employers, turns around and bites them. I am introducing legislation that will postpone this ruling for 1 year, allowing us to study it further and decide if we are on the right track with this legislation. We must postpone it, if for no other reason than to send a message to the business community not to drop their benefit programs and wait until a broader understanding of the implications of section 89 are understood.

Mr. President, in conclusion I want to add that there is a spurious revenue estimate that has come to be associated with this section 89 provision. It is being argued by opponents of this reasonable 1-year delay that something like $300 million in revenue will be lost if we postpone it.

This estimate is complete and utter nonsense, Mr. President, because the law won't cost one cent of tax money that was paid last year! The only reason the estimators can claim that it will cost money this year is because it was enacted in 1986, and therefore the current services baseline includes a spurious and unsubstantiated number that will disappear if section 89 is postponed until 1990—or eliminated altogether as some other Senators would like.

I claim that the regulatory burden of section 89 will cost the gross national product of the United States at least $900 million. The compliance burden is at least that great! At a marginal tax rate of 34 percent, which is the marginal tax rate of U.S. corporate employers, the loss of $900 million in GNP will cost the Treasury $306 million. I claim that the revenue effects of postponing section 89 for 1 year are zero, and repealing it altogether would be zero as well.

Finally, Mr. President, I would ask unanimous consent to have reprinted in the RECORD an article from the current issue of Nation's Business magazine. The article is "Government Gone Crazy" by Roger Thompson.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GOVERNMENT GONE CRAZY

(By Roger Thompson)

It was the end of another long day for Steven Ferruggia, whose mastery of a new, perversely complex federal benefits law has generated more consulting business than he can comfortably handle. His students—42 business owners, benefits managers, lawyers, and consultants—had paid $195 apiece for an all-day workshop at Boston's Logan Airport Hilton. Participants had flown in from across New England and from as far away as Houston.

Ferruggia and two colleagues from New York-based Buck Consultants performed feats of verbal alchemy, laying out in clear English what Congress had cloaked in turgid prose. But no amount of explaining would relieve the sense of quiet desperation that pervaded the room. Puzzled looks and furrowed brows revealed by expression what went unspoken: This time, Congress had gone too far.

"I think this law will cause a lot of small employers to dump their benefit plans," Ferruggia said in a private moment after the workshop. "It's big government gone crazy," said Edward Maguire, a consultant with Sapers & Wallack in Cambridge, Mass.

The law in question is Section 89 of the federal tax code, one of several provisions that affect employee benefits and were added by the 1986 Tax Reform Act but were not effective until Jan. 1, 1989. Section 89 sets stiff tax penalties for employer-paid health insurance, life insurance, and other nonpension employee benefit plans that favor higher-paid workers.

Businesses that discriminate in favor of higher-paid workers have two choices: broaden and/or extend coverage to lower-paid workers or report the "discriminatory" portion of the higher-paid workers' benefits as taxable income.

Also effective Jan. 1 was another tax-law change that, while it has not drawn as much criticism as Section 89, could prove no less burdensome to some employers. The change requires employer-provided retirement plans—including pension, profit-sharing, and so-called 401(k) savings plans—to meet rigid tests for fairness to workers who are not in the "highly paid" category defined in the law. Failure to comply with minimum coverage and participation requirements could result in loss of tax-favored status for both the plan sponsor and the plan participants.

Taken together, the new requirements imposed by Section 89 and the new pension-plan rules represent Congress' deepest penetration yet in to the employer-provided benefits system. Experts say the two provisions encompass more changes and affect more plans than even the sweeping 1974 Employee Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA). That law placing intricate controls on employer-provided pension plans marked Congress' first concentrated attempt to regulate private-sector employee benefits. Since then, the lawmakers have amended and expanded employee-benefits laws almost annually, often to the confusion and dismay of employers.

In enacting Section 89, Congress said its goal was the extension of benefits, especially health insurance, to millions of lower-income workers who are inadequately covered or not covered at all. Under the law, part-time employees who work as few as 17.5 hours a week must be included in calculations to determine whether plans are discriminatory.

The congressional Joint Committee on Taxation explained its intent this way: "The [Section 89] non-discrimination rules should require employers to cover non-highly compensated employees to an extent comparable to the coverage of highly compensated employees."

But those who are familiar with Section 89 contend that it will have the opposite effect. "It will tend to decrease flexibility and increase administrative costs," says Frederick J. Krebs, manager of business and government policy for the U.S. Chamber of Commerce. "The effect will be fewer benefits and fewer businesses offering benefits."

"When you look at the cost of compliance, it's just not worth it," says Garry Jerome, a consultant with Mercer Meidinger Hansen Inc., in Philadelphia.

Many major industrial companies expect to spend more than $1 million on compliance costs. An employer with 500 workers can expect to pay upwards of $25,000 for a consultant. A firm with 200 workers could pay $10,000 or more. Small companies may have trouble finding advice for less than $1,000.

The high price of compliance is driven by the law's complexity. Section 89 is an administrative nightmare because it takes what appears to be a simple health plan—like those offered by many small companies—and multiplies it into several plans for testing purposes. Take a medical plan that offers coverage for single workers, workers with children, and workers with spouses, with each option offering two different deductibles. Under Section 89, that plan becomes six plans, and each must meet the non-discrimination tests. Some major corporations with multiple plans and various benefit packages will have hundreds of plans to test.

Because the chances of failure to comply increase with the number of options available to employees, many employers will feel pressure to cut back on choices now available and steer clear of providing new ones.

The enormous complexity of Section 89 has prompted its critics to speculate that Congress was more interested in raising revenue than expanding benefits. "It's really a revenue statute dressed up to look like a do-gooder statute," says Howard C. Weizmann, executive director for the Association of Private Pension and Welfare Plans.

The joint tax committee estimates that Section 89 will net about $300 million a year in revenue derived largely from treating a portion of higher-paid employees' benefits as taxable income. But Congress may have greatly underestimated the law's impact for two reasons.

First, lawmakers may have been too optimistic about the law's ability to persuade employers to extend benefits to lower-paid employees. Kent A. Mason, the law's chief architect, told a health-care seminar in December that in most cases, employers will count any discriminatory excess benefits as income to highly paid workers and will "gross up" those employees' salaries—that is, increase their salaries to cover the newly taxable portion of benefits. "This option is much cheaper than extending benefits to low-paid workers," said Mason, who was counsel to the joint tax committee and now works for the Washington law firm of Caplin & Drysdale.

Second, widespread non-compliance would produce huge amounts in unanticipated tax penalties, warns Mary Hevener, a benefits attorney with the Washington law firm of Lee, Toomey & Kent. Employers who fail to comply with the non-discrimination rules will pay a tax penalty, calculated at the highest individual tax rate, on the benefits received by the highly compensated.

In addition, employees will be taxed on any benefits they receive if the employer fails to maintain a so-called qualified plan, which entails compliance with another set of rules similar to those already applied to pension plans.

Ferruggia and other consultants should be delighted about Section 89. Washington insiders regard it as a consultants' full-employment act. But consultants find themselves in the uncomfortable position of serving as shock troops for advancing a law that almost nobody can believe Congress actually passed.

Paty Haines, senior consultant in the Philadelphia office of the Coopers & Lybrand accounting and consulting firm, says the general reaction she gets from business audiences is, "I can't believe this is happening."

"I think if we are going to cause another American Revolution. Section 89 is it," says Thomas Veal, senior tax manager with Touche Ross and Co. in Washington. "If King George and Parliament had come up with anything like Section 89, it wouldn't have taken seven years to win the Revolutionary War."

In fact, section 89 slipped through the tax-reform process with little notice. "No one focused on benefits changes" in the 1986 tax-reform legislation, said a Senate aide. "They just sort of happened."

Now, many employers are dragging their feet on compliance, waiting for it to collapse under its own weight. "We are hearing from employers who are predicting that Congress will repeal Section 89 sometime in [1989] after the outcry [over its complexity] begins," says Ken Feltman, executive director of the Employee Council on Flexible Compensation. He estimates that 60 percent of all businesses, primarily small companies, have not yet heard about Section 89, making ignorance of the law a major obstacle to compliance.

While large and midsized firms typically are staffed to keep abreast of changes in benefits laws, many small firms don't have the facilities to do so.

Observers Donald Utter, owner of Medical Personnel Pool, in Madison, Wis.: "It's the one secret that the government has been able to keep. Almost every small-business person I mention it to doesn't know what I'm talking about."

But small-business owners shouldn't assume that Congress will come to the rescue. Section 89 has powerful friends on Capitol Hill, including the two key figures behind the 1986 Tax Reform Act—Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, and Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., ranking minority member of the Senate Finance Committee.

The law reflects a longstanding concern among many lawmakers that the federal government doesn't have enough control over who gets tax-exempt, employer-paid benefits, according to staffers on the tax-writing committees. The joint tax committee estimates that employer-provided health-care plans alone cost the government $32 billion a year in "lost" revenue.

That kind of money, Congress decided, should produce better social-policy results, namely health insurance for lower-paid workers. Section 89 was driven by the perception that many employers were giving their highest-paid employees generous benefits while giving their lower-paid employees less or nothing at all. Supporters of this view note that 52 percent of the 37 million Americans who have no health insurance either work full time or are members of families headed by full-time workers. Accordingly, Congress cracked its tax-policy whip, forcing employers to fall into line or risk losing a tax subsidy for highly paid workers. Said one congressional staff member who worked on the legislation: "Why should the government be satisfied that blue-collar workers are getting less than white-collar workers?"

Business owners generally have no quarrel with Congress' intent. It's the execution that has benefits managers throwing up their hands in frustration.

Most large and midsized companies have turned to outside consultants for assistance. Small firms may find they have no other choice, says Feltman, of the Employee Council on Flexible Compensation. "In the end, what we have is a technician's dream and a layman's nightmare," he adds, explaining that Congress made Section 89 "so complex that the traditional expert that the small-business owner has relied on, his insurance broker, is no longer an expert. Now he'll have to go to higher-priced talent: lawyers, accountants, and consultants."

Reed Creaser, secretary/treasurer for General Crane and Hoist Inc., in Richmond Hill, Ga., already knows what it's like to ask questions and get no answers. "I've asked several insurance companies to send me what they have on Section 89, but nobody has sent me anything yet. The individual agents seem to be as much in the dark as we are," he says.

Whether individual employers discriminate or not, the law puts the burden of proof on them. Collecting and analyzing the data needed on each employee frequently may cost more than correcting any discrimination that is found. In fact, an employer may sink thousands of dollars into data collection and analysis just to show that no discrimination exists.

Among the law's data requirements are those that compel employers to:

Identify the highly compensated and the non-highly compensated.

Determine who may be excluded from the tests.

Identify each benefit that must be tested.

Sort out the family status of employees for separate family coverage testing.

Determine the number of former employees subject to testing.

Determine whether parts of an organization can be tested as a separate line of business.

Once the information is assembled, it isn't enough to show that coverage was offered. Benefit plans will be judged by the percentage of employees who actually participate.

The Section 89 Coalition, a group of 190 associations and businesses, lobbied unsuccessfully last year for one-year delay in Section 89. The coalition's efforts were motivated in part by the Treasury Department's failure to produce regulations to implement the law. But Congress was in no mood to start chipping away at tax reform, especially when delay would add $300 million to the federal budget deficit.

The coalition met very heavy resistance from Rostenkowski," said Christine Hartoft, a legislative assistant with the Association of Private Pension and Welfare Plans. "He wasn't interested in anything that would make it look like tax reform was unraveling."

Nonetheless, the Technical and Miscellaneous Revenue Act of 1988, signed into law Nov. 11, did contain some of the coalition's recommendations for simplifying the law. Among them:

Employers may test their benefit plans for compliance with non-discrimination rules on one day of the year; they do not have to track each benefit choice by each employee for each day of the year.

Benefit plans will not fail the nondiscrimination tests simply because too many employees choose to be covered by their spouses's plans.

Companies with nine or fewer workers may phase in coverage for part-time employees, those who work at least 17.5 hours a week, over three years.

The latter two changes are major concessions to the concerns of small companies, says Ron Danilson, assistant director of group operations with the Principal Financial Group of Des Moines, Iowa. A 1988 company survey of 100 employers with fewer than 10 workers found that up to 70 percent would fail, primarily because of the initial participation requirements for parttimers and workers covered by a spouse's insurance plan.

But even with the changes, the law and the monumental problems it poses for employers remain basically intact. "To expect small business to understand Section 89 is absolutely ludicrous," says Danilson. Others who have studied the revisions still don't like what they see.

"It seems to me that if a company is considering putting in a health-care plan, and they run into this, they will just forget it," says Frank L. Mason, president of the Mason Corp., a Birmingham, Ala., manufacturer of metal building products.

"It's just too much of a burden to keep up with all the detail and still run a business," he adds. "Yor can just load a small-business wagon so full, and when you get beyond that, something has to give."

By Mr. THURMOND:

S. 90. A bill to provide for comprehensive reforms and to achieve greater equity in the compensation of attorneys pursuant to Federal statute in civil and administrative proceedings in which the United States, or a State or local government, is a party; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

THE LEGAL FEES EQUITY ACT OF 1989

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the Legal Fees Equity Act of 1989. This bill will modify the federally mandated attorney compensation schemes applicable in Federal administrative and judicial proceedings in which the United States, State, or local governments are parties. The purpose of the legislation is to provide a statutory framework for a more equitable balance in compensation for legal services rendered in litigation involving the government.

To accomplish this goal, the bill would set a $75 per hour maximum attorney fee and eliminate the use of bonuses and multipliers which escalate fee awards. This rate will provide a reasonable incentive sufficient to attract competent counsel in actions against the Government while limiting large fee awards.

Additionally, the bill allows recovery of attorney's fees only when the litigant has either prevailed on the merits or secured a favorable settlement agreement. This legislation limits the recovery of fees to work performed on issues in which the litigant prevailed. The court may reduce or deny the fee where the attorney has unreasonably protracted the litigation or performed services which were excessive with regard to the nature of the controversy.

Mr. President, I believe that this bill strikes a careful balance between the need to control escalating legal fees in suits against the Government and the need to attract competent counsel to represent litigants in these suits.

I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this important legislation and ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD following my remarks.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 90

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as "The Legal Fees Equity Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(A) Congress hereby finds and declares that—

(1) many Federal statutes authorize awards of attorneys' fees to be made to parties who prevail against the United States, or against State or local governments, in judicial and administrative proceedings;

(2) the failure to provide standards to guide courts and administrative bodies in awarding such fees has led to inconsistent interpretations of these Federal civil fee-shifting statutes, and in many instances to excessive awards of attorneys' fees under them;

(3) it is inappropriate for the Federal Government to impose on State and local governments the statutory requirement to pay awards of attorneys' fees without providing standards by which to make such awards;

(4) the limitation of $75 per hour prescribed by Congress for civil judicial and administrative proceedings under the Equal Access to Justice Act provides a reasonable and appropriate maximum hourly rate for the award of attorneys' fees against the United States, or against State or local governments, in judicial or administrative proceedings;

(5) it is inappropriate for awards of attorneys' fees to be made to parties who have prevailed on the merits of their complaint against the United States, or against State or local governments, in judicial or administrative proceedings;

(6) it is appropriate that parties in judicial or administrative proceedings against the United States, or against State or local governments, pay a reasonable portion of their attorneys's fees when monetary awards are recovered;

(7) statutory provisions are necessary to control the circumstances and conditions under which awards of attorneys' fees and related expenses or costs may be made against the United States, or against State or local governments, in judicial or administrative proceedings; and

(8) statutory amendments are also appropriate to limit the circumstances in which Federal agencies hire outside private counsel from litigation and the amounts at which such outside counsel can be paid.

(b) It is the purpose of this Act—

(1) to establish a uniform hourly rate that shall be the maximum compensation authorized to be awarded against the United States, or against State or local governments, in judicial or administrative proceedings to which any Federal fee-shifting statute applies;

(2) to require that awards of attorneys' fees against the United States, or against State or local governments, in judicial or administrative proceedings to which any Federal fee-shifting statute applies be made only to parties who have prevailed in the proceedings;

(3) to prescribe standards for the awarding of attorneys' fees and related expenses or costs against the United States, or against State or local governments, in judicial or administrative proceedings to which any Federal fee-shifting statute applies; and

(4) to authorize the Attorney General to promulgate regulations governing the circumstances in which Federal agencies can retain outside private counsel for litigation and to impose a uniform limit on the rates such counsel can be paid from appropriated funds.

SEC. 3. DEFINITIONS.

For the purpose of this Act—

(1) "attorneys' fees" means fees attributable to professional legal services performed by a person, or persons, licensed to practice law (but shall not include services by pro se claimants), or to services by enrolled tax practitioners with respect to proceedings before the United States Tax Court, including overhead expenses, as defined in this Act, but not including related expenses;

(2) "fee-shifting statute" means any Federal statute that provides for recovery by a party of attorneys' fees or related expenses against the United States, or against a State or local government;

(3) "overhead expenses", except in extraordinary circumstances, shall include, but not be limited to, rent or mortgage payments, maintenance (including heating and cooling costs), furniture and supplies, reporters, treatises, and other books, secretarial and other clerical and librarian time (including computer word processing expenses), telephone services and calls, and mailing expenses;

(4) "related expenses" means those expenses that may be awarded pursuant to a Federal law, and which are actually incurred by the attorney in connection with judicial or administrative proceedings, but does not include attorneys' fees or overhead expenses, as defined in this Act, or costs enumerated in section 1920 of title 28, United States Code;

(5) "party" means, for purposes of judicial proceedings, a party as defined by rule 17 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, or, for purposes of administrative proceedings, a party as defined in section 551(3) of title 5, United States Code;

(6) "judicial proceeding" means a civil proceeding in any court or under the jurisdiction of a judicial officer, in which a party may by law be awarded attorneys' fees or related expenses;

(7) "administrative proceeding" means any proceeding, other than a judicial proceeding, in which a party may by law be awarded attorneys' fees or related expenses;

(8) "administrative officer" means the official(s) or person(s) authorized by statute or regulation to decide the substantive issues being considered in an administrative proceeding, or the official(s) or person(s) designated by the head of the agency as the administrative officer(s) for the purpose of this Act;

(9) "prevailed on the merits" means having obtained a final decision in which the party has succeeded on a significant issue or issues in the controversy and obtained significant relief in connection with that issue or issues, and may include, where the party is a defendant in a suit by the Government, obtaining the dismissal of the complaint;

(10) "final decision" means a final judgment by the court, or a final order by an agency, in which a party establishes entitlement to relief on the merits of the claim or claims brought in the proceeding, and includes a judgment or order obtained by a party dismissing the proceeding with prejudice or pursuant to a settlement agreement;

(11) "United States" means the United States, or any agency of the United States, or any official of the United States acting in his or her official capacity;

(12) "State" means any State government, or any agency of the State government, or any official of the State government acting in his or her official capacity, and includes the territories and the District of Columbia; and

(13) "local government" means any county, city, town, municipality, municipal corporation, school board, special governmental district, or other political subdivision created by a State, or any agency of such entity, or any official of such entity acting in his or her official capacity.

SEC. 4. SCOPE AND APPLICATION; RELATIONSHIP TO OTHER LAWS.

(a) The provisions of this Act—

(1) apply to any judicial or administrative proceeding in which an award of attorneys' fees and related expenses is authorized, pursuant to any Federal fee-shifting statute, to be made against the United States, or a State or local government, and

(2) establish minimum criteria and requirements for the award of attorneys' fees and related expenses to which this Act applies.

(b) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no award of attorneys' fees or related expenses shall be made against the United States, or against State or local governments, in any judicial or administrative proceeding, except as expressly authorized by law (other than this Act), and in accordance with the provisions of this Act. No such award shall exceed the amount determined under the provisions of this Act.

(c)(1) The provisions of any applicable Federal fee-shifting statute that establish criteria or requirements in addition to those provided in this Act for the award of attorneys' fees and related expenses in such proceedings, or that otherwise limit awards of attorneys' fees in such proceedings, shall apply in addition to the provisions of this Act.

(2) Nothing in this Act shall be interpreted to create any right to, or provide any authority for, an award of attorneys' fees or related expenses in any judicial or administrative proceeding.

(d) No awards of attorneys' fees or related expenses shall be made under a Federal feeshifting statute against a party who has intervened to defend the validity of a law or action of the United States, or a State or local government, and who has not been found to have violated a constitutional or statutory right of the party seeking the award.

(e) Awards of attorneys' fees and related expenses otherwise authorized under section 504 of title 5 of the United States Code or section 2412(d) of title 28 of the United States Code (the Equal Access to Justice Act) shall be made in accordance with the provisions of this Act, except that subsections (a)(1), (b)(1)(C), (b)(2)(A), and (c) of section 6 of this Act shall not apply.

(f) The provisions of this Act shall not apply to compensation of attorneys in proceedings under section 3006A of title 18, United States Code.

SEC. 5. ALLOWANCE OF ATTORNEYS' FEES.

A party otherwise eligible to receive attorneys' fees and related expenses to which this Act applies must establish that—

(1) the party has prevailed on the merits against the United States, or against a State or local government;

(2) the work for which the award of attorneys' fees and related expenses is sought—

(A) was performed in the judicial or administrative proceeding in connection with issues upon which the party prevailed against the United States or against a State or local government, and

(B) was not excessive, redundant, or otherwise unnecessary to resolve the controversy; and

(3) the application for attorneys' fees and related expenses is made in accordance with sections 6(a) and 7 of this Act.

SEC. 6. AMOUNT OF ATTORNEYS' FEES

(a)(1) No award of attorneys' fees against the United States, or against a State or local government, to which this Act applies shall exceed $75 per hour.

(2) Bonuses or multipliers shall not be used in calculating awards of attorneys' fees.

(b)(1) The court or administrative officer shall reduce or deny accordingly the amount of attorneys' fees and related expenses otherwise allowable if it is found that—

(A) the prevailing party, during the course of the proceeding, engaged in conduct that unreasonably protracted that final resolution of the controversy,

(B) the amount of attorneys' fees otherwise authorized to be awarded unreasonably exceeds the hourly salary of the attorney representing the party, or

(C) the time spent and legal services provided were excessive with regard to the nature of the controversy.

(2) The court or administrative officer, in the exercise of discretion, may reduce or deny an award where—

(A) the amount of attorneys' fees otherwise authorized to be awarded unreasonably exceeds the monetary result or value of injunctive relief achieved in the proceeding, or

(B) a reduction or denial of the amount of attorneys' fees would otherwise be appropriate under the applicable fee-shifting statute.

(c) Whenever a monetary judgment is awarded in any judicial or administrative proceeding to which a Federal fee-shifting statute applies, a portion of the judgment (but not more than 25 per centum thereof) shall be applied to satisfy the amount of attorneys' fees authorized to be awarded against the United States, or against a State or local Government. If the authorized award of attorneys' fees exceeds 25 per centum of the judgment, the excess shall be paid by the United States, or the State or local government. This subsection shall not apply to awards of attorneys' fees pursuant to section 7430 of the Internal Revenue Code.

(d) Section 593(g) of title 28, United States Code, relating to independent counsel investigations, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "Such award shall not exceed $75 per hour.".

SEC. 7. TIMELY APPLICATIONS AND PROCEDURES.

(a) In any judicial or administrative proceeding to which this Act applies, a party may seek an award of attorneys' fees and related expenses only within thirty days after a final decision by the court or agency from which no appeal is taken. The party seeking an award of attorneys' fees shall submit to the court or agency such information as may be required by the court or agency.

(b) Courts and agencies shall develop procedures, not inconsistent with this Act, for filing of applications for awards of attorneys' fees, which shall provide guidance as to what information should be required to be submitted pursuant to subsection (a) of this section, when such information should be submitted, and when determinations should be made concerning awards of attorneys' fees and related expenses. In no event shall an award of attorneys' fees and related expenses be made prior to entry of a final decision by the court or agency.

SEC. 8. MOOTNESS AND SETTLEMENT DEFENSES.

No award of attorneys' fees and related expenses subject to the provisions of this Act may be made—

(1) where the Government demonstrates that—

(A) the claims have become moot due to a change in Government policy, and

(B) the pendency of the judicial or administrative proceeding was not a material factor in such change in policy; or

(2) for services performed subsequent to the time a written offer of settlement is made to a party, if the offer is not accepted and a court or administrative officer finds that the relief finally obtained by the party is not more favorable to the party than the offer of settlement.

SEC. 9. COMPTROLLER GENERAL REPORT.

The Comptroller General of the United States shall submit on April 1 of each year a report to the President and the Congress on the amount of attorneys' fees and related expenses awarded during the preceding fiscal year against the United States, or against State or local governments, in judicial and administrative proceedings to which this Act applies. The courts and each agency shall provide the Comptroller General with such information as is necessary to comply with the requirements of this section.

SEC. 10. LIMITATION ON EMPLOYMENT AND COMPENSATION OF OUTSIDE, PRIVATE COUNSEL.

Section 3106 of title 5, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"§ 3106. Employment of attorneys; restrictions

"(a) Except as otherwise authorized by law, the head of an executive department, military department, or other agency, including an independent agency, board, or commission, may not employ an attorney or counsel for the conduct of litigation in which the United States, an agency, or employee thereof is a party, or is interested, or for the securing of evidence therefor, but shall refer the matter to the Department of Justice.

"(b) Notwithstanding any other provision of law—

"(1) an executive department, military department, or other agency, including an independent agency, board, or commission, shall not retain outside, private counsel for the conduct of judicial or administrative litigation in which the United States, an agency, or employee thereof is a party, or is interested, or for the securing of evidence therefor, except upon a certification of need by the Attorney General and in accordance with regulations promulgated by the Attorney General; and

"(2) no payment from appropriated funds to such outside, private counsel retained pursuant to subsection (b)(1) shall exceed $75 an hour.

"(c) The Attorney General, after consultation with the Office of Management and Budget, the Office of Personnel Management, and other interested agencies, and upon public notice and comment pursuant to section 553 of this title, shall promulgate regulations implementing this section, including—

"(1) the circumstances, terms, and conditions under which executive departments, military departments, and other agencies, including independent agencies, boards, and commissions, are authorized to employ outside, private counsel to be paid from appropriated funds;

"(2) procedures for the receipt and prompt resolution of applications from any agency for a certification of need by the Attorney General, in a particular case or class of cases, authorizing the retention of outside, private counsel for litigation in circumstances not otherwise permitted under this section; and

"(3) the coordination of the use and availability of the expertise of attorneys within the executive branch of Government for litigation.

The regulations authorized by this subsection and the determinations of the Attorney General pursuant to such regulations shall not be subject to judicial review.

"(d) For the purposes of this section, the term 'outside, private counsel' means an attorney, firm, legal services organization, or association engaged in the practice of law other than as an employee of the United States.

"(e) This section does not apply to the employment and payment of counsel under section 1037 of title 10.".

SEC. 11. EFFECTIVE DATE.

The provisions of this Act shall apply to any award of attorneys' fees and related expenses incurred subsequent to the enactment of this Act, including those incurred after such date in actions commenced prior to such enactment.

By Mr. THURMOND (for himself and Mr. LEVIN):

S. 91. A bill to amend title 18, United States Code, to prohibit any person who is being compensated for lobbying the Federal Government from being paid on a contingency fee basis; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CONTINGENCY FEES IN FEDERAL GOVERNMENT LOBBYING

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, today, I am introducing a bill which would prohibit any person who is being compensated for lobbying the Federal Government from being paid on a contingency fee basis. This bill is virtually identical to a bill I introduced during the final months of the 100th Congress. This legislation takes an important step toward ensuring integrity in the administration of the Federal Government.

Congress has a great responsibility to ensure integrity in the administration of the Federal Government in all its departments. This has become even more important now that we have entered the era of the $1 trillion Federal budget. Vast sums of money are appropriated by Congress for various projects and studies. Contracts worth millions of dollars are regularly entered into by Federal agencies. The competition for these funds and contracts is intense.

It is not realistic to assume that Congress can legislate integrity. However, we can, through legislation, make efforts to remove certain incentives to use undue influence and to enter into contracts which are contrary to the fiscal and ethical interests of our Nation. Accordingly, I have introduced this legislation which will prohibit payment for lobbying on a contingency fee basis.

Mr. President, I have heard reports of certain lobbying activities which greatly disturb me. Specifically, I was informed that one lobbyist approached an institution and inquired as to how much Federal money was needed to fund a particular project. When the response was $12 million, the lobbyist responded that he would ask Congress for $14 million. If successful, he would be paid $2 million. If he was unsuccessful, only a base fee would be charged. When our Nation is bridled with such a huge debt, we certainly cannot afford to borrow more money to provide such suspect incentive payments which work to further increase the deficit.

Many lobbying firms do not operate on a contingency fee basis. Yet, other firms follow this practice. The president of the American League of Lobbyists does not oppose charging a contingency fee for lobbying efforts. Hearings on these issues would be very helpful as this legislation moves through Congress. However, even if it it determined that such arrangements are rare—I take the view that even one is too much. Such arrangements are clearly wrong, and should not be tolerated.

I firmly believe that lobbying on a contingency fee basis is wrong and should not be allowed. Congress should follow the lead of most States by enacting this legislation which would prohibit such arrangements.

Mr. President, the question of the propriety of contingency fees in lobbying activities is not a new one. Common law has held such contracts unenforceable for decades. In fact, in 1916, the Supreme Court ruled on the character of such financial arrangements in the case of Crocker versus United States. The Court, quoting from a prior case, stated:

> All contracts . . . should be made with those . . . who will execute them most faithfully, and at the least expense to the Government. [Contingency fee arrangements] . . . tend to introduce personal solicitation, and personal influence, as elements in the procurement of contracts; and thus directly lead to inefficiency in the public service, and to unnecessary expenditures of the public funds.

Mr. President, recognizing the improper incentives contingency fees for lobbyists have injected into Government, 35 States have laws on the books which prohibit payment for lobbying on a contingent fee basis. My home State of South Carolina has prohibited this type of lobbying since 1935.

At the Federal level, contingency fee arrangements are addressed to some extent in the executive branch. Two laws covering contracts awarded by the executive departments—41 U.S.C. 254(a) and 10 U.S.C. 2306(b)—restrict the use of "commission, percentage, brokerage or contingent fee" arrangements to secure these contracts. However, the scope of these statutes is deficient in two respects. First, the violation of these provisions carries little penalty. The Government can only annul the contract secured by a contingency fee arrangement, or deduct from the contract the full amount of the contingency fee. They carry no criminal penalties. Second, these statutes only apply to the executive branch and not to activities involving Congress.

Mr. President, the legislation I am introducing would make contingency fee arrangements to influence Government action a crime under Federal law. Any person who violated the provisions of this section shall be fined up to $100,000, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

Moreover, the Attorney General is empowered to bring a civil action to recover twice the proceeds obtained by that person due to such conduct. This act is prospective in nature and would only apply to contracts entered into after enactment.

Lobbyists often provide expertise and helpful information not otherwise available. I want to be clear on this point. This is an important role for lobbyists, but I am opposed to contractual arrangements which impugn the integrity and efficiency of our system. Clearly, a person should be entitled to reasonable fees for legitimate services in presenting officials of the Government with information as may apprise them of the character and value of the project or service offered, and thus enable those officers to act for the best interest of the Nation. However, the law has long recognized that contingency fees are not appropriate in some areas while appropriate in others. For instance, contingency fees in tort actions provide the poor with access to the courts and are viewed favorably. In other areas, such as criminal and domestic law, such fees are inappropriate because they introduce improper incentives into the system. Similar principles should apply to contingency fees for lobbying.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to support this legislation and I look forward to hearings on this important issue. The public deserves action on the part of Congress.

I ask unanimous consent that this bill be printed in its entirety following these remarks.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 91

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That chapter 11 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by—

(1) inserting between sections 219 and 223, the following new section:

"§ 220. Contingency fees in lobbying

"(a)(1) It shall be unlawful for any person to be employed as an agent or attorney for or otherwise represent any person other than the United States, or with intent to influence, to be employed to make any oral or written communication on behalf of any other person other than the United States to any department, agency, court, or commission of the United States, or any officer or employee for compensation if such compensation is dependent in any way—

"(A) upon any action of Congress, including but not limited to actions of either the House of Representatives or the Senate, or any committee or member thereof, or the passage or defeat of any proposed legislation,

"(B) upon the securing of an award, or upon the denial of an award, of a contract or grant by establishment of the Federal Government, or

"(C) upon the securing, or upon the denial, of any Federal financial assistance or any other Federal contract or grant.

"(2) The provisions of paragraph (1) shall not apply in any case involving the collection of any amount owed on a debt or on a contract claim owed to a person by the Federal Government.

"(b) Any person who violates the provisions of this section shall be fined not more than $100,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

"(c) The Attorney General may bring a civil action in any United States district court, on behalf of the United States, against any person who engages in conduct prohibited by this section in lieu of or in addition to an action taken pursuant to subsection (b), and, upon proof of such conduct by the preponderance of the evidence, may recover twice the amount of any proceeds obtained by that person due to such conduct. Such civil action shall be barred unless the action is commenced within 6 years after the later of (1) the date on which the prohibited conduct occurred, or (2) the date on which the United States became or reasonably should have become aware that the prohibited conduct has occurred."; and

(2) amending the table of sections by striking out the item between the item relating to section 219 and the item relating to section 224 and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"220. Contingency fees in lobbying.".

SEC. 2. This Act and the amendments made by this Act shall become effective on the date of enactment of this Act and shall apply to any contract entered into on or after such date of enactment.

S. 92. A bill to redefine "extortion" for purposes of the Hobbs Act; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

HOBBS ACT EXTORTION

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, today, I am introducing legislation to amend the Hobbs Anti-Racketeering Act to reverse the Supreme Court's decision in United States versus Enmons, and to address a serious, long term, festering problem under our Nation's labor laws. The United States regulates labor relations on a national basis and our labor management policies are national policies. These policies and regulations are enforced by laws such as the National Labor Relations Act that Congress designed to preempt comparable State laws.

Although labor violence is a widespread problem in labor management relations today, our Government appears unwilling to deal with it. What might be the most obvious example of this Government's reluctance is what the Supreme Court did when it rendered its decision in the case of United States versus Enmons in 1973. It is this decision's unfortunate result which this bill is intended to rectify.

The Enmons decision involved the Hobbs Anti-Racketeering Act which is intended to prohibit extortion by labor unions. It provides that: "Whoever in any way * * * obstructs, delays, or affects commerce in the movement of any article or commodity in commerce, by robbery or extortion or attempts or conspires to do so or commits or threatens physical violence to any person or property * * *" commits a criminal act. This language is very clear. It outlaws extortion by labor unions. It outlaws violence by labor unions.

Although this language is very clear, the Supreme Court in Enmons created an exemption to the law which says that as long as a labor union commits extortion and violence in furtherance of legitimate collective-bargaining objectives, no violation of the act will be found. Simply put, the Court held that if the ends are correct, the means to that end, no matter how horrible or reprehensible, will not result in a violation of the act.

The Enmons decision is wrong. This bill will make it clear that the Hobbs Act is intended to punish the actual or threatened use of force or violence to obtain property irrespective of the legitimacy of the extortionist's claim to such property and irrespective of the existence of a labor-management dispute.

Let me discuss the Enmons case.

In that case, the defendants were indicted for firing high-powered rifles at property, causing extensive damage to the property, owned by a utility company—all done in an effort to obtain higher wages and other benefits from the company for striking employees. The indictment was, however, dismissed by the district court on the theory that the Hobbs Act did not prohibit the use of violence in obtaining legitimate union objectives. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed.

The Supreme Court held that the Hobbs Act does not proscribe violence committed during a lawful strike for the purpose of achieving legitimate collective-bargaining objectives, like higher wages. By its focus upon the motives and objectives of the property claimant, who uses violence or force to achieve his goals, the Enmons decision has had several unfortunate results. It has deprived the Federal Government of the ability to punish significant acts of extortionate violence when they occur in a labor management context. Although other Federal statutes prohibit the use of specific devices or the use of channels of commerce in accomplishing the underlying act of extortionate violence, only the Hobbs Act proscribes a localized act of extortionate violence whose economic effect is to disrupt the channels of commerce. Other Federal statutes are not adequate to address the full effect of the Enmons decision.

The Enmons decision affords parties to labor-management disputes an exemption from the statute's broad proscription against violence which is not available to any other group in society. This bill would make it clear that the Hobbs Act punishes the actual or threatened use of force and violence which is calculated to obtain property without regard to whether the extortionist has a colorable claim to such property, and without regard to his status as a labor representative, businessman, or private citizen.

Mr. President, attempts to rectify the injustice of the Enmons decision have been before the Senate on several occasions. Shortly after the decision was handed down, a bill was introduced which was intended to repudiate the decision. Over the next several years, attempts were made to come up with language which was acceptable to organized labor and at the same time restored the original intent of the Hobbs Act.

In 1978, S. 1437, a bill which was substantially the same as the bill I am introducing today, passed the Senate; however the bill died in the House. In the 100th Congress, I introduced S. 2036, a bill which is identical to this legislation, yet no substantial action was taken on the bill. It is time for the Senate to reexamine this issue and to restate its opposition to violence in labor disputes. Encouraged by their special exemption from prosecution for acts of violence committed in pursuit of legitimate union objectives, union officials who are corrupt routinely use terror tactics to achieve their goals.

Between 1975 and 1988 there were over 5,900 newspaper documented incidents of compulsory unionism violence. This chilling statistic gives clear testimony to the existence of a pervasive national problem.

Mr. President, violence has no place in our society, regardless of the setting. Our national labor policy has always been directed toward the peaceful resolution of labor disputes. It is ironic that the Hobbs Act, which was enacted in large part to accomplish this worthy goal, has been virtually emasculated. The time has come to change that. I think that my colleagues on both sides of the aisle share a common concern that violence in labor disputes, whatever the source, should be eliminated. Government has been unwilling to deal with this problem for too long. It is time for this Congress to act.

I ask unanimous consent that the full text of this bill be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 92

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. DEFINITION OF EXTORTION UNDER HOBBS ACT.

Paragraph (2) of section 1951(b) of title 18, United States Code, (commonly known as the "Hobbs Act") is amended to read as follows:

"(2)(A) The term 'extortion' means the obtaining of property of another—

"(i) by threatening or placing another person in fear that any person will be subjected to bodily injury or kidnapping or that any property will be damaged; or

"(B) In a prosecution under subparagraph (A)(i) in which the threat or fear is based on conduct by an agent or member of a labor organization consisting of an act of bodily injury to a person or damage to property, the pendence, at the time of such conduct, of a labor dispute (as defined in section 2(9) of the National Labor Relations Act (29 U.S.C. 152(9))) the outcome of which could result in the obtaining of employment benefits by the actor, does not constitute prima facie evidence that property was obtained 'by' such conduct.".

By Mr. THURMOND:

S. 93. A bill to establish an Intercircuit Panel, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

INTERCIRCUIT PANEL OF THE U.S. ACT

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce legislation to establish an Intercircuit Panel of the U.S. Court of Appeals. This legislation is very similar to S. 239 which I introduced in the 100th Congress and which was approved by the Senate Judiciary Committee in the 99th Congress.

Over the past several decades, the workload of the Federal judiciary has increased dramatically. This increase has occurred as our society has become a far more litigious one, and as the laws of our Nation have become far more numerous and complex.

Since 1950, Congress has acted to meet the growing demands upon the judiciary by increasing the number of Federal district court judges from 212 to 575 and the number of circuit court of appeals judges from 65 to 168. While these increases have helped to ease the burden in the Federal appeals and Federal district courts, little has been done to ease the burden that has been placed on the Supreme Court which today continues to operate at its original nine-member size.

Mr. President, each year the burden on the Supreme Court seems to become more acute. In 1953, there were 1,463 cases on the docket of the Court. In 1986, the Supreme Court had more than 5,000 cases on its docket. Over the same period, the number of signed opinions increased from 65 to 164.

In the last dozen years, several major independent commissions have studied the problem of a severely overcrowded Supreme Court docket and have concluded that a new tribunal is desperately needed.

This legislation would establish, for a 5-year trial period, such a tribunal to be known as the Intercircuit Panel of the United States. The panel would be composed of nine U.S. circuit court judges to be selected by the Supreme Court. Members of the panel could be active or senior status judges.

Meeting in Washington, DC, the panel would serve as a court of limited jurisdiction, reviewing only those cases referred to it by the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court would only be authorized to refer to the panel those cases in which a conflict exists between the circuits.

The Supreme Court would have discretion in selecting the cases for resolution by the panel, and would retain authority after the panel decides a case in order to grant further review of the case when it deems such review appropriate. The panel would operate under the same rules and procedures, and parties would enjoy the same rights, that apply in cases under review by the Supreme Court.

Mr. President, this proposal was enthusiastically endorsed by Chief Justice Warren Burger during his tenure as Chief Justice. At his confirmation hearings, current Chief Justice William Rehnquist expressed strong support for an intercircuit tribunal.

Creation of this panel appears to be the most effective solution to the problem. If enacted, the panel would be utilized, to the extent desired by the Supreme Court, for a period of 5 years. Congress would, of course, have the option to reauthorize the panel, with or without changes, after a careful assessment of its impact on the Supreme Court and the entire judicial system. Should the Supreme Court become dissatisfied with the effectiveness of the panel at any point in the 5-year period, it could terminate the panel simply by deciding not to send it any additional cases.

I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this necessary reform and ask unanimous consent that this bill be printed in the RECORD following my remarks.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 93

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Intercircuit Panel of the United States Act".

ESTABLISHMENT OF PANEL

SEC. 2. (a) Part I of title 28, United States Code, is amended by inserting after chapter 3 the following new chapter.

"CHAPTER 4—INTERCIRCUIT PANEL OF THE UNITED STATES COURTS OF APPEALS

"Sec.
"61. Establishment and composition of Intercircuit Panel.
"62. Principal office and sessions.
"63. Seal

"§ 61. Establishment and composition of Intercircuit Panel

"(a)(1) There will be an Intercircuit Panel of the United States Courts of Appeals that shall be composed of nine judges and four alternate judges designated by the Supreme Court of the United States. Such nine judges shall constitute the Panel. All judges designated to serve on the Panel shall be circuit judges who are in regular active service or who are senior judges.

"(2) For the original designations, the Supreme Court shall designate four judges to serve on the Panel for a period terminating two years after the date of the first referral made pursuant to section 1260(a) of this title, four judges to serve for a period terminating three years after such date, and five judges to serve for a period terminating five years after such date. Thereafter the Supreme Court shall designate judges to serve on the Panel for terms of three years. All terms shall commence on the date of such designation.

"(3) The Chief Justice shall designate the presiding judge of the Panel from among members of the Panel.

"(b) Cases and controversies shall be heard and determined by the Panel.

"(c) No judge shall hear or participate in the determination of any case referred to the Panel in which such judge previously participated. In the event of a vacancy on the Panel caused by a judge disqualifying himself under this subsection, or under section 455 of this title, or caused by the absence of any judge designated to sit on the Panel, a judge shall be designated from among the alternate judges to sit on the Panel in accordance with the rules prescribed by the Panel.

"(d) Rules of procedure shall be promulgated by vote of a majority of the full membership of the Intercircuit Panel and such procedures shall be published before any cases are heard by such Panel.

"(e) In the event of the death, resignation, or disability of any judge designated under subsection (a), the Supreme Court shall fill the vacancy in accordance with the provisions of subsection (a). A judge designated to fill such a vacancy shall be designated to serve for the remainder of the period of his predecessor's term.

"§ 62. Principal office and sessions.

"The principal office of the Intercircuit Panel of the United States Courts of Appeals shall be in the District of Columbia, but the Panel may hold court at such times and places within the United States as the Panel may fix by rule.

"§ 63. Seal

"The Intercircuit Panel of the United States Courts of Appeals shall have a seal which shall be judicially noticed.".

(b) The analysis of part I of title 28, United States Code, is amended by inserting after the item relating to chapter 3 the following new item:

"4. Intercircuit Panel of the United States Courts of Appeals . . . 61.".

OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES

SEC. 3. (a) Part III of title 28, United States Code, is amended by inserting after chapter 47 the following new chapter:

"CHAPTER 48—INTERCIRCUIT PANEL OF THE UNITED STATES COURTS OF APPEALS

"Sec.

EFFECTIVE DATE; TERMINATION OF INTERCIRCUIT PANEL

SEC. 8. (a) This Act and the amendments made by this Act shall become effective upon the date of enactment.

(b) Except as provided in subsection (c), this Act and the amendments made by this Act shall cease to be effective upon the final disposition of all cases pending in the Intercircuit Panel on the date five years after the date of the first referral made pursuant to section 1206(a) of title 28, United States Code, as added by this Act.

(c) Section 1260(a) of title 28, United States Code, as added by section 4, shall cease to be effective on the date five years after the date of the first referral made pursuant to section 1260(a) of title 28, United States Code, as added by this Act.

By Mr. THURMOND:

S. 94. A bill to promote and improve efficient and effective enforcement of the antitrust laws; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

ANTITRUST REMEDIES IMPROVEMENTS ACT

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, this act provides for reform of the treble damage rule in antitrust cases by limiting treble damage recovery to those situations in which persons, including the United States, have been overcharged or underpaid by reason of an antitrust violation. In all other instances, persons who sue and prove an antitrust violation will still be fully compensated, but they will no longer recover treble damages. Their recovery will be limited to actual damages.

The treble damage rule is the dominant feature of the current system of private antitrust remedies. Its purpose is to provide a strong deterrent to clearly anticompetitive practices, and to offer incentives to plaintiffs to detect and challenge such practices. However, the antitrust laws can be used to challenge some types of practices that may be procompetitive or anticompetitive, depending upon the particular circumstances. In these instances, when a court finds such conduct to be anticompetitive, the responsible parties should be held liable, but punitive damages, such as treble damages, are inappropriate. The treble damage remedy in these cases promote abuse of the antitrust laws by inefficient firms that threaten treble damage lawsuits to stifle their more efficient competitors.

The act which I have proposed today will continue strongly to deter patently anticompetitive conduct. Victims of clearly harmful behavior, often consumers or small businesses, will have strong incentives to discover and challenge this conduct. Competitors, or would-be competitors, whose alleged antitrust injuries are due to lost profits rather than overcharges, will recover only their actual damages, plus costs and reasonable attorney's fees. To insure a fully compensatory remedy, automatic prejudgment interest on actual damages will be awarded whenever damages are not trebled.

Mr. President, the issue of detrebling damages, that is, awarding only actual damages for antitrust violations, is not a new one. Within the last 6 years, the Congress has enacted three statutes that detrebled, and in one instance eliminated, antitrust damage recoveries. The Export Trading Company Act of 1982 provides only for actual damages in certain circumstances if export activities are found to be anticompetitive. The National Cooperative Research Act of 1984 also provides only for actual damages if joint research and development activities are found to be anticompetitive. Finally, the Local Government Antitrust Act of 1984 eliminated damage recovery altogether in antitrust suits challenging activity by local government entities.

The particular provisions of this act were introduced in the 99th Congress as S. 2162, and were the subject of extensive hearings in that Congress. In the 100th Congress, legislation was again introduced and additional hearings were held. At one of these hearings, we had the benefit of receiving testimony from Charles Rule, the Assistant Attorney General for Antitrust at the Justice Department. I would like to read from his testimony because I believe it is instructive on this issue:

[This] proposal maintains a strong incentive for plaintiffs to detect and challenge unambiguously anticompetitive behavior but minimizes the incentive to bring suits intended to thwart competition. Persons claiming antitrust injury due to overcharges typically are consumers who are hurt by anticompetitive practices such as price fixing, bid rigging, divisions of markets, and allocation of customers. Such plaintiffs are motivated by a desire to promote competition from which they, as customers, will benefit. Rivals seeking lost profits, however, may be suffering from an inability to compete effectively in the marketplace rather than from any unlawful practice. The law should not provide them with an enhanced ability or incentive to challenge healthy, aggressive competition that is usually unconcealed; by taking the punitive elements out of suits by rivals, [this] proposal accomplishes this result.

At the same time, [this] proposal recognizes that some of the practices challenged by competitors will, in certain instances, prove to be actually anticompetitive. For these instances it preserves a fully sufficient incentive to competitors who have actually been harmed by an antitrust violation to seek redress: a fully compensatory remedy, which means actual damages and interest thereon from the time they are injured to the time they collect their damages plus attorneys' fees, nothing less. The proposal provides for prejudgment interest because actual damages alone do not compensate for the lost use of money from the time of injury to the time of judgment.

In addition, this proposed legislation also provides for the award of defendants' attorneys' fees to a "substantially prevailing defendant" if the "plaintiff's conduct was frivolous, unreasonable, without foundation, or in bad faith." Like the detrebling provisions, this proposal will act to deter frivolous antitrust lawsuits that serve more to impede competition than to encourage it. The concept of defendants' attorneys' fees in antitrust cases is not a new one; the National Cooperative Research Act contains a similar provision.

Mr. President, I believe the changes proposed by this act are long overdue. As we approach the centennial anniversary of our antitrust laws, it is necessary to reflect on the experience that we have accumulated over the years, to re-examine the effect of our antitrust laws, and to refine and reform them where appropriate. In this instance, I believe it is appropriate to reform the treble damage remedy, and I urge my colleagues to strongly support this legislation.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 94

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Antitrust Remedies Improvements Act of 1989."

SEC. 2. Subsection (a) of section 4 of the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. 15(a)) is amended to read as follows:

"(a) Any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor in any district court of the United States in the district in which the defendant resides or is found or has an agent, without respect to the amount in controversy, and shall recover actual damages by him sustained, interest calculated at the rate specified in section 1961 of title 28, United States Code, or at such other rate as the court finds to be fair to fully compensate such person for the injury sustained, on such actual damages for the period beginning on the earliest date for which injury can be established and ending on the date of judgment, unless the court finds that the award of all or part of such interest is unjust in the circumstances, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee: Provided, That except as provided in subsection (b), damages sustained by reason of such person having been overcharged or underpaid by any person subject to liability under the antitrust laws for such damages shall be trebled: And provided further, That prejudgment interest under this section on actual damages that are trebled shall be recovered only if, pursuant to a motion by the injured person promptly made, the court finds that the award of all or part of such interest is just in the circumstances, taking into consideration only—

"(1) whether such person or the opposing party, or either party's representative, made motions or asserted claims or defenses so lacking in merit as to show that such party or representative acted intentionally for delay, or otherwise acted in bad faith;

"(2) whether, in the course of the action involved, such person or the opposing party, or either party's representative, violated any applicable rule, statute, or court order providing for sanctions for dilatory behavior or otherwise providing for expeditious proceedings; and

"(3) whether such person or the opposing party, or either party's representative, engaged in conduct primarily for the purpose of delaying the litigation or increasing the cost thereof.".

SEC. 3. Section 4A of the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. 15a) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4A. Whenever the United States is injured in its business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws it may sue therefor in the United States district court for the district in which the defendant resides or is found or has an agent, without respect to the amount in controversy, and shall recover actual damages by it sustained, interest calculated at the rate specified in section 1961 of title 28, United States Code, or at such other rate as the court finds to be fair to fully compensate the United States for the injury sustained, on such actual damages for the period beginning on the earliest date for which injury can be established and ending on the date of judgment, unless the court finds that the award of all or part of such interest is unjust in the circumstances, and the cost of suit: Provided, That damages sustained by reason of the United States having been overcharged or underpaid by any person subject to liability under the antitrust laws for such damages shall be trebled: And provided further, That prejudgment interest under this section on actual damages that are trebled shall be recovered only if, pursuant to a motion by the United States promptly made, the court finds that the award of all or part of such interest is just in the circumstances, taking into consideration only—

"(1) whether the United States or the opposing party, or either party's representative, made motions or asserted claims or defenses so lacking in merit as to show that such party or representative acted intentionally for delay, or otherwise acted in bad faith;

"(2) whether, in the course of the action involved, the United States or the opposing party, or either party's representative, violated any applicable rule, statute, or court order providing for sanctions for dilatory behavior or otherwise providing for expeditious proceedings; and

"(3) whether the United States or the opposing party, or either party's representative, engaged in conduct primarily for the purpose of delaying the litigation or increasing the cost thereof.".

SEC. 4. Paragraph (a)(2) of section 4C of the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. 15e(a)(2)) is amended by striking the second sentence and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "The court may award under this paragraph, pursuant to a motion by such State promptly made, interest calculated at the rate specified in section 1961 of title 28, United States Code, or at such other rate as the court finds to be fair to compensate natural persons in such State for the injury sustained, on such total damage for the period beginning on the earliest date for which injury can be established and ending on the date of judgment, if the court finds that the award of all or part of such interest is just in the circumstances.".

DEFENDANTS' ATTORNEYS' FEES

SEC. 5. Section 4 of the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. 15) is amended by adding after subsection (c) the following new subsection:

"(d) In any action under this section, the court shall award the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee, to a substantially prevailing defendant upon a finding that the plaintiff's conduct was frivolous, unreasonable, without foundation, or in bad faith.".

SEC. 6. Section 16 of the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. 26) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "In any action under this section in which the defendant substantially prevails, the court shall award to such defendant the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee, upon a finding that the plaintiff's conduct was frivolous, unreasonable, without foundation, or in bad faith.".

S. 95. A bill to amend title VIII of the Public Health Service Act to require the Secretary of Health and Human Services to establish a scholarship program to enable professional nurses to obtain advanced degrees in professions related to the practice of nursing; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

ADVANCED NURSE EDUCATION ACT OF 1989

● Mr. INOUYE: Mr. President, today, I am reintroducing legislation this year which would provide special scholarships for those professional nurses who wish to obtain advanced degrees in related fields such as law, public health, business administration, and psychology.

During the closing hours of the 100th Congress, this legislation passed the U.S. Senate as a provision of the Health Manpower Reauthorization Act, but unfortunately, was not agreed to by the House conferees.

Mr. President, it is quite evident that our Nation faces a major nursing crisis and we must develop creative approaches in order to ensure that our citizenry has access to the highest quality health care possible. This bill as drafted would allow nurses to expand their horizons and I am confident will result in an increasing number of professional nurses being appointed to high level health policy positions.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of my bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 95

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Advanced Nurse Education Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. ESTABLISHMENT OF SCHOLARSHIP PROGRAM.

Part B of title VIII of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 297 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subpart:

"Subpart V—Advanced Education in Related Professions

"SEC. 848. SCHOLARSHIP PROGRAM.

"(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Secretary shall establish a scholarship program to enable professional nurses (hereinafter in this subpart referred to as the 'scholarship program') to pursue masters and doctoral degrees in fields related to the practice of nursing (including fields such as law, public health, and psychology).

"(b) ELIGIBILITY.—To be eligible to participate in the scholarship program, an individual shall—

"(1) be accepted for enrollment, or be enrolled, as a full-time student—

"(A) in an accredited (as determined by the Secretary) educational institution in a State; and

"(B) in a course of study or program, offered by an institution referred to in subparagraph (A) and approved by the Secretary, leading to a masters degree or a doctoral degree in a field related to nursing (as determined by the Secretary);

"(2) submit an application to participate in the scholarship program; and

"(3) sign and submit to the Secretary, at the time of submittal of the application referred to in paragraph (2), a written contract (described in subsection (e)) to accept payment of a scholarship and to serve (in accordance with this subpart) for the applicable period of obligated service.

"(c) APPLICATION FORMS.—

"(1) CONTENTS.—In disseminating application forms and contract forms to individuals desiring to participate in the scholarship program, the Secretary shall include with such forms—

"(A) a fair summary of the rights and liabilities of an individual whose application is approved (and whose contract is accepted) by the Secretary, including in the summary a clear explanation of the damages to which the United States is entitled under section 848B in the case of the individual's breach of the contract; and

"(B) such other information as may be necessary for the individual to understand the individual's prospective participation in the scholarship program.

"(2) COMPREHENSIBILITY.—The application form, contract form, and all other information furnished by the Secretary under this subpart shall be written in a manner calculated to be understood by the average individual applying to participate in the scholarship program.

"(3) AVAILABILITY.—The Secretary shall make such application forms, contract forms, and other information available to individuals desiring to participate in the scholarship program on a date sufficiently early to ensure that such individuals have adequate time to carefully review and evaluate such forms and information.

"(d) APPROVAL.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—An individual becomes a participant in the scholarship program only on the approval by the Secretary of the application submitted by the individual under subsection (b)(2) and the acceptance by the Secretary of the contract submitted by the individual under subsection (b)(3).

"(2) NOTICE.—The Secretary shall provide written notice to an individual promptly on the approval by the Secretary, under paragraph (1), of the participation by the individual in the scholarship program.

"(e) CONTRACT.—The written contract submitted by an individual under subsection (b)(3) shall contain—

"(1) an agreement in which—

"(A) subject to paragraph (2), the Secretary agrees to provide the individual with a scholarship (described in subsection (f)) in each such school year or years for a period of years (not to exceed 4 school years) determined by the individual, during which period the individual is pursuing a course of study described in subsection (b)(1)(B); and

"(B) subject to paragraph (2), the individual agrees—

"(i) to accept the provision of such a scholarship to the individual;

"(ii) to maintain enrollment in a course of study described in subsection (b)(1)(B) until the individual completes the course of study;

"(iii) that while enrolled in the course of study, the individual will maintain an acceptable level of academic standing (as determined under regulations of the Secretary by the educational institution offering such course of study); and

"(iv) to serve for a time period (hereinafter in the subpart referred to as the 'period of obligated service') equal to 1 year for each school year for which the individual was provided a scholarship under the scholarship program, in a public or nonprofit private health care facility or, if approved by the Secretary, in a private health care facility in a medically underserved area (as designated by the Secretary);

"(2) a provision that states that any financial obligation of the United States arising out of a contract entered into under this subpart and any obligation of the individual which is conditioned thereon, is contingent on funds being appropriated for scholarships under this subpart;

"(3) a statement of the damages to which the United States is entitled, under section 848B for the breach of the contract by the individual; and

"(4) such other statements of the rights and liabilities of the Secretary and of the individual, not inconsistent with the provisions of this subpart.

"(f) SCHOLARSHIP.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—A scholarship provided to a student for a school year under a written contract under the scholarship program shall consist of—

"(A) payment to, or (in accordance with paragraph (2)) on behalf of, the student in an amount equal to—

"(i) the tuition of the student in such school year; and

"(ii) the amount of all other reasonable educational expenses, including fees, books, and laboratory expenses, incurred by the student in such school year; and

"(B) payment to the student of a stipend of $400 per month (adjusted in accordance with paragraph (3)) for each of the 12 consecutive months beginning with the first month of such school year.

"(2) CONTRACTS WITH INSTITUTIONS.—The Secretary may contract with an educational institution in which a participant in the scholarship program is enrolled, for the payment to the educational institution of the amounts of tuition and other reasonable educational expenses described in paragraph (1)(A). Payment to such an educational institution may be made without regard to section 3324 of title 31, United States Code.

"(3) STIPEND.—The amount of the monthly stipend, specified in paragraph (1)(B) and as previously adjusted (if at all) in accordance with this paragraph, shall be increased by the Secretary for each school year ending in a fiscal year beginning after September 30, 1989, by an amount (rounded to the next highest multiple of $1) equal to the amount of such stipend multiplied by the overall percentage (as set forth in the report transmitted to the Congress under section 5305 of title 5, United States Code) of the adjustment (if such adjustment is an increase) in the rates of pay under the General Schedule made effective in the fiscal year in which such school year ends.

"SEC. 848A. OBLIGATED SERVICE.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—Each individual who has entered into a written contract with the Secretary under section 848 shall provide service in the full-time clinical practice of such individual's profession in a facility described in section 848(e)(1)(B)(iv) for the period of obligated service provided in such contract.

"(b) APPROVAL OF SERVICE.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—If an individual is required under subsection (a) to provide service as specified in section 845(e)(1)(B)(iv) (hereafter in this subsection referred to as 'obligated service'), the Secretary shall, not later than 90 days prior to the date on which the individual is scheduled to complete the course of study for which the individual received a scholarship under the scholarship program, approve or disapprove the position in which the individual proposes to provide such obligated service.

"(2) DISAPPROVAL.—If the Secretary disapproves such position, such individual shall, in accordance with procedures established by the Secretary, arrange the provision of such service in another position approved by the Secretary.

"SEC. 848B. BREACH OF SCHOLARSHIP CONTRACT.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—An individual who has entered into a written contract with the Secretary under section 848 and who—

"(1) fails to maintain an acceptable level of academic standing in the educational institution in which the individual is enrolled (such level determined by the educational institution under regulations of the Secretary),

"(2) is dismissed from such educational institution for disciplinary reasons,

"(3) voluntarily terminates the training in such an educational institution for which the individual is provided a scholarship under such contract, before the completion of such training, or

"(4) fails to accept payment, or instructs the educational institution in which he is enrolled not to accept payment, in whole or in part, of a scholarship under such contract, in lieu of any service obligation arising under such contract, shall be liable to the United States for the amount which has been paid to the individual, or on behalf of the individual, under the contract.

"(b) AMOUNT OF DAMAGES.—Except as provided in subsection (c)(2), if (for any reason not specified in subsection (a)) an individual breaches a written contract entered into this subpart by failing either to begin such individual's service obligation in accordance with section 848A or to complete such service obligation, the United States shall be entitled to recover from the individual an amount determined in accordance with the formula in which 'A' is the amount the United States is entitled to recover, 'φ' is the sum of the amounts paid under this subpart to or on behalf of the individual and the interest on such amounts which would be payable if at the time the amounts were paid they were loans bearing interest at the maximum legal prevailing rate, as determined by the Treasurer of the United States; 't' is the total number of months in the individual's period of obligated service; and 's' is the number of months of such period served by the individual in accordance with section 846. Any amount of damages which the United States is entitled to recover under this subsection shall, within the one-year period beginning on the date of the breach of the written contract, (or such longer period beginning on such date as specified by the Secretary for good cause shown) be paid to the United States.

"(c) CANCELING, WAIVER, OR RELEASE.—

"(1) CANCELING.—Any obligation of an individual under the scholarship program (or a contract thereunder) for service or payment of damages shall be canceled on the death of the individual.

"(2) WAIVER.—The Secretary shall by regulation provide for the partial or total waiver or suspension of any obligation of service or payment by an individual under the scholarship program (or a contract thereunder) whenever compliance by the individual is impossible or would involve extreme hardship to the individual and if enforcement of such obligation with respect to any individual would be unconscionable.

"(3) RELEASE.—Any obligation of an individual under the scholarship program (or a contract thereunder) for payment of damages may be released by a discharge in bankruptcy under title 11 of the United States Code only if such discharge is granted after the expiration of the five-year period beginning on the first date that payment of such damages is required.

"SEC. 848C. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

"To carry out this subpart, there are authorized to be appropriated $5,000,000 for fiscal year 1989 and each of the succeeding fiscal years.".●

S. 96. A bill to amend the Public Health Service Act to establish an Office of the Associate Director for Special Populations to place emphasis on needs of women and minorities for the prevention and treatment of alcoholism and alcohol abuse and related problems; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

OFFICE OF ASSOCIATE DIRECTOR FOR SPECIAL POPULATIONS

● Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I am introducing legislation on behalf of myself and Senator HATCH in order to establish an Office of the Associate Director for Special Populations both within the National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism and the National Institute on Drug Abuse, as is currently in effect for the National Institutes of Mental Health.

Mr. President, this legislation passed the Senate during the closing hours of the 100th, but unfortunately, was not acceptable to the House of Representatives. In my judgment, given the continual reports that we meet the unique needs of our Nation's women and various ethnic minorities, it would be a very good public policy to specifically identify an individual in each of these institutes to ensure that they are given appropriate policy attention. Those of us who served on the Appropriations Subcommittee which has jurisdiction over the Department of Health and Human Services have been most impressed by the reports we have received from the individual who fulfills this responsibility for the National Institutes of Mental Health.

We ask unanimous consent that the text of our bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 96

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. ESTABLISHMENT OF THE OFFICE OF ASSOCIATE DIRECTOR FOR SPECIAL POPULATIONS.

(a) NATIONAL INSTITUTE ON ALCOHOL ABUSE AND ALCOHOLISM.—Section 502 of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 290aa-1) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e)(1) The Director shall designate an Associate Director for Special Populations.

"(2) The Secretary, acting through the Associate Director for Special Populations, shall—

"(A) develop and coordinate prevention, treatment, research, and administrative policies and programs to assure increased emphasis on the needs of women and minorities for the prevention and treatment of alcoholism and alcohol abuse and related problems;

"(B) support programs and projects relating to the delivery of services to women and minorities for the prevention and treatment of alcoholism and alcohol abuse and related problems, including demonstration programs and projects;

"(C) develop a plan to increase the representation of women and minorities in service delivery and manpower programs for the prevention and treatment of alcoholism and alcohol abuse and related problems;

"(D) support programs of basic and applied social and behavioral research on the problems of women and minorities relating to alcoholism and alcohol abuse;

"(E) study the effects of discrimination by institutions against alcoholics and alcohol abusers;

"(F) develop systems to assist women and minority individuals who are alcoholics or alcohol abusers in adapting to, and coping with, the effects of discrimination;

"(G) support and develop research, demonstration, and training programs designed to eliminate institutional discrimination against alcoholics and alcohol abusers; and

"(H) provide increased emphasis on the concerns of women and minorities in training programs, service delivery programs, and research activities of the Institute.".

(b) NATIONAL INSTITUTE ON DRUG ABUSE.—Section 503 of such Act (42 U.S.C. 290aa-2) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e)(1) The Director shall designate an Associate Director for Special Populations.

"(2) The Secretary, acting through the Associate Director for Special Populations, shall—

"(A) develop and coordinate prevention, treatment, research, and administrative policies and programs to assure increased emphasis on the needs of women and minorities for the prevention and treatment of drug abuse and related problems;

"(B) support programs and projects relating to the delivery of services to women and minorities for the prevention and treatment of drug abuse and related problems, including demonstration programs and projects;

"(C) develop a plan to increase the representation of women and minorities in service delivery and manpower programs for the prevention and treatment of drug abuse and related problems;

"(D) support programs of basic and applied social and behavioral research on the problems of women and minorities relating to drug abuse;

"(E) study the effects of discrimination by institutions against drug abusers;

"(F) develop systems to assist women and minority individuals who are drug abusers in adapting to, and coping with, the effects of discrimination;

"(G) support and develop research, demonstration, and training programs designed to eliminate institutional discrimination against drug abusers; and

"(H) provide increased emphasis on the concerns of women and minorities in training programs, service delivery programs, and research activities of the Institute.".●

S. 97. A bill to amend the Public Health Service Act to provide that a student enrolled in a graduate program in psychology shall be eligible for student loans under the health professions student loan program; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

STUDENT LOANS FOR PSYCHOLOGY STUDENTS

● Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I am introducing legislation today to modify title VII of the U.S. Public Health Service Act in order to provide that a student enrolled in a graduate program in psychology will be eligible for a student loan under the Health Profession Student Loan Program.

Mr. President, during the closing hours of the 100th Congress, this legislation passed the U.S. Senate, but unfortunately, was not acceptable by the House of Representatives. In my judgment, given the growing awareness and the importance of behavioral science expertise through our Nation's health care system, the time has come to allow these graduate students to apply for support under this initiative.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of my bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 97

To be enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. STUDENT LOANS FOR PSYCHOLOGY STUDENTS.

(a) ENTERING INTO LOAN AGREEMENTS.—Section 740(a) of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 294m(a) is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof the following: ", or with any public or non-profit private institution which has a graduate program in clinical psychology and which is located in a State".

(b) REQUIREMENTS OF AGREEMENTS.—Section 740(b)(4) of such Act is amended by striking out "or" before "doctor of veterinary medicine", and by inserting before the semicolon at the end thereof the following: ", or a doctoral degree in clinical psychology".

(c) FAILURE TO COLLECT LOANS.—

(1) STANDARDS.—Section 740(c)(1) of such Act is amended by inserting ", or by graduate programs in clinical psychology," after "veterinary medicine".

(2) DEFINITION.—Section 740(c)(3)(C) of such Act is amended by inserting before the semicolon a comma and "or at a graduate program in clinical psychology".

(d) TERMS AND CONDITIONS OF LOANS.—Section 741(b)(1) of such Act is amended by striking out "or" before "doctor of veterinary medicine", and by inserting before the comma at the end thereof the following: ", or a doctoral degree in clinical psychology".

(e) REPAYMENT.—Section 741(c) of such Act is amended by inserting after "veterinary medicine," the following: "or at a graduate program in clinical psychology,".

(f) TYPE OF DEGREE.—Section 741(f)(1)(A) of such Act is amended by inserting before the semicolon at the end thereof the following: ", or a doctoral degree in clinical psychology".

(g) TYPE OF SCHOOL.—Section 741(f)(1)(B) of such Act is amended by inserting before the semicolon at the end thereof the following: ", or at a graduate program in clinical psychology".

(h) REPAYMENT BY SECRETARY.—Section 741(1) of such Act is amended by striking out "or podiatry" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "podiatry, or clinical psychology".

(i) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this Act shall be effective with respect to loans made on or after the date of the enactment of this Act.●

S. 98. A bill to amend the Public Health Service Act to ensure that social work students are eligible for support under the Health Careers Opportunity Program in title VII; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

S. 99. A bill to amend the Public Health Service Act to specify that health maintenance organizations may provide the services of clinical social workers; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

SOCIAL WORK LEGISLATION

● Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, today, I am introducing several bills on behalf of our Nation's clinical social workers.

The first bill would ensure that social workers are a recognized profession under the Public Health Service Health Maintenance Organization Act [HMO] and as such, merely codifies current practice and reflects the modification in the Medicare HMO legislation that the Congress has already enacted into public law.

The second bill would modify the U.S. Public Health Service Act to ensure that clinical social work students are eligible for scholarships under the Health Careers Opportunity Program—title VII.

Mr. President, our Nation's clinical social workers have a truly outstanding track record in serving those segments of our society that are in need and in particular, our Nation's minorities. Accordingly, I feel that it is only appropriate to ensure that every effort is made to allow these individuals to obtain advanced degrees in social work if they so desire.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of my bills be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bills are ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 98

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SOCIAL WORK STUDENTS.

Section 787 of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 295g-7) is amended—

(1) in subsection (a)(1), by inserting "public and nonprofit private schools which offer programs in social work," before "and other public or private";

(2) in subsection (a)(2)(A), by inserting ", including education and training of social work students" before the comma at the end thereof; and

(3) in subsection (b)(1), by inserting "or that offer programs in social work" before "that receive a grant".

SECTION 1. CLINICAL SOCIAL WORKER SERVICES.

Section 1302 of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 300e-1) is amended—

(1) in paragraphs (1) and (2), by inserting "clinical social worker," after "psychologist," each place it appears;

(2) in paragraph (4)(A), by striking out "and psychologists" and inserting in lieu thereof "psychologists, and clinical social workers"; and

(3) in paragraph (5), by inserting "clinical social work," after "psychology,".●

S. 100. A bill to amend title XVIII of the Social Security Act with respect to coverage of, and payment for, services of psychologists under part B of the Medicare Program; to the Committee on Finance.

PSYCHOLOGICAL SERVICES UNDER MEDICARE

● Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, I am extremely pleased to be introducing a bill today that builds on the important work of Senator INOUYE. Senator INOUYE has been a true leader in the fight to improve the availability of psychological services over his many years in the Senate. I am honored to be joining him in the effort to ensure that the elderly, no matter where they live, have access to mental health services.

The bill I am introducing would authorize psychologists to be reimbursed by Medicare for providing vital mental health services that they are trained and licensed to provide. This proposal is a necessary and appropriate step to provide our Nation's elderly with increased access to mental health care under Medicare. This is especially important in those parts of the country, like many parts of West Virginia, that lack a sufficient number of psychiatrists.

Two years ago, during deliberations on the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act, a very important and encouraging first step was made. For the first time since the inception of the Medicare Program, Congress modified the mental health benefit to authorize reimbursement for services provided by psychologists who see patients without physician supervision in community mental health centers or rural health clinics. Though important, it does not go far enough. I was especially pleased to learn, however, that the desire to improve the Medicare mental health benefit received bipartisan support. The bill I am introducing today builds on the work we were able to accomplish in the Omnibus Reconciliation Act of 1987.

I first became aware of this critical problem when several psychologists from my own State pointed out to me the lack of authorized Medicare mental health providers in many West Virginia counties. Psychiatrists do not practice in 60 percent of West Virginia's counties. Almost 20 percent of West Virginia senior citizens live in counties that have psychologists, but not psychiatrists.

Nationwide, the percentage is similar—psychiatrists are not found in 62 percent of all counties in the United States. Most of these counties are rural and have a greater proportion of residents over 65 years of age than the Nation as a whole. Lack of Medicare coverage creates a very real financial barrier for many elderly who need mental health care but can't afford to pay out-of-pocket for these services. These elderly are forced to do without an important health care service—a service that other elderly have available to them because of where they live.

In the long run, psychologists can reduce program costs because they charge less than the current eligible physician mental health providers. Evidence indicates that a significant number of patients will choose to be treated by psychologists rather than psychiatrists. This could reduce the costs to Medicare per recipient of mental health services. Moreover, research shows that when psychologists compete in the mental health care market, psychiatrists' fees average 9 to 12 percent less than where there is no competition.

My bill would require psychologists to accept assignment. Mr. President, what that means is that a psychologist could not charge an elderly person more than what the Medicare program determines is a reasonable charge. This is extremely important from the beneficiary's point of view.

The National Association of Area Agencies on Aging, along with other seniors advocacy groups, have voiced their support for this bill. In a recent letter, NAAAA wrote,

> There are many reasons why the elderly do not receive adequate mental health care, with one of the primary reasons being poor access to services.

Mr. President, expanding coverage gives seniors the right to choose the mental health caregiver that is right for him or her—it gives them freedom of choice. Evidence shows that some older Americans prefer psychologists to physicians for mental health care. Claims data from other Federal health plans and private insurance plans show that a greater proportion of patients select psychologists rather than psychiatrists as their mental health care provider. I think it is high time we allow senior citizens to make this decision themselves.

My bill outlines exactly who will be reimbursed. Only highly trained and experienced psychologists will be able to receive Federal reimbursement for the care they provide. Doctoral-level psychologists are licensed by all States for independent practice of psychotherapy and other psychological services. This explains why psychologists are authorized in all other Federal programs as providers of direct services. In fact, laws in 42 States require that insurance programs give patients the freedom of choice to select a psychologist rather than a physician for mental health care treatment.

Mr. President, Congress has been trying to figure out ways to attract health care providers to underserved areas for a long time. I believe we have failed to recognize the huge unmet need that exists for mental health services. In fact, a recent study found that 3 to 5 million rural elderly were in need of mental health services, yet less than 1 percent of the rural elderly were able to get treatment. Psychologists have already demonstrated a willingness to set up practices in underserved areas. We need to foster this commitment. I believe it is important and timely to include doctoral-level psychologists as eligible providers under Medicare. It is a compassionate and long overdue response to the needs of many elderly.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill and a description of S. 100 be included following my statement.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SECTION 1. MEDICARE COVERAGE OF, AND PAYMENT FOR, PSYCHOLOGISTS' SERVICES

(a) ELIMINATING LIMITATION TO SERVICES FURNISHED AT COMMUNITY MENTAL HEALTH CENTERS.—Section 1861(ii) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395x(ii)), is amended by striking "at a community mental health center (as such term is used in the Public Health Service Act)".

(b) PROVIDING FOR PAYMENT ON A REASONABLE CHARGE BASIS.—Section 1833(a)(1) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 13951(a)(1)) is amended by striking "(L) with respect to qualified psychologist services under section 1861(s)(2)(M),".

(c) PSYCHOLOGIST DEFINED.—For purposes of this section the term "psychologist" or "qualified psychologist services" means an individual who or services delivered by an individual who—

(1) is licensed or certified at the independent practice level of psychology by the State in which such individual so practices,

(2) possesses a doctorate degree in psychology from a regionally accredited educational institution, or in the case of an individual licensed or certified prior to January 1, 1978, possesses a master's degree in psychology and is listed in a national register of mental health service providers in psychology approved by the Secretary, and

(3) possesses at least two years of supervised experience in health service, at least one year of which is postdegree.

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to services performed on or after January 1, 1990.

SUMMARY OF S. 100

CURRENT LAW

The Deficit Reduction Act of 1984 recognized services furnished pursuant to a risk-sharing contract by a psychologist.

The Omnibus Reconciliation Act of 1987 included clinical psychologists' services in the definition of covered rural health clinic services under Medicare Part B.

The Omnibus Reconciliation Act of 1987 authorized coverage of and payments for "qualified psychologist services" furnished at a community mental health center and such services that are necessarily furnished off-site as part of a treatment plan because of the inability of the individual to travel to the center by reason of physical or mental impairment, because of institutionalization, or because of similar circumstances. Payment may only be made on an assignment-related basis.

PROPOSAL

To provide that psychologist services are covered under Part B of Medicare. Requires psychologists to accept assignment.

Psychologist is defined as an individual who:

Is licensed or certified at the independent practice level of psychology by the State in which the individual practices,

Possesses a doctorate degree in psychology from a regionally accredited educational institution, or in the case of an individual licenses or certified prior to January 1, 1978, possesses a master's degree in psychology and is listed in a national register of mental health services providers in psychology approved by the Secretary, and

Possesses at least two years of supervised experience in health service, at least one year of which is postdegree.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I am pleased to join with my colleague, Senator ROCKEFELLER, to introduce legislation which would amend the Medicare law to provide for the direct reimbursement for the services of our Nation's psychologists.

To date, we have made considerable progress in modifying the Medicare statute to recognize a wide range of nonphysician health care providers and thereby allow these individuals to be reimbursed for a comprehensive range of services within the scope of their various State's practice acts. Currently, psychologists functioning within health maintenance organizations, rural health clinics, and community mental health centers, are deemed autonomous providers under this Federal program, and the legislation we are introducing today would expand coverage to other settings and thereby bring Medicare in line with our other Federal health initiatives such as the Department of Defense CHAMPUS Program and the Federal Employees' Workers Compensation Act.

I am especially pleased that today this bill is being introduced by my colleague, Senator ROCKEFELLER who is a member of the Senate Finance Committee. During his tenure in the U.S. Senate, he has truly become a champion of our Nation's mental health programs.

Mr. SANFORD:

S. 101. A bill to mandate a balanced budget, to provide for the reduction of the national debt, to protect retirement funds, to require honest budgetary accounting and for other purposes; to the Committees on Governmental Affairs and the Budget, jointly, pursuant to order of April 4, 1977.

BALANCED BUDGET AND DEBT REDUCTION ACT OF 1989

● Mr. SANFORD. Mr. President, there is not a more pressing problem before the 101st Congress than our unacceptably large Federal debt, created by years of deficit spending. Nothing we have done, including implementation of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings, has reduced our real deficit one dime. Under Gramm-Rudman-Hollings we are merely dabbing at a nosebleed while blood is gushing from the jugular, threatening the strength of our great Nation. We cannot any longer afford to continue this charade.

Gramm-Rudman-Hollings claims to reach a balanced budget by 1993. This is a sham. The most recent CBO baseline projections show a real deficit for that year to be roughly $300 billion. If we completely eliminate the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings deficit estimate for this year of $155 billion by 1993, we will still be faced with a deficit in the $150 billion range. And we will then have a Federal debt, not approaching $3 trillion as is now the case, but rather a Federal debt approaching $4 trillion.

I am introducing legislation today that proposes to lay out the budget in a straightforward, clear and honest way, to facilitate a real effort on the part of the Bush administration and Congress to eliminate the deficit and get at our rapidly rising debt—a debt we are now spending about 20 cents of every Federal dollar to service.

It is time that we stop suggesting that, under Gramm-Rudman-Hollings we are reducing the deficit when in reality, each year our true deficit and the increase in our Federal debt continue to rise.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill and a summary of its provisions be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Balanced Budget and Debt Reduction Act of 1989".

TITLE I—OPERATING BUDGET, RETIREMENT FUNDS BUDGET, AND DEBT AND INTEREST BUDGET

SEC. 101. OPERATING BUDGET, RETIREMENT FUNDS BUDGET, AND DEBT AND INTEREST BUDGET IN THE PRESIDENT'S BUDGET.

(a) UNIFIED BUDGET.—Chapter 11 of title 31, United States Code, is amended by inserting after section 1105 the following new section:

"§ 1105a. Operating budget, retirement funds budget, and debt and interest budget

"(a) The budget of the United States Government submitted by the President under section 1105 of this title shall be a unified budget composed of—

"(1) an operating budget;

"(2) a retirement funds budget; and

"(3) a debt and interest budget.

The President's budget submission shall present these three budgets separately.

"(b) For the purposes of this section—

"(1) the unified budget shall include all receipts and expenditures for Federal funds and trust funds consolidated to display totals for the Federal Government as a whole;

"(2) the operating budget shall include all receipts and expenditures of all Federal entities, other than those in the retirement funds budget and the debt and interest budget;

"(3) the retirement funds budget shall include receipts and expenditures for—

"(A) the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Insurance Trust Fund;

"(B) the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund;

"(C) the Civil Service Retirement and Disability Fund;

"(D) the Military Retirement Fund;

"(E) the Federal Supplementary Medical Insurance Trust Fund;

"(F) the Federal Disability Insurance Trust Fund;

"(G) the Railroad Retirement Fund; and

"(H) such other funds or accounts that the Director of Management and Budget (in cooperation with the Comptroller General, the Director of the Congressional Budget Office, and the Chairmen and the Ranking Minority Members of the Committees on the Budget of the Senate and the House of Representatives) determines should be classified as retirement trust funds in order to fulfill the purposes of this section; and

"(4) the debt and interest budget shall include receipts and expenditures for—

"(A) reductions or increases in the public debt;

"(B) interest on the public debt; and

"(C) in times of declared war or declared recession pursuant to section 254 of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985, inter-fund transfers to the operating budget.".

(b) AMENDMENT TO THE CHAPTER ANALYSIS.—The chapter analysis for chapter 11 of title 31, United States Code, is amended by adding after the item for section 1105 the following:

"1105a. Operating budget, retirement funds budget, and debt and interest budget.".

SEC. 102. REPORTING OF TRANSFERS AMONG BUDGETS.

SEC. 103. OPERATING BUDGET, RETIREMENT FUNDS BUDGET, AND DEBT AND INTEREST BUDGET IN THE CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET.

Section 301(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 is amended by inserting after "ensuing fiscal years," the following: "for the operating budget, the retirement funds budget, and the debt and interest budget (as defined in 31 U.S.C. section 1105a), respectively,".

SEC. 104. CONFORMING CHANGE.

Section 710(a) of the Social Security Act is amended by inserting "operating" after "the totals of the".

TITLE II—BALANCED OPERATING BUDGETS

SEC. 201. POINT OF ORDER AGAINST UNBALANCED OPERATING BUDGETS.

Section 301(i) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 is amended by striking paragraph (2) and inserting in lieu thereof:

"(2)(A) Except as provided in paragraph (3), it shall not be in order in either the House of Representatives or the Senate to consider any concurrent resolution on the budget for a fiscal year under this section, or to consider any amendment to such a concurrent resolution, or to consider a conference report on such a concurrent resolution, if the level of operating budget outlays for such fiscal year that is set forth in such concurrent resolution or conference report exceeds the recommended level of operating revenues set forth for that year, or if the adoption of such amendment would result in a level of operating budget outlays for that fiscal year that exceeds the recommended level of operating revenues for that fiscal year.

"(B) In the House of Representatives the point of order established under subparagraph (A) with respect to the consideration of a conference report or with respect to the consideration of a motion to concur, with or without an amendment or amendments, in a Senate amendment, the stage of disagreement having been reached, may be waived only by a vote of three-fifths of the Members present and voting, a quorum being present.

"(3) This subsection shall not apply if a declaration of war by the Congress is in effect.

"(j) BUDGET LEVELS DETERMINED BY THE BUDGET COMMITTEE.—For the purposes of this section, the levels of new budget authority, spending authority as described in section 401(c)(2), outlays, and new credit authority for a fiscal year shall be determined on the basis of estimates made by the Committee on the Budget of the House of Representatives or the Senate, as the case may be.".

SEC. 202. POINT OF ORDER AGAINST LEGISLATION THAT WOULD CAUSE AN OPERATING DEFICIT.

Section 311(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 is amended—

(1) in the matter after paragraph (3) by inserting before "or, in the Senate" the following: "or would cause operating budget outlays to exceed operating budget revenues"; and

(2) in the matter following subparagraph (B) by striking "paragraph (2) of such section" and inserting "paragraph (3) of such section".

SEC. 203. PROHIBITION OF COUNTING AS SAVINGS THE TRANSFER OF GOVERNMENT ACTIONS FROM ONE YEAR TO ANOTHER.

(a) ELIMINATING EXCEPTIONS.—Section 202 of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Reaffirmation Act of 1987 is amended by—

(1) striking "(a) IN GENERAL.—Except as otherwise provided in this section, any" and inserting "Any";

(2) striking "altering" and inserting "reducing"; and

(3) striking subsection (b).

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 251(a)(6)(K) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 is amended by striking "except to the extent provided in such section".

SEC. 204. PRESIDENT'S OPERATING BUDGET MUST BE BALANCED.

Section 1105(f) of title 31, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1), by inserting before the period "using a budget baseline estimate made in accordance with section 251(a)(6) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985";

(2) in paragraph (2), by inserting before the comma "using a budget baseline estimate made in accordance with section 251(a)(6) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985";

(3) by striking paragraph (3) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(3) In the operating budget in the budget so transmitted for any fiscal year, revenues shall equal outlays, with revenues and outlays at such levels as the President may consider most desirable and feasible. To the extent that gross revenues exceed gross outlays, the President shall indicate such surplus as an inter-fund transfer to the debt and interest budget."; and

(4) by striking paragraph (4) and redesignating paragraph (5) as paragraph (4).

SEC. 205. EFFECTIVE DATE.

This title shall take effect on the date of enactment of this title with respect to fiscal year 1991 and all subsequent fiscal years.

TITLE III—TRUST FUND FOR THE REDUCTION OF THE PUBLIC DEBT

SEC. 301. PUBLIC DEBT REDUCTION POLICY.

It is the policy of the United States that—

(1) not later than September 30, 1989, the Congress shall amend the Internal Revenue Code to establish a special debt retirement tax or taxes dedicated to the reduction of the public debt, or earmark an existing tax or taxes for that purpose;

(2) the revenues collected from the debt retirement tax shall be especially titled so that citizens may be aware of their purpose;

(3) the revenues collected under the debt retirement tax shall be deposited to a separate trust fund account;

(4) the trust fund shall be used only for the retirement of the public debt;

(5) the Secretary of the Treasury shall administer the account with the advice of a bipartisan board consisting of the Secretary of the Treasury, as chairman, the Chairman and Ranking Minority Members of the Committee on Finance, the Committee on Ways and Means, and the Committees on the Budget of the Senate and the House of Representatives, and the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board;

(6) any debt retirement tax enacted shall expire upon the reduction of the public debt to a target level of not more than 20 percent of the average Gross National Product over the previous 3 years; and

(7) in determining what type of tax is appropriate, the Congress shall take into account ability to pay.

TITLE IV—MANDATED REDUCTION OF THE PUBLIC DEBT

SEC. 401. DEFINITION OF "DEFICIT".

Section 3 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 is amended by striking paragraph (6) and inserting in lieu thereof:

"(6) The term 'deficit' means, with respect to any fiscal year, the amount by which combined budget outlays for the operating and debt and interest budgets for such fiscal year exceed combined revenues for the operating and debt and interest budgets for such fiscal year. Amounts paid by the Federal Financing Bank for the purchase of loans made or guaranteed by any department, agency, or instrumentality of the Government of the United States shall be treated as outlays of such department, agency, or instrumentality.".

SEC. 402. REDUCTION OF DEFICITS.

Section 3 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 is amended by striking paragraph (7) and inserting in lieu thereof:

"(7) The term 'maximum deficit amount' means—

"(A) with respect to fiscal year 1989, $256,000,000,000;

"(B) with respect to fiscal year 1990, $224,000,000,000;

"(C) with respect to fiscal year 1991, $193,000,000,000;

"(D) with respect to fiscal year 1992, $162,000,000,000;

"(E) with respect to fiscal year 1993, $131,000,000,000;

"(F) with respect to fiscal year 1994, $100,000,000,000;

"(G) with respect to fiscal year 1995, $69,000,000,000;

"(H) with respect to fiscal year 1996, $38,000,000,000;

"(I) with respect to fiscal year 1997, $7,000,000,000;

"(J) with respect to fiscal year 1998, $24,000,000,000 (surplus);

"(K) with respect to fiscal year 1999, $55,000,000,000 (surplus);

"(L) with respect to fiscal year 2000, $86,000,000,000 (surplus);

"(M) with respect to fiscal year 2001, $117,000,000,000 (surplus);

"(N) with respect to fiscal year 2002, $148,000,000,000 (surplus); and

"(O) with respect to fiscal year 2003 and all subsequent fiscal years until the public debt has been reduced to less than 20% of the Gross National Product, $150,000,000,000 (surplus).".

SEC. 403. REVENUE REQUIREMENTS.

Section 252(a)(7) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(8) REVENUE REQUIREMENTS.—(A) No later than 7 days after the issuance of a report pursuant to section 251(a)(2)(B) indicating that the deficit excess for a fiscal year exceeds $10,000,000,000, the Committees on the Budget of the House of Representatives and the Senate shall report to their respective Houses a concurrent resolution directing the Committee of Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Finance of the Senate to report within 60 days changes in law within their jurisdictions sufficient to increase revenues by an amount equal to one-half of the deficit excess reported in such report.

"(B) The provisions relating to the consideration of a joint resolution under section 254(a)(4) shall apply to the consideration of a concurrent resolution reported pursuant to this subsection in the House of Representatives or the Senate.

"(C) The provisions relating to the consideration of reconciliation legislation under sections 310 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 shall apply to the consideration of legislation reported pursuant to a concurrent resolution under this section.".

SEC. 404. CONFORMING CHANGES.

(a) Section 257(10) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 is amended by striking "of fiscal years 1988 through 1992 and zero with respect to fiscal year 1993" and inserting in lieu thereof "fiscal year".

(b) Section 275(b) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1), by striking "1993" and inserting in lieu thereof "2004"; and

(2) in paragraph (2), by striking "and the second sentence of section 3(6) of such Act (as added by section 201(a)(1) of this joint resolution)".

TITLE V—INVESTMENT OF EXCESS SOCIAL SECURITY TRUST FUNDS IN LOAN PROGRAMS

SEC. 501. INVESTMENT OF EXCESS SOCIAL SECURITY TRUST FUNDS IN LOAN PROGRAMS

The General Accounting Office shall study and report to the Committee on Finance, the Committee on Ways and Means, and the Committees on the Budget of the Senate and the House of Representatives on the efficacy of amending title II of the Social Security Act to preserve and protect the excess funds in the Trust Funds under that title by providing that they be invested in sound, interest-bearing loans to help rebuild the national facilities and to improve the national resources, specifically, in United States interest-bearing loan programs for education, economic development, housing, and such public works as water and sewer, highway and bridge construction.

TITLE VI—ALTERNATE-YEAR RECONCILIATION

SEC. 601. TIMETABLE.

Section 300 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 300. The timetable for the Congressional budget process is as follows:

October 30	President transmits to Congress a detailed message regarding the initial order.
November 15	Comptroller General issues compliance report.".

SEC. 602. ALTERNATE-YEAR RECONCILIATION.

Section 310(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 is amended by—

(1) inserting after "any" the following: "even-numbered"; and

(2) inserting after "fiscal year" the first time it appears the following: "(or any odd-numbered fiscal year in which the Director of the Office of Management determines in his initial report pursuant to section 251(a)(2)(B) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 that a deficit excess exists)".

SEC. 603. EARLY INITIAL OMB REPORT.

The Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 is amended—

(1) in section 251(a)(1)(A), by striking "August 15" and inserting in lieu thereof "March 15";

(2) in section 251(a)(2)(A), by striking "August 20" and inserting in lieu thereof "March 20";

(3) in section 251(a)(2)(B), by striking "August 25" and inserting in lieu thereof "March 25";

(4) in section 251(a)(2)(C), by striking clauses (iii) and (iv);

(5) in section 251(a)(3)(A)(ii)(II), by striking "August 15" and inserting in lieu thereof "March 15";

(6) in section 251(c)(1)(A), by striking "August 15" and inserting in lieu thereof "March 15";

(7) in section 252(a)(1), by striking "August 25" and inserting in lieu thereof "March 25"; and

(8) in section 252(b)(2), by striking "August 15" and inserting in lieu thereof "March 15".

BALANCED BUDGET AND DEBT REDUCTION ACT OF 1989 SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE

Section 1 gives the title of the act: the "Balanced Budget and Debt Reduction Act of 1989".

TITLE I—OPERATING BUDGET, RETIREMENT FUNDS BUDGET, AND DEBT AND INTEREST BUDGET

Title I takes the retirement trust funds and interest payments out of the operating budget. The resulting operating budget focuses attention on the real change in the deficit that current actions cause. This budget no longer masks deficits with the surpluses of the retirement trust funds—surpluses that we need to build up to pay for the retirement of baby boomers in the next century. This budget also does not inflate the deficit by the debt service that the payment of interest of the public debt reflects.

The result is three budgets focused on three different timeframes: one for retiring the debt built up in the past, one for current operating expenditures, and one for the retirement programs of the future.

As explained in more detail below, removing the retirement fund surpluses and the net interest payments from the operating budget allows the Government to balance the operating budget in fiscal year 1991 with little more deficit reduction than already required by Gramm-Rudman-Hollings.

SECTION 101. OPERATING BUDGET, RETIREMENT FUNDS BUDGET, AND DEBT AND INTEREST BUDGET IN THE PRESIDENT'S BUDGET

Section 101 divides the unified budget of the government among three component parts:

(1) an operating budget;

(2) a retirement funds budget; and

(3) a debt and interest budget.

Section 101(a) adds a new section to title 31 of the United States Code requiring that the President present these three budgets separately when he submits his annual budget submission.

Section 101 also defines the unified budget and the three component parts.

The unified budget includes all receipts and expenditures for all Federal Government entities.

The operating budget includes all receipts and expenditures of Federal entities other than those in the two other component budgets.

The retirement funds budget includes receipts and expenditures for Social Security and the other retirement trust funds that accumulate for the future. The Director of the Office of Management and Budget (in cooperation with the Comptroller General, the Director of the Congressional Budget Office, and the Chairmen and the Ranking Minority Members of the Committees on the Budget of the Senate and the House of Representatives) may classify funds as retirement trust funds in order to fulfill the purposes of this section.

The debt and interest budget includes changes in the public debt, interest on the public debt, and (in emergencies) interfund transfers to the operating budget. The interest on the national debt displayed here includes payments to the retirement trust funds, and is thus larger than the often-cited net interest number.

Subsection (b) makes a conforming amendment to the chapter analysis to add the title of the new section.

SECTION 102. REPORTING OF TRANSFERS AMONG BUDGETS

Section 102 makes a conforming amendment to the existing section 1105(a) of title 31, United States Code, to require the reporting of inter-fund transfers between the new operating budget and the debt and interest budget. Transfers from the operating budget to the retirement funds budget appear as interest paid and interest received. No other transfers would be permissible.

SECTION 103. OPERATING BUDGET, RETIREMENT FUNDS BUDGET, AND DEBT AND INTEREST BUDGET IN THE CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET

Section 103 requires the congressional budget to reflect the same division among three component budgets.

SECTION 104. CONFORMING CHANGE

Section 104 makes a conforming change in section 710(a) of the Social Security Act so that the Social Security budget may appear in the retirement funds budget.

TITLE II—BALANCED OPERATING BUDGETS

Title I changes the operating budget so that it reflects only the current demands on the Government. Title II requires that the President and the Congress balance that operating budget. In other words, the Government must spend no more on current needs than it raises in current revenues. This requirement is not only a moral one, but (as explained below) an achievable one.

SECTION 201. POINT OF ORDER AGAINST UNBALANCED OPERATING BUDGETS

Section 201 creates a point of order that would prohibit any budget resolution (and any amendment or conference report on it) that would result in a deficit in the operating budget (except during declared war or recession). Under existing law, a three-fifths vote would be required to waive or suspend the point of order (except during a declared recession) in the Senate (and, in certain circumstances, in the House).

Section 201 repeals obsolete provisions relating to fiscal years 1988 and 1989 and restates (to avoid the negative implication of repeal) the authority of the Budget Committees to make scorekeeping decisions necessary for section 301 of the Congressional Budget Act.

SECTION 202. POINT OF ORDER AGAINST LEGISLATION THAT WOULD CAUSE AN OPERATING DEFICIT

Section 202 augments the existing point of order under section 311 of the Congressional Budget Act to prohibit any bill, resolution, amendment, or conference report increasing the deficit if its enactment would cause operating budget outlays to exceed operating budget revenues (except during declared war or recession). A three-fifths vote would be required to waive or suspend the section (except during a declared recession) in the Senate (and, in certain circumstances, in the House).

Section 202 also repeals an obsolete paragraph of section 311 of the Congressional Budget Act and renumbers a paragraph reference to conform to the new paragraph numbering changed by section 201 of this Act.

SECTION 203. PROHIBITION OF COUNTING AS SAVINGS THE TRANSFER OF GOVERNMENT ACTIONS FROM ONE YEAR TO ANOTHER

Section 203 eliminates exceptions to section 202 of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Reaffirmation Act of 1987 that have been abused. Section 203 also makes clear the original intent of section 202 that the section cannot be used to free up additional spending money, but applies only to prohibit the creation of spending room by artificial transfers. Section 203 also makes a conforming amendment to section 251 (a)(6)(K) of Gramm-Rudman-Hol-lings to make clear that the exceptions no longer exist.

SECTION 204. PRESIDENT'S OPERATING BUDGET MUST BE BALANCED

Section 204 requires the President's budget to use a budget baseline made in accordance with section 251(a)(6) of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings—the same baseline that the Office of Management and Budget must use at the end of the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings cycle to determine whether that law requires across-the-board cuts. The President is thus not able to use asset sales, among other things, to meet the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings targets.

Section 204 requires that the President submit a balanced operating budget. To the extent that gross operating revenues exceed gross operating outlays, the President must transfer that surplus to the debt and interest budget.

Section 204 also repeals obsolete provisions of section 1105(f).

SECTION 205. EFFECTIVE DATE

Section 205 provides that this title take effect immediately on enactment with respect to fiscal year 1991 and all subsequent fiscal years. According to Congressional Budget Office estimates, in fiscal year 1991, the retirement trust funds will be in surplus by about $132 billion. Under this Act, this reduction in the deficit is taken out of the operating budget. In fiscal year 1991, the net interest payments will be about $188 billion. Under this Act, this increase in the deficit is also taken out of the operating budget. The 1991 operating budget will thus be about $56 billion closer to balance than the unified budget without any Government action merely by means of the reclassification made by this Act. The Congressional Budget Office projects that the unified budget deficit for 1991 will be $131 billion. Less the $56 billion, the reclassified operating budget will be in deficit by $75 billion absent any intervening action to reduce the deficit. The requirement of this new section will thus be that over the period of fiscal years 1990 and 1991, this $75 billion deficit must be eliminated. Thus, to have a balanced operating budget would require a real deficit reduction of only $37.5 billion in each of the next two fiscal years (using the more pessimistic CBO numbers), a goal compatible with existing Gramm-Rudman-Hollings targets, which require a $36 billion deficit reduction in each of these years (as measured by the more pessimistic Office of Management and Budget estimates).

TITLE III—TRUST FUND FOR THE REDUCTION OF THE PUBLIC DEBT

Title III states the policy of the United States that the Government should reduce the public debt. Funds raised for that purpose should not be available for current needs, but must be devoted to the retirement of the debt that drags on the economy.

SECTION 301. PUBLIC DEBT REDUCTION POLICY

Section 301 states the policy of the United States that the Congress should establish a special debt retirement tax dedicated to the reduction of the public debt or earmark an existing tax for that purpose. Any revenues collected would be deposited to a separate trust fund account used only for the retirement of the public debt. The Secretary of the Treasury would administer the account with the advice of a bipartisan board. The tax would expire upon the reduction of the public debt to a target level of not more than 20 percent of the average Gross National Product over the previous 3 years. In determining what type of tax is appropriate, the Congress would take into account ability to pay.

TITLE IV—MANDATED REDUCTION OF THE PUBLIC DEBT

Title IV expands on the existing Gramm-Rudman-Hollings process to apply that deficit reduction program to require reduction of the public debt as well. Title IV defines the term "deficit" to exclude the retirement funds. The surpluses from those budgets would not be available to mask the true deficit. For purposes of the Congressional Budget Act and Gramm-Rudman-Hollings, Title IV would define "deficit" to include both past and current obligations, to make clear that Gramm-Rudman-Hollings requires the payment of interest on the public debt as well as all operating expenditures. Title IV also sets Gramm-Rudman-Hollings on a more ambitious deficit reduction path—one that acknowledges our obligation to pay off some of the public debt to reduce it to more manageable levels.

SECTION 401. DEFINITION OF "DEFICIT"

Section 401 revises the definition of the term "deficit" to mean the amount by which combined budget outlays for the operating and debt and interest budgets exceed combined revenues for the operating and debt and interest budgets for that fiscal year. Thus, the deficit for the purposes of the Congressional Budget Act and Gramm-Rudman-Hollings is the same as under prior law except that surpluses in the retirement trust funds are not counted to artificially reduce the deficit.

(The definition reaffirms the prior law statement that amounts paid by the Federal Financing Bank for the purchase of loans made or guaranteed by any department, agency, or instrumentality of the Government of the United States shall be treated as outlays of such department, agency, or instrumentality.)

SECTION 402. REDUCTION OF DEFICITS

Section 402 revises the deficit reduction schedule of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings on a more ambitious course, as follows:

Fiscal Year	Target
1989	$256,000,000,000
1990	224,000,000,000
1991	193,000,000,000
1992	162,000,000,000
1993	131,000,000,000
1994	100,000,000,000
1995	69,000,000,000
1996	38,000,000,000
1997	7,000,000,000
1998	[1] −24,000,000,000
1999	−55,000,000,000
2000	−86,000,000,000
2001	−117,000,000,000
2002	−148,000,000,000
2003 [2]	−150,000,000,000

[1] Surplus.
[2] And all subsequent fiscal years until the public debt has been reduced to less than 20% of the Gross National Product.

This schedule reflects the existing requirements of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings for fiscal years 1989 and 1990, after adjustment for the removal of the surplus in the retirement funds accounts. For fiscal years 1991 and after, the schedule calls for real deficit reduction of $40 billion each year. As the CBO baseline deficit without trust fund surpluses is rising by about $9 billion a year, the target thus declines by $31 billion a year. This amount reflects the consensus among many respected economists that a reduction in the deficit of less than one percent of the Gross National Product per year would avoid any recessionary impact. The schedule calls for reducing the deficit steadily until it goes into surplus in order to actually reduce the public debt. The ultimate rate of debt reduction—$150 billion a year in fiscal year 2003 (assuming no interrupting war or recession)—is appropriately five percent of the outstanding debt of $3 trillion each year.

SECTION 403. REVENUE REQUIREMENTS.

Section 403 amends Gramm-Rudman-Hollings to require the creation of a special resolution—like a budget resolution, but with extremely limited purposes—whenever the Office of Management and Budget issues a report indicating that, absent further action, Gramm-Rudman-Hollings would require across-the-board cuts. Whenever that happened, the Budget Committees would report to their respective Houses a concurrent resolution with one simple reconciliation instruction: directing the tax-writing Committees to report within 60 days changes in law within their jurisdictions sufficient to increase revenues by an amount equal to one-half of the deficit excess reported in the Office of Management and Budget report. The special concurrent resolution would not be amendable and debate would be limited. If the tax writing committees complied with the reconciliation instruction, the procedural provisions relating to reconciliation legislation under the Congressional Budget Act would apply to the legislation reported pursuant to the instructions.

This new process would not mandate tax increases. Taxes could still only be raised by act of Congress signed by the President. It would, however, require a discussion—in the context of this simple concurrent resolution—of whether new revenues are needed. Each House of Congress would be afforded the opportunity for a simple up-or-down vote on whether revenue should be raised to eliminate one half of the excess. There would be no recrimination over who first suggested the tax increase, the issue would be raised automatically. Those who oppose tax increases of any kind would still have the opportunity to vote against them.

SECTION 404. CONFORMING CHANGES.

Section 404 amends Gramm-Rudman-Hollings to extend the expiration date of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings to 2004, when the revised timetable above reaches its stable rate. Section 404 also repeals language that refers to a sentence in the definition of the term deficit that has been stricken by section 401 of this Act.

TITLE V—INVESTMENT OF EXCESS SOCIAL SECURITY TRUST FUNDS IN LOAN PROGRAMS

SECTION 501. INVESTMENT OF EXCESS SOCIAL SECURITY TRUST FUNDS IN LOAN PROGRAMS.

Section 501 requires the General Accounting Office to study on the efficacy of amending the Social Security Act to preserve and protect the excess funds in the Trust Funds by providing that they be invested in sound, interest-bearing loans to help rebuild the national facilities and to improve the national resources—specifically, in United States interest-bearing loan programs for education, economic development, housing, and such public works as water and sewer, highway and bridge construction.

TITLE VI—ALTERNATE-YEAR RECONCILIATION

A variety of two-year budgeting proposals have been put forth in recent years. Title VI presents a compromise alternative that embodies the practical experience under the budget summit agreement reached in November of 1987. Under this title, reconciliation—the most onerous portion of the budget process—would take place only in non-election years. An exception is provided to allow for reconciliation in an election year only if the deficit would exceed the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings target for that year. Budget resolutions to implement the two-year schedule would continue—just as they did under the summit agreement. The resolution in the second year, however, would be less controversial and would divert far less attention from other business than under current law.

SECTION 601. TIMETABLE.

Section 601 revises the timetable of the Congressional Budget Act as follows:

On or before:	Action to be completed:
First Monday after January 3.	President submits budget.
February 15	Congressional Budget Office submits report to Budget Committees.
February 25	Committees submit views and estimates to Budget Committees.
March 15	Initial OMB/CBO snapshot.
March 20	CBO issues its initial report to OMB and Congress.
March 25	OMB issues its initial rport to the President and Congress.
March 25	President issues initial order.
April 9	President transmits to Congress a detailed message regarding the initial order.
April 15	Congress completes action on concurrent resolution on the budget.
May 15	Appropriations bills may be considered in the House.
June 10	House Appropriations Committee reports last appropriations bill.
September 30	Congress completes action on reconciliation legislation in odd-numbered years.
September 30	Congress completes action on appropriations legislation.
October 1	Fiscal year begins and any initial order becomes effective.
October 10	CBO issues its revised report to OMB and Congress.
October 15	OMB issues its revised report to the President and Congress.
October 15	President issues final order (which becomes effective immediately).
October 30	President transmits to Congress a detailed message regarding the initial order.
November 15	Comptroller General issues compliance report.

This now timetable explicitly incorporates Gramm-Rudman-Hollings into the budget timetable, reflecting the reality that Gramm-Rudman-Hollings is part of the budget process. The timetable also incorporates the additional changes made by the next two sections.

SECTION 602. ALTERNATE-YEAR RECONCILIATION.

Section 602 amends the Congressional Budget Act to provide for reconciliation only in even-numbered years, or in odd-numbered fiscal years in which the Office of Management and Budget determines in its initial report under Gramm-Rudman-Hollings that the deficit will exceed the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings target for that year.

SECTION 603. EARLY INITIAL OMB REPORT.

Section 603 moves up the date of the initial snapshot date, the Congressional Budget Office report, and the Office of Management and Budget report from August to March. Section 603 also strikes a provision that requires the Office of Management and Budget report to use the same economics as the President's mid-session report in July, as the initial report will precede the mid-session report.

Moving up the initial snapshot date sets the rules of the game early. It gets the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings reports out of the way of the appropriations process. It also requires the reports early enough to plan a budget resolution based on them.

An earlier initial report tailors the requirement for deficit reduction more closely to the economic situation. When the economy is getting better between March and August and the economy is more able to handle deficit reduction, the earlier Office of Management and Budget report requires more deficit reduction than the prior law. When the economy is getting worse between March and August, the earlier report requires less deficit reduction than the prior law and thus helps to stimulate the economy.

By Mr. HUMPHREY:

S. 103. A bill to amend the Tennessee Valley Authority Act; to the Committee on the Environment and Public Works.

TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY FISCAL RESPONSIBILITY AND ACCOUNTABILITY ACT OF 1989

● Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation that proposes a number of long-overdue and sorely needed reforms at the Tennessee Valley Authority [TVA].

During the 98th and 99th Congresses, it was my privilege to serve as chairman of the Subcommittee on Regional and Community Development which had oversight responsibilities for TVA. During that time, I became familiar with the agency, its history, its mission and the challenges which it now faces.

During this Congress, I will again be serving on the Committee on Environment and Public Works. I look forward to working with my colleagues there on issues involving TVA.

When the original Tennessee Valley Authority Act was signed into law in 1933, the intent was to lift the seven State Tennessee Valley region out of economic depression. More than 50 years later, TVA remains, operating the Nation's largest electric utility as well as regional and community development programs.

Mr. President, whatever successes lie in TVA's past, they are greatly overshadowed by an enormous failure: TVA's Nuclear Program. This multibillion dollar program, financed through the Federal Government, has been shaken by economic and safety-related concerns. Of the 17 reactors included in TVA's original plan, 8 have been canceled, 4 are stalled while under construction, and all five completed plants were shut down due to what the Nuclear Regulatory Commission characterized as "a sustained and consistent history of poor performance." After 2 years of effort by a high-paid outside consultant, and an expenditure totaling hundreds of millions, two plants are operating and one is loading fuel.

Concern over problems at TVA led Governor Baliles of Virginia to initiate a Southern States Energy Board of Review of TVA's vitality. The resultant 1987 report, "TVA: A Path to Recovery," attributes TVA's basic problem to an "indemic [sic] lack" of a workable structure and management accountability.

It has long been my view that what lies at the root of the present crisis facing the Tennessee Valley Authority is a systemic problem arising from very serious flaws in the enacting legislation. Indeed, as testimony before the subcommittee suggested, the agency has frequently found itself in trouble over the years and, I believe, those troubles can be traced to these same fundamental problems.

Due to a variety of odd institutional arrangements incorporated into the act, TVA is effectively shielded from direct accountability to the Congress, to the Executive, to the marketplace and, least of all, to the 7 million people it is supposed to serve. For example, because of TVA's access to the Federal Financing Bank [FFB]—an entity of the U.S. Treasury—it is able to borrow virtually as much money as it needs, whenever it needs it, without any oversight from the Executive or the Congress. Needless to say, a tidy arrangement—unless of course, you are a ratepayer who may be stuck holding the bag for a $1 billion investment that should never have been made.

A May, 1988 article in Barron's explains:

> In a private utility, bankruptcy would only be a matter of time. But TVA has something that other troubled utilities do not have—a nearly endless money hose hooked up to the U.S. Treasury.

Under this blank check policy, a term applied by an OMB witness, TVA has little incentive to pay the Federal Government back. TVA is more likely to keep costs down by rolling over its debts until the $30 billion borrowing ceiling is reached. Such action shields TVA from taking account for its investments and, ultimately, serves to increase the Federal deficit.

My bill proposes eight reforms that would open small, but very important, windows of accountability at TVA:

First, reduce terms of members of TVA Board of Directors:

At present, the three members of the Board of Directors serve for a year of 9 years. This bill proposes to reduce the term of Directors to 3 years. Reducing the length of the terms of members of the Board will significantly increase accountability at TVA. Under this plan, a new Board member would have to be nominated by the President, and confirmed by the Senate every year. Because the nomination process offers the Congress one of the few opportunities to effect policy at TVA, this change will increase Congress' ability to speak to problems at TVA on a regular basis.

Second, limit number of terms a Board member can serve to two:

At present, members of the Board of Directors can serve an unlimited number of 9-year terms. Obviously, this has the potential to erode accountability. With the reduction of length of terms to 3 years, it will be particularly important that no member would be able to serve more than two terms, or 6 years.

Third, reduce TVA's bond ceiling to $18 billion:

Under current law, the TVA bond ceiling is $30 billion. To date, the agency has borrowed over $17 billion from the Federal Government. The agency has made plans to repay only a small portion of that amount. A $30 billion debt ceiling will enable the agency to continue borrowing heavily, and thus accumulating even more debt, for many years to come. Reducing the bond ceiling to $18 billion would prevent a debt rollover and require TVA to come before Congress to request an increase before it could embark on any major new construction program.

Fourth, restrict TVA's access to the Federal Financing Bank:

By forcing TVA to borrow exclusively from the private sector, the agency will be subjected to the same scrutiny by the investment community as other utilities in the Nation. TVA's unrestrained access to FFB funds may have contributed to unwise investment decisions which may not have withstood careful analysis by outside investors.

Fifth, require TVA to repay outstanding debt owed to the Federal Government:

At present, TVA owes close to $18 billion in obligations to the U.S. Treasury. By requiring TVA to repay the debt, the American taxpayer will be guaranteed that the investment in TVA will be recouped.

Sixth, establish a Presidentially-appointed Inspector General:

In January 1986, the TVA Board wisely established an Office of Inspector General. Under Public Law 100-54, TVA's Office of Inspector General is granted authority to carry out the functions, powers and duties of an Inspector General under the terms of the Inspector General Act of 1978. However, under the 1978 Act, the Inspector General at most large Federal agencies is appointed by the President.

In contrast, the TVA inspector general is appointed by, reports to, and may be removed by the TVA Board. At my request, the chairman of the Committee on Governmental Affairs, Senators Glenn, directed the General Accounting Office to study the existing Office of Inspector General at TVA and assess whether a Presidentially-appointed inspector general would better fulfill the mandate to fight waste, fraud, and mismanagement. In order to ensure the absolute independence of the Inspector General at TVA, I believe it essential that the authority to appoint and remove the inspector general reside with the President rather than the TVA Board.

Seventh, mandate that TVA power decisions be subject to regulatory review: State utility board would have the power to review all utility related decisions made by the TVA Board of Directors.

Eighth, remove TVA's self-authorizing powers:

By removing TVA's present exemption from the authorization process, TVA programs will be subject to the same scrutiny by the authorizing committees of the Congress as other agencies of the Federal Government. Such review will help prevent exorbitant expenditures on unlikely projects.

Mr. President, I believe strongly that until TVA grapples with its fundamental problems through reforms such as these, the difficult times will continue. No agency of the Government should be above basic principles of accountability.

I am encouraged that the new Chairman of the TVA, Marvin Runyon, has identified problems, established new efficiency and productivity goals, and approved cost reduction measures including extensive layoffs and a consolidation of this corporate structure. However, there is a limit to this strategy. Someday, notwithstanding the line of credit at the FFB, the bill will come due.

Until these reforms are enacted, the citizens of the Tennessee Valley may legitimately ask who may be held accountable for the costly mistakes which have been made. Today, unfortunately, the answer is no one. They had no direct voice in the selection of the Board of Directors, the individuals who made the key decisions, and there is no formal means for the public to seek their removal. They had no voice in any regulatory proceeding, because there were none. They had no direct means to affect the decisions of the Board members. Even their directly elected Members of Congress can have no voice in the decisions which the agency makes since it is exempt from the congressional authorization process. And, through the relationship with the Federal Financing Bank, TVA is effectively removed from the discipline of the private marketplace.

It is this wall of unaccountability which my bill seeks to begin to break down. Each of the provisions which I have described will create a new window of citizen, congressional and marketplace accountability for the agency.

Mr. President, I believe that had these reforms been enacted years ago, the Tennessee Valley Authority would be far healthier than it is today. Interestingly, however, TVA's strongest supporters, both inside the Congress and out, are loathe to opening the TVA Act for any reason. Indeed, the senior Senator from Tennessee has described those who seek reforms at TVA as hostile forces who "look at the opening of the TVA Act, perhaps, in a way that a fox would look at the unguarded door of a henhouse * * *." The fact is, the TVA Act is flawed, and, ironically, the Tennessee Valley members' reluctance to critically examine TVA may result in the devastation of the very thing they are trying to save.

I ask unanimous consent that a copy of my bill be reprinted in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the bill is ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 103

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Tennessee Valley Authority Fiscal Responsibility and Accountability Act of 1989".

SEC. 8. REPEAL OF EXEMPTION FROM AUTHORIZATION PROCESS.

Section 27 of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933 (16 U.S.C. 831z) is repealed.

Mr. INOUYE:

S. 108. A bill to amend the Public Health Service Act to permit the Secretary of Health and Human Services to make certain grants to Native Hawaiian health centers; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

GRANTS FOR NATIVE HAWAIIAN HEALTH CENTERS

● Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, today, I am introducing legislation which would modify the U.S. Public Health Service Act in order to authorize the Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services to make various grants to Native Hawaiian health centers.

During the closing hours of the 100th Congress, the Congress enacted legislation which ultimately became Public Law 100-579, the Native Hawaiian Health Care Act 1988, which addresses the truly pressing health care needs of our Nation's Native Hawaiians. The legislation which I am introducing today would ensure that the Secretary has the flexibility under a number of the Department's preventive initiatives to appropriately reference these new centers in developing areas of regulations.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of my bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 108

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. PROJECT GRANTS FOR PREVENTATIVE HEALTH SERVICES.

Section 317(a) of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 247b) is amended by inserting ", to Native Hawaiian health centers (as defined in section 2308(4))," before "and to other public entities".

SEC. 2. PROGRAMS TO PREVENT AND CONTROL THE SPREAD OF SEXUALLY TRANSMITTED DISEASES.

(a) TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE.—Section 318(a) of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 247c(a) is amended by inserting ", to Native Hawaiian health centers (as defined in section 2308(4))," before "and to scientific".

(b) GRANTS.—Section 318(b) of such Act is amended by inserting "Native Hawaiian health centers (as defined in section 2308(4))," before "and any other public".

SEC. 3. HEALTH MANPOWER SHORTAGE AREAS.

Section 332(a)(2)(A) of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 254e(a)(2)(A)) is amended by inserting "Native Hawaiian health centers (as defined in section 2308(4))," before "and community health".

SEC. 4. FAMILY PLANNING SERVICES.

Section 1001(a) of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 300(a)) is amended by inserting "Native Hawaiian health centers (as defined in section 2308(4))," before "to assist in the establishment".

SEC. 5. HEALTH INFORMATION PROGRAMS.

Section 1703(a)(1) of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 300u-2(a)(1)) is amended by inserting "Native Hawaiian health centers (as defined in section 2308(4))," before "and other appropriate".●

Mr. INOUYE:

S. 109. A bill to amend title 38, United States Code, to provide for the payment of incentive special pay to Department of Veterans Affairs psychologists who obtain certain board certification in a professional specialty; to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS PSYCHOLOGISTS INCENTIVES

● Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I am introducing legislation today to make mandatory the incentive special pay bonus to the Department of Veterans Affairs psychologists, who obtained their board certification.

Mr. President, this legislation would essentially treat professional psychologists in the same manner that their VA physicians colleagues are treated and would require the Veterans' Administration to implement the bonus, which was made discretionary back in 1984 as a provision of the Veterans' Health Care Amendments of 1984 (Public Law 98-528).

Mr. President, given the aging nature of the Veterans' Administration beneficiary population, I would sincerely hope that in this congressional session we will be able to ensure that the highest quality behavioral science expertise will become available to them.

I request unanimous consent that the text of my bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 109

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. INCENTIVE SPECIAL PAY FOR DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS PSYCHOLOGISTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subchapter I of chapter 73 of title 38, United States Code, is amended by inserting after section 4118 the following new section:

"§ 4118A. Incentive special pay for psychologists

"(a) The Secretary shall pay incentive special pay to any psychologist appointed under this chapter who—

"(1) executes an agreement with the Secretary to complete a specified period of service in the Veterans Health Services and Research Administration; and

"(2)(A) is awarded a diploma as a Diplomate in Clinical Psychology or as a Diplomate in Counseling Psychology by the American Board of Professional Psychology; or

"(B) obtains an additional advanced academic degree, such as a masters degree in public health, which the Secretary determines is in the best interest of the Department of Veterans Affairs.

"(b)(1) The amount of incentive special pay which the Secretary pays to any psychologist under this section may not exceed—

"(A) $2,500 per annum in the case of any full-time psychologist; and

"(B) a proportional amount of $1,500 per annum in the case of any part-time psychologist, as provided under paragraph (2) of this subsection.

"(2) The proportional amount of the incentive special pay payable under paragraph (1)(B) of this subsection shall be calculated on the basis of the ratio which the part-time employment of such psychologist in the Veterans Health Services and Research Administration bears to full-time employment.

"(c)(1) Any agreement entered into by a psychologist under subsection (a)(1) of this section shall specify a period of one year of service in the Veterans Health Services and Research Administration or such longer period of service, not exceeding four years, as the psychologist requests. Any psychologist who has entered into an agreement under this section and has not failed to refund any amount which such psychologist became obligated to refund under any such agreement shall be eligible to enter into a subsequent agreement under this section.

"(2)(A) Any agreement entered into by a psychologist under subsection (a)(1) of this section shall provide that the psychologist, in the event that such psychologist voluntarily, or because of misconduct, fails to complete at least one year of service, or such longer period of service as is provided for in the first sentence of paragraph (1) of this subsection, pursuant to such agreement, shall be required to refund the total amount received under this section, unless the Chief Medical Director determines, in accordance with regulations prescribed under subsection (f) of this section, that such failure is necessitated by circumstances beyond the control of the psychologist.

"(B) Any such agreement shall specify the terms under which the Department of Veterans Affairs and the psychologist may elect to terminate such agreement.

"(3) Any psychologist who enters into an agreement under this section is eligible to receive incentive special pay beginning on the date on which the agreement is entered into, or the date on which the psychologist becomes employed, whichever date is later.

"(d) Any amount of incentive special pay payable under this section shall be paid in biweekly installments.

"(e)(1) Except as provided in paragraphs (2) and (3) of this subsection, any additional compensation provided as incentive special pay under this section shall not be considered as basic pay for the purposes of sections 5551, 5552, and 5595 of title 5, chapters 81, 83, and 84 of such title, or any other provision of law creating an entitlement to benefits based on basic pay.

"(2) Additional compensation paid as incentive special pay under this section to any full-time employee shall be included in basic pay for the purposes of chapters 83 and 84 of title 5. Notwithstanding the preceding sentence, special pay paid to any full-time employee shall be included in average pay (as defined in section 8331(4) or 8401(3), as the case may be, of such title) for the purposes of computing the amount of any benefit under either such chapter only if—

"(A) the benefit is paid under section 8337 of such title, subsection (d) or (e) of section 8341 of such title, subchapter V of chapter 84 of such title, or section 8442(b), 8443(a), or 8445 of such title; or

"(B) the employee has completed not less than 15 years of full-time service in the Veterans Health Services and Research Administration (except that, regardless of the length of such employee's service, no incentive special pay may be included by reason of this clause in average pay in computing an annuity that commences (or any lump-sum payment that is payable) before October 1, 1990, and only one-half of any incentive special pay paid under this section may be included by reason of this clause in average pay in computing an annuity that commences (or any lump-sum payment that is payable) on or after October 1, 1990, but before October 1, 1995).

"(3) Any additional compensation provided as incentive special pay under this section shall be considered as annual pay for the purposes of chapter 87 of title 5, relating to life insurance for Federal employees.

"(f) The Secretary shall prescribe regulations to carry out this section.".

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by inserting after section 4118 the following:

"4118A. Incentive special pay for psychologists.".

SEC. 2. EFFECTIVE DATE.

The amendments made by section 1 shall take effect on October 1, 1989.●

S. 110. A bill to revise and extend the programs of assistance under title X of the Public Health Service Act; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

FAMILY PLANNING AMENDMENTS OF 1989

● Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, today I am introducing the Family Planning Amendments of 1989, to reauthorize title X of the Public Health Service Act. The primary purpose of title X is the provision of contraceptive services and information to help reduce the incidence of unintended pregnancy, to improve maternal health, and reduce abortion.

This legislation was reported by the Committee on Labor and Human Resources during the last Congress, but no further action was taken. However, this body demonstrated its strong support for title X during consideration of the fiscal year 1989 Labor-HHS appropriations bill last July. At that time, the Senate overwhelmingly rejected an attempt to discontinue funding the title X program.

Since the enactment of title X in 1970, a nationwide system of over 4,500 local clinics provides nearly 5 million low-income women—including 1½ million adolescents—with access to comprehensive family planning, basic health screening, and preventive health services and information. In addition to contraceptive services, specific services financed by title X funds include infertility diagnosis, and either treatment or referral for anemia, hypertension, cervical and breast cancer, sexually transmitted diseases, kidney dysfunction, and diabetes. By statute, abortion has never been funded by the title X funds. The family planning clinic network also has been recognized as a valuable resource in addressing other closely related health problems, such as this country's distressing infant mortality and teen pregnancy rates, and most recently, the AIDS epidemic.

State and local health departments serve over 40 percent of title X clients, local Planned Parenthood organizations serve 27 percent, hospitals serve 13 percent, and a variety of other nonprofit agencies such as HMO's, neighborhood health centers, and free clinics serve the remaining 20 percent. Health centers financed through title X are often the primary place where low-income women and many teenagers receive formal medical care. Participation in title X programs is completely voluntary, and a full range of currently available, safe and effective contraceptive methods are offered, including natural family planning methods.

The title X program has proven itself time and time again. Yet, because funding levels have not kept pace with the need, millions of women continue to go underserved. According to a new report released by the Alan Guttmacher Institute, 31.8 million women aged 13 to 44 were at risk of unintended pregnancy in 1987. Of these, 7.9 million had family incomes of less than 150 percent of the Federal poverty standard, 3 million were at 150 to 199 percent of the poverty standard, and 3.2 million were at 200 to 249 percent of the poverty standard; 4 million were teenagers. Yet, according to the most recent data, only about 5 million eligible women are served each year under title X. This figure is probably an overestimate, because the Department of Health and Human Services stopped all collection of data on family planning service needs in 1981, and funding levels have been substantially cut since then. Our lack of current information is a serious problem which is addressed by new data collection requirements in this reauthorizing legislation.

The United States has a tragically high infant mortality rate. In fact, we rank 19th among industrialized nations in infant mortality, behind Singapore and Hong Kong. Testifying on behalf of the American Academy of Pediatrics 2 years ago, then-president Dr. Richard Narkewicz told the Labor and Human Resources Committee that "a strong family planning effort is one important component in the solution to the infant mortality problem." He warned that "family planning directly affects access to prenatal care, low birthweight babies, the infant mortality rate, children who are born with disabilities, children who are neglected, (and) children who incur catastrophic health care costs * * *."

The Institute of Medicine in its report, "Preventing Low Birthweight," (1985) concluded that "family planning services should be an integral part of overall strategies to reduce the incidence of low birthweight in infants." A 1988 institute report on prenatal care urges that "a deeper national commitment to family planning services and education should accompany major revisions in the maternity care system."

Adolescent pregnancy has been recognized as a major contributing factor to the high infant mortality rate. The National Academy of Sciences' landmark report on adolescent pregnancy, entitled, "Risking the Future: Adolescent Sexuality, Pregnancy, and Childbearing," (1987) concluded that "the most effective intervention for reducing early unintended pregnancy in sexually active teenagers is diligent contraceptive use." The report recommended continued public support of the provision of contraceptive services to adolescents and cited title X as one important example of such a program.

The Center for Population Options, a Washington-based group, recently reported that taxpayers spent nearly $19.27 billion in 1987 on food stamps, medical care, and cash assistance for families begun as a result of teenagers giving birth. The report also said that babies born to teenagers in 1987 will cost the Nation a total of $5.7 billion over the next 20 years. Continued Federal investment in the title X program is one of the most cost-effective investments we can make.

Title X family planning clinics also have a critically important role to play in confronting the AIDS epidemic in this country. Surgeon General Everett Koop and other public health officials have recommended that clinics help provide voluntary AIDS testing and counseling services, in addition to their existing services. The provision of family planning services to HIV-positive women and to other women at risk for HIV infection is one of the most efficient and cost-effective steps that we can take to prevent the tragedy of babies born with AIDS.

As of January 9, 1,355 cases of pediatric AIDS had been reported. Approximately 80 percent of all reported pediatric AIDS cases can be traced to HIV-infected parents. The CDC estimates that by 1991, there will be some 10,000 to 20,000 HIV-infected children younger than 13 in the United States. Yet, it costs less than $80 a year to provide comprehensive family planning services to an individual woman, a tiny fraction of the cost for caring for an HIV-infected child.

Similarly, many experts believe that adolescents represent a particularly vulnerable risk group. Although there have been few actual cases of AIDS reported among adolescents, more than 15,000 cases have been reported among individuals aged 20 to 29. Given the length of time between infection and the onset of symptoms, a significant number of these adults probably became infected as teens. Clearly, continued Federal investment in the title X program is wise and prudent, particularly at a time when the existing network of family planning clinics may be called upon to assist in halting the deadly AIDS epidemic.

Family planning has enjoyed broad, bipartisan support in Congress and throughout the Nation for over 19 years, since title X was first authorized. Indeed, one of the original sponsors of this important legislation was then Congressman George Bush of Texas. Recently, however the program has been subject to a series of unfair and ill-considered attacks.

The first and most damaging assault on the family planning program has been significant funding cuts for title X over the past 8 years. Funding for most discretionary health programs was cut by 25 percent in 1981. Although most other health programs have had their funding restored, title X funding levels remain more than 15 percent below the 1981 appropriations level adjusted for inflation. Funding for family planning services have been cut over $7 million in the last 2 years alone.

In a second series of attacks, President Reagan proposed the elimination of title X as a categorical Federal health program each year since 1981. For the past 2 years, the administration proposal would have turned all Federal title X dollars over to the States, abandoning national standards for counseling and services.

Finally, the program has been under attack by those who oppose family planning and seek to deny funds to any organization which provides full information to women regarding their options for dealing with an unintended pregnancy, or which uses private funds to provide abortion services. Ironically, these efforts to dismantle or destroy the National Family Planning Program, if successful, certainly would lead to more unintended pregnancies and more abortions.

Since its enactment in 1970, section 1008 of the title X statute has prohibited the use of program funds for abortion. Allegations of noncompliance by opponents of the program in the early 1980's led to a congressionally requested investigation by GAO, as well as parallel examinations by the DHHS Office of the Inspector General. Both reported in September 1983 that all title X clinics were operating in full compliance with the law. This was reaffirmed in 1984 and 1985 when former Secretary of Health and Human Services Margaret Heckler testified before the House Subcommittee on Health and the Environment. And once again in 1987, DHHS Secretary Dr. Otis Bowen confirmed that these clinics were still in compliance with the statute.

Federal regulations require physicians and health personnel in title X clinics to provide appropriate referrals for necessary medical or social services. Moreover, pregnancy diagnosis and counseling is a mandated title X service. Women seeking information about the management of an unintended pregnancy must be given nondirective information about all of their legal options to be in accordance not only with Federal regulations, but also with accepted medical standards promulgated by the American Medical Association and the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists.

In February 1988, the DHHS issued new regulations which would overturn the 19-year-old policy of fully informing clients and deny title X funds to any organization which provides abortion counseling and referral. The regulations are currently in litigation; 36 State governments, 78 national organizations and the deans of all 25 schools of public health in the country commented in opposition to the regulations.

The legislation I am introducing today provides for a 3-year reauthorization of the title X program, with modest increases in funding for basic services. The legislation also includes two new initiatives designed to address problems of growing public concern.

The first initiative would create a special contraceptive development initiative within the National Institute of Child Health and Human Development [NICHD]. This special fund will increase applied research leading to the development, marketing, and evaluation of safe, new contraceptive devices, drugs, and methods. Of 36 million American women who are seeking to avoid pregnancy, 3 million are using no contraception, and another 3 million are using relatively ineffective methods. Scientific attention must be focused on their family planning needs.

The second new initiative would expand the existing authorization for information and education services under title X. More community-based information and education programs are needed to assist individuals—especially teenagers and their parents—in making responsible decisions concerning sexuality, pregnancy, and parenthood, and to help prevent unintended pregnancy and sexually transmitted diseases. A 1985 Planned Parenthood poll conducted by Louis Harris and Associates found that 85 percent of U.S.

parents now support the provision of sex education in the schools. The title X program offers an appropriate vehicle for providing additional assistance to enhance the efforts already underway by many State and local governments, school systems, churches, and community organizations which serve young people. Public recognition of the need for such education has increased greatly since Surgeon General Koop recommended that it should begin at an early age.

More than ever, Congress must focus on preventive, cost-effective health programs. Title X has established a proven track record in helping women plan their pregnancies and prevent the need for abortion. It has also improved overall maternal and child health. I urge this Senate to support this important piece of legislation.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 110

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

That this Act may be cited as the "Family Planning Amendments of 1989".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

Congress finds that—

(1) comprehensive voluntary family planning services still are not readily available to all individuals in the United States desiring such services;

(2) new and improved contraceptive devices, drugs, and methods are needed in order to ensure optimum safety and choice for each individual desiring to use such devices, drugs, and methods;

(3) the high incidence of teenage pregnancies and sexually transmitted diseases has made it essential that the public receive information to prevent such pregnancies and diseases, as recommended by the Surgeon General of the United States; and

(4) sound medical practices require that all individuals be fully informed of their options in making decisions about their health care, and such practices should be promoted in the Nation's family planning program.

SEC. 3. REFERENCE.

Whenever in this Act an amendment or repeal is expressed in terms of an amendment to, or repeal of, a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 201n et seq.).

SEC. 4. PROJECT GRANTS AND CONTRACTS.

Section 1001 (42 U.S.C. 300) is amended by striking out subsections (c) and (d) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(c) For the purpose of making grants and contracts under this section, there are authorized to be appropriated $163,000,000 for fiscal year 1990, $171,000,000 for fiscal year 1991, and $179,500,000 for fiscal year 1992.".

SEC. 5. REPEAL OF FORMULA GRANTS.

(a) REPEAL.—Section 1002 (42 U.S.C. 300a) is repealed.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 1006(c) (42 U.S.C. 300a-4(c)) is amended by striking out "or 1002".

SEC. 6. TRAINING AND TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE GRANTS AND CONTRACTS.

Section 1003 (24 U.S.C. 300a-1) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 1003. TRAINING GRANTS AND CONTRACTS.

"(a) AUTHORIZATION.—The Secretary may make grants to public or nonprofit private entities and may enter into contracts with public or private entities and individuals to provide technical assistance, clinical training for personnel (including obstetric-gynecologic nurse practitioners), training for educators and counselors, and training of other personnel, to carry out the family planning service programs described in section 1001 and the information and education programs described in section 1005.

"(b) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—For the purpose of making grants and contracts under this section, there are authorized to be appropriated $4,515,000 for fiscal year 1990, $4,741,000 for fiscal year 1991, and $4,978,000 for fiscal year 1992.".

SEC. 7. CONDUCT OF RESEARCH ACTIVITIES.

Section 1004 (42 U.S.C. 300a-2) is amended—

(1) by inserting "(a)" before "The";

(2) in paragraph (2)—

(A) by inserting "and evaluation" after "development"; and

(B) by inserting before the period the following: "and research to improve the clinical management and direct delivery of family planning services"; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"(b) To enhance the ongoing work of the National Institutes of Health under section 301 and under subsection (a) in applied contraceptive research and evaluation, and specifically to promote the development, evaluation, and bringing to the marketplace, of new and improved contraceptive devices, drugs, and methods, the Secretary may conduct, and make grants to public and nonprofit private entities and enter into contracts with public and private entities and individuals for the conduct of—

"(1) applied research into the development of new or improved contraceptive devices, drugs, and methods; and

"(2) evaluations of the acceptance, convenience, safety, efficacy, and cost of contraceptive devices, drugs, and methods.

"(c) For the purpose of making grants and entering into contracts under subsection (b), there are authorized to be appropriated $10,000,000 for fiscal year 1990, and such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 1991, and 1992. Amounts appropriated under this subsection shall be in addition to amounts allocated under section 301(a) for the National Institute of Child Health and Human Development.".

SEC. 8. INFORMATION AND EDUCATION.

Section 1005 (42 U.S.C. 300a-3) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 1005. COMMUNITY-BASED INFORMATIONAL AND EDUCATIONAL PROGRAMS.

"(a) AUTHORIZATION.—The Secretary may make grants to or enter into contracts with public and nonprofit private entities to establish community-based information and education programs to assist individuals in making responsible choices concerning human sexuality, pregnancy, and parenthood, and to enable individuals to prevent unintended pregnancies and sexually transmitted diseases. Programs supported under this section shall place special emphasis on the provision of information and education to parents and adolescents, and shall include information about the availability of a broad range of acceptable and effective family planning methods and services.

"(b) AWARDING OF GRANTS, CONTRACTS, ETC.—The Secretary shall—

"(1) conduct, or make grants to public and nonprofit private entities and enter into contracts with public and private entities and individuals for the conduct of, training and technical assistance activities to assist in carrying out subsection (a); and

"(2) make grants to public and nonprofit private entities and enter into contracts with public and private entities and individuals for the development, evaluation, and dissemination of educational and informational materials that are consistent with the objectives specified in subsection (a) for information and education programs.

"(c) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—For grants and contracts under this section, there are authorized to be appropriated $10,000,000 for fiscal year 1990, and such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 1991 and 1992. Not more than 10 percent of the amounts appropriated under this preceding sentence for a fiscal year shall be available to carry out subsection (b).".

SEC. 9. DATA COLLECTION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Title X (42 U.S.C. 300 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 1010. DATA COLLECTION.

"(a) COLLECTION OF DATA.—The Secretary shall collect on an annual basis data concerning—

"(1) the number of low-income and marginal-income individuals, and the number of adolescents, at risk of unintended pregnancies;

"(2) the sources of funding available for family planning services in the United States;

"(3) the number of individuals who receive family planning services from entities that receive grants and contracts under section 1001 and the age, gender, race, and family income of such individuals; and

"(4) the types of family planning services chosen by individuals who receive services from entities which receive grants and contracts under section 1001.

"(b) GRANTS AND CONTRACTS.—The Secretary may make grants to public and nonprofit private entities and enter into contracts with public and private entities and individuals for the collection of data under this section. The Secretary shall make available to the public data and information collected under this section.".

(b) TECHNICAL AMENDMENT.—Section 1009 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d) Each plan prepared under this section shall be based upon data collected under section 1010.".

SEC. 10. EFFECTIVE DATE.

The amendments made by this Act shall take effect on the date of enactment of this Act.●

Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, I am very pleased, once again, to join Senator KENNEDY in introducing legislation to reauthorize title X of the Public Health Service Act, the Nation's principal family planning program.

For over two decades, the Federal Government has been committed to family planning programs out of a concern for the fundamental health of all people and the pressing growth of the world's population. Government dollars spent on family planning programs over the years have been an investment in the very best sense of the word. They have improved lives, enhanced personal responsibility, strengthened families, reduced government dependency, and have been a major factor in significantly improving maternal and child health.

Since its enactment in 1970, the title X program has shown results and great progress has been made. Today, more than 15 million individuals, including 1.5 million adolescents, in the United States have access to safe and effective family planning services, along with basic preventive health care, which would not be available without government support. These services have helped women and men plan for the children they want and avoid recourse to abortion, and have reduced unintended childbearing and the often wrenching consequences imposed on the individuals involved and their families.

The primary beneficiaries of this program, of course, are the women who avoided the tragedy of an unintended pregnancy and their families. However, society also reaps benefits. According to a Federal study, each government dollar invested in family planning this year saves 2 government dollars next year in direct health and welfare costs associated with unintended childbearing.

Much more remains to be done, however. The title X program has not been authorized since 1985, and millions of low and marginal income women in this country still do not have access to family planning services. Fortunately, despite the controversy, past and present, surrounding the family planning program, the national commitment to making family planning services available to low-income women and teenagers remains strong, and title X has a broad bipartisan base of support in Congress. It is time for Congress to reauthorize this very important and cost-effective health program and to ensure that it does not fall victim to the rise and fall of political tides.

S. 111. A bill to allow the psychiatric or psychological examinations required under chapter 313 of title 18, United States Code, relating offenders with mental disease or defect to be conducted by a clinical social worker; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PSYCHIATRIC EXAMINATIONS CONDUCTED BY A CLINICAL SOCIAL WORKER

● Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, today, I am introducing legislation to amend title 18 of the United States Code in order to allow our Nation's clinical social workers to provide their mental health expertise to the Federal judiciary.

Mr. President, I feel that the time has come to allow our Nation's judicial system to have access to a wide range of behaviorial science and mental health expertise. I am confident that the enactment of this legislation would be very much in our Nation's best interest.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of my bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 111

Be it enacted by the Seante and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the first sentence of subsection (b) of section 4247 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by—

(1) striking out "or" after "certified psychiatrist" and inserting in lieu thereof a comma; and

(2) inserting after "clinical psychologist," the following: "or clinical social worker,".

By Mr. INOUYE:

S. 112. A bill to amend chapter 89 of title 5, United States Code, to provide authority for the direct payment or reimbursement to nurse midwives and nurse practitioners, to clarify certain provisions of such chapter with respect to coordination with State and local law, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

AUTHORITY TO PAY OR REIMBURSE CERTAIN ADDITIONAL HEALTH CARE PROFESSIONALS

● Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation to amend the Federal Employees Health Benefit Act in order to ensure that Federal employees and their families will have ready access to the services of our Nation's certified nurse midwives and nurse practitioners.

Mr. President, this legislation would modify the current freedom of choice provision of this statute to include nursing professionals, and thus, provide Federal beneficiaries with the right to select the practitioner of their choice.

I ask unanimous consent that my bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

s. 112

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

AUTHORITY TO PAY OR REIMBURSE CERTAIN ADDITIONAL HEALTH CARE PROFESSIONALS

SECTION 1. (a) Section 8902(k) of title 5, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1), by inserting "(except if, or to the extent that, any such supervision or referral is required under State or local law, or regulations issued thereunder, as described in subsection (m)(1)(B))" after "practitioner";

(2) by redesignating paragraphs (2) and (3) as paragraphs (3) and (5), respectively;

(3) by inserting after paragraph (1) the following:

"(2)(A) When a contract under this chapter requires payment or reimbursement for services which may be performed by a health practitioner referred to in subparagraph (B), an employee, annuitant, family member, or former spouse covered by the contract shall be—

"(i) free to select, and shall have direct access to, such a health practitioner without supervision or referral by another health practitioner (whether of a type referred to in subparagraph (B) or otherwise), except if, or to the extent that, any such supervision or referral is required under State or local law, or regulations issued thereunder, as described in subsection (m)(1)(B); and

"(ii) entitled under the contract to have payment or reimbursement made to him or on his behalf for the services performed.

"(B) This paragraph applies with respect to a nurse midwife, and nurse practitioner, who is licensed or certified as such under Federal or State law, as applicable.";

(4) in paragraph (3) (as so redesignated by paragraph (2)) by striking "As" and inserting "Subject to subsection (m)(1)(B), as";

(5) by inserting after paragraph (3) (as so redesignated by paragraph (2)) the following:

"(4) When a contract under this chapter requires payment or reimbursement for services of a health practitioner covered by paragraph (2) or (3), the terms and conditions governing such payments or reimbursements shall (except to the extent otherwise permitted under paragraph (3)(A)) be the same as the terms and conditions applicable under contracts under this chapter requiring payments or reimbursements for services of health practitioners covered by paragraph (1)."; and

(6) by amending paragraph (5) (as so redesignated by paragraph (2)) to read as follows:

"(5) The provisions of this subsection shall not apply to prepayment plans described in section 8903(4) of this title.".

(b) It is the intent of Congress that—

(1) nothing in the amendment made by subsection (a) shall interfere with applicable institutional anesthesia practice rules, or State or local law, governing supervision of a certified registered nurse anesthetist by another health practitioner; and

(2) such amendment, as it relates to a certified registered nurse anesthetist, shall apply only with respect to a certified registered nurse anesthetist who is self-employed and licensed or certified under Federal or State law, as applicable.

(c) Regulations or instructions issued to carry out the amendments made by subsection (a) shall reflect the statement of congressional intent set forth in subsection (b).

COORDINATION WITH STATE AND LOCAL LAW

SEC. 2. Section 8902(m) of title 5, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by redesignating paragraph (1) as paragraph (1)(A); and

(2) by adding at the end of paragraph (1)(A) (as so redesignated by paragraph (1)) the following:

"(B) Nothing in this chapter nor in the provisions of any contract under this chapter shall be considered to supersede or preempt any State or local law, or any regulation issued thereunder, which relates to licensing or certification to practice medicine, nursing, or any other health profession.".

EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 3. The amendments made by this Act shall be effective with respect to contracts entered into or renewed for calendar years beginning after the date of the enactment of this Act.

S. 113. A bill to increase the role of the Secretary of Transportation in administering section 901 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

INCREASE CERTAIN ROLES OF THE SECRETARY OF TRANSPORTATION

● Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, the legislation I am introducing today would centralize authority in the Secretary of Transportation for administering our cargo reservation laws. The background of these laws, the need for them, and the problems which, in my view, necessitate the legislation are succinctly stated in a Journal of Commerce article dated November 18, 1988. I ask unanimous consent that it be inserted at the conclusion of my remarks.

There being no objection, the materials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 113

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That paragraph (2) of section 901(b) of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936 (46 App. U.S.C. 1241(b)), is amended to read as follows:

"(2) The Secretary of Transportation shall have the sole responsibility for determining and designating those programs which are subject to the requirements of this subsection. Every department or agency having responsibility for the programs so designated by the Secretary of Transportation shall administer such programs with respect to this subsection under regulations issued by the Secretary of Transportation. The Secretary of Transportation shall review such administration and shall annually report to the Congress with respect thereto.".

CARGO PREFERENCE

What it is.—A series of statutes, going back to 1904, intended to assure U.S.-flag ships a minimum share of cargoes produced by U.S. government programs. It is the oldest U.S. maritime promotional program and while subsidies and financing aids have shrunk over the years, preference has survived.

Backgrounds.—The preference laws began by tracking this country's extension of its military and naval power, starting with the Spanish-American War. More recently, they have come to reflect the expansion of government programs extending U.S. economic power and interest abroad.

The Military Transportation Act of 1904 was the first of the preference statutes and its requirement for U.S.-flag vessel use, 100 percent, is the highest.

In 1934 Congress adopted Public Resolution 17 to require that half of the exports financed by the Reconstruction Finance Corp. were to move in U.S.-flag vessels. Later that resolution was made to apply to financing of the Export-Import Bank established originally to facilitate trade with the Soviet Union.

In the early postwar period, Congress acted each year to apply the resolution's 50 percent U.S.-flag share to foreign aid shipments. It permanently inserted the requirement into the 1954 Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act, better known as "Food for Peace" and PL-480.

Public Law 664 in 1961 made clear that preference should benefit and protect all U.S.-flag vessels, not just liners, and that all U.S. programs, including those where nonmilitary agencies procured equipment, materials or commodities for themselves or foreign governments, had to use U.S. flags to the extent of 50 percent.

Importance to carriers.—In the last year for which statistics are available, calendar 1986, U.S.-flag carriers hauled more than 33 million metric tons of preference cargo, somewhat more than the 28.5 million tons of commercial shipments carried that year. As an industry, the revenue amounted to about $502 million.

Necessity for preference.—Preference statutes are formally predicated on the need for assured cargoes to encourage the existence of a U.S.-flag merchant fleet to act as a military auxiliary in times of national emergencies.

Past efforts to apply preference to commercial cargoes have failed, reflecting U.S. governmental sensitivity to objections by this country's trading partners as well as stern opposition from U.S. exporters, importers and agricultural interests. The availability of perference cargoes has unquestionably kept some U.S. carriers in business but critics argue that preference has encouraged keeping obsolete vessels in operation long after they should have been scrapped.

Extent of program.—The Defense Department, the Agriculture Department and the Agency for International Development are the agencies most heavily involved in utilizing shipping and observing cargo preference. But there are at least 10 others with the same cargo preference responsibilities although smaller volumes. The Export-Import Bank in 1987 reported an unusually high, 98 percent rate of U.S.-flag vessel use. It brought participating carriers some $14.5 million in revenue.

Problems.—The Maritime Administration is responsible for monitoring other government agencies to try to make sure they live up to preference requirements. In fiscal year 1987, those agencies met the cargo share minimums for the most part. Among the exceptions were cases in which the cargo origins and destinations were such that U.S.-flag vessels were simply not available.

Despite Reagan administration pledges to honor cargo preference requirements, the Navy and the Agriculture Department have had a number of preference fights with the maritime industry.

One produced an agreement by which the carriers agreed to forgo preference claims on new Agriculture Department-supported export programs with commercial-like terms in return for increasing to 75 percent their share of "giveaway" relief food shipments.

In another such dispute, the Navy and the U.S. State Department were forced to negotiate a cargosharing agreement with Iceland for military shipments there. Iceland threatened the future of U.S. bases in that country if the United States didn't agree to a departure from 100 percent U.S.-flag carriage of defense shipments.

There have been other, largely budget-driven attempts to bypass preference, but carriers and their supporters in Congress generally have managed to forestall them.

Comment.—Budgetary austerity and the Defense Department's strict insistence of competitive procurement have combined to make for increasing carrier dissatisfaction, especially with the Navy's Military Sealift Command.

Efforts already are under way to change the competitive procurement system the command uses. Carriers hope generally, to end the pressures they believe force rates downward to depressed levels.

The presidentially appointed Commission on Merchant Marine and Defense has recommended that all U.S.-flag preference requirements programs be raised to 100 percent but the tight budget and such interests as farmers and traders will work against such a step. Agricultural interests have tried unsuccessfully to have existing preference removed from government programs in the belief that they inhibit U.S. farm exports.●

By Mr. INOUYE:

S. 114. A bill to declare certain activities of manufacturers of soft drinks to be unfair acts for purposes of the Federal Trade Commission Act; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

THE SOFT DRINK BILL

● Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, the bill I am introducing declares certain activities of soft drink manufacturers to be unfair for the purposes of section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (codified at 15 U.S.C. 45 (1987)). My bill prohibits acts of any person engaged in the business of manufacturing, selling or distributing postmixed soft drink dispensing equipment, or engaged in the business of manufacturing, selling, bottling, or otherwise distributing soft drink syrup. These acts promote monopolization, hinder fair competition and will ultimately hurt the consumer.

Over the years independent soft drink distributors have served smaller outlets that large manufacturers did not serve. These distributors supplied the equipment and syrup necessary to dispense soft drinks at bars, restaurants, and fast-food outlets.

However, in their efforts to further monopolize the soft drink market, large soft drink manufacturers have started to provide, at little or no cost, beverage dispensing equipment to potentially large retail customers in order to lure them away from their current independent distributors. This creates an unspoken obligation on the part of the retail customer to purchase the soft drink syrup from the large soft drink manufacturer who is providing the equipment. Furthermore, when these large syrup manufacturers install the beverage dispensing equipment at no charge, it is usually equipped to dispense only the syrup flavors that the manufacturer produces. This leaves no room for the restaurant or tavern owner to dispense the soft drinks of a competitor.

The damaging impact on the beverage dispensing equipment industry is twofold. First and most dramatically, it undermines the survival of those companies whose very existence is dependent upon the sale or lease of beverage dispensing equipment. When a large seller of soft drinks, such as a fast food chain, is faced with a choice of buying or renting the beverage dispensing equipment or receiving it free of charge, there is little difficulty in making a decision. The result is always the same—a member of the beverage dispensing equipment industry loses another customer. Second, once the equipment is installed, the customer invariably purchases its syrup directly and exclusively from the big soft drink manufacturer. Thus, the beverage dispensing equipment industry is not the only victim of this anticompetitive practice. Consumers and other distributors suffer as well.

Mr. President, in the waning days of the 100th Congress, I had the privilege of chairing a hearing on this legislation in the Consumer Subcommittee of the Senate Commerce, Science, and Transportation Committee. I heard a great deal of testimony from individuals who have been in the dispensing business for 20 or 30 years. Many now stand at the brink of losing their businesses. The large manufacturers gave no indication of compromising or coming up with a viable solution, saying only that this is common practice. They say this flexibility allows them to sell the soft drinks at a cheaper price. In all candor, it is monopolistic and anticompetitive, if other distributors and equipment dealers cannot compete.

Unless action is taken to preserve what little competition remains in the fountain soft drink industry, these large manufacturers will totally eliminate competition and will decimate the beverage dispensing equipment industry. Currently, large manufacturers control 85 percent of the fountain syrup market, leaving 15 percent to all other manufacturers, including the other national brands. Less competition will inevitably be detrimental to the consumer in the long run.

I firmly believe that Congress must take a closer look into this matter. With both the Senate Judiciary and the Commerce, Science, and Transportation Committees studying this issue, I believe a fair assessment of the situation can be made. I urge my colleagues to support this bill.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill and a letter from Senators THURMOND and BIDEN be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 114

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) it is an unfair act or practice, for purposes of section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. 45), for any person engaged in the business of manufacturing, selling, or distributing postmixed soft drink dispensing equipment or engaged in the business of manufacturing, selling, bottling, or otherwise distributing soft drink syrup, to induce (directly or indirectly or through an affiliate), using any of the means described in subsection (b), any retailer engaged in the sale of postmixed soft drinks to purchase any soft drink syrup from such person to the exclusion in whole or in part of soft drink syrup sold or offered for sale by other persons in interstate or foreign commerce, if—

(1) such inducement is made in the course of interstate or foreign commerce;

(2) such person engages in the practice of using any such means to such an extent as substantially to restrain or prevent transactions in any soft drink syrup in interstate or foreign commerce;

(3) a direct effect of such inducement is to prevent, deter, hinder, or restrict other persons from selling or offering for sale any soft drink syrup to such retailer in interstate or foreign commerce; or

(4) a direct effect of such inducement is to prevent, deter, hinder, or restrict other persons from furnishing, leasing, selling, or servicing any postmixed soft drink dispensing equipment or postmixed soft drink dispensing equipment systems to such retailer in interstate or foreign commerce.

(b) The means of inducement referred to in subsection (a), with respect to a retailer, are—

(1) furnishing without consideration, giving, or lending any postmixed soft drink dispensing equipment, postmixed soft drink dispensing equipment systems, fixtures, signs, supplies, money, services, or other things of more than nominal value to the retailer;

(2) leasing or selling at below fair market value, any postmixed soft drink dispensing equipment, postmixed soft drink dispensing equipment systems, fixtures, signs, supplies, money, credit, services, or other things of more than nominal value to the retailer; or

(3) extending credit to the retailer for a period in excess of the credit period that is usual and customary in the soft drink distribution industry for the particular class of transactions.

(c) As used in this Act, the term "postmixed soft drink dispensing equipment" means all of the components used to produce carbonated water and to mix soft drink syrup with carbonated water as the soft drink is dispensed from a faucet.

(d) Subsections (a), (b), and (c) shall take effect on the date which is 60 days after the date of enactment of this Act.

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, DC, January 24, 1989.

Hon. GEORGE J. MITCHELL,
U.S. Senate, the Capitol, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. MAJORITY LEADER: Senator Inouye will soon introduce a bill dealing with the soft drink industry. We are writing to indicate that we have no objection to joint referral of the bill to both the Judiciary Committee and the Committee on Commerce, Science and Transportation.

Sincerely,

STROM THURMOND.

By Mr. INOUYE:

S. 115. A bill to amend titles XVIII and XIX of the Social Security Act to provide that nurse practitioner or clinical nurse specialist services are covered under part B of Medicare and are a mandatory benefit under Medicaid; to the Committee on Finance.

COVERAGE OF NURSE PRACTITIONER SERVICES UNDER MEDICARE

● Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I am introducing legislation to provide for the direct reimbursement under Medicare and Medicaid for our Nation's nurse practitioners and clinical nurse specialists. My proposal would also make these services a mandated benefit under every State's Medicaid plan, in a manner similar to that currently in public law for services of nurse midwives.

Mr. President, for a number of years Department of Defense CHAMPUS Program has recognized these practitioners as autonomous providers and we have been most pleased by both the cost effectiveness of their care as well as the quality of the services that they render.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of my bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 115

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. COVERAGE OF NURSE PRACTITIONER OR CLINICAL NURSE SPECIALIST SERVICES UNDER PART B OF MEDICARE.

(a) COVERAGE OF SERVICES.—Section 1861(s)(2) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395x(s)(2)) is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of subparagraph (J);

(2) by adding "and" at the end of subparagraph (K); and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(L) nurse practitioner or clinical nurse specialist services;".

(b) DEFINITION.—Section 1861 of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395x) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"NURSE PRACTITIONER OR CLINICAL NURSE SPECIALIST SERVICES

"(ff)(1) The term 'nurse practitioner or clinical nurse specialist services' means services performed by a nurse practitioner or clinical nurse specialist (as defined in paragraph (2)) which the nurse practitioner or clinical nurse specialist is legally authorized to perform under State law (or the State regulatory mechanism provided by State law) of the State in which such services are performed, whether or not the nurse practitioner or clinical nurse specialist is under the supervision of, or associated with, a physician or other health care provider.

"(2) The term 'nurse practitioner or clinical nurse specialist' means an individual who—

"(A) is a registered nurse and is licensed to practice nursing in the State in which the nurse practitioner or clinical nurse specialist services are performed; and

"(B)(i) holds a master's degree in nursing or a related field from an accredited educational institution, or

"(ii) is certified as a nurse practitioner or clinical nurse specialist by the duly recognized professional nurses association.".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall be effective with respect to services performed on or after the first day of the first month which begins more than 60 days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 2. COVERAGE OF NURSE PRACTITIONER OR CLINICAL NURSE SPECIALIST SERVICES AS A MANDATORY MEDICAID BENEFIT.

(a) COVERAGE OF SERVICES.—

(1) Section 1905(a) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1396d(a)) is amended—

(A) by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (20);

(B) by redesignating paragraph (21) as paragraph (22); and

(C) by inserting after paragraph (20) the following new paragraph:

"(21) nurse practitioner or clinical nurse specialist services (as defined in section 1861(ff)(1)); and".

(b) CONFORMING CHANGES.—

(1) Section 1902(a) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1396a(a)) is amended—

(A) in paragraph (10)(A), by striking out "paragraphs (1) through (5) and (17)" and inserting in lieu thereof "paragraphs (1) through (5), (17), and (21)"; and

(B) in paragraph (10)(C)(iv), by striking out "paragraphs (1) through (5) and (17) of section 1905(a) or the care and services listed in any 7 of the paragraphs numbered (1) through (20)" and inserting in lieu thereof "paragraphs (1) through (5), (17), and (21) of section 1905(a) or the care and services listed in any 7 of the paragraphs numbered (1) through (21)".

(2) Section 1902(j) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1396a(j)) is amended by striking "(21)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(22)".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—

(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), the amendments made by this section shall be effective with respect to payments under title XIX of the Social Security Act for calendar quarters beginning more than 60 days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(2) In the case of a State plan for medical assistance under title XIX of the Social Security Act which the Secretary of Health and Human Services determines requires State legislation in order for the plan to meet the additional requirements imposed by the amendments made by this section, the State plan shall not be regarded as failing to comply with the requirements of such title solely on the basis of its failure to meet these additional requirements before the first day of the calendar quarter beginning after the close of the first regular session of the State legislature that begins after the date of the enactment of this Act.●

S. 116. A bill to amend title XVIII of the Social Security Act to increase the independence of psychologists with respect to services furnished at a comprehensive outpatient rehabilitation facility; to the Committee on Finance.

PAYMENT FOR CERTAIN PSYCHOLOGICAL SERVICES AT OUTPATIENT FACILITIES

● Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, the legislation which I am introducing today would modify the Medicare statute in order to provide for the autonomous functioning of psychologists in comprehensive outpatient rehabilitation facilities.

Mr. President, prior to this benefit being established under the Medicare law, those psychologists who were working in these facilities were functioning up to the scope of their State practice act and reimbursed under other Federal and private insurance programs for their services.

I believe that it is especially inappropriate for the Medicare physician management approach to be applied to outpatient rehabilitation services as this is an area in which a wide range of health professionals have significant contributions that they can make. I would further note that in rehabilitation programs, our Nation's psychologists have been in the forefront in developing creative and innovative behavioral science approaches to the care, which these individuals need.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of my statement and the bill be included in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 116

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. PAYMENT FOR CERTAIN PSYCHOLOGICAL SERVICES FURNISHED AT COMPREHENSIVE OUTPATIENT REHABILITATION FACILITIES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—

(1) COVERAGE.—Section 1861 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395x) is amended—

(A) in subsection (s)(2)—

(i) by striking "and" at the end of subparagraph (L),

(ii) by adding "and" at the end of subparagraph (M), and

(iii) by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

"(N) rehabilitative psychological services;"; and

(B) in subsection (cc)(1)(D), by inserting "(other than services for which payment is made under this part by reason of section 1861(s)(2)(N))" before the semicolon.

(2) PAYMENT.—Section 1832(a)(2)(B) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395k(a)(2)(B)) is amended—

(A) by striking "and" at the end of clause (iii);

(B) by striking "; and" in clause (iv), as added by section 4073(b)(1)(C) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987, and inserting a comma;

(C) by striking the semicolon in clause (iv), as added by section 4077(b)(2)(C) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987, and inserting a comma and redesignating such clause as clause (v); and

(D) by adding at the end the following new clause:

"(vi) rehabilitative psychological services;".

(3) DEFINITION.—Section 1861 of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395x) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"REHABILITATIVE PSYCHOLOGICAL SERVICES

"(jj)(1) The term 'rehabilitative psychological services' means the services described in paragraph (2) furnished by a psychologist (as defined in regulations by the Secretary) to an individual who is an outpatient of a comprehensive outpatient rehabilitation facility (as defined in section 1861(cc)(2)) under the plan described in section 1861(cc)(1).

"(2) The services described in this paragraph are—

"(A) assessment, diagnosis and treatment of an individual's mental and emotional functioning as it relates to the individual's rehabilitation,

"(B) psychological evaluations of the individual's response to and rate of progress under such plan,

"(C) assessment of those aspects of an individual's family and home situation that affect the individual's rehabilitation treatment, and

"(D) such other services as the Secretary may by regulation provide; excluding, however, any service if it would not be included under subsection (b) if furnished to an inpatient of a hospital.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—Section 1861 of such Act is further amended—

(1) by redesignating subsection (ff), as added by section 4073(c) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987, as subsection (gg);

(2) in subsection (s)(2)(H)(ii), as amended by section 4074(a)(1) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987, by striking "subsection (ff)" and inserting "subsection (hh)";

(3) by redesignating subsection (ff), as added by section 4074(b) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987, as subsection (hh); and

(4) by redesignating subsection (gg), as added by section 4077(b)(5) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987, as subsection (ii).

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—(1) The amendments made by subsection (a) shall apply with respect to services performed on or after the first day of the first month which begins more than sixty days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(2) The amendments made by subsection (b) shall become effective on the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 2. ELIMINATION OF FEDERAL PHYSICIAN CARE REQUIREMENT IN COMPREHENSIVE OUTPATIENT REHABILITATION FACILITIES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 1861(cc)(2)(E) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395x(cc)(2)(E)) is amended to read as follows:

"(E) has a requirement that a patient be under the care of a physician to the extent required by State law;".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall become effective on the date of enactment of this Act.●

S. 117. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to provide a credit for the purchase of child restraint systems used in motor vehicles; to the Committee on Finance.

TAX CREDIT FOR PURCHASE OF CHILD RESTRAINT SYSTEMS

● Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, today, I am introducing legislation to provide for a tax credit for those families who purchase a child restraint system for their automobiles.

Mr. President, accidents and injuries continue to cause almost half of the deaths of children between the ages of 1 to 4, more than half of the deaths of children between 5 to 15, and continue to be the leading cause of death among children and young adults. Further, it is my understanding that although the Department of Transportation has made injury prevention among children a top priority, a significant number of parents, perhaps even more than half of us, when we have installed seat belts, do not have them installed properly.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of my bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 117

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. CREDIT FOR PURCHASE OF CHILD RESTRAINT SYSTEMS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subpart A of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to nonrefundable personal credits) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 25A. PURCHASE OF CHILD RESTRAINT SYSTEM.

"(a) GENERAL RULE.—In the case of an individual, there shall be allowed as a credit against the tax imposed by this chapter for the taxable year an amount equal to the costs incurred by the taxpayer during such taxable year in purchasing a qualified child restraint system for any child of the taxpayer.

"(b) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) QUALIFIED CHILD RESTRAINT SYSTEM.—The term 'qualified child restraint system' means any child restraint system which meets the requirements of section 571.213 of title 49 of the Code of Federal Regulations.

"(2) CHILD RESTRAINT SYSTEM.—The term 'child restraint system' has the meaning given to such term by section 571.213 of title 49 of the Code of Federal Regulations.

"(3) CHILD.—The term 'child' has the meaning given to such term by section 151(c)(3).".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for subpart A of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 25 the following new item:

"Sec. 25A. Purchase of child restraint system.".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1988. ●

S. 118. A bill to amend title XVIII of the Social Security Act to provide coverage of clinical social workers services when provided on-site or a community mental health center or off-site as part of a treatment plan; to the Committee on Finance.

COVERAGE OF ON- OR OFF-SITE CLINICAL SOCIAL WORKERS SERVICES

● Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I am introducing legislation today to modify the Social Security Act in order to treat the clinical services of our Nation's professional social workers, who are working in community mental health centers in the same manner that their psychological colleagues are treated.

During the 100th Congress, we enacted a new psychology community mental health center Medicare benefit in order to ensure that the services of those practitioners were more readily available to our Nation's senior citizens. The legislation, which I am introducing today would simply treat clinical social workers in the same manner.

Mr. President, particularly in our Nation's community mental health center movement, clinical social workers have shown outstanding dedication, leadership and professional competence, in fact, more than any other profession, clinical social workers administer these important centers.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of my bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 118

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. COVERAGE OF CLINICAL SOCIAL WORKERS SERVICES WHEN PROVIDED ON-SITE AT A COMMUNITY MENTAL HEALTH CENTER OR OFF-SITE AS PART OF A TREATMENT PLAN.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 1861(ii) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395x(ii)) as amended by the Technical and Miscellaneous Revenue Act of 1988 is further amended—

(1) by inserting "or a clinical social worker (as defined in subsection (hh)" before "on site at a community mental health center",

(2) by stiking "(other than at an off-site office of such psychologist)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(other than at an off-site office of such psychologist or clinical social workers)", and

(3) by inserting or "clinical social worker" before "is legally authorized to perform under State law".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by subsection (a) shall be effective with respect to services furnished on or after January 1, 1989.

S. 119. A bill to amend titles XVIII and XIX of the Social Security Act to provide that pediatric nurse practitioner or pediatric clinical nurse specialist services are covered under part B of medicare and are a mandatory benefit under Medicaid; to the Committee on Finance.

COVERAGE OF PEDIATRIC NURSE SERVICES UNDER MEDICARE

● Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, the legislation which I am introducing today would modify the Medicare and Medicaid Act in order to provide for the direct reimbursement of pediatric nurse practitioners or pediatric clinical nurse specialist under both of these initiatives.

Mr. President, there can be no question that many nurse practitioners provide quality and highly cost-effective health services and further, that the pediatric population in particular, is in need of this care. The report submitted to the Congress last session by the National Commission to Prevent Infant Mortality stated, "it is a shocking fact that, in saving the lives of babies, America ranks 15th among the nations of the world". The Commission pointed out that these words were stated by former President Lyndon Johnson 20 years ago. Today, we are 19 in the world.

Mr. President, I am confident that this initiative is very much in our Nation's best interest and will be a significant step forward in ensuring that all Americans have access to quality health care in an affordable manner. I request unanimous consent that the text of my bill be included in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

By Mr. KENNEDY:

S. 120. A bill to amend the Public Health Services Act to reauthorize adolescent family life demonstration projects, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

ADOLESCENT PREGNANCY PREVENTION, CARE, AND RESEARCH GRANTS ACT OF 1989

● Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, today I am introducing the Adolescent Pregnancy Prevention, Care and Research Grants Act of 1989 which would amend and reauthorize title XX of the Public Health Service Act. Formerly entitled the "Adolescent Family Life Demonstration Projects," this legislation strengthens title XX, and represents a renewed commitment by Congress to address the problem of adolescent pregnancy.

Adolescent pregnancy has reached epidemic proportions. In its recent landmark report entitled "Risking the Future," the National Research Council of the National Academy of Sciences estimated that more than 1 million teenage girls in the United States become pregnant each year, more than 400,000 have abortions, and almost 470,000 give birth. There are significantly increased health and financial risks for teenage mothers and their infants, and continuing developmental and adjustment risks for the children of teen parents as they grow up.

Most adolescent mothers are unmarried, financially dependent, and at risk of dropping out of school. Disrupted educational preparation also frequently characterizes the teen marriages that do occur, and these young families are often poor and unstable. Compounding their problems, adolescent mothers are more likely than their peers to experience a second pregnancy during adolescence.

Society spends billions of dollars each year sustaining these families. Although the loss of economic potential is difficult to gauge, other costs to society are measurable. An estimate limited to AFDC, food stamps and Medicaid, indicates that costs attributable to adolescent childbearing totaled $18 billion in 1986.

Rates of adolescent pregnancy, abortion, and childbearing in this country are considerably higher than in most other developed countries in the world. This fact is particularly significant at a time when we are concerned about the potential competitiveness of our work force. This disparity is especially striking in the youngest teenagers; American girls under age 15 are at least five times more likely to give birth than girls at comparable ages in any other developed country for which we have data.

Since 1981, when the 2-year-old Title VI Adolescent Pregnancy Program was folded into the maternal and child health block grant, the title XX demonstration projects have been the only Federal program exclusively designed to deal with adolescent sexuality, pregnancy and family issues. Through title XX, the Federal Government has supported a variety of efforts to test innovative approaches to the problems of teen pregnancy and childbearing. With a relatively small authorization of $10 million annually, title XX, the Adolescent Family Life Act, has helped support educational services relating to sexuality and family life for nonpregnant teens and their parents, as well as services for teen parents and their families including prenatal and postnatal care, referral for employment, educational and vocational services, and adoption counseling services. In 1988, 68 community-based demonstration service projects and 15 research projects received title XX support. Since the beginning of the title XX program, 51 research projects have received support, greatly contributing to our existing body of knowledge about this multifaceted problem.

After 8 years of Federal activity on a demonstration basis, the time has come to transform title XX into an ongoing service program that rewards effectiveness with enduring fiscal support. To signal this commitment to an ongoing Federal initiative, the current "adolescent family life demonstration projects [AFLA]" will be renamed "adolescent pregnancy prevention, care and research grants." In addition, the bill removes the current 5-year limit on a grantee's receipt of funds.

Other substantive revisions are necessary for three reasons. First, adolescent pregnancy prevention services must be accessible to teenagers if they are to be effective. Experience has shown that, in some families, requiring parental consent for an adolescent's participation in a title XX program creates a major barrier to service. The Federal Government should not require parental consent. The involvement of an adolescent's parents is still encouraged in the bill, however. Several studies have shown that meaningful family involvement can be helpful in avoiding both adolescent pregnancy itself and its most negative consequences.

Second, it is imperative to avoid illegal overlap between religious and Federal programming, and to comply with medical and counseling ethics in regard to fully informed client consent in service delivery. Certain provisions of the current title XX authority fail to take these principles into account, and have been contested in the courts. The new legislation clarifies that religious organizations will be eligible to receive funds under title XX, but may not use funds primarily to advance religious beliefs. Such organizations must provide prevention, care and referral services similar to those provided by nonsecular organizations.

Finally, while abstinence promotion programs are potentially promising approaches to adolescent pregnancy prevention, it is the conclusion of the National Research Council that the effectiveness of these programs has yet to be scientifically demonstrated. AFLA assumes that abstinence programs are the most effective prevention strategies. Programs that encourage the delay of initiation of sexual activity in young teenagers constitute only one example of the variety of integrated services that are obviously needed to address the extremely complex problems of adolescent pregnancy and childbearing. The educational service emphasis of AFLA has been retained, and contraception services can only be funded by title XX when there is no other source of funding for such services in a given community. The current requirement that no title XX funds may be used to pay for abortion services is retained in the bill.

These changes will not disqualify any programs currently receiving title XX funding from continued support, a fitting acknowledgment of the many successes with which title XX demonstration projects have met. One program that received title XX support was the teenage pregnancy and parenting project in San Francisco. The program used case managers to provide counseling and referral services to pregnant adolescents for up to 3 years. It offered health and parenting classes and a single site for the several agencies that provided services in order to enhance continuity of care and coordination. Clients received obstetrical care, public health information, nutritional care, teen well-baby clinic, and infant day care, as well as counseling. A special program component targeted adolescent males, who could also be assigned case management services. Over a 4-year period, infants whose parents were associated with this program had significantly higher birth weights than a comparison group, a higher percentage of adolescent mothers and fathers who stayed in school—67 percent were still enrolled 1 year after birth—and a lower rate of subsequent births—2 percent and 10 percent 1 and 2 years post partum.

The bill contains a renewed emphasis on providing services to adolescent males as well as adolescent females. In order to reach this population, prevention services should be made available through a wide array of public and nonprofit organizations, including schools. The decision for a school system to apply for a grant is one that should be made by the local school board with input from parents and other community members. If a local community believes the best way to meet the needs of adolescents is through school-based prevention programs, it should not find itself hindered by Federal policy.

The bill emphasizes the importance of high quality program evaluation conducted by all grantees so that we can determine which components of the service delivery system are most effective in reducing adolescent pregnancy. The need for high quality evaluations of successful interventions to reduce adolescent pregnancy is strong. Under the current title XX authority, the administration has failed to conduct any comprehensive evaluation of programs supported by title XX funds. The bill contains specific requirements for grantees to make comprehensive evaluations of their programs. In addition, the Secretary of Health and Human Services will be required to collect standardized data on all programs funded.

Another indication of congressional awareness of the need to increase knowledge in this area is the moderately funded research grants that have been retained as a part of the title XX package. Scientific studies conducted outside the context of ongoing programming are still needed; despite significant advances in the last decade, we need greater understanding of the social causes and multiple consequences of adolescent pregnancy, and methods of increasing positive outcomes of adolescent childbearing and rearing.

Legislation identical to this measure was reported by the Committee on Labor and Human Resources during the 100th Congress, but no further action was taken. I hope we will see prompt consideration of the title XX bill this year. It is time to reauthorize title XX at higher levels, commensurate with the growing problem of teen pregnancy, and to employ the lessons of the last 8 years in making the Adolescent Pregnancy Prevention, Care and Research Grants Act of 1989 as effective as possible. We cannot afford to risk the future. The critical problem of teen pregnancy requires prompt action, and this legislation deserves the endorsement and support of this Senate.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 120

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Adolescent Pregnancy Prevention, Care, and Research Grants Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. ADOLESCENT PREGNANCY PREVENTION, CARE, AND RESEARCH GRANTS.

Title XX of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 300z et seq.) is amended to read as follows:

"TITLE XX—ADOLESCENT PREGNANCY PREVENTION, CARE, AND RESEARCH GRANTS

"SEC. 2001. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

"(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds that—

"(1) adolescents are at a high risk of unwanted pregnancy;

"(2) in 1986, more than 1,000,000 teenagers became pregnant, and nearly 500,000 teenagers carried their pregnancies to term, of which 6 out of 10 births were out of wedlock;

"(3) adolescents aged 17 and younger accounted for 46 percent of the out of wedlock births to teenagers;

"(4) in a high proportion of cases, the pregnant adolescent is herself the product of an unmarried parenthood during adolescence and is continuing the pattern in her own lifestyle;

"(5) pregnancy and childbirth among unmarried adolescents, particularly young adolescents, often results in severe adverse health, social, and economic consequences, including—

"(A) higher percentage of pregnancy and childbirth complications;

"(B) higher incidence of low birth weight babies;

"(C) higher infant mortality and morbidity;

"(D) greater likelihood that an adolescent marriage will end in divorce;

"(E) decreased likelihood of completing schooling; and

"(F) higher risks of unemployment and welfare dependency; and therefore, education, training, and job research services are important for adolescent parents; and

"(6) an adolescent who becomes pregnant once is likely to experience rapid repeat pregnancies and childbearing, with increased risks;

"(7) research has shown that in cases in which there is a family involvement in comprehensive values-based projects and services—

"(A) low birth weight is significantly reduced;

"(B) delays in initiating sexual activity occur;

"(C) there are significant reductions in repeat pregnancy, welfare costs, and child abuse; and

"(D) teens are more likely to return and complete their high school education; and therefore, the family should become a partner in the development of curriculum and programs that reflect the values of the community;

"(8) the problems of adolescent pregnancy and parenthood are multiple and complex and are best approached through a variety of integrated and essential services, particularly those that allow the pregnant adolescent and adolescent parent to stay in school;

"(9) such services, including a wide array of educational and supportive services, often are not available to the adolescents who need them, or are available but fragmented and thus of limited effectiveness in preventing pregnancies and future welfare dependency; and

"(10) Federal policy therefore should encourage the development of appropriate health, educational, and social services where they are now lacking or inadequate, and the better coordination of existing services where they are available in order to prevent unwanted early and repeat pregnancies and to help adolescents become productive, independent contributors to family and community life.

"(b) PURPOSES.—It is the purpose of this title—

"(1) to establish better coordination, integration, and linkages among existing programs in order to expand and improve the availability of, and access to, needed comprehensive community services that assist in preventing unwanted initial and repeat pregnancies among adolescents, enable pregnant adolescents to obtain proper care and assist pregnant adolescents and adolescent parents to become productive independent contributors to family and community life, with primary emphasis on services to adolescents who are 17 years of age and under and are pregnant or who are parents;

"(2) to expand the availability of such services that are essential to that objective;

"(3) to promote innovative, comprehensive, and integrated approaches to the delivery of such services;

"(4) to encourage and support research programs concerning the societal causes and consequences of pregnancy, childbearing, and child rearing for adolescent females and males;

"(5) to support evaluative research to identify effective services that reduce adolescent pregnancy rates and that improve the outcome of adolescent childbearing for the parents, the child, and their families; and

"(6) to encourage and provide for the dissemination of results, findings, and information from programs and research projects relating to adolescent pregnancy and parenthood.

"SEC. 2002. DEFINITIONS.

"For the purposes of this title:

"(1) ADOLESCENT.—The term 'adolescent' means an individual under the age of 21.

"(2) CARE SERVICES.—The term 'care services' means all services for the provision of care to pregnant adolescents and adolescent parents. Such term shall include all core services and may include supplementary services, in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary.

"(3) CORE SERVICES.—The term 'core services' means those services that shall be provided by a grantee, as determined by the Secretary by regulation, which shall include—

"(A) pregnancy testing and maternity counseling, or referral for such services;

"(B) family planning services, except that such services for adolescents who are not already parents shall be limited to counseling and referral unless suitable and appropriate family planning services are not otherwise available in the community;

"(C) primary and preventive health services, including prenatal and postnatal care for mother and children and arrangements for delivery;

"(D) nutrition information and counseling;

"(E) referral for screening and treatment of sexually transmitted diseases, including acquired immunodeficiency syndrome;

"(F) referral to appropriate pediatric care;

"(G) educational services relating to sexuality and family life, including—

"(i) education on responsible decisionmaking regarding sexual activity;

"(ii) education on the responsibilities of parenting;

"(iii) education on a full range of means for delaying becoming pregnant, including contraception, natural family planning, and abstinence; and

"(iv) assistance to parents, schools, youth agencies, and health care providers to educate adolescents and pre-adolescents concerning self-discipline and responsibility in human sexuality;

"(H) referral to appropriate educational, employment, and vocational services;

"(I) adoption counseling services, that present adoption as an option for pregnant adolescents, or referral to a licensed adoption agency for adoption counseling;

"(J) mental health services and referral to mental health services and to other appropriate physical health services; and

"(K) encouragement of parent and family involvement in each of the core services described in subparagraphs (A) through (J).

"(4) ELIGIBLE GRANT RECIPIENT.—The term 'eligible grant recipient' means a public or nonprofit private organization or agency that demonstrates, to the satisfaction of the Secretary—

"(A) in the case of an organization that will provide care services, the capability of providing all care services in a single setting or the capability of creating a network through which all care services would be provided; or

"(B) in the case of an organization that will provide prevention services, the capability of providing such services.

"(5) ELIGIBLE PERSON.—The term 'eligible person' means—

"(A) with regard to the provision of care services, a pregnant adolescent or an adolescent parent; or

"(B) with regard to the provision of prevention services and referral to such other services that may be appropriate, an adolescent who is not already a parent.

"(6) PREVENTION SERVICES.—The term 'prevention services' means services described in subparagraphs (B) and (G) of paragraph (3) and referrals to such other services that may be appropriate for adolescents who are not already parents and includes services to be offered in schools at local discretion.

"(7) SECRETARY.—The term 'Secretary' means the Secretary of Health and Human Services.

"(8) SUPPLEMENTAL SERVICES.—The term 'supplemental services' means those services that may be provided by a grantee, as determined by the Secretary by regulation, which may include—

"(A) child care sufficient to enable the adolescent parent to continue education or to enter into employment, including services to be provided within secondary schools at local discretion;

"(B) consumer education and homemaking;

"(C) counseling for the immediate and extended family members of the eligible person;

"(D) transportation;

"(E) referral to licensed residential care or maternity home services;

"(F) referral to licensed adoption agencies for adoption placement services;

"(G) employability training and counseling; and

"(H) such other services as are consistent with this title as the Secretary may approve in accordance with regulations promulgated by the Secretary.

"SEC. 2003. AUTHORITY TO MAKE GRANTS FOR SERVICES.

"The Secretary may make grants to provide care services to pregnant adolescents and adolescent parents and prevention services to nonpregnant adolescents. Grants shall be used to provide, supplement, or improve the quality of such services.

"SEC. 2004. USE OF GRANTS FOR SERVICES.

"(a) USES.—A grant made under this title may be used to—

"(1) provide eligible persons—

"(A) care services;

"(B) prevention services; or

"(C) any combination of care and prevention services;

"(2) coordinate, integrate, and provide linkages among providers of care, prevention, and other services for eligible persons in furtherance of the purposes of this title;

"(3) provide supplemental services where such services are not adequate or not available to eligible persons in the community and that are essential to the care of pregnant adolescents and to the prevention of adolescent pregnancy;

"(4) plan, for a period of not more than 1 year, for the administration and coordination of pregnancy prevention services and programs of care for pregnant adolescents and adolescent parents that will further the objectives of this title; and

"(5) fulfill assurances required for grant approval by section 2006.

"(b) FEES.—Grantees shall charge fees for services only pursuant to a fee schedule, approved by the Secretary as a part of the application described in section 2006, that bases fees charged by the grantee on the income of the eligible person and takes into account the difficulty adolescents face in obtaining resources to pay for services. In no case may a grantee discriminate with regard to the provision of services to any individual because of that individual's inability to provide payment for such services.

"SEC. 2005. PRIORITIES, AMOUNTS, AND DURATION OF GRANTS FOR SERVICES.

"(a) PRIORITIES.—In approving applications for grants for services under this title, the Secretary shall give priority to applicants who—

"(1) serve an area where there is a high incidence of adolescent pregnancy;

"(2) serve an area with a high proportion of low-income families and where the availability of programs of care for pregnant adolescents and adolescent parents is low;

"(3) show evidence—

"(A) in the case of an applicant who will provide care services, of having the ability to bring together a wide range of needed core services and, as appropriate, supplemental services in comprehensive single-site programs, or to establish a well-integrated network of such services (appropriate for the target population and geographic area to be served including the special needs of rural areas) for pregnant adolescents or adolescent parents; or

"(B) in the case of an applicant who will provide prevention services, of having the ability to provide prevention services for adolescents and their families that are appropriate for the target population and the geographic area to be served, including the special needs of rural areas;

"(4) will utilize to the maximum extent feasible existing available programs and facilities such as community health centers, child welfare agencies, children and youth centers, maternal and infant health centers, regional rural health facilities, licensed adoption agencies, maternity homes, school and other educational programs, family planning clinics, mental health programs, nutrition programs, recreation programs, and other ongoing pregnancy prevention and pregnancy-related services;

"(5) make use, to the maximum extent feasible, of other Federal, State, and local funds, programs, contributions, and other third-party reimbursements;

"(6) can demonstrate a community commitment to the program by making available to the program non-Federal funds, personnel, and facilities;

"(7) have involved the community to be served, including public and nonprofit private agencies, adolescents, and families, in the planning and implementation of the program; and

"(8) will demonstrate innovative and effective approaches in addressing the problems of adolescent pregnancy or parenthood, including approaches to provide pregnant adolescents with adequate information about adoption.

"(b) AMOUNTS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The amount of a grant for a program for services under this title shall be determined by the Secretary, based on factors such as the incidence of adolescent pregnancy in the geographic area to be served, and the adequacy of pregnancy prevention services and programs of care for pregnant adolescents and adolescent parents in such area.

"(2) RURAL AREAS.—In making grants for services under this title, the Secretary shall consider the special needs of rural areas and, to the maximum extent practicable, shall distribute funds taking into consideration the relative number of adolescents in such areas in need of such services.

"(c) FEDERAL SHARE.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Subject to paragraph (3), a grant for services under this title may not exceed 75 percent of the costs of the program for any year.

"(2) FORM OF NON-FEDERAL CONTRIBUTIONS.—Non-Federal contributions required by paragraph (1) may be in cash or in kind, fairly evaluated, including plant, equipment, or services.

"(3) WAIVER.—The Secretary may waive the limitation specified in paragraph (1) for any year in accordance with criteria established by regulation.

"SEC. 2006. REQUIREMENTS FOR APPLICATIONS FOR GRANTS FOR SERVICES.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—An application for a grant for services under this title shall be in such form and contain such information as the Secretary may require, and shall include—

"(1) an identification of the incidence of adolescent pregnancy and related problems;

"(2) a description of the economic conditions and income levels in the geographic area to be served;

"(3) a description of existing pregnancy prevention services and programs of care for pregnant adolescents and adolescent parents (including adoption services), and including where, how, by whom, and to which population groups such services are provided, and the extent to which they are coordinated in the geographic area to be served;

"(4) a description of the major unmet needs for services for adolescents at risk of initial or recurrent pregnancies and an estimate of the number of adolescents not being served in the area;

"(5)(A) in the case of an applicant who will provide care services, a description of how all care services will be provided in the program using funds under this title or will otherwise be provided by the grantee in the area to be served, the population to which such services will be provided, how such services will be coordinated, integrated, and linked with other related programs and services and the source or sources of funding of such care services in the public and private sectors; or

"(B) in the case of an applicant who will provide prevention services, a description of the necessary services to be provided and how the applicant will provide such services;

"(6) a description of the manner in which adolescents needing services other than the services provided directly by the applicant will be identified and how access and appropriate referral to such other services (such as medicaid; licensed adoption agencies; maternity home services; public assistance; employment services; child care services for adolescent parents; and other city, county, and State programs related to adolescent pregnancy) will be provided, including a description of a plan to coordinate such other services with the services supported under this title;

"(7) a description of the results expected from the provision of services, and the procedures to be used for evaluating those results;

"(8) assurances that the applicant will have an ongoing quality assurance program;

"(9) assurances that the applicant shall have a system for maintaining the confidentiality of patient records in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary;

"(10) assurances that the applicant will demonstrate its financial responsibility by the use of such accounting procedures and other requirements as may be prescribed by the Secretary;

"(11) assurances that the applicant will make maximum use of other sources of Federal and State funding;

"(12)(A) a description of—

"(i) the schedule of fees to be used in the provision of services, which shall comply with section 2004(c); and

"(ii) a corresponding schedule of discounts to be applied to the payment of such fees, which shall comply with section 2004(b) and which shall be adjusted on the basis of the ability of the eligible person to pay;

"(B) assurances that the applicant has made and will continue to make every reasonable effort—

"(i) to secure from eligible persons payment for services in accordance with such schedules;

"(ii) to collect reimbursement for health or other services provided to persons who are entitled to have payment made on their behalf for such services under any Federal or other government program or private insurance program; and

"(iii) to seek such reimbursement on the basis of the full amount of fees for services without application of any discount; and

"(C) assurances that the applicant has submitted or will submit to the Secretary such reports as the Secretary may require to determine compliance with this paragraph;

"(13) assurances that the applicant will make maximum use of funds available under title X;

"(14) assurances that the acceptance by any individual of family planning services or family planning information (including educational materials) provided through financial assistance under this title shall be voluntary and shall not be a prerequisite to eligibility for or receipt of any other service furnished by the applicant;

"(15) assurances that fees collected by the applicant for services rendered in accordance with this title shall be used by the applicant to further the purposes of this title;

"(16) assurances that the applicant, if providing both prevention and care services, will not exclude or discriminate against any adolescent who receives prevention services and subsequently requires care services as a pregnant adolescent;

"(17) a description of how the applicant will ascertain whether services for which adolescents have been referred have actually been obtained and develop a plan to ensure that needed services actually are received;

"(18) assurances that unemancipated minors requesting services from the applicant will be encouraged to consult with their parents with respect to such services and that services shall not be denied to unemancipated minors who decide not to consult their parents;

"(19) assurances that all pregnant adolescents receiving services will be informed of the availability of counseling (either by the entity providing core services or through a referral agreement with such other entity that provides such counseling) on all options, regarding the pregnancy;

"(20) assurances that primary emphasis for services supported under this title shall be given to adolescents 17 and under who are not able to obtain needed assistance through other means;

"(21) assurances that funds received under this title shall not supplant funds received from any other Federal, State, or local program or any private sources of funds; and

"(22) a plan for the conduct of, and assurances that the applicant will conduct, evaluations of the effectiveness of the services supported under this title in accordance with subsection (b).

"(b) EVALUATIONS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Each grantee that receives funds for a grant for services under this title shall expend at least 3 percent but not in excess of 10 percent of the amounts received under this title for the conduct of evaluations of the services supported under this title. The Secretary may, for a particular grantee on good cause shown, waive the preceding sentence with respect to the amounts to be expended on evaluations, but may not waive the requirement that such evaluations be conducted.

"(2) INDEPENDENT EVALUATION.—Evaluations required by paragraph (1) shall be conducted by an organization or entity that is independent of the grantee providing services supported under this title.

"(c) REPORTS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL—Each grantee that participates in the program established by this title shall make such reports concerning its use of Federal funds as the Secretary may require, including reports on prevention programs and care programs.

"(2) CONTENTS OF REPORTS ON PREVENTION PROGRAMS.—Reports on prevention programs shall be in a standard format as prescribed by the Secretary and shall include a description of—

"(A) the characteristics, educational attainments, and economic status of clients;

"(B) the clients' previous exposure in home, school, or other locations to educational efforts regarding sexuality and family life;

"(C) the types of interventions employed in the prevention program;

"(D) the before and after outcome measurements on variables appropriate to the intervention;

"(E) to the extent possible and where appropriate to program goals, the pregnancy and sexually transmitted disease rates subsequent to intervention; and

"(F) the extent of parent or family involvement in the program.

"(3) CONTENTS OF REPORTS ON CARE PROGRAMS.—Reports on care programs shall be in standard format as prescribed by the Secretary and shall include a description of—

"(A) the characteristics, health history, educational attainments, and economic status of clients at the time of entry;

"(B) the client prenatal care and pregnancy outcome, complications of pregnancy and delivery, and infant birth outcomes;

"(C) the characteristics, educational attainments, and economic status of clients at time of follow-up and infant follow-up information;

"(D) the types of services provided to clients; and

"(E) the extent of parent or family involvement in the services provided.

"(4) COMPARISON DATA.—Reports on prevention programs and care programs shall include control group data or other appropriate comparison data to provide comparisons with project data and to indicate program impact or effectiveness.

"(5) FOLLOW-UP DATA.—Reports on prevention programs and care programs shall include, to the extent possible, follow-up data on a random sample of program graduates and dropouts.

"(d) TIMING OF SERVICES.—No application submitted for a grant for a program for care services under this title may be approved unless the Secretary is satisfied that core services shall be available through the applicant within a reasonable time after such grant is received.

"SEC. 2007. COORDINATION OF FEDERAL AND STATE PROGRAMS.

"(a) FEDERAL PROGRAMS.—The Secretary shall coordinate Federal policies and programs providing services relating to the prevention of initial and recurrent adolescent pregnancies and providing care services for pregnant adolescents and adolescent parents. In achieving such coordination, the Secretary shall—

"(1) require grantees who receive grants for services under this title to report periodically to the Secretary concerning Federal, State, and local policies and programs that interfere with the delivery of and coordination of pregnancy prevention services and other programs of care for pregnant adolescents and adolescent parents;

"(2) provide technical assistance to facilitate coordination by State and local recipients of Federal assistance;

"(3) give priority in the provision of funds, where appropriate, to applicants using single or coordinated grant applications for multiple programs; and

"(4) give priority, where appropriate, to the provision of funds under Federal programs administered by the Secretary (other than the program established by this title) to programs providing comprehensive prevention services and comprehensive programs of care for pregnant adolescents and adolescent parents.

"(b) OTHER RECIPIENTS.—Any recipient of a grant for services under this title shall coordinate its activities with any other recipient of such a grant that is located in the same locality.

"SEC. 2008. GRANTS FOR RESEARCH.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—

"(1) AUTHORIZATION.—The Secretary may make grants to public agencies or nonprofit private organizations or institutions of higher education to support the research and dissemination activities described in paragraphs (4), (5), and (6) of section 2001(b).

"(2) DURATION.—The Secretary may make grants or enter into contracts under this section for a period of 1 year. A grant or contract under this section for a program may be renewed for 4 additional 1-year periods, which need not be consecutive.

"(3) AMOUNT LIMITATION.—A grant or contract for any 1-year period under this section may not exceed $100,000 for the direct costs of conducting research or dissemination activities under this section and may include such additional amounts for the indirect costs of conducting such activities as the Secretary determines appropriate. The Secretary may waive the preceding sentence with respect to a specific program if the Secretary determines that—

"(A) exceptional circumstances warrant such waiver and that the program will have national impact; or

"(B) additional amounts are necessary for the direct costs of conducting limited programs for the provision of necessary services in order to provide data for research carried out under this title.

"(4) CARRYOVER FOR REPORT.—The amount of any grant or contract made under this section may remain available for obligation or expenditure after the close of the 1-year period for which such grant or contract is made in order to assist the recipient in preparing the report required by subsection (f)(1).

"(b) USE OF FUNDS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Funds provided for research under this section may be used for descriptive or explanatory surveys, evaluation studies, longitudinal studies, or limited programs for services that are for the purpose of increasing knowledge and understanding of the matters described in paragraphs (4) and (5) of section 2001(b).

"(2) LIMITATIONS.—Funds provided under this section may not be used for the purchase or improvement of land, or the purchase, construction, or permanent improvement (other than minor remodeling) of any building or facility.

"(c) PREREQUISITES.—The Secretary may not make any grant or enter into any contract to support research or dissemination activities under this section unless—

"(1) the Secretary has received an application for such grant or contract that is in such form and that contains such information as the Secretary may by regulation require;

"(2) the applicant has demonstrated that the applicant is capable of conducting one or more of the types of research or dissemination activities described in paragraph (4), (5), or (6) of section 2001(b); and

"(3) in the case of an application for a research program, the panel established by subsection (e)(2) has determined that the program is of scientific merit.

"(d) COORDINATION.—The Secretary shall coordinate research and dissemination activities carried out under this section with research and dissemination activities carried out by the National Institutes of Health.

"(e) REVIEW OF APPLICATIONS.—

"(1) SYSTEM.—The Secretary shall establish a system for the review of applications for grants and contracts under this section. Such system shall be substantially similar to the system for scientific peer review of the National Institutes of Health and shall meet the requirements of paragraphs (2) and (3).

"(2) PANEL.—

"(A) ESTABLISHMENT.—In establishing the system required by paragraph (1), the Secretary shall establish a panel to review applications under this section.

"(B) EXPERTISE.—Panel members should have expertise in research and evaluation and should represent disciplines relevant to the study of adolescent pregnancy and parenting.

"(C) LIMIT ON PHYSICIANS.—Not more than 25 percent of the members of the panel shall be physicians.

"(D) MEETINGS.—The panel shall meet as often as may be necessary to facilitate the expeditious review of applications under this section, but not less than once each year.

"(E) REVIEW.—The panel shall review each program for which an application is made under this section, evaluate the scientific merit of the program, determine whether the program is of scientific merit, and make recommendations to the Secretary concerning whether the application for the program should be approved.

"(3) GRANT DETERMINATION.—The Secretary shall make grants under this section from among the programs that the panel established by paragraph (2) has determined to be of scientific merit and may only approve an application for a program if the panel has made such determination with respect to such a program. The Secretary shall make a determination with respect to an application within 1 month after receiving the determinations and recommendations of such panel with respect to the application.

"(f) REPORTS.—

"(1) RESEARCH REPORTS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The recipient of a grant or contract for a research program under this section shall prepare and transmit to the Secretary a report describing the results and conclusions of such research. Except as provided in subparagraph (B), such report shall be transmitted to the Secretary not later than 12 months after the end of the year for which funds are provided under this section. The recipient may utilize reprints of articles published or accepted for publication in professional journals to supplement or replace such report if the research contained in such articles was supported under this section during the year for which the report is required.

"(B) MULTIYEAR PROGRAMS.—In the case of any research program for which assistance is provided under this section for 2 or more consecutive 1-year periods, the recipient of such assistance shall prepare and transmit the report required by subparagraph (A) to the Secretary not later than 12 months after the end of each 1-year period for which such funding is provided.

"(2) OTHER REPORTS.—Recipients of grants and contracts for dissemination under this section shall submit to the Secretary such reports as the Secretary determines appropriate.

"SEC. 2009. EVALUATION.

"Of the funds appropriated under this title, the Secretary shall reserve not less than 1 percent and not more than 3 percent for the evaluation of activities carried out under this title. The Secretary shall submit to the appropriate committees of Congress a summary of each evaluation conducted under this section and a summary of the data reported by grantees under section 2006(c).

"SEC. 2010. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—For the purpose of carrying out this title, there are authorized to be appropriated $60,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1990 through 1992.

"(b) GRANTS FOR SERVICES.—At least two-thirds of the amounts appropriated to carry out this title shall be used to make grants for services.

"(c) PREVENTION SERVICES.—Not more than one-third of the amounts specified under subsection (b) for use for grants for services shall be used for grants for prevention services.

"SEC. 2011. FUND RESTRICTION.

"No funds for grants made under this title may be used for payment for the performance of an abortion.".

S. 121. A bill to amend title XVIII of the Social Security Act to provide that psychologist services furnished by, or under arrangements made by, a hospice program are covered under Medicare; to the Committee on Finance.

COVERAGE OF CERTAIN SERVICES PROVIDED THROUGH A HOSPICE PROGRAM

● Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, legislation which I am introducing today would modify the Medicare hospice benefit in order to allow for the recognition of psychological services.

Mr. President, one considers why we have enacted a hospice benefit I think it is fairly obvious that the services of our Nation's psychologists should be readily recognized. Individuals who enter a hospice do so because in the considered judgment of their physicians, it is no longer possible to cure the disease with which they are afflicted. What is necessary is comfort, compassion, and appropriate counseling.

This legislation will ensure that these individuals have access to the services of qualified mental health professionals in the final days of their life, if they so desire. I request unanimous consent that the text of my statement be included in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S.121

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. COVERAGE OF CERTAIN SERVICES PROVIDED THROUGH A HOSPICE PROGRAM.

(a) COVERAGE OF SERVICES.—Section 1861(dd)(1) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395x(dd)(1)) is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of subparagraph (G);

(2) by striking out the period at the end of subparagraph (H) and inserting in lieu thereof ", and"; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(I) psychologist services (as defined in subsection (ff)(1))".

(b) DEFINITION.—Section 1861 of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395x) is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"Psychologist Services

"(ff)(1) The term 'psychologist services' means services performed by an individual who is a psychologist (as defined in paragraph (2)) that such individual is legally authorized to perform under the law (or the regulatory mechanism provided by law) of the State in which such services are performed, whether or not such individual is under the supervision of, or associated with, a physician or other health care provider.

"(2) The term 'psychologist' means an individual who—

"(A) is licensed or certified at the independent practice level of psychology by the State in which such individual so practices,

"(B) possesses a doctorate degree in psychology from a regionally accredited educational institution, or in the case of an individual licensed or certified prior to January 1, 1978, possesses a master's degree in psychology and is listed in a national register of mental health service providers in psychology which the Secretary deems appropriate, and

"(C) possesses two years of supervised experience in health service, at least one year of which is postdegree.".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall be effective with respect to services performed on or after the first day of the first month which begins more than sixty days after the date of the enactment of this Act.●

S. 122. A bill to amend title XVIII of the Social Security Act to provide coverage for social worker services furnished at rural health clinics; to the Committee on Finance.

COVERAGE OF SOCIAL WORKER SERVICES IN RURAL HEALTH CLINICS

● Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation to modify the rural health clinic provision of Medicare and Medicaid in order to ensure that those social workers providing services in rural America will be given recognition under this statute.

Under the current law, social workers who are employed by rural health clinics are not recognized under the appropriate Medicare provision and as a result, must function under a physician's supervision even when they are not available. In my judgment, it is only appropriate to modify the rural health clinic provision to allow our Nation's social workers to be treated in the same manner as professional nurses and psychologists.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of my bill be included in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 122

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. COVERAGE OF SOCIAL WORKER SERVICES IN RURAL HEALTH CLINICS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 1861(aa)(1)(B) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395x(aa)(1)(B)) is amended by striking "Secretary)," and inserting "Secretary) or clinical social worker (as defined in subsection (hh)),".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—Section 1861 of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395x) is amended—

(1) by redesignating subsection (ff), as added by section 4073(c) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987, as subsection (gg);

(2) in subsection (s)(2)(H)(ii), as amended by section 4074(a)(1) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987, by striking "subsection (ff)" and inserting "subsecton (hh)";

(3) by redesignating subsection (ff), as added by section 4074(b) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987, as subsection (hh); and

(4) by redesignating subsection (gg), as added by section 4077(b)(5) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987, as subsection (ii).

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—(1) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply with respect to services furnished on or after the date of enactment of this Act.

(2) The amendments made by subsection (b) shall become effective on the date of enactment of this Act.●

Mr. KENNEDY (for himself, Mr. SIMON, Mr. DODD, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. MATSUNAGA, Mr. INOUYE, Mr. BRADLEY, Mr. BINGAMAN, Mr. KERRY, Mr. ADAMS, Mr. BURDICK, Mr. WIRTH, Mr. SHELBY, Mr. LIEBERMAN, and Mr. RIEGLE):

S. 123. A bill to provide financial assistance to States and localities for high quality early childhood development programs for prekindergarten children, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

SMART START: THE COMMUNITY COLLABORATIVE FOR EARLY CHILDHOOD DEVELOPMENT ACT OF 1989

● Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, today I am pleased to introduce legislation on behalf of myself, and Senators SIMON, DODD, MOYNIHAN, MATSUNAGA, INOUYE, BRADLEY, BINGAMAN, KERRY, ADAMS, BURDICK, WIRTH, SHELBY, LIEBERMAN, and RIEGLE, to make high quality full day early childhood development programs universally available to America's prekindergarten children. This proposal is called Smart Start, and it is my top education priority for the 101st Congress.

In 1962, the High/Scope Educational Research Foundation in Michigan began a great experiment that may change the shape of American education. These researchers set out to test what today seems like a commonsense idea: that school failure begins at an early age. They recognized that some children live in such deprivation that they are already below their grade level on the day they enter kindergarten. And their chance of ever catching up ranges from slim to nonexistent.

The Michigan researchers believed that early education could completely change the lives of children who are most at risk of failure—in school, and into adulthood. To prove this theory, they provided a high quality early childhood program to a group of inner-city 4-year-olds from low-income families in Ypsilanti. At the Perry preschool, the classes were small, the teachers were good, and the curriculum emphasized the individual development of each child.

The researchers have tracked these children throughout their school careers, and now have data on their progress through age 19. The results are truly remarkable. When compared to a group of students from similar backgrounds who had not participated in early education programs, the Perry preschool students were twice as likely to go on to college, twice as likely to be literate, and twice as likely to have a job. They were a third less likely to be school dropouts, half as likely to have a teenage pregnancy, half as likely to be on welfare, and much less likely to have had a run-in with the law.

These results translate into a sound financial investment, as well. An expenditure of $4,800 per child saved $29,000 in later welfare, social services, crime and other costs—or $6 saved for every dollar spent.

Other studies have confirmed the tremendous benefits of early education for the children who receive it, and for society. Work done by the Syracuse University Family Development Research Program, the Consortium for Longitudinal Studies, the Frank Porter Graham Center, and the Brookline Early Education project in my own State of Massachusetts are but a few.

Last year, Congress enacted several important demonstration programs that will provide early education, including Even Start and the Comprehensive Child Development Centers Act. But we need to do more. We know early education works. The Federal Government must encourage more States and localities to become involved. Smart Start provides strong incentives—dollar for dollar matching funds—for States to invest in full-day child development programs so that every preschool-aged child has access to high quality early childhood education.

Smart Start creates a mechanism for local coordination among varied service providers. Each community, through a policy group composed of parents, teachers, schools, Head Start, and social services, would determine how best to meet the service needs of the community by expanding and upgrading programs in Head Start, public schools, and other nonsectarian, nonprofit organizations.

Smart Start ensures high quality: each classroom receiving funds would have a low child-teacher ratio, small groups, staff trained in early childhood development, and active parental involvement. Programs would run for the full day, in order to meet the child care needs of working parents as well, although families would have the option of part-time attendance. And while low-income children would receive priority for services, all children would be eligible, with fees charged on a sliding scale.

Smart Start standards would ensure an environment in which children can exercise their innate ability to learn, at a pace appropriate to their age and level of development. That is the kind of "developmentally appropriate curriculum" that the Michigan researchers and many others have found to be so effective.

The potential of Smart Start is high, especially in combating one of America's most urgent problems—the high rate of dropouts. One out of eight students today does not finish high school. The numbers are higher for blacks and still higher for Hispanics, and the consequences are devastating. Dropouts are less likely to be employed, and those who work earn lower wages. Society pays for dropouts too—through lost tax revenues, and increased welfare costs, drug abuse, and crime.

Experts estimate that each year's class of dropouts costs society $240 billion in lost earnings and lost taxes over their lifetimes. And that does not include losses resulting from the educational disadvantages passed on to the next generation. If Smart Start can cut the dropout rate by a third—at a cost of less than $1 billion a year—it is an investment we cannot afford to pass up.

Since Smart Start was introduced last year, we have made several important changes in the legislation to respond to suggestions made by early childhood experts. First, we have increased the role of the Department of Health and Human Services, in order to better utilize its expertise. Now, while the Department of Education remains responsible for administrative aspects of the program, the HHS and Ed will jointly develop policy and regulations.

Second, while parents have always had a major role in the program, we have strengthened all aspects of parent involvement. In addition, we have guaranteed parents one-third representation on the local policy group, and required parenting education and family support services.

Third, we have streamlined the local policy group, which is now composed of a representative of the local Head Start agency, the school superintendent, a representative of the school board, the head of the social services agency, an early childhood teacher, and three parents, two of whom must be low income.

Finally, we have strengthened the bill's targeting on low-income children. Fifty percent of slots are reserved for children from families earning less than 115 percent of the poverty line, and two-thirds of funds must be used to serve these children.

We have received strong support from educators, civil rights groups, Governors, child development advocates, and the business community—which recognizes the importance of building a work force for the future. Indeed, Brad Butler, the president of the Committee for Economic Development—an organization of leading business executives—told the Labor Committee that "absolutely nothing this country can do is more important to our future than the issues which are addressed in this legislation." Last fall, the National Association of State Boards of Education [NASBE], issued a thoughtful and ground-breaking report, "Right From the Start." It urged the formation of cooperative partnerships between schools, Head Start, and other early childhood programs to address the increasing need for high quality programs. NASBE calls for programs that are comprehensive, include parent involvement, increase training and salaries of staff, meet the needs of working parents, and provide a sliding fee scale equalize access to programs. Most importantly, the report acknowledges that the need for services exceeds the resources that any single service provider has available, and thus a coalition of providers must work together to ensure that all children are served.

Those are precisely the principles that Smart Start is built upon. But we must act soon. One of the most distressing legacies of the past 8 years will be the children we might have helped, but who are no longer children and may now be beyond help. The impressionable 4-year-old girl of 1980 has become the 13-year-old teenage mother of 1989, perpetuating a senseless cycle of dependency.

Smart Start offers hope for the future. It is an education program, a day care program, a job program, a literacy program, a health care program, a nutrition program, a dropout program, a teenage-pregnancy program, and an anticrime and drug abuse program. Most important, it can be a genuinely new program that will be a significant investment in a better America. The potential returns are enormous. I urge my colleagues to support a truly Smart Start for our Nation's children.

I ask unanimous consent that the full text of the bill be printed in the RECORD, as well as a sample of letters of support we have received for the legislation.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT OF FINDINGS AND PURPOSE

SEC. 2. (a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds that—

(1) high quality early childhood development programs can increase the literacy rate, the graduation rate, the employment rate, and the rate of enrollment in higher education for those children who receive such programs;

(2) high quality early childhood development programs can also decrease the incidence of cognitive, learning, and emotional handicaps, teenage pregnancy, welfare dependency, and incidence of arrest and juvenile delinquency for those children who receive such programs;

(3) high quality early childhood development programs are cost effective, saving taxpayers $6 for every $1 invested;

(4) despite these well-documented, long-term advantages, only one-third of the children who live in poverty are enrolled in early childhood development programs;

(5) the less income and education parents have, the less likely their children are to be enrolled in early childhood development programs;

(6) many working families cannot afford high quality early childhood development programs for their children;

(7) half of all preschool children have two parents in the workforce or live in single parent families, and the number is growing;

(8) because of the growing number of such children, there is a great need for affordable high quality full day, full calendar year early childhood development programs;

(9) existing programs of early childhood development that run only half-day or only during the school-day and school-year should be extended to meet the full child care needs of parents;

(10) existing children's programs that do not meet the educational, physical, emotional, social, cognitive and communication developmental needs that high quality programs provide should be upgraded to provide these services to preschool children;

(11) the low salaries paid to professional staff in early childhood development programs, the lack of a professional career progression for such staff, and the lack of child development specialists makes it difficult to maintain high quality in programs for young children;

(12) many States and localities have established early childhood development programs to help meet the needs of young children and their families, particularly low-income families; and

(13) there remains a great need for high quality full day, full calendar year programs, which could be met both by expanding and upgrading existing early childhood programs and by creating new childhood development programs.

(b) PURPOSE.—It is therefore the purpose of this Act—

(1) to make widely available to prekindergarten children, especially to low-income children, a high-quality, child-centered, developmentally appropriate early childhood development program;

(2) to make widely available to parents who wish such services a full day, full calendar year program in which they can enroll their prekindergarten children;

(3) to make efficient use of Federal, State, and local resources for early childhood development by promoting collaboration and coordination at the Federal, State, and local levels;

(4) to assist State and local governments in providing comprehensive developmentally appropriate early childhood programs as well as health, nutrition, mental health, and other social services to all prekindergarten students, including students whose native language is other than English, and especially to needy prekindergarten students in poor urban and rural areas;

(5) to assist State and local governments in expanding, improving, or establishing early childhood development programs using existing facilities that meet State and local safety code requirements;

(6) to assist State and local governments in making available family support and parenting education to parents of children in early childhood development programs who request such services;

(7) to provide incentives for community collaboration, including public-private partnerships, in the delivery of comprehensive early childhood services through schools, Head Start agencies, and other community-based organizations;

(8) to provide resources to ensure a smooth transition for students from prekindergarten into the elementary school grades when they reach the appropriate age; and

(9) to assist State and local governments in—

(A) providing training for teachers and staff of early childhood development programs, and

(B) promoting the use of salary scales that take into account training and experience.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 3. As used in this Act—

(1) The term "early childhood development program" means a program that is appropriate for the child's age and all areas of the individual child's development, including educational, physical, emotional, social, cognitive, and communication.

(2) The term "full calendar year" means all days of operation of businesses in the locality, excluding—

(A) legal public holidays, as defined in section 6103 of title 5, United States Code; and

(B) a single period of 14 consecutive days during the summer.

(3) The term "full day" means the hours of operation of businesses in the locality.

(4) The term "locality" means a city, county, township, or other general purpose unit of local government, or an Indian reservation. For purposes of this Act, a consortium of more than one locality acting together may be considered a locality.

(5) The term "poverty line" has the same meaning given that term in section 673(2) of the Community Services Block Grant Act.

(6) The term "prekindergarten" means 2 years before a child is eligible under State law to enter first grade.

(7) The term "State" means each of the several States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, American Samoa, the United States Virgin Islands, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, the Marshall Islands, the Federated States of Micronesia, and Palau.

(8) The term "parent" includes a legal guardian or other person standing in loco parentis.

(9) The term "service provider" means any public or nonsectarian nonprofit deliverer of early childhood development services, including a local educational agency, Head Start center, and community-based organization receiving funds under this Act.

(10) The term "Secretary" unless otherwise specified, means the Secretaries of Education and Health and Human Services, acting jointly, except that "Secretary" means the Secretary of Education for purposes of sections 4, 6, 7, 8, 17, 20, and 21 of this Act.

(11) The term "training" means that instruction in early childhood development that is required for certification by existing State and local laws, regulations, and policies, or, in a State with no certification procedures, a nationally recognized credential such as the Child Development Associate credential, or postsecondary education with significant coursework in early childhood education or early childhood development.

(12) The term "child development specialists" shall include but not be limited to school counselors, school social workers, school psychologists, speech-language pathologists, and other qualified professional personnel involved in providing developmental assessment, counseling, therapeutic, and other necessary services as part of a comprehensive child development services program.

PROGRAM AUTHORIZED

SEC. 4. (a) GENERAL AUTHORITY.—The Secretary shall, in accordance with this Act, make grants to States and localities having applications submitted under sections 11 and 13 of this Act to assist States and localities to expand or establish full day, full calendar year early childhood development services for prekindergarten children. Such grants may be for up to 3 years, subject to annual review, and are renewable.

(b) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated for purposes of carrying out the provisions of this Act $500,000,000 for fiscal year 1990; $750,000,000 for fiscal year 1991; $1,000,000,000 for fiscal year 1992; $1,000,000,000 for fiscal year 1993; and $1,000,000,000 for fiscal year 1994.

ELIGIBILITY FOR FEDERAL ASSISTANCE

SEC. 5. (a) STATE ELIGIBILITY.—A State shall be eligible to receive its allotment under section 6(b) of this Act if the State—

(1) provides assurances that the State has established or designated a State Advisory Task Force in accordance with section 9 of this Act; and

(2) submits an application and a State plan to the Secretary as described under section 11 of this Act.

(b) LOCALITY ELIGIBILITY.—If a State does not participate in the program under this Act, a locality in that State is eligible for a grant as provided in section 7 of this Act, if the locality—

(1) provides assurances that the locality has established or designated a Local Policy Group, as provided in section 12 of this Act; and

(2) makes an application as provided in section 13 of this Act.

ALLOTMENTS TO STATES

SEC. 6. (a) RESERVATIONS.—The Secretary shall reserve 1 per centum of the amount appropriated under section 4(b) in each fiscal year for payments to Guam, American Samoa, the United States Virgin Islands, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, the Marshall Islands, the Federated States of Micronesia, and Palau, to be allotted in accordance with their respective needs.

(b) STATE ALLOTMENT.—(1) From the remainder of the sums appropriated under section 4(b) for each fiscal year, the Secretary shall allot to each State an amount determined in accordance with this subsection.

(2) The Secretary shall allot an amount which bears the same ratio to 25 percent of such remainder as the product of—

(A) the number of children in the State under age 5 in families with income below the poverty line; and

(B) the tax capacity index of the State

bears to the sum of the corresponding products for all States.

(3) The Secretary shall allot an amount which bears the same ratio to 25 percent of such remainder as the product of—

(A) the number of children in the State under age 5 in families with income below the poverty line; and

(B) the tax effort index of the State

bears to the sum of the corresponding products for all States.

(4) The Secretary shall allot an amount which bears the same ratio to 25 percent of such remainder as the product of—

(A) the number of children in the State under age 5; and

(B) the tax capacity index of the State

bears to the sum of the corresponding products for all States.

(5) The Secretary shall allot an amount which bears the same ratio to 25 percent of such remainder as the product of—

(A) the number of children in the State under age 5; and

(B) the tax effort index of the State

bears to the sum of the corresponding products for all States.

(6) For purposes of this subsection, the number of children shall be determined by the Bureau of the Census in compiling the most recent decennial census.

(7) For the purpose of this subsection, the term "State" does not include Guam, American Samoa, the United States Virgin Islands, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, the Marshall Islands, the Federated States of Micronesia, and Palau.

(c) TAX CAPACITY INDEX.—The tax capacity index is equal to 100 divided by the most recent standard tax capacity figure for the State, based on the Representative Tax System, developed annually by the Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations.

(d) TAX EFFORT INDEX.—The tax effort index is equal to the most recent measure of tax effort for the State that is based on the standard tax effort measures, as developed annually by the Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations, divided by 100.

(e) REALLOTMENT.—After satisfying the needs of localities under section 7(a), the amount of any State's allotment under subsection (b) for any fiscal year to carry out this Act which the Secretary determines will not be required for such fiscal year to carry out this Act shall be available for reallotment from time to time, on such dates during such fiscal year as the Secretary may fix, to other States in proportion to the original allotments to those States under subsection (b) for such fiscal year but with such proportionate amount for any of those other States being reduced to the extent it exceeds the sum the Secretary estimates that State needs and will be able to use for such fiscal year; and the total of those reductions shall be similarly reallotted among the States whose proportionate amounts were not so reduced. Any amounts reallotted to a State under this subsection during a year shall be deemed a part of its allotment under subsection (b) for that year.

LOCALITY AND WITHIN STATE ALLOCATION

SEC. 7. (a) FEDERAL ALLOCATION TO LOCALITIES.—From amounts that would be allotted to a State under section 6(b) but will not be so allotted because the State elects not to participate in programs assisted under this Act, the Secretary shall allocate amounts to localities in accordance with this section. The grant which a locality is eligible to receive under section 5(b) is equal to the amount to which the locality is entitled under subsection (c) of this section.

(b) WITHIN STATE RESERVATION AND ALLOCATION.—(1) The Governor shall, from the allotment of the State under section 6(b), reserve 25 percent in each fiscal year for the activities described in paragraph (2).

(2) From the amount reserved in each fiscal year—

(A) not to exceed 5 percent may be used for administrative costs, of which at least 20 percent shall be allotted to the State Advisory Task Force;

(B) at least 5 percent shall be used for grants to localities in nonmetropolitan areas, and to localities for the purpose of serving migrant and Indian children or if no such localities apply for funds, funds under this subparagraph may be used for purposes stated in subparagraph (C) of this paragraph;

(C) at least 10 percent shall be used for discretionary grants to localities for purposes set forth in this Act; and

(D) at least 5 percent shall be used to develop and implement statewide training programs, and to provide technical assistance to localities for training.

(3) The Governor shall, from the allotment of the State in each fiscal year, allocate the remaining 75 percent to localities that have applications approved under section 9 of this Act, on the basis of the criteria listed in subsection (c) of this section.

(c) ALLOCATION RULES.—(1) From amounts available under section 7(b)(3), the Governor shall allocate—

(A) Sixty-seven percent of funds to localities on the basis of the number of children in the locality under age 5 in families below the poverty line, divided by the number of all children under age 5 in families below the poverty line, in the State.

(B) Sixteen and one-half percent of funds to localities on the basis of the number of children under age 5 in the locality, divided by the number of all children under age 5 in the State.

(C) Sixteen and one-half percent of funds to localities on the basis of the quality of the locality's application and plan, as judged by the State Advisory Task Force, in the areas of—

(i) the success of collaboration and coordination among local policy group members and service providers;

(ii) the quality of the needs and resources assessment required in section 12(c)(2) of this Act; and

(iii) the plan of the locality for ongoing coordination of services over and above those services necessary to meet minimum standards required for submission of an application pursuant to this Act.

The amount of a locality's allocation under this subparagraph shall vary with the degree of success on the various criteria described, except that, no locality shall receive more under this subparagraph than 150 percent of what it would receive if these funds were distributed on the basis of subparagraphs (A) and (B) of this paragraph.

(2) For purposes of this subsection, the number of children shall be determined by the Bureau of the Census in compiling the most recent decennial census.

(3)(A) Funds which remain available after allocation to localities under paragraph (1)(C) shall be reallocated to localities which receive funds under such subparagraph, subject to the maximum therein.

(B) Funds which remain after reallocation under subparagraph (A) of this paragraph shall be reallocated to localities under subparagraphs (A) and (B) of paragraph (1) of this subsection.

(5) Where localities submitting applications claim overlapping boundaries, the State, or in the case of localities in nonparticipating States, the Secretary, shall determine which locality will have jurisdiction over the overlapping area.

(6) Each locality receiving funds under this subsection may allocate up to 5 percent of such funds for administrative costs, provided that the local policy group receives at least 60 percent of such allocation.

(7) A locality shall be ineligible to receive an allocation under paragraph (1) in a fiscal year if the aggregate amount of Federal and State funds that would be received by such locality under this Act is less than $25,000.

PLANNING GRANTS

SEC. 8. (a) IN GENERAL.—Any locality may apply for a 6-month planning grant to the State or, if the State does not participate in the program authorized by this Act, to the Secretary. Funds received by localities for planning grants shall be deducted from the funds the locality would otherwise be eligible for in the first year of the program.

(b) APPLICATION REQUIRED.—Each application for a planning grant shall—

(1) identify the members of the local policy group established under section 12;

(2) describe the needs and resources assessment to be conducted, as provided in section 12(c) of this Act; and

(3) describe the proposed planning activities of the local policy group.

STATE ADVISORY TASK FORCE

SEC. 9. (a) ESTABLISHMENT.—Any State which desires to receive financial assistance under this Act shall establish a State Advisory Task Force.

(b) COMPOSITION.—(1) The Task Force shall be composed of a group of representatives of agencies, institutions, and other entities interested in or currently participating in the provision of early childhood development programs and child care in the State.

(2) The Governor shall select representatives from among—

(A) the office of the Governor;

(B) the State education agency;

(C) the State social services agency (or State child development or child advocacy agency);

(D) the State Head Start association; and

(E) organizations representing parents within the State.

The State Advisory Task Force shall include at least one representative from each category of agencies or other entities listed in subparagraphs (A) through (F) of the preceding sentence, except in the case of a category in which no agency or entity elects to participate, or in which no such agency or entity exists within the State.

(3) In addition to those agencies and entities listed in paragraph (2), the Governor may select additional representatives of the Task Force from among—

(A) resource and referral agencies within the State; and

(B) the State Board of Education;

(C) the State health agency;

(D) the State labor or employment agency;

(E) the State housing agency;

(F) organizations representing local governments;

(G) organizations representing service providers;

(H) local educational agencies and school boards;

(I) each house of the State legislature;

(J) organizations representing teachers;

(K) organizations representing business; and

(L) organizations representing labor.

(4) To the extent practicable, the Task Force shall be balanced according to the race, ethnicity, and gender of its members.

(c) FUNCTIONS OF THE TASK FORCE.—The State Advisory Task Force shall—

(1) recommend to the Governor a Lead State Agency to administer programs to be assisted under this Act in the State based on that agency's experience in the administration of early childhood development programs, and recommend the assignment of financial responsibility to the appropriate State agencies;

(2) advise and assist the Lead State Agency designated by the Governor in the performance of its responsibilities set out in section 10 of this Act by conducting a needs and resources assessment—

(A) to determine where early childhood development programs are lacking or are inadequate within the State, with particular attention to poor urban and rural areas, and what special services are needed within the State, such as services for children whose native language is other than English;

(B) to identify all existing State-funded, and, to the extent practical, other programs serving prekindergarten children (other than profitmaking or sectarian) in the State, and to specify which programs might be expanded or upgraded with the use of funds provided by section 15 of this Act to meet criteria required in section 16 of this Act; and

(C) where appropriate, to identify other sources of fiscal and other support services for early childhood development programs;

(3) develop and submit the State application and the State plan required in section 11 of this Act;

(4) identify and review State policies, regulations, and laws that may restrict the use of facilities for the delivery of early childhood development services in school buildings or community agencies;

(5) evaluate and approve applications submitted by localities, as provided under sections 7 and 13 of this Act;

(6) prepare and submit an annual report to the Governor and the Secretary on the status of early childhood development programs operating within the State in accordance with subsection (d);

(7) conduct evaluations of programs as required in section 18; and

(8) arrange joint planning for provision of services under this Act with the provision of services required or authorized under other Federal laws.

(d) ANNUAL REPORT CONTENTS.—The report required by subsection (c)(6) shall include such information as the Secretary may reasonably require.

(e) CONFLICT OF INTEREST.—No member of the State Advisory Task Force shall cast a vote on any matter which would provide direct personal financial benefit to that member or otherwise give an appearance of a conflict of interest under State law.

(f) USE OF EXISTING TASK FORCES.—To the extent that a State has established a task force before the date of enactment of this Act which is comparable to the task force described in this section, the State shall be considered to be in compliance with subsections (a) and (b) of this section.

LEAD STATE AGENCY

SEC. 10. (a) DESIGNATION.—(1) The Governor shall designate a Lead State Agency to administer the early childhood development programs assisted under this Act in the State. The Lead State Agency shall be selected from—

(A) the State educational agency;

(B) the State department of social services; or

(C) the State agency for child development or child advocacy.

The criteria used to select the Lead State Agency shall include experience of the agency in carrying out early childhood development programs in the State. In order to be designated a Lead State Agency, such agency must have the authority under its charter or applicable law to receive and administer Federal funds for use in support of early childhood development programs, and to transfer funds so received, and to act as a grantee, contractor, or sponsor of programs authorized under this Act.

(2) The Governor shall assign financial responsibility for services provided to the appropriate State agencies.

(b) FUNCTIONS.—The Lead State Agency shall, with the assistance of the State Advisory Task Force, be responsible for carrying out—

(1) the general administration, supervision, and monitoring of programs and activities receiving assistance under section 7 of this Act to ensure compliance with this Act;

(2) contracting with other State and local service providers as necessary;

(3) the resolution of intra- and interagency disputes; and

(4) the provision of, directly, or by way of grant or contract or other arrangements, technical assistance to localities in developing, conducting, and administering programs under this Act.

STATE APPLICATION AND STATE PLAN

SEC. 11. (a) STATE APPLICATION.—Any State desiring to receive a grant under this Act for any fiscal year shall submit an application, developed by the State Advisory Task Force, as required in section 9 of this Act, to the Secretary, at such time and in such manner as the Secretary may reasonably require. Each such application shall contain—

(1) a description and list of members of the State Advisory Task Force established or designated by the Governor as required in section 9 of this Act;

(2) the designation of a Lead State Agency that will be responsible for the administration of funds provided under section 6 of this Act, as required by section 10 of this Act;

(3) a State plan as required by subsections (b) and (c) of this section; and

(4) such other information and assurances as the Secretary may reasonably require.

(b) STATE PLAN.—Any State desiring to receive a grant under this Act shall file with the Secretary a State Plan, developed by the State Advisory Task Force. The Plan shall be submitted to the Secretary at such time and in such manner as the Secretary may reasonably require.

(c) CONTENTS OF PLAN.—Such plan shall—

(1) describe the results of the needs and resources assessment, carried out by the State Advisory Task Force, as provided in section 9 of this Act;

(2) describe how the State will upgrade where necessary, expand, and coordinate with existing Head Start programs;

(3) describe how the State will employ multiple service providers;

(4) describe how the State will ensure compliance with minimum standards required in section 16;

(5) describe how the State will ensure compliance with the uses of funds set forth in section 15(c) and (d) of this Act;

(6) describe how the State will meet the requirement of the non-Federal share required in section 20 of this Act;

(7) describe the certification procedures and training required by the State;

(8) assure that funds paid to the State under this Act will be expended in accordance with this Act;

(9) provide for (A) making such reports in such form and containing such information as the Secretary may require to carry out the Secretary's functions under this Act, and (B) keeping such records and affording such access thereto as the Secretary may find necessary to assure the correctness and verification of such reports and proper disbursement of Federal funds under this Act;

(10) provide satisfactory assurance that Federal funds made available under this Act, and the non-Federal funds which are required to be paid as part of the non-Federal share under section 20 of this Act shall be used to supplement and increase the level of State and local funds expended for services, as provided in section 20 of this Act;

(11) provide satisfactory assurance, in accordance with section 21 of this Act, that such fiscal control and fund accounting procedures will be adopted as may be necessary to assure proper disbursement of, and accounting for, Federal funds made available under this Act and non-Federal funds which are required to be paid as part of the non-Federal share under section 20 of this Act; and

(12) such other information and assurances as the Secretary may reasonably require.

LOCAL POLICY GROUP

SEC. 12. (a) ESTABLISHMENT.—Any locality desiring to receive a grant under this Act shall form a Local Policy Group.

(b) COMPOSITION.—(1) The Local Policy Group shall be composed of a group of representatives of Government agencies, service providers, institutions, and organizations interested in or currently participating in the provision of early childhood development services in the geographic area covered by the locality. The local policy group shall contain no more than 8 members, except as provided in paragraph (2)(C) of this subsection.

(2)(A) The chief elected official of the locality shall select the membership of the Local Policy Group. The Local Policy Group shall be selected from among—

(i) the local Head Start agency;

(ii) the local board of education;
(iii) the local superintendent of schools;
(iv) the local social services agency (or, if applicable, local child development or child advocacy agency); and
(v) early childhood teachers.

The Local Policy Group shall include one representative from each agency or entity listed in clauses (i) through (v) of the preceding sentence, except where the agency or entity elects not to participate, or does not exist within the locality.

(B) In addition to the entities listed in subparagraph (A) of this paragraph, three parents of prekindergarten or elementary school-aged children shall be included in the membership of the local policy group. Two of such parents shall be parents whose child is receiving or has received Head Start services.

(C) Where a locality includes a consortium of more than one locality, as provided in section 3(4), the chief elected officials may select two representatives from each agency or entity listed in clauses (i) through (v) of subparagraph (A), and six parents as described in subparagraph (B) of this section.

(3) To the extent practicable, the Local Policy Group shall be balanced according to the race, ethnicity, and gender of its members.

(4) The Local Policy Group may consult with members of the community with expertise or an interest in child development programs, including—

(A) local resource and referral agencies,
(B) organizations representing labor,
(C) employers,
(D) local public health and nutrition agencies,
(E) child development experts, and
(F) organizations representing child care providers to assist in the development and implementation of early childhood development programs.

(c) FUNCTIONS.—The Local Policy Group shall—

(1) develop a collaborative voluntary application to the State from the participating agencies;

(2) develop a needs and resources assessment, every 3 years, for the geographic area included within the locality, stating—

(A) where services are most needed based on numbers of prekindergarten children with particular attention to such children from families who have low income;

(B) the existence of early childhood development programs and the degree to which they meet the demand for such services in the locality;

(C) the existence of programs serving prekindergarten children which can be expanded or upgraded to meet the requirements of this Act;

(D) the need for bilingual programs and services for children whose native language is not English, and programs and services for handicapped, migrant, Indian, and homeless children; and

(E) a description of early childhood development training programs in the locality funded by this Act, and the need for additional training programs in the locality;

(3) demonstrate how the locality will work to employ multiple service providers;

(4) identify and review local laws, regulations, or policies that may restrict the use of facilities for the delivery of early childhood development programs in school buildings or community agencies;

(5) identify salary scales for staff of existing providers of early childhood development services and child care services;

(6) identify job training, literacy, and adult education programs that can be coordinated with family support services offered by child development programs; and

(7) prepare and submit an annual report as required in subsection (e) of this section to the State Advisory Task Force on the status of early childhood development programs within the locality; and

(8) arrange for evaluations required in section 18.

(d) LIMITATION ON FUNCTIONS OF LOCAL POLICY GROUP.—The Local Policy Group shall not supercede the internal operations or administrative practices of agencies or entities operating existing early childhood development programs, beyond evaluations required by section 18, except to institute minimum standards required by section 16 or to enforce the uses of funds set forth in sections 14 and 15.

(e) CONTENTS OF REPORT.—Each report required by subsection (c)(7) shall include—

(1) the number and socioeconomic background of children being served with funds provided under this Act, listed by age if available;

(2) the number of children whose parents have requested services but who are not being served;

(3) a description of the uses for which funds were expended in accordance with section 15 of this Act;

(4) a description of programs expanded, upgraded, or created under this Act;

(5) a description of salary scales used in programs receiving funds under this Act;

(6) a description of how programs receiving funds under this Act are coordinated with other existing programs of early childhood development for prekindergarten children in the locality; and

(7) assurances that the programs funded under this Act meet the requirements of sections 14, 15, and 16 of this Act.

(f) CONFLICT OF INTEREST.—A member of the Local Policy Group shall not cast a vote on any matter which would provide direct personal financial benefit to that member or otherwise give an appearance of a conflict of interest under State or local law.

(g) USE OF EXISTING LOCAL POLICY GROUP.—To the extent that a locality has established a broadly representative Local Policy Group before enactment of this legislation that is comparable to the Local Policy Group described in this section, such locality shall be considered to be in compliance with subsections (a) and (b) of this section.

LOCAL PLAN AND APPLICATION

SEC. 13. (a) APPLICATION REQUIRED.—Any locality desiring to receive a grant from the State to carry out services assisted under this Act shall—

(1) form or designate a Local Policy Group, in accordance with section 12 of this Act; and

(2) submit to the State an application prepared by the Local Policy Group.

Such application may be for up to 3 years, subject to annual review, and is renewable.

(b) CONTENTS OF APPLICATION.—Each application prepared pursuant to subsection (a) shall contain—

(1) a service delivery plan from all participating service providers, that includes—

(A) the name and location of all planned sites and a description of services which will be provided at each site under such plan;

(B) a description of how the locality will employ multiple service providers, such as Head Start and Local Educational Agencies, except as provided in section 16(b)(1);

(C) a plan for ongoing coordination of early childhood development services at each site between (i) Head Start providers and local educational agencies, whether or not such providers or agencies are receiving funds under this Act, and (ii) between entities in clause (i) and any other recipients of funds under this Act;

(D) a description of how priority for the use of funds made available under this Act is being given to the expansion and upgrading of existing programs, as required by section 15(c) of this Act;

(E) the number of children receiving services free of charge, the number of children receiving services for payment of fees, the level of such fees paid at each site, and the distribution of such children among service providers;

(F) the results of the local needs and resources assessment conducted by the Local Policy Group, as provided in section 12(c)(2) of this Act, a description of what needs for services have been identified by such assessment, and a description of how the plan for coordination of services address the indicated needs;

(G) a description of certification and other qualifications of staff, a plan for training of professional staff and employees, the turnover or mobility rate of professional staff and employees, if available, and a description of salary schedules, and how such schedules reflect level of training, expertise, and experience of employees;

(H) a description of how the locality will provide the non-Federal share required under section 20 of this Act if any portion thereof is not paid by the State;

(I) a description of how the locality will ensure compliance with the uses of funds set forth in section 15 of this Act;

(J) assurances that Federal minimum standards in section 16 of this Act will be adhered to;

(K) a plan for evaluations required in section 18; and

(L) such additional assurances or information as the Secretary may reasonably require; and

(2) evidence demonstrating effective use of existing Federal and State funds received by the locality for services for prekindergarten children.

(c) LOCAL ADMINISTERING AGENCY.—(1) In each locality the chief elected official (or officials, in the case of consortium of more than one locality) shall select a local administering agency for the locality from the local education agencies, local social services agencies, and the local child development agencies within the locality.

(2) The selection of the local administering agency shall be based on the experience of such agency in administering early childhood development programs. To be eligible to be designated a local administering agency, such agency shall have the authority under its charter or applicable law to receive, redistribute, and monitor grants to provide early childhood development services under this Act.

(3) The local administering agency of each locality shall be designated as the coordinator of all programs assisted under this Act for the locality for the purpose of administration and fiscal control.

(4) Each local administering agency shall work with existing local resource and referral agencies.

(5) Each administering agency shall follow the plan developed by the Local Policy

Group for the provision of services assisted by this Act.

(d) SUBMISSION OF LOCAL APPLICATION.—(1) Any locality desiring to receive financial assistance under this Act, that is located in a State receiving funds under this Act, shall submit an application to the State Advisory Task Force for the State in which such locality is located.

(2) Any locality desiring to receive financial assistance under this Act, that is located in a State that has chosen not to receive funds under this Act, shall—

(A) submit an application to the Secretary for a grant at such time and in such manner as the Secretary may reasonably require; and

(B) comply with the requirements under section 12 and subsections (a) and (b) of section 13 of this Act.

The service delivery plan required by section 13(b) shall also include the information required under sections 11(b) and 11(c) to the extent the information required therein pertains to the area to be served by the locality.

ELIGIBLE CHILDREN AND FAMILIES

SEC. 14. (a) AGE REQUIREMENT.—Any child is eligible to participate in programs assisted under this Act in the school year 2 years prior to the school year in which the child would be eligible, under State law, to enter first grade. Any State or locality which has served all children of the eligible age group requesting services may use funds under this Act to serve children in the school year 3 years prior to the school year in which they would be eligible, under State law, to enter first grade. A State or locality may use funds under this Act to upgrade and expand existing programs serving children aged 3 years through 5 years, provided the supplementation of funding requirements of section 20 are met.

(b) FAMILY CONTRIBUTION.—(1) Eligible children in families with annual incomes under 115 percent of the poverty line are eligible to receive services provided under this Act without charge.

(2)(A) Eligible children in families with annual incomes at or above 115 percent of the poverty line are eligible to receive services provided by this Act with payment of fees on a sliding scale up to the full cost of such service except that, pursuant to part B of the Education of the Handicapped Act, services included in a handicapped child's individualized education program shall be furnished to such child without charge. The sliding scale shall be developed by the State, or locality if the State is not participating, based on income level, family size, and relative cost of living. Such sliding scale shall ensure that families that can afford to pay the full cost of services do pay such cost. The maximum fee per child shall not exceed the cost per child of the services provided. Total fees for all eligible children in a family receiving services under this Act shall not exceed 10 percent of a family's gross income.

(B) Nothing in subparagraph (A) shall be construed to prevent any State or locality from paying part or all of the cost of fees paid by families under subparagraph (A) with non-Federal funds.

USE OF FUNDS

SEC. 15. (a) IN GENERAL.—Localities may use funds furnished under this Act.—

(1) to expand or upgrade, through grant or contract, existing public or nonsectarian nonprofit programs for prekindergarten children to operate them during the full day and full calendar year and in compliance with the requirements of section 16 of this Act, or

(2) to create, through grant or contract to public or nonsectarian nonprofit entities, full day, full calendar year early childhood development programs that comply with the provisions of this Act.

(b) AUTHORIZED ACTIVITIES.—Grants under this Act may be used for—

(1) development of and training in the use of developmentally appropriate early childhood curricula, including curricula that take into account the communication skills of children, including those whose native language is not English, and which are culturally sensitive and avoid race-based and gender-based stereotyping;

(2) provide directly, or by grant or contract, services to enable an early childhood development program to operate during the full day, and full calendar year;

(3) health screening and diagnosis of children;

(4) provision of health, mental health, and social services to children described in section 14(b)(1);

(5) nutrition services and nutrition education;

(6) parent outreach and involvement, including family home visits;

(7) family support and parenting education;

(8) referral and assistance in procuring education, nutrition, health, mental health, and other social services for families of children receiving early childhood development services;

(9) prenatal health and education services for parents of children receiving early childhood development services;

(10) distribution of information about available services, establishing connections to resource and referral agencies, and locality outreach;

(11) staff and personnel training in early childhood development including training conducted in conjunction with other service providers with particular attention to avoidance of race-based and gender-based stereotyping;

(12) upgrading the salaries of early childhood development professional staff, and the development of salary schedules for staff with varying levels of experience, expertise, and training;

(13) activities designed to ensure that groups of children participating in early childhood development programs are mixed according to gender, race, ethnicity, handicapping condition, and socioeconomic status;

(14) acquisition or development of materials and equipment;

(15) rental of space for provision of services, and minor building renovation or remodeling of schools, community-based agencies or business facilities to accommodate programs for young children;

(16) transportation of children;

(17) recruiting or subsidizing senior citizens to work with children; and

(18) evaluation of services.

(c) PRIORITY.—Where early childhood development programs serving eligible children exist within localities receiving funds under this Act, priority for the use of such funds shall be given to expanding such programs to serve more children and upgrading such programs to meet minimum standards required in section 16 of this Act. Funds may be used to establish new programs only if the needs of the locality may not be met by expanding or upgrading existing programs.

(d) LIMITATION.—(1) At least 50 percent of spaces created by funds available under this Act shall be filled by children whose families earn annually less than 115 percent of the poverty level.

(2) At least 67 percent of the funds made available under this Act shall be used by service providers to serve children from families who earn annually less then 115 percent of the poverty level, or shall be allocated to programs which serve primarily children from families who earn annually less than 115 percent of the poverty level.

MINIMUM STANDARDS

SEC. 16. (a) SERVICE PROVIDERS.—A service provider serving children with funds under this Act shall meet the following minimum standards or use funds to bring programs in compliance with the following minimum standards:

(1) The child to adult ratio shall not exceed 10 to 1 at any time. For the purpose of calculating child to adult ratio, the term "adult" includes only individuals in direct contact with, and with primary responsibility for, supervising children.

(2) The maximum group size shall be 20 children.

(3) Services shall be available for the full day and full calendar year, although families shall be given the option of enrolling their children part time.

(4)(A) At least one staff member supervising each group of children shall have training and experience in early childhood education or child development. The staff member shall be certified in early childhood education or child development, if the State has a certification procedure in these areas, or, if the State does not have a certification procedure, the staff member shall have a nationally recognized child development credential or postsecondary education with significant coursework in early childhood development.

(B) Additional staff members who do not have the qualifications described in subparagraph (A) shall receive a minimum of 40 hours of preservice training.

(C) All staff members shall receive 24 hours a year of inservice training during the duration of their employment; and where practical, an on-site curriculum specialist with training and experience in early childhood development shall be responsible for training all staff to apply the curricula selected by the program.

(5) Service deliverers shall use developmentally appropriate curricula that are appropriate for the child's age and all areas of the individual child's development including educational, cognitive, physical, emotional, social and communication skills of children, including skills of children whose native language is other than English. Standardized tests shall not be used to determine assignment to a group or admission to a program.

(6) Service providers shall provide adequate and nutritious meals and snacks, including breakfast at parent request.

(7) Service providers shall provide health screening and screening for handicapping conditions and shall ensure that appropriate follow-up services are provided. Service providers shall make referrals to health, mental health, and social services for which the enrolled child and her family are eligible at the Federal, State, and local levels, and shall ensure that such services are provided to families that request them.

(8) Service providers shall provide parenting education and family support services.

(9) Service providers shall coordinate with the local public school system to facilitate sharing of resources and expertise where practical, including diagnostic and remedial services and staff training, and to provide for the enrolled child's transition to elementary school. Local educational agencies shall make arrangements for a representative of such agency to facilitate such coordination.

(10) Service providers shall coordinate early childhood development programs funded under this Act with programs serving infants and toddlers, in order to provide continuity of care.

(11) Service providers shall ensure active parental involvement, which—

(A) involves parental outreach;

(B) ensures parents unlimited access to observe the program in which their children are enrolled;

(C) involves parents in the program curricula;

(D) provides access to all evaluations of the program to parents;

(E) arranges regular opportunities for parents to meet with professional staff including individuals such as child development specialists;

(F) permits parents (other than full-time staff) the opportunity to volunteer their services within the classroom setting; and

(G) ensures parents a role in policymaking. Participation by parents within the classroom shall not be considered for the purpose of satisfying any of the requirements imposed by this section regarding staff.

(12) Service providers shall ensure the physical safety of children served and comply with—

(A) any applicable State and local law or policy for licensing, health, environmental, sanitation, building, and fire safety; and

(B) Federal and State child care standards applicable to programs for children of the age group served.

(b) LOCALITIES.—A locality serving children with funds under this Act shall meet the following minimum standards or use funds to bring programs in compliance with the following minimum standards:

(1) A locality shall employ multiple service providers to ensure that one agency or organization does not become the sole provider of early childhood development services funded under this Act, unless such locality certifies to the State (or in the case of a locality applying directly to the Secretary, certifies to the Secretary), as part of the application required by section 13, that there exists only one service provider in the locality. Furthermore, localities shall give high priority to the expansion and upgrading of existing programs with funds provided under this Act.

(2) A locality shall ensure that no child receiving services in programs assisted by this Act shall be denied continued services as a result of changes in family income.

(c) HEAD START AGENCY.—Each Head Start agency receiving funds under this Act shall be deemed in compliance with minimum standards set forth in paragraphs (5), (6), (7), and (11), of subsection (a) of this section, if it is in compliance with the Head Start Performance Objectives.

FEDERAL ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS

SEC. 17. (a) ROLE OF SECRETARY.—Consistent with the provisions of this Act, the Secretary of Education and the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall jointly develop and issue policy regulations for carrying out the provisions of this Act. Subject to the previous sentence, the Secretary has the responsibility to carry out the provisions of this Act. The Secretary shall use the expertise of early education experts at the Department of Education, particularly regarding developmentally appropriate curriculum, and early childhood experts in the Department of Health and Human Services, particularly regarding health and social services.

(b) WITHHOLDING OF PAYMENTS.—(1) Whenever the Secretary, after reasonable notice to the Lead State Agency (or, in the case of a grant provided under section 5(b) of this Act, to the locality) and an opportunity for a hearing, finds that there has been a failure to comply substantially with any assurances required to be given or conditions required to be met under this Act, the Secretary shall notify such agency (or locality) of the findings and that beginning 60 days after the date of such notification, further payments will not be made to the State (or locality) under this Act (or, in the Secretary's discretion, that the Lead State Agency shall reduce or terminate further payments under this Act to any locality or service provider) until the Secretary is satisfied that there is no longer any such failure to comply. Until the Secretary is so satisfied—

(A) payments to the State (or locality) under this Act shall be reduced or terminated, or

(B) payments by the Lead State Agency under this Act shall be limited to localities and service providers not affected by the failure.

A transcript or recording shall be made of any hearing conducted under this section and shall be available for inspection by any person.

(2) Upon submission to a State (or locality) of a notice under paragraph (1) of this subsection that the Secretary is withholding payments, the State (or locality) shall take such action as may be necessary to bring its actions into compliance with the provisions of this Act.

(c) JUDICIAL REVIEW.—(1) If any State (or locality) is dissatisfied with the Secretary's action under subsection (a) of this section, such State (or locality) may, within 60 days after notice of such action, file with the United States Court of Appeals for the circuit in which such State (or locality) is located a petition for review of that action. A copy of the petition shall be transmitted by the clerk of the court to the Secretary. The filing of such petition shall act to suspend any withholding of funds by the Secretary pending the judgment of the court and prior to a final action on any review of such judgment. The Secretary thereupon shall file in the court the record of the proceedings on which he or she based the action which is the subject of the appeal.

(2) A Lead State Agency (or locality) shall be presumed to have complied with this Act, but the findings of fact by the Secretary, if supported by the weight of the evidence, may overcome such presumption. The court may remand the case to the Secretary to take further evidence, and the Secretary may thereupon make new or modified findings of fact and may modify his or her previous action, and shall file in the court the record of the further proceedings.

(3) Upon the filing of such petition, the court shall have jurisdiction to affirm the action of the Secretary or to set it aside, in whole or in part. The judgment of the court shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon certiorari or certification as provided in section 1254 of title 28, United States Code.

(d) CONTINUING ACTIVITIES PROTECTED.—No Head Start agency receiving funds under this Act which, prior to the date of enactment of this Act, was located in any facility owned or operated by a local educational agency shall—

(1) by reason of being selected to administer a program with funds under this Act, or

(2) by reason of the selection of the local educational agency to administer a program with funds under this Act, be denied the continued use of such facilities in accordance with the arrangements with respect to such facilities so in effect.

EVALUATION

SEC. 18. (a) LOCAL POLICY GROUP EVALUATION.—The Local Policy Group shall arrange for the periodic on-site evaluation of the local programs by reviewers including community members and early childhood development experts who are not directly involved in the administration of the program. The results of such evaluations shall be made available to the service providers, parents of eligible children, interested members of the locality, and the State Advisory Task Force.

(b) STATE EVALUATION.—The Lead State Agency shall arrange for periodic on-site monitoring and inspection of programs assisted under this Act for compliance with the minimum standards set forth in section 16. The State Advisory Task Force shall evaluate programs assisted under this Act for success in achieving stated goals of the program and for impact on related programs. Evaluations shall be conducted by reviewers who are not directly involved in the administration of the program. The results of the evaluations shall be made available to service providers, parents of eligible children, interested members of the locality, and the Secretary.

(c) ANNUAL REPORT.—(1) The Secretary shall ensure that programs are inspected and monitored for compliance with the minimum standards set forth in section 16 of this Act.

(2) The Secretary shall prepare and submit to appropriate Committees of the Congress an annual report. The report shall include a summary of the information contained in reports submitted by States.

(d) GENERAL EVALUATIONS.—(1) The Secretary shall provide, directly or by way of grant or contract, for the continuing evaluation of programs assisted under this Act, including evaluations that measure and evaluate the impact of programs authorized by this Act, in order to determine their effectiveness in achieving stated goals, their impact on related programs, and their structure and mechanisms for delivery of services, including, where appropriate, comparisons with appropriate control groups composed of persons who have not participated in such programs. Evaluations shall be conducted by persons not directly involved in the administration of the program being evaluated.

(2) The Secretary shall publish the results of evaluative research and summaries of evaluations of programs and projected impact and effectiveness not later than 90 days after the completion thereof. The Secretary shall submit to the appropriate Committees of the Congress a copy of all such research studies and evaluation summaries.

(3) The Secretary shall take the necessary action to ensure that all studies, evaluations, proposals, and data produced or developed with assistance under this section shall become the property of the United States.

NONDISCRIMINATION

SEC. 19. The Secretary shall not award financial assistance for any program, project, or activity under this Act unless the grant or contract with respect thereto specifically provides that no person with responsibilities in the operation thereof will discriminate with respect to any such program, project, or activity because of race, religion, color, national origin, sex, political affiliation, handicap or age.

PAYMENTS; NON-FEDERAL SHARE; SUPPLEMENTATION OF FUNDING

SEC. 20. (a) PAYMENTS.—(1) The Secretary shall pay to each State, or locality in the case of a nonparticipating State, having an application approved under section 11, or 13, as the case may be, the Federal share of the cost of the activities described in the application.

(2) The Federal share—

(A) for the first year in which the State receives funds under this Act shall be 70 percent;

(B) for the second such year shall be 60 percent; and

(C) for the third such year and each year thereafter shall be 50 percent.

(3) The Federal share—

(A) for the first year for which a locality, located in a nonparticipating State, receives assistance under this Act shall be 80 percent;

(B) for the second such year shall be 75 percent; and

(C) for the third such year and each succeeding year shall be 70 percent.

(b) NON-FEDERAL SHARE.—(1) The non-Federal share of payments under this Act may be in cash or in kind, fairly evaluated, including plant, equipment, or services, subject to the limitations in subparagraph (2).

(2) A State receiving funds under this Act shall pay at least 75 percent of the non-Federal share. Such payment shall be in cash from non-Federal sources. States shall not require localities to contribute more than 25 percent of the non-Federal share or to contribute to the cash portion of the non-Federal share.

(c) SUPPLEMENTATION OF FUNDING—(1) All Federal funds and funds paid as a part of the non-Federal share under this Act shall be used to supplement the level of State and local public funds expended for services assisted under this Act in the previous fiscal year.

(2) The supplementation requirement of this subsection shall be satisfied with respect to a particular program if the aggregate expenditure in such program for the fiscal year in which services are to be provided will not be less than the aggregate expenditure in such program in the previous year, excluding Federal and non-Federal funds provided under this Act.

(d) WAIVER.—If the Secretary determines that a State, or in a nonparticipating State, a locality, would suffer substantial hardship as a result of paying the non-Federal share of payments because of the State's or locality's economic condition or substantial prior commitment of funds for early childhood development programs, the Secretary may waive such non-Federal share in part or in whole for such period of time as the Secretary deems necessary.

RECORDS AND AUDITS

SEC. 21. (a) RECORDS.—Each recipient of financial assistance under this Act shall keep records as the Secretary shall prescribe, including records which fully disclose the amount and disposition by such recipient of such financial assistance, the total cost of the program supplied by other sources, and such other records as will facilitate an effective audit.

(b) AUDITS.—The Secretary and the Comptroller General of the United States, or any of their duly authorized representatives, shall have access for the purpose of audit and examination to any books, documents, papers, and records of the recipients that are pertinent to the financial assistance received under this Act.

JANUARY 24, 1989.

Hon. EDWARD KENNEDY,
Russell Senate Office Building,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR KENNEDY: The National Education Association and its 1.9 million members strongly support your bill, S. 123, "Smart Start: the Community Collaborative for Early Childhood Development Act of 1989." As you know, NEA testified in support of this important education bill during the 100th Congress.

NEA supports the bill's goal of establishing or expanding quality preschool education programs for children, particularly those at risk of school failure. NEA believes that there is an inextricable link between quality early childhood development programs and educational excellence. Your bill makes a significant commitment to help educate, not just care for, preschool children.

Thank you for your strong leadership in advancing a program that would help educate our nation's children to their fullest potential.

NEA will urge members of the Senate to co-sponsor S. 123, and we look forward to working with you and your staff on this and other important issues in the 101st Congress.

Sincerely,

KENNETH MELLEY,
Director of Government Relations.

THE COUNCIL OF THE GREAT CITY SCHOOLS,
Washington, DC, January 24, 1989.

Hon. EDWARD M. KENNEDY,
Chair, Committee on Labor and Human Resources, Hart Senate Office Building, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR KENNEDY: On behalf of the Council of the Great City Schools, a coalition of the nation's largest urban public school systems, I would like to thank you for introducing S. 123, "Smart Start: The Community Collaborative for Early Childhood Development Act of 1989". The Council enthusiastically supports this critical piece of legislation and appreciates the leadership you have shown in the area of early childhood education.

The need for this legislation is enormous. Too many urban children enter our school doors in the first grade many steps behind their more advantaged peers. A recent study by our organization found that the average urban school system could provide pre-K services to only 23% of its kindergarten enrollments and that 70% of these programs operated only 2 or 3 hours a day. We estimated that a poor child in an inner-city is only half as likely to have access to preschool eduction as a child in wealthier circumstances.

Yet the positive effects of these programs are dramatic in terms of high school graduation, postsecondary education, literacy, employment, welfare dependence, criminal involvement, self-confidence and school success. Our own individual city evaluations of pre-K programs show enormous benefits for children. More than ever the federal government needs to invest early in the lives of our young people, and S. 123 promises to do that.

"Smart Start" has all the ingredients of success as far as the Council is concerned. It requires community-wide cooperation in the delivery of services to 3 and 4 year olds, it gives school authorities a central role in planning and service delivery, it sets minimum standards for current and new programs funded under the Act, it would upgrade existing efforts, it would work in tandem with and enhance the Head Start program, it targets funds on areas with greatest poverty, and it provides comprehensive and flexible programming on an all-day full year basis.

Again, the Council applauds your leadership in this area and enthusiastically endorses S. 123. Please be assured that the Council will be working vigorously to assist you in passing this landmark bill. If there is anything we can do to help you, please do not hesitate to call on us.

Sincerely,

MICHAEL CASSERLY,
Associate Director.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION FOR THE EDUCATION OF YOUNG CHILDREN,
Washington, DC, September 14, 1988.

Senator EDWARD KENNEDY,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR KENNEDY: Thank you for your recent correspondence concerning your plans for considering the testimony of myself of myself and others prior to the reintroduction of Smart Start in the next session of Congress. As I mentioned in my testimony in July, the NAEYC Governing Board had not yet reviewed your legislation for possible endorsement. I am pleased to inform you that our Board has now had that opportunity and had not yet reviewed your legislation for possible endorsement. I am pleased to inform you that our Board has now had that opportunity and has endorsed S. 2270. In making the endorsement, the Board praised the attention you have given to assuring high quality programs, particularly with regard to staff qualifications, recruitment and retention, group size and ratios.

The Governing Board also stress that this bill must not be viewed as an alternative to comprehensive legislation that addresses the needs for care and education of all young children (birth through age 8). We recognize that you have repeatedly stressed this point and commend your continued support of this principle. We also are committed to supporting your continued efforts to assure that Smart Start supplement and expand existing opportunities for children and not be viewed as a competitor to existing programs.

We look forward to continuing to work with you and your committee to assure good services for children and their families.

Sincerely,

BARBARA A. WILLER, Ph.D.,
NAEYC Public Policy Director.

JANUARY 24, 1989.

Hon. EDWARD M. KENNEDY,
Senate Committee on Labor and Human Resources, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN KENNEDY: The National Association of State Boards of Education

(NASBE) is a private, nonprofit organization representing over 600 state board members from 45 states, three territories and the District of Columbia. Our principal objectives are to strengthen state leadership in education policymaking; promote excellence in the education of all students; advocate equality of access to educational opportunity; and to assure responsible lay governance of public education.

On behalf of NASBE, I wish to express our strong support for S. 123, "Smart Start: The Community Collaborative for Early Childhood Development Act."

As we are all aware, dramatic increases in the number of women in the work force, single parent households, and teenage parents have created a critical need for comprehensive quality early childhood programs. Appropriately, Smart Start is designed to make high quality developmentally appropriate early childhood education programs widely available, especially for low-income four- and five-year-old preschoolers and the preschoolers of working parents to ensure the likelihood of their later school success.

NASBE believes that Smart Start represents a superior investment in America's future. By helping to ensure later academic success for "at-risk" young children, early childhood programs like Smart Start assist in increasing their future productivity and in lessening the likelihood of their dependence on other social programs. Significantly, by lowering the costs of special education, welfare and crime, and by increasing worker productivity, Smart Start would return $6 for every $1 spent.

Another key aspect of Smart Start is its effort to make more efficient use of federal, state and local early childhood resources by promoting collaboration and coordination at those levels. It is our view that one of the most important and well-designed aspects of Smart Start is that it offers exceptionally strong incentives for state and local collaboration in the delivery of services to preshool children. Smart Start recognizes that most communities participate in federally-funded Head Start, child-care and preschool programs for children with special needs, as well as state early childhood initiatives. Each of these programs has different standards, funding criteria and delivery mechanisms. Smart Start would provide badly needed forums for joint planning and coordination among these programs. Moreover, Smart Start would virtually force collaboration by ensuring enough new funding to make working together truly worthwhile for public schools, Head Start, child-care providers and the private sector.

In addition, Smart Start wisely provides funds to expand existing preschool programs to full-day schedules to meet the needs of working parents. Many state programs and Head Start centers have limited their services to part-day in order to serve as many children as possible with limited funds. However, with the combination of increasing trends toward working parents and recent welfare reform legislation mandating training and employment participation for recipients of public assistance, the majority of preschool children need a high quality developmental program that is available all day.

Smart Start also draws on research and program experience from the past two decades to outline high quality standards for new programs. We have learned from hard work and careful study of such initiatives as Project Head Start and the Perry Preschool Program that successful programs must involve parents, employ staff who are well-trained in a developmental approach to curriculum and teaching, and complement the educational program for children with health, nutrition and social services for students and their families. Smart Start would ensure that new programs include these essential high quality standards.

As state education policymakers, we are particularly pleased that rather than attempting to impose a new uniform federal program on states and localities, Smart Start would complement and enhance the active efforts of states that have begun new state early childhood develop programs. Specifically, Smart Start would complement state initiatives by allowing states to provide and expand many aspects of their own services under this legislation. Hence, by building on the efforts of states and many localities, Smart Start would improve the quality of services, allow more children to participate, expand part-day programs to meet the needs of working parents, and also promote the connections between preschool programs and kindergarten and the public schools.

NASBE commends you for your strong leadership in the crucial area of early childhood education, and we look forward to working with you in the months ahead on this innovative and well-designed initiative.

Sincerely,

GENE WILHOIT
Executive Director.

THE NATIONAL PTA,
OFFICE OF GOVERNMENTAL RELATIONS,
Washington, DC, January 23, 1989.

Hon. EDWARD KENNEDY,
Chair, Labor and Human Resources Committee, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR KENNEDY: On behalf of the National PTA, an organization of 6.5 million parents, teachers and citizens concerned with the health and welfare of all children, I would like to express our support for S. 123, Smart Start: The Community Collaborative for Early Childhood Development Act.

Over the years, child welfare experts have testified how education enrichment programs for four-year olds have positive scholastic advantages for the child as well as long-term societal benefits. By introducing Smart Start, the National PTA feels you have seized the bottom-line message of these advocates—that access to high quality early childhood development programs should be an option for all prekindergarten children and their parents.

Smart Start emphasizes that programs be developmentally appropriate for the child and not rigidly academic, yet determines early childhood education opportunities as a component of the learning continuum. S. 123 distinguishes enrichment programs for four-year olds as an educational function, while providing safeguards to protect young children from the risk of, what some researchers have dubbed, miseducation.

S. 123 recognizes that parents are not merely consumers, but managers and executor of their child's pre-school education program. Parents will play an active role in planning, administration and evaluation of these enrichment programs.

Smart Start also recognizes that quality education is tied to a host of health, nutrition and support services for children and their families. The well-being of the whole child is enhanced through S. 123, an opportunity that must be available to every four-year old in our nation.

Sincerely,

MILLIE WATERMAN,
Vice-President for Legislative Activity.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF ELEMENTARY SCHOOL PRINCIPALS,
Alexandria, VA, January 24, 1989.

Hon. Senator EDWARD F. KENNEDY,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR KENNEDY: The National Association of Elementary School Principals is again pleased to offer you its support for Smart Start. This measure offers much in establishing a federal commitment to a quality pre-kindergarten education program.

Smart Start contains many important provisions, important to children, parents, and practitioners. Establishing minimum standards, insisting on a developmentally appropriate curriculum, including a wrap-around full day, full year child care component, creating advisory groups at the state and local levels, and targeting those most in need—all these are essential in helping ensure the quality program we all desire.

The need for Smart Start is well-documented. NAESP has added to that documentation with the theme of its May issues of the "Principal" magazine being early childhood. The Association has recently joined with High/Scope Foundation in conducting a series of workshops on "How to Administer a Quality Early Childhood Program." A committee will have completed "Guidelines for Quality Early Childhood Programs" by Fall, 1989.

Smart Start is a bill whose time has certainly come. We look forward to working with you toward its enactment.

Sincerely,

EDWARD P. KELLER,
Deputy Executive Director.

KIDS PROJECT,
Washington, DC, January 25, 1989.

Hon. EDWARD M. KENNEDY,
Chairman, Committee on Labor and Human Resources, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR KENNEDY: Smart Start is smart! With its introduction, you have provided the answer to one of our nation's greatest challenges: how to prepare our four and five year old children to succeed in school, and at the same time, how to provide quality care for them. By combining early childhood education and child care, with health, nutrition and other social services in one program you have recognized that in order to make a difference, we must respond to many needs simultaneously. Until now, we have tended to treat children in an "atomized" way—a piece here, a piece there. Your program provides us with the opportunity to offer needed, comprehensive and continuous services for the "whole" child.

Smart Start promises to improve the chances of many poor young children to succeed in school and in their lives. By reserving a minimum of 50 percent of the places in any program and two-thirds of the funds for low-income children who will receive fully subsidized services, you have gone a long way towards reducing the incidence of school failure and adult dependency.

Requiring that the programs operate all day long and year 'round acknowledges the true needs of the many configurations of modern American families.

We have long recognized the importance of education. More recently, we have come to understand the critical need to provide early educational opportunities to children, and especially to those who are at highest risk of dropping out.

Smart Start is an excellent investment in our nation's future. As we approach the twenty-first century, finding the means to provide for the education and to strengthen the lives of our children and families should be among our nation's highest priorities.

I enthusiastically support your initiative, and I look forward to working with you as you continue to lead us in this critical area.

With best wishes,

WILLIAM W. HARRIS.

COUNCIL OF CHIEF
STATE SCHOOL OFFICERS,
Washington, DC, January 24, 1989.

Hon. EDWARD M. KENNEDY,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR KENNEDY: We applaud your initiative in introducing Smart Start and in directing the attention of the nation to the necessity for increased federal investment in early childhood education. We pledge our continued efforts to work with you and members of your staff on this legislation.

Our Council supports Smart Start as introduced in the beginning of the 101st Session of Congress, with the one condition that the provisions of governance and administration for the federal funds at the local and state levels be revised in Committee deliberations. We support your objective of creating a new federal funding stream to be combined with increased state and local funds to expand early childhood education. We believe your objective will be realized if the creation of this federal funding stream connects directly with the mainstream of local and state education funding. To assure accomplishment of that objective, we have placed a condition on our support with respect to the bill's provisions for governance of the program.

Smart Start should support services through both public and nonpublic providers. To attract new, continuing resources for this purpose, Smart Start must be administered through state and local education agencies. Only in this way can there be an efficiency of governmental administration; an assurance of a minimum of expenditure for administration; and the long-term growth of local and state resources for service to young children which has never been realized through the Head Start program.

We urge the further development of Smart Start be closely related to and supplemental to the reauthorization of Head Start. We urge the further development of Smart Start be closely related to and supplemental to the expansion of federal support for child care and related services (as in the ABC bill). Through such comprehensive consideration of the separate parts and a very specific focus of Smart Start as education legislation an important national advance will be made through Smart Start. Our Council is pleased to endorse the bill with the condition stated above.

Sincerely,

GORDON M. AMBACH.

NATIONAL ALLIANCE OF BUSINESS,

Hon. EDWARD KENNEDY,
Chairman, Committee on Labor and Human Resources, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR KENNEDY: Thank you for providing my office with a summary of your proposed Smart Start bill. We have studied the research and agree with you conclusions that an increased investment in early childhood education is critical for the future economic well-being of our nation and for the future well-being of the children who would be served.

We fully support the bill's emphasis on using federal funds to leverage state and local funds, its commitment of raising the standards of early childhood education while allowing some degree of state and local flexibility, and its priority on serving children from low-income families.

We also agree that it is important to ensure a racial, ethnic, and socio-economic mix of children within the programs, but we are concerned about subsidizing the programs for all families. While the summary you provided suggests that families my be charged on a sliding scale basis, there does not seem to be a requirement for such a charge. In this time of severe budget limitations, government programs should only fully subsidize those with severely limited financial means. Others should pay on a sliding scale basis, while families with sufficient economic means should pay the full costs.

We look forward to working with you as Smart Start is considered in the Senate.

Sincerely,

WILLIAM H. KOLBERG,
President.

CONTEL CORP.,

Hon. EDWARD M. KENNEDY,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR KENNEDY: Thank you for your letter of July 29, 1988 concerning the "Smart Start" legislation, S. 2270, that you have proposed.

I share with you the conviction that our children are our most valuable national resource and that we have an abiding obligation to ensure that this resource is nurtured and not wasted. In particular, I agree with you that the pre-school years are critical in a child's development and that there is a legitimate and important federal interest in assisting the states and our local communities to meet the need for high quality prekindgergarten child development programs. S. 2270 seems to me to be an excellent vehicle for recognizing and advancing these concerns.

As you move this legislation forward, I do hope you will continue to emphasize the importance of parental involvement in the preschool educational process. My sense is that this involvement will be crucial to the success of any program in this field.

I recognize that the authorization levels proposed in support of this legislation are substantially in keeping with the goals of the program. Congress, of course, has the responsibility to determine budget priorities and corresponding fiscal obligations. I would only observe that if S. 2270 is enacted, the program should be carefully monitored in its first years to ensure its effectiveness in meeting its obligations.

Again, I think that the developmental needs of our children would be well served by the "Smart Start" legislation you have introduced, and that the nation as a whole would also benefit from such a program. I appreciate your interest in writing and hope this is responsive to you request for comments.

Sincerely yours,

DONALD W. WEBER.

NORTON CO.,
Worchester, MA, August 25, 1988.

Hon. EDWARD M. KENNEDY,
U.S. Senate, 315 Russell Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR KENNEDY: Thank you for sharing with me your proposal for "Smart Start." I think it is an imaginative and much needed approach to solving one of this country's most pressing problems.

Finding an educated and motivated workforce in the 21st century is clearly going to be one of American industry's major problems. Even today, we are having difficulty in finding adequately educated and trained people for our plants and offices. Programs that prevent children from falling into the school drop out cycle and then becoming the lost souls of our society must be encouraged.

My one concern about this clearly imaginative plan is, of course, the potential cost and whether we can find a way to fund such a program with a federal budget already severely in deficit and without placing the burden on the business community with new taxes. But, because we at Norton Company believe that working together, business and government can find ways to solve important national problems, we'd certainly like to be of help on this.

Please don't hestitate to contact me if you feel we can help. And thanks again for sharing this very imaginative idea with me.

Sincerely yours,

JOHN M. NELSON.

Senator EDWARD M. KENNEDY,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

Re: S2270 (Smart Start) and your letter of 7/29/88.

DEAR SENATOR KENNEDY: I received your letter, and thoroughly endorse the following principles:

1. Enhanced educational effectiveness is the most significant long-term issue for our nation (because only an intelligent, involved citizenry can effectively handle all the other important long-term issues).

2. Education is very much influenced in a child's earliest years.

3. It is appropriate and important for the Federal government to financially assist states and localities, where needed, to offer a smarter, earlier start to each pre-kindergarten student.

So, I'm for the "Smart Start": I do urge you to try to assure that the good idea does not get burdened, diluted, or misdirected by a Federal bureaucracy or excessive regulatory process.

Best wishes,

JOSH S. WESTON.

WANG LABORATORIES, INC.,

Hon. EDWARD M. KENNEDY,
315 Russell Building,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR KENNEDY: Dr. Wang has asked me to review the summary of your proposed "Smart Start" legislation (S. 2230), and to thank you for sharing it with us.

We share your concern not only with the availability of year-round full workday child care services, but also with the importance of early childhood education to the development of our future workforce and the well-being of our population. Your proposed legislation appears to be a very thoughtful and constructive effort. By working with existing institutions and following the philosophy of supplanting rather than supplementing existing services, it should ensure that the quality as well as the number of educational services is increased. Combining high standards with a large degree of state and local autonomy should result in flexible, effective programs.

We appreciate your keeping us informed, and wish you every success.

Sincerely,

PAUL GUZZI.

AUGUST 9, 1988.

Hon. EDWARD M. KENNEDY,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR KENNEDY: Thank you for your recent letter relating to "Smart Start" (S. 2270). I sincerely share your concern about the future of America's work force. America's ability to compete in tomorrow's world will be greatly challenged if we fail to support appropriate programs to build for the future of our children.

It is clear that properly structured and focused programs to deliver high quality early education programs are an important investment for America's future. As with any investment, the effort must be directed to programs where the return will likely be most significant. "Smart Start" appears to focus support for early age child care to those who need it most. Nevertheless, a concern which I am sure you share is that we not create a segregated child care system, that is, one kind of care for income eligible families, another for everyone else.

I particularly would encourage the recognition of parents as the first teachers of children, particularly of the very young. Programs should be encouraged to enfranchise and support the parental participation outside of the four walls of any "Smart Start" program to foster the learning/developmental process. This would help assure that any seed that is planted by a "Smart Start" program would more likely fall on fertile ground in which it can build on America's rich family fabric.

I particularly support those parts of the proposal that provide for recognition of the local nature of the need and appropriate response in this area. State and local agencies and organizations should be given as much room as possible.

In closing, while we continue to have a great deal of concern over the many economic challenges that our country faces, we do believe that the opportunity which "Smart Start" seeks to address is worthy of our attention and effort. Please advise me if you believe that we can be of assistance in this matter.

Very truly yours,

W.R. HOWELL.

S. 124. A bill to amend title XVIII and XIX of the Social Security Act to provide that clinical social worker services are covered under part B of Medicare and are a mandatory benefit under Medicaid, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

COVERAGE OF CLINICAL SOCIAL WORKER SERVICES UNDER PART B OF MEDICARE

● Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, today, I am introducing legislation to amend the Medicare Act to provide for the direct reimbursement for the services of clinical social workers under part B of the law. This legislation would also modify the Medicaid statute in order to make the coverage of their services a mandatory benefit as physician services currently are.

Mr. President, our Nation's clinical social workers have a long and honorable tradition of providing the highest quality care to many Americans in need. Under the Department of Defense CHAMPUS program, their profession has been deemed truly autonomous, and I've heard nothing but the highest praise for their services.

Mr. President, I request unanimous consent that the text of my bill be included in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 124

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. COVERAGE OF CLINICAL SOCIAL WORKER SERVICES UNDER PART B OF MEDICARE.

(a) COVERAGE OF SERVICES.—Section 1861(s)(2) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395x(s)(2)) is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of subparagraph (J);

(2) by adding "and" at the end of subparagraph (K); and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(L) clinical social worker services;".

(b) DEFINITION.—Section 1861 of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395x) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"CLINICAL SOCIAL WORKER SERVICES

"(ff)(1) The term 'clinical social worker services' means services performed by a clinical social worker (as defined in paragraph (2)) which the clinical social worker is legally authorized to perform under State law (or the State regulatory mechanism provided by State law) of the State in which such services are performed, whether or not the clinical social worker is under the supervision of, or associated with, a physician or other health care provider.

"(2) The term 'clinical social worker' means an individual who—

"(A) possesses a master's or doctor's degree in social work,

"(B) after obtaining such degree has performed at least two years of supervised clinical social work, and

"(C) is licensed or certified as a clinical social worker in the State in which the clinical social worker services are performed, or in those States which do not provide for licensure or certification, is listed in a national register of social workers who, by education and experience, qualify as health care providers in clinical social work.".

(c) LIMIT ON PAYMENT OF BENEFITS.—Section 1833(c) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395l(c)) is amended by striking out all that follows "purposes of subsections (a) and (b)" and inserting in lieu thereof "no more than $1,000.".

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall be effective with respect to services performed on or after the first day of the first month which begins more than 60 days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 2. COVERAGE OF CLINICAL SOCIAL WORKER SERVICES AS A MANDATORY MEDICAID BENEFIT.

(a) COVERAGE OF SERVICES.—

(1) Section 1905(a) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1396d(a)) is amended—

(A) by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (20);

(B) by redesignating paragraph (21) as paragraph (22); and

(C) by inserting after paragraph (20) the following new paragraph:

"(21) clinical social worker services (as defined in section 1861(ff)(1)); and".

(b) CONFORMING CHANGES.—

(1) Section 1902(a) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1396a(a)) is amended—

(A) in paragraph (10)(A), by striking out "paragraphs (1) through (5) and (17)" and inserting in lieu thereof "paragraphs (1) through (5), (17), and (21)"; and

(B) in paragraph (10)(C)(iv), by striking out "paragraphs (1) through (5) and (17) of section 1905(a) or the care and services listed in any 7 of the paragraphs numbered (1) through (20)" and inserting in lieu thereof "paragraphs (1) through (5), (17), and (21) of section 1905(a) or the care and services listed in any 7 of the paragraphs numbered (1) through (21)".

(2) Section 1902(j) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1396a(j)) is amended by striking "(21)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(22)".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—

(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), the amendments made by this section shall be effective with respect to payments under title XIX of the Social Security Act for calendar quarters beginning more than 60 days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(2) In the case of a State plan for medical assistance under title XIX of the Social Security Act which the Secretary of Health and Human Services determines requires State legislation in order for the plan to meet the additional requirements imposed by the amendments made by this section, the State plan shall not be regarded as failing to comply with the requirements of such title solely on the basis of its failure to meet these additional requirements before the first day of the calendar quarter beginning after the close of the first regular session of the State legislature that begins after the date of the enactment of this Act.●

By Mr. INOUYE:

S. 125. A bill to provide direct payment for services of registered nurses as assistants at surgery; to the Committee on Finance.

PAYMENT TO NURSES ASSISTING IN SURGERY

● My. INOUYE. Mr. President, the bill that I am introducing would provide for the reimbursement of registered nurses [RN's] serving as assistants at surgery in a hospital. This would correct the current disparity between RN's and physician assistants [PA's], who also serve as assistants at surgery.

The Sixth Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act, Public Law 99-509, provided direct Medicare reimbursement to the employer of a PA who serves as an assistant at surgery in a hospital under physician supervision. The payment is set at a rate not to exceed 65 percent of what a physician serving as an assistant at surgery would have received. The PA reimbursement provision provides hospital and physician employers with the option to bill Medicare part B directly for the services of a PA who serves as an assistant at surgery. If a hospital or physician chooses to bill Medicare part B for PA services, then a reduction in the surgical payment by an equivalent amount would occur. However, if hospitals and physicians want to avoid the administrative burden of billing for the PA services under Medicare part B, they can simply choose not to do so.

Unfortunately, the PA reimbursement provision has subsequently created a financial incentive for hospitals and physicians to utilize the services of PA's, rather than operating room nurses, as assistants at surgery. This economic bias toward the utilization of PAs has jeopardized the employment of RN's as assistants at surgery. It is this bias that must be corrected.

There are numerous examples where nurses were denied employment as assistants at surgery because there is no Medicare payment for their services. Unless a provision similar to the PA reimbursement provision is enacted for RN's who serve as assistants at surgery, RN's will remain at a competitive disadvantage.

I was successful in having a similar provision included in the Senate Finance Committee's technical tax legislation in the 100th Congress, but it was unfortunately deleted in conference. The proposed RN reimbursement provision had recieved a budget-neutral CBO fiscal estimate, as did the PA provision.

This is not a substantial change in Federal reimbursement policy, but it is an important step for achieving a fair and equitable payment system for registered nurses.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of my bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill is ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 125

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

(a) SERVICES COVERED.—Section 1861(s)(2)(K)(i) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395x(s)(2)(K)(i) is amended by striking "as an assistant at surgery and which the physician assistant" and inserting "or by a physician assistant or registered nurse as an assistant at surgery and which the physician assistant or registered nurse."

(b) PAYMENT AMOUNT.—Section 1842(b)(12)(A) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395u(b)(12)(A) is amended by inserting "or registered nurse" after "physician assistant."

(c) PAYMENT OF EMPLOYER.—Section 1842(b)(6)(C) of such Act 42 U.S.C. 1395u(b)(6)(C) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395u(b)(6)(C) is amended by inserting "or registered nurse" after "physician assistant."

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to services furnished on or after date of enactment.

(e) The Secretary shall issue such rules and regulations which will ensure that this provision is implemented in a budget neutral manner.●

S. 126. A bill to amend title XVIII of the Social Security Act to provide that a nurse practitioner or clinical nurse specialist may, in collaboration with a physician, certify or recertify the need for certain services furnished by a nurse practitioner or clinical nurse specialist, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

CERTIFICATION AND RECERTIFICATION FOR CERTAIN SERVICES

● Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, today, I am introducing legislation following upon on congressional action last Congress in order to ensure that those needing our Nation's skilled nursing facilities and immediate care facilities will have the services of nurse practitioners/clinical nurse specialists as appropriate under the Medicare Act.

Mr. President, under the current law, our Nation's nurse practitioners and clinical nurse specialists are authorized to certify and recertify the "medical necessity" of care under the Medicaid Act for individuals residing in these two facilities. This proposal would expand that provision to include Medicare law as I had originally intended during the 100th Congress.

I would further point out that this expansion is one of the specific recommendations that was recently submitted to the Congress by the Secretary's Commission on Nursing.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of my bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill is ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 126

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. CERTIFICATION AND RECERTIFICATION OF THE NEED FOR CERTAIN SERVICES.

(a) MEDICARE CERTIFICATIONS AND RECERTIFICATIONS FOR CERTAIN SERVICES.—Section 1814(a) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395f(a)) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (2) by striking "(2) a physician" and inserting in lieu thereof "(2) a physician, or, in the case of services described in subparagraph (B), a physician or a nurse practitioner or clinical nurse specialist working in collaboration with a physician,", and

(2) in the matter following paragraph (7) by striking "a physician makes" and inserting in lieu thereof "a physician, nurse practitioner, or clinical nurse specialist (as the case may be) makes".

(b) SUPERVISION OF HEALTH CARE FURNISHED IN SKILLED NURSING FACILITIES.—Section 1861(j)(4) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395x(j)(4)) is amended—

(1) in subparagraph (A) by striking "a physician," and inserting in lieu thereof "a physician or a nurse practitioner or clinical nurse specialist working in collaboration with a physician,", and

(2) in subparagraph (B) by striking "a physician" and inserting in lieu thereof "a physician or a nurse practitioner or clinical nurse specialist working in collaboration with a physician,".

(c) DEFINITION.—

(1) Section 1861 of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395x) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"Nurse Practitioner and Clinical Nurse Specialist

"(ff)(1) An individual shall be treated as a nurse practitioner or clinical nurse specialist if the individual—

"(A) is licensed to practice professional nursing;

"(B) performs such services as such individual is legally authorized to perform (in the State in which the individual performs such services) in accordance with State law (or the State regulatory mechanism provided by State law); and

"(C)(i) holds a masters degree in nursing and is certified or eligible for certification by a national professional nursing organization,

"(ii) holds a masters degree in a related field and is certified by a national professional organization, or

"(iii) has completed a nurse practitioner continuing education program and is certified by a national professional nursing organization.

"(2) A nurse practitioner or clinical nurse specialist works in collaboration with a physician where the nurse and physician act pursuant to an agreement that allocates responsibility for decisions and actions, but allows each professional to retain responsibility for their respective actions and engage in such actions independently.".

(2) Section 1861(aa) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395x(aa)) is amended in paragraph (3)—

(A) by striking "and the term 'nurse practitioner'" and "or nurse practitioner", and

(B) by striking "mean" and inserting in lieu thereof "means".

(3) Section 1861(s)(2)(H) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395x(s)(2)(H)) is amended in clause (i) by striking "physician assistant or by a nurse practitioner (as defined in subsection (aa)(3))" and inserting in lieu thereof "physician assistant (as defined in subsection (aa)(3)) or by a nurse practitioner".

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to items and services furnished on or after the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 2. COVERAGE OF CERTAIN ITEMS AND SERVICES FURNISHED BY A NURSE PRACTITIONER OR CLINICAL NURSE SPECIALIST.

(a) PAYMENT OF BENEFITS.—Section 1833(a)(2) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395l(a)(2)) is amended—

(1) in subparagraph (B) by striking "(C) or (D)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(C), (D), or (E)",

(2) in subparagraph (C) by striking "and",

(3) in subparagraph (D) by inserting "and" after "tests;", and

(4) by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(E) with respect to items and services described in section 1861(s)(2)(L), the amount paid shall be equal to 100 percent of the amount determined as the reasonable charge for such items and services under section 1842(b)(10).".

(b) CONTRACTS WITH CARRIERS.—Section 1842(b) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395u(b)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(13) In providing payment for the items and services described in section 1861(s)(2)(L), each carrier shall require that payment be made in the manner described in paragraph (3)(B)(ii), except that the reasonable charge shall be determined as 75 percent of the prevailing charge paid for similar items and services in the same locality.".

(c) DEFINITION.—Section 1861(s)(2) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395x(s)(2)) is amended—

(1) by striking "and" at the end of subparagraph (J),

(2) by adding "and" at the end of subparagraph (K), and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(L) services furnished by a nurse practitioner or clinical nurse specialist in a skilled nursing facility and services and supplies furnished as an incident to such services;".

(d) CONFORMING CHANGE.—Section 1861(h) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395x(h)) is amended by inserting ", and excluding any item or service described in subsection (s)(2)(L)" before the period.

(e) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to items and services furnished on or after the date of enactment of this Act.●

ARMED SERVICE OFFICERS SPECIAL PAY

● Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I am introducing legislation today to modify title 37 of the U.S. Code in order to authorize special pay incentives for those psychologists within the Department of Defense who have obtained their board certifications.

Mr. President, during the last session of Congress, we enacted legislation to make such pay bonuses available to those psychologists who are currently serving within the U.S. Public Health regular corps and I feel that the time has come to expand this recognition to military psychologists. Similar legislation was passed several years ago by the U.S. Senate but deleted in conference. Hopefully, this session we will be able to have it enacted into public law, and thus, treat military psychologists in the same manner that their physician colleagues are currently treated. I request unanimous consent that the text of my bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SECTION 1. ARMED SERVICE OFFICERS SPECIAL PAY.

(a) SPECIAL PAY, PSYCHOLOGISTS—(1) Section 302c(a) of title 37, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"(a) An officer who—

"(1) is an officer in the Regular or Reserve Corps of the Public Health Service, an officer in the Army Medical Department, an officer in the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery of the Navy, or an officer of the Air Force;

"(2) is designated as a psychologist; and

"(3) has been awarded a diploma as a Diplomat in Psychology by the American Board of Professional Psychology, is entitled to special pay, as provided in subsection (b).".

(2) The section heading of such section is amended by striking out "in the Public Health Service Corps".

MILITARY APPOINTMENT AUTHORIZATIONS

● Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I am introducing legislation today to authorize the appointment for wide-range health care professionals the various positions within the Department of Defense that are of a policy nature. Specifically, my legislation would provide that the positions of the three Surgeon Generals could be filled by qualified individuals from a range of health professions including medicine, dentistry, osteopathy, nursing, and psychology, for example.

INCENTIVE SPECIAL PAY FOR NURSES

● Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I am introducing legislation today to authorize the payment of incentive special pay for military nurses in those specialities, which the Secretary deems to be in critical shortage.

Last year during our Appropriations Committee deliberations on the fiscal year 1989 appropriations bill for the Department of Defense, we included $2 million in order to provide military nurse anesthetists with the same type of pay bonus which their colleagues within the Veterans' Administration are currently receiving. At that time, it also came to our attention that a physician providing essentially the same service receives approximately $46,000 annually in pay bonuses, whereas nursing professionals receive absolutely nothing.

The legislation, which I am introducing today, would have the effect upon enactment of releasing the $2 million which we have already appropriated for military nurse anesthetists and provide the Department with the flexibility to target other critical specialty shortage areas. I ask unanimous consent that the text of my bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill is ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SECTION 1. INCENTIVE SPECIAL PAY FOR NURSES

(a) IN GENERAL.—(1) Chapter 5 of title 37, United States Code, is amended by inserting after section 302c the following:

"§ 302d. Incentive special pay: nurses

"(a)(1) Subject to paragraph (2) of this subsection and subsection (b) of this section, an officer who—

"(A) is an officer of the Nurses Corps of the Army or the Navy or an officer of the Air Force designated as a nurse; and

"(B) is on active duty under a call or order to active duty for a period of not less than one year, may be paid incentive special pay, in an amount determined by the Secretary concerned, for any twelve-month period.

"(2) An officer is not eligible for incentive special pay under paragraph (1) of this subsection unless the Secretary concerned has determined that such officer is qualified as a nurse.

"(b)(1) An officer may not be paid incentive special pay under subsection (a) of this section for any twelve-month period unless the officer first executes a written agreement under which the officer agrees to remain on active duty for a period of not less than one year beginning on the date the officer accepts the award of such special pay.

"(2) Under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Defense under section 303a(a) of this title, the Secretary of the military department concerned may terminate at any time an officer's entitlement to the incentive special pay authorized by subsection (a) of this section. If such entitlement is terminated, the officer concerned is entitled to be paid such incentive special pay only for the part of the period of active duty that he served, and he may be required to refund any amount in excess of that entitlement.

"(c) Special pay payable to an officer under subsection (a) of this section shall be paid annually at the beginning of the twelve-month period for which the officer is entitled to such payment.

"(d) An officer who voluntarily terminates service on active duty before the end of the period for which a payment was made to such officer under subsection (a) of this section shall refund to the United States an amount which bears the same ratio to the amount paid to such officer as the unserved part of such period bears to the total period for which the payment was made.

"(e) A discharge in bankruptcy under title 11 that is entered less than 5 years after the termination of an agreement under this section does not discharge the person signing such agreement from a debt arising under such agreement or under subsection (b)(2) or (d) of this section.".

(2) The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 302c the following:

"302d. Incentive special pay: nurses.".

S. 131. A bill to amend title 10, United States Code, to exclude nurse officers from the computation of authorized grade strength; to the Committee on Armed Services.

EXCLUSION OF NURSE OFFICERS FROM CERTAIN COMPUTATIONS

● Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation on behalf of our Nation's military nurse officers.

This bill would allow for the restructuring of the nurse officer communities to facilitate the recruitment and retention of highly skilled nurses, and meet the needs of the Department of Defense. This legislation will permit the nurse officer grade structure to be shaped to generate a variable career path with reasonable upward mobility and allow military medicine to recruit and retain the nurses it needs to function effectively.

Mr. President, the nationwide shortage of nurses places the Department of Defense in the critical position of proactively addressing the increased competition for nurses with specialized skills. Accordingly, I feel that it is only appropriate to allow the Department of Defense a competitive posture in recruiting critical nurse specialists.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of my bill be printed in the RECORD.

S. 132. A bill to reform the tort law doctrine of joint and several liability; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

JOINT AND SEVERAL LIABILITY REFORM ACT OF 1989

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, I am pleased to introduce the Joint and Several Liability Reform Act of 1989. The doctrine of joint and several liability, as currently applied, is in immediate need of reform.

Originally, the doctrine was applied when two or more defendants had conspired together in a manner that resulted in an injury to the plaintiff. They were, in effect, equally at fault and equally to blame for the harm inflicted. Later, however, the doctrine was expanded to hold responsible all parties involved in causing the harm, regardless of whether they acted in concert or independently of each other. Today the doctrine has been taken to its extreme, so that a party who is determined only 1 percent at fault can be and often is held liable for 100 percent of the damage award. The parties causing the harm often get off scot-free. We no longer punish the wrongdoers. We punish parties for having the deepest pockets.

This illogical system not only affects the pockets of wealthy corporations. It also affects the pockets of you and me. Let me explain some of the real problems caused by this doctrine:

First, local governments are becoming the most popular targets for plaintiffs. The average citizen ends up paying the claim through increased taxes or loss of service. Similarly, when a business is hit, the consumer pays through higher product prices.

Second, the current system discourages safety. Not only does it allow the real culprits to escape liability, it encourages them to act irresponsibly. Meanwhile, a small business that is responsible enough to carry insurance is penalized.

Third, the doctrine is a leading cause of skyrocketing insurance premiums. Companies and local governments with even the most glowing safety records must pay insurance rates as though they were high-risk customers, because they have to insure against not only their own actions, but the actions of everyone with whom they come in contact or who happen to cross their border.

Fourth, those who the ordinary person would consider free of fault are being sued for the sole reason that they have money or have access to money. This is unfair by any measure.

My legislation simply requires parties to pay in proportion to their degree of fault. Some will argue that this approach can leave the plaintiff unprotected when the party most at fault has no means to pay and does not carry adequate insurance. This may happen in some cases. But to use the present doctrine of joint and several liability in an attempt to compensate the plaintiff makes little more sense than to send the witness of a robbery to jail because we cannot find the robber.

Mr. President, this doctrine has long outlived its usefulness and desirability. It makes no sense. It penalizes governments and businesses without any regard to their degree of fault. Let's reform the doctrine of joint and several liability and restore some justice to the system.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 132

SEVERABLE LIABILITY FOR DAMAGES

SEC. 2. (a)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection, in any civil action alleging injury to a person, damage to property, or death of a person, the liability of each defendant for damages shall be several only and shall not be joint. Each defendant shall be liable only for the amount of damages allocated to such defendant in direct proportion to such defendant's percentage of responsibility as determined under subsection (b) of this section. A separate judgment shall be rendered against such defendant for that amount.

(2) In any case where the parties are found to have engaged in concerted action, the liability of each defendant shall be joint and several.

(b) For purposes of this section, the trier of fact shall determine the proportion of responsibility of each party for the claimant's harm.

(c)(1) If a claimant has released any defendant or potential defendant from liability for the claimant's harm, or if a defendant is unable (despite exercising all practicable means) to join any other person as a defendant in such action the trier of fact shall, in determining the proportion of responsibility under subsection (b) of this section, consider the liability of any person not a party to the action if the defendant is able to prove that any such person caused the claimant's harm.

(2) If a claimant has released any defendant or potential defendant from liability for the claimant's harm, the total amount of responsibility for the claimant's harm shall be reduced by the proportion of responsibility of any such released defendant or potential defendant.

(d) As used in this section, the term "concerted action" means any action consciously and intentionally taken by two or more defendants which resulted in the harm alleged in such civil action. Such term does not mean consciously parallel action.

S. 133. A bill to amend the Higher Education Act, the Department of Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 1989, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

STUDENT FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE AMENDMENTS ACT OF 1989

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, today I am introducing the Student Financial Assistance Amendments Act of 1989 to make important adjustments in our student financial aid programs. Since coming to Congress, I have been a strong supporter of student financial aid. Unfortuantely, I believe students in need of financial assistance are being denied student aid because of our present financial aid formulas.

Specifically, the Student Financial Assistance Amendments Act of 1989 would:

First, change the student contribution rate from 70 to 50 percent;

Second, reinstate administrative discretionary authority to financial aid officers who administer the Pell Grant Program; and Third, set up guidelines for the reallocation of discretionary supplemental educational opportunity grant funds.

Over the last year, I received hundreds of letters from concerned South Dakotans who believe it is unfair to require dependent students to contribute seventy percent of their earnings toward their college education. I agree. One provision of the Student Financial Assistance Amendments Act would lower the required contribution rate to 50 percent.

Students should contribute to their education. However the 70-percent requirement is unrealistic. This requirement is a disincentive for students to work.

Another provision would restore administrative discretionary authority to financial aid officers who administer the Pell Grant Program at colleges and universities. Financial aid officers care deeply about their students and realize that unless they have some flexibility in assessing students' financial situations, financially deserving students may not be able to attend college. Cases are often encountered where a student's financial condition may look good on paper, when in reality he or she truly needs grant assistance. This provision would give college financial aid officers the necessary discretion to adjust grant awards to clearly reflect a student's financial need.

The last provision is identical to my amendment on excess supplemental educational opportunity grants [SEOG] to the Stafford Student Loan Default Prevention and Management Act of 1988. Under this provision, extra grants could be made available to students attending institutions in areas stricken by a natural disaster. The SEOG Program provides institutions a set amount of funds for student grants. A small amount of SEOG funds are reallocated at the Secretary's discretion. This provision would provide the Secretary with a guideline for the reallocation of discretionary funds. Specifically, the Secretary would be required to give special consideration to institutions whose students were financially harmed by a natural disaster, such as last year's drought. With limited funds available for student financial aid, it is imperative that any extra funds go to those most in need.

No student of ability who wants to pursue an education should be denied that opportunity because of inadequate personal financial resources. As we have heard many times, the future of our country rests with our young people. We need their intellectual talents and technical skills to compete in this increasingly competitive and technologically sophisticated world.

Mr. President, these three provisions of the bill I am now introducing were included in the Stafford Student Loan Default Prevention and Management Act which passed the Senate on September 15, 1988. Unfortunately, no action was taken in the House on the Stafford Act prior to the adjournment of the 100th Congress. I hope this body will act swiftly on these important provisions and continue to make adjustments to student financial aid formulas whenever necessary.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 133

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Student Financial Assistance Amendments Act of 1989".

SECTION 1. STUDENT CONTRIBUTION RATE.

Section 475(g)(1)(C) of title IV of the Higher Education Act of 1965 is amended by striking out "70 percent" and inserting in lieu thereof "not less than 50 percent".

SEC. 2. DISCRETION OF STUDENT FINANCIAL AID ADMINISTRATORS.

The second proviso under the heading "Student Financial Assistance" in title III of the Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education, and Related Agencies Appropriation Act, 1989, is repealed.

SEC. 3. REALLOCATION OF RETURNED SEOG FUNDS TO INSTITUTIONS LOCATED IN NATURAL DISASTERS.

Section 413D(e) of the Higher Education Act of 1965 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "In making such reallocation, the Secretary shall give special consideration to institutions located in areas which are designated to receive assistance because of the occurrence of a major natural disaster.".

By Mr. GLENN:

S. 134. A bill to establish the Congressional Scholarships for Science, Mathematics, and Engineering Act, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

CONGRESSIONAL SCHOLARSHIPS FOR SCIENCE, MATHEMATICS, AND ENGINEERING ACT

● Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, last session, I introduced S. 2916, a bill whose purpose was to raise the prestige and standing of the sciences and engineering in the eyes of our Nation's high school students. I rise today to introduce the Congressional Scholarships for Science, Mathematics, and Engineering Act of 1989 in the 101st Congress.

This bill will enable the Congress of the United States to send a message to the Nation's youth that America's scientists and engineers are critical to our economic well-being and quality of life. It will be a recognition of both the Nation's debt to the scientific community as well as the Nation's need for a vibrant, expanding scientific community.

To be sure, this bill is partly a symbolic act, but one that I believe will encourage more high school students to pursue careers in science, mathematics, and engineering. These future scientists will play a vital part in determining whether the American economy will be a winner or loser in an increasingly technology-driven global economy. Looking at it on a more practical level, whether we have enough good jobs for all of our citizens in the years ahead will depend largely on the scientific minds working in America's university labs, manufacturing plants, and corporate research and development centers.

This proposal, first advanced last year by Congressman DOUG WALGREN, is remarkably simple. The bill would direct the National Science Foundation to award college scholarships of up to $5,000 to one female and one male high school senior from each congressional district to study science, mathematics, and engineering at the college of their choice. Modeled in part on congressional appointments to our military academies, these 4-year scholarships represent the Federal Government's parallel interest in assuring that the Nation's science base is well staffed.

Americans still find it difficult to accept that the United States competes in a global economy. Our unchallenged leadership position after the Second World War and our vast natural resources allowed us the luxury of easily won gains in our standard of living. For many American businesses, postwar prosperity was achieved without much challenge from our trading partners, many of which were rebuilding their war-damaged economies. Today, however, imports and exports represent twice as large a portion of our gross national product as they did two decades ago. More than 70 percent of the goods manufactured right here in the United States now compete with merchandise made somewhere overseas. Moreover, our trade deficits are another sorry reminder that there is no longer a truly domestic U.S. economy.

Perhaps most important to America's future economic prosperity is technology. Consider the conclusion of the President's Commission on Industrial Competitiveness—which is often called the Young Commission:

> Technology propels our economy forward. . . . Innovation has created whole new industries and the renewal of existing ones. State-of-the-art products have commanded premium prices in world markets, and technological advances have spurred productivity gains. Thus America owes much of its standard of living to U.S. preeminence in technology.

There exists, however, on the horizon a demographic development that poses a direct threat to American preeminence in technology, and necessarily, a threat to our economic prosperity. This country simply does not produce enough scientists, mathematicians, and engineers.

Of the 4 million high school seniors who graduated in 1979, only 15 percent of them were considering a career in the natural sciences or engineering. By the time this senior class graduated from college 4 years later, only 1.5 percent of them earned bachelor degrees in the natural sciences, Worse yet, only 9,700 members of the high school class of 1979 earned Ph.D.'s, a meager 0.2 percent of the class.

The figures for engineering are no better. The United States and Japan, the two greatest trading nations in the world, both produce about 70,000 engineers every year. But Japan's labor force is half the size of ours. And the Soviet Union turns out more than 300,000 engineers a year.

The scholarships will be awarded on the basis of merit and through a competitive selection process administered by a committee of local educators, scientists, mathematicians, and engineers. The National Science Foundation would be entirely responsible for its implementation.

The initial cost of the program would be about $5.5 million, growing to about $18 million when the program is fully operational. The bill authorizes 870 4-year scholarships worth as much as $5,000 per year. Given the importance of technology to our future prosperity, the cost of this program is well within our means.

It is my intent that these scholarships not collect dust on some guidance counselor's book shelf. I envision the National Science Foundation, in cooperation with the schools, making a strong effort to bring this scholarship to the attention of the Nation's schoolchildren, using, for example, slick marketing devices such as posters and public service radio and television announcements. The announcement of winners will come with great fanfare and publicity, designed to heighten the community's awareness of the awards themselves and the purpose behind them: The scholars will be role models in the same way that service academy appointees are.

This bill will not close the scientist gap, but it is a good start. These awards will have a special aura for three reasons: First, they will have been created and awarded by the U.S. Congress; second, they will be given to our Nation's very best students, and finally, they would be the only direct Federal support for science education at the undergraduate education in existence. And this aura will elevate the prestige of a science or engineering career as well as the esteem of those students who are considering such a career path.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a copy of this legislation be printed in the RECORD following my remarks.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 134

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Congressional Scholarships for Science, Mathematics, and Engineering Act".

SEC. 2. PURPOSES.

It is the purpose of this Act—

(1) to strengthen the United States science, mathematics, and engineering base by offering opportunities to pursue postsecondary education in science, mathematics, and engineering;

(2) to encourage role models in scientific, mathematics, and engineering fields for young people; and

(3) to strengthen the United States scientific, mathematics, and engineering potential by encouraging equal participation of women with men in scientific, mathematics, and engineering fields.

SEC. 3. CONGRESSIONAL SCHOLARSHIPS FOR SCIENCE, MATHEMATICS, AND ENGINEERING.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF PROGRAM.—The Director of the National Science Foundation (hereafter in this Act referred to as the "Director") shall establish and implement a competitive, merit-based program for selecting one male and one female from each congressional district of the United States each year to receive a four-year Congressional Scholarship for Science, Mathematics, and Engineering.

(b) NOTIFICATION OF SECONDARY SCHOOLS.—The Director shall notify all public and private secondary schools and all institutions of higher education in the United States annually of the availability of scholarships under this Act.

(c) NOMINATING COMMITTEES.—The Director shall establish for each congressional district, or, to the extent a contiguous group of congressional districts reflects a geographic region similar in demographics, geography, and economic status and activity, for each such group of congressional districts, a broad-based committee of educators, scientists, mathematicians, and engineers who shall submit to the Director nominations of one male and one female from each congressional district for scholarships under this Act. The membership of each committee shall reflect geographic distribution within its area.

(d) ELIGIBILITY.—Only individuals who—

(1)(A) are citizens or nationals of the United States, or

(B) are aliens lawfully admitted to the United States for permanent residence; and

(2) have either applied or been accepted for admission to an institution of higher education in the United States that is accredited by a nationally recognized accrediting Agency or association, shall be eligible for scholarships under this Act.

(e) CRITERIA FOR NOMINATION AND SELECTION.—Individuals shall be nominated and selected for scholarships under this Act on the basis of potential to successfully complete a postsecondary program in science, mathematics, or engineering, and on the basis of motivation to pursue a career in science, mathematics, or engineering. The Director shall determine the criteria for measuring the potential and motivation of nominees.

(f) NATURE AND AMOUNT OF SCHOLARSHIPS.—Scholarships awarded under this Act may be used only for tuition, fees, and room and board expenses. Such scholarships shall be limited to a maximum of $5,000 per year, except as necessary to accommodate a recipient completing a four-year academic program in less than four years.

(g) MAINTAINING ELIGIBILITY.—(1) In order to maintain eligibility to receive funds pursuant to a scholarship awarded under this Act, a student must—

(A) be enrolled at an institution of higher education in the United States that is currently accredited by a nationally recognized accrediting agency or association;

(B) major in any field of science, mathematics, or engineering;

(C) maintain academic performance in good standing, as determined by such institution; and

(D) except as provided in paragraph (2), carry a full-time academic work load, as determined by the institution in which the student is enrolled under standards applicable to all students enrolled in that student's program.

(2) The Director shall make exceptions to the requirement under paragraph (1)(D) in the case of—

(A) active duty as a member of the armed services;

(B) disability certified by a qualified physician; or

(C) exceptional personal circumstances or emergencies, as determined by the Director.

(h) MONITORING IMPLEMENTATION AND COMPLIANCE.—The Director shall monitor the implementation of and compliance of the nominating committees with this Act.

SEC. 4. NONDISCRIMINATION.

(a) SOLICITATION, NOMINATION, AND SELECTION OF STUDENTS.—The Director shall ensure that the solicitation, nomination, and selection of students for the program established by this Act shall be carried out without discrimination on the basis of race, age, handicap, religion, ethnic background, economic status, marital status, parental status, or sexual preference.

(b) SELECTION OF NOMINATING COMMITTEES.—The Director shall ensure that the selection of nominating committees under section 3(a) shall be carried out without discrimination on the basis of race, age, handicap, religion, ethnic background, economic status, sex, marital status, parental status, or sexual preference.

SEC. 5. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

There are authorized to be appropriated to the National Science Foundation for the purpose of carrying out this Act $5,500,000 for the fiscal year 1989, and such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 1990, 1991, and 1992.●

By Mr. GLENN (for himself, Mr. DECONCINI, Mr. PRYOR, and Mr. STEVENS):

S. 135. A bill to amend title 5, United States Code, to restore to Federal civilian employees their right to participate voluntarily, as private citizens, in the political processes of the Nation, to protected such employees from improper political processes of the Nation, to protect such employees from improper political solicitations, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

HATCH ACT REFORM AMENDMENTS OF 1989

● Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, the legislation I am introducing today would amend the Hatch Act—the 1939 statute that prohibits most Federal civilian and postal employees from being politically active. The bill is identical to legislation, H.R. 3400, reported out of the Governmental Affairs Committee last year.

The committee held 2 days of hearings on the Hatch Act in the 100th Congress. At those hearings it became evident that under current law, Federal and postal workers must comply with some 3,000 rulings about what kinds of political activity are permitted and what kinds are illegal.

This set of rulings has become confusing and illogical over the years. For example:

Presently, a Federal or postal worker may wear a campaign button on the job. He or she may write a $1,000 check to a candidate. But, that same employee cannot carry a poster at a political rally or stuff envelopes for a candidate at night.

Presently, a Federal worker can put a political poster on the family car if it's no larger than 15 by 30 inches. However, if the employee wishes to post it in the yard, it can be no larger then 14 by 22 inches.

One of my other favorite rulings was the one about letters to the editors on partisan political issues. As a Federal employee: You cannot write one letter to five newspapers or five to one newspaper. Many people were chuckling last year when the committee's hearings explored just how nonsensical some of the current Hatch Act regulations are. Yet, this is not a humorous matter. The right of American citizens in good standing to participate in our politicial system is a very serious and important constitutional right—a right that if restricted at all should be restricted only to the extent necessary to prevent more profound violations from occurring.

When the Hatch Act was enacted into law almost 50 years ago, civil service jobs were patronage jobs. Political cronyism and coercion were the grease that kept the bureaucratic machine running. Despite its curtailment of first amendment rights, the Hatch Act passed quickly, without congressional hearings, following disclosure that appointees in the Public Works Administration had coerced relief workers into making political contributions in return for their jobs. It was enacted "to protect" Federal workers.

Today, we have a dramatically different kind of system—a merit system—a professional civil service whose needs and requirements have drastically changed. I believe a compelling case can be made for revamping restrictions on the political liberties of this work force. At the same time, I am acutely aware of public concern that too dramatic a change in the Hatch Act might serve to politicize the civil service system and expose Federal workers to coercion. I recognize that these worries are legitimate and real.

What we face in proposing reform of the Hatch Act is a balancing act. We must balance the need to protect the integrity of the civil service with our duty to protect the constitutional right of all citizens to participate in the political process.

The legislation, which I am introducing today is the same proposal that Governmental Affairs Committee members developed last year on a bipartisan basis. It is a modest proposal. It would eliminate many of the complicated and restrictive rulings presently governing the political actions of Federal civilian and postal employees.

Under this bill, Federal workers would enjoy more freedoms "after hours" by being allowed to participate voluntarily, as private citizens, in the political processes of the country. A Federal worker could wave a poster at a political rally, participate in a voter registration drive or host a meet-the-candidate coffee hour in his or her home. These are basic rights that other Americans take for granted.

Some restrictions on off-the-job activity provided for in current law would remain. First, current law prohibitions against Federal and postal employees soliciting campaign contributions from the general public would remain. Second, this bill would keep current law prohibitions against Federal workers running for partisan political office. However, the bill would allow Federal employees to run for office within party organizations or affiliated groups. For example, an employee would be free to participate in a Presidential caucus meeting or a convention delegate.

All political activity on the job, including the wearing of political buttons which is presently allowed, would be prohibited under this legislation. The bill would also keep all current law prohibitions and penalties against the use of one's official position to influence other employees.

It is my hope that the Senate will act on this reform legislation in the 101st Congress. I would like to extend a special word of credit to two of my colleagues on the Governmental Affairs Committee for their contributions to the development of this bill. Senator PRYOR—chairman of the Subcommittee on Federal Services, Post Office, and Civil Service—and Senator STEVENS—Ranking minority member of that subcommittee—both worked many hours on the proposal.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a section-by-section analysis of the legislation and a copy of the bill be printed in the RECORD following my remarks.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 135

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Hatch Act Reform Amendments of 1989".

SEC. 2. POLITICAL ACTIVITIES.

(a) Subchapter III of chapter 73 of title 5, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"SUBCHAPTER III—POLITICAL ACTIVITIES

"§ 7321. Political participation

"It is the policy of the Congress that employees should be encouraged to exercise fully, freely, and without fear of penalty or reprisal, and to the extent not expressly prohibited by law, their right to participate or to refrain from participating in the political processes of the Nation.

"§ 7322. Definitions

"For the purpose of this subchapter—

"(1) 'employee' means any individual, other than the President and the Vice President, employed or holding office in—

"(A) an Executive agency other than the General Accounting Office; or

"(B) a position within the competitive service which is not in an Executive agency; but does not include a member of the uniformed services;

"(2) 'partisan political office' means any office for which any candidate is nominated or elected as representing a party any of whose candidates for Presidential elector received votes in the last preceding election at which Presidential electors were selected, but shall exclude any office or position within a political party or affiliated organization; and

"(3) 'political contribution'—

"(A) means any gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money or anything of value, made for any political purpose;

"(B) includes any contract, promise, or agreement, express or implied, whether or not legally enforceable, to make a contribution for any political purpose;

"(C) includes any payment by any person, other than a candidate or a political party or affiliated organization, of compensation for the personal services of another person which are rendered to any candidate or political party or affiliated organization without charge for any political purpose; and

"(D) includes the provision of personal services for any political purpose.

"§ 7323. Political activity authorized; prohibitions

"An employee may take an active part in political management or in political campaigns, except an employee may not—

"(1) use his official authority or influence for the purpose of interferring with or affecting the result of an election;

"(2) knowingly solicit, accept, or receive a political contribution from any person, unless such person is—

"(A) a member of the same Federal employee organization; and

"(B) the solicitation is for a contribution to the multicandidate political committee (as defined under section 315(a)(4) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 441a(a)(4))) of such Federal employee organization; or

"(3) run for the nomination or as a candidate for election to a partisan political office.

"§ 7324. Political activities on duty; prohibition

"(a) An employee may not engage in political activity—

"(1) while the employee is on duty;

"(2) in any room or building occupied in the discharge of official duties by an individual employed or holding office in the Government of the United States or any agency or instrumentality thereof;

"(3) while wearing a uniform or official insignia identifying the office or position of the employee; or

"(4) using any vehicle owned or leased by the Government of the United States or any agency or instrumentality thereof.

"(b)(1) An employee described in paragraph (2) of this subsection may engage in political activity otherwise prohibited by subsection (a) if the costs associated with that political activity are not paid for by money derived from the Treasury of the United States.

"(2) Paragraph (1) applies to an employee—

"(A) the duties and responsibilities of whose position continue outside normal duty hours and while away from the normal duty post; and

"(B) who is—

"(i) an employee paid from an appropriation for the Executive Office of the President; or

"(ii) an employee appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, whose position is located within the United States, who determines policies to be pursued by the United States in relations with foreign powers or in the nationwide administration of Federal laws.".

(b) TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—(1) Section 3302(2) of title 5, United States Code, is amended by striking out "7203, 7321, and 7322" and inserting in lieu thereof "and 7203".

(2) The table of sections for subchapter III of chapter 73 of title 5, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"SUBCHAPTER III—POLITICAL ACTIVITIES

"7321. Political participation.
"7322. Definitions.
"7323. Political activity authorized; prohibitions.
"7324. Political activities on duty; prohibition.".

SEC. 3. AMENDMENTS TO TITLE 18.

(a) Section 602 of title 18, United States Code, relating to solicitation of political contributions, is amended—

(1) by inserting "(a)" before "It";

(2) in paragraph (4) by striking out all that follows "Treasury of the United States" and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon and "to knowingly solicit any contribution within the meaning of section 301(8) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 from any other such officer, employee, or person. Any person who violates this section shall be fined under this title or imprisoned not more than 3 years, or both."; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(b) The prohibition in subsection (a) shall not apply to any activity of an employee (as defined in section 7322(1) of title 5) or any individual employed in or under the United States Postal Service or the Postal Rate Commission, unless that activity is prohibited by section 7323 or 7324 of such title.".

(b) Section 603 of title 18, United States Code, relating to making political contributions, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(c) The prohibition in subsection (a) shall not apply to any activity of an employee (as defined in section 7322(1) of title 5) or any individual employed in or under the United States Postal Service or the Postal Rate Commission, unless that activity is prohibited by section 7323 or 7324 of such title.".

SEC. 4. AMENDMENTS TO THE VOTING RIGHTS ACT OF 1965.

Section 6 of the Voting Rights Act of 1965 (42 U.S.C. 1973d) is amended by striking out "the provisions of section 9 of the Act of August 2, 1939, as amended (5 U.S.C. 118i), prohibiting partisan political activity" and by inserting in lieu thereof "the provisions of subchapter III of chapter 73 of title 5, United States Code, relating to political activities".

SEC. 5. AMENDMENTS RELATING TO APPLICATION OF CHAPTER 15 OF TITLE 5, UNITED STATES CODE.

(a) Section 1501(1) of title 5, United States Code, is amended by inserting ", the District of Columbia," after "State".

(b) Section 675(e) of the Community Services Block Grant Act (42 U.S.C. 9904(e)) is repealed.

SEC. 6. APPLICABILITY TO POSTAL EMPLOYEES.

The amendments made by this Act, and any regulations thereunder, shall apply with respect to employees of the United States Postal Service and the Postal Rate Commission, pursuant to sections 410(b) and 3604(e) of title 39, United States Code.

SEC. 7. EFFECTIVE DATE.

(a) The amendments made by this Act shall take effect 120 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, except that the authority to prescribe regulations granted under section 7327 of title 5, United States Code (as added by section 2 of this Act), shall take effect on the date of the enactment of this Act.

(b) Any repeal or amendment made by this Act of any provision of law shall not release or extinguish any penalty, forfeiture, or liability incurred under that provision, and that provision shall be treated as remaining in force for the purpose of sustaining any proper proceeding or action for the enforcement of that penalty, forfeiture, or liability.

(c) No provision of this Act shall affect any proceedings with respect to which the charges were filed on or before the effective date of the amendments made by this Act. Orders shall be issued in such proceedings and appeals shall be taken therefrom as if this Act had not been enacted.

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

Section 1 designates the act as the "Hatch Act Reform Amendments of 1989.

Section 2(a) amends Subchapter III of Chapter 73 of title 5, United States Code, which concerns political activities of Federal employees.

Section 7321 states that it is the policy of the Congress that employees should be encouraged to exercise fully, freely, and without fear of penalty or reprisal, and to the extent not expressly prohibited by law, their right to participate or to refrain from participating in the political processes of the Nation.

Section 7322 defines certain terms used in subchapter III of chapter 73.

The term "employee" means any individual employed or holding office in an Executive agency other than the General Accounting Office or in a competitive service position which is not in an Executive agency. The President and Vice President are excluded from the definition of "employee." The term "employee" does not include members of the uniformed services.

[The Department of Defense has written its own restrictions on military political activities which are specified in DOD Directive 1344.10 entitled Political Activities by Members of the Armed Forces. Under section 3(b)(1)(C) of Public Law 96-191, the political activites which are prohibited under Title 5, Chapter 73, subchapter III are prohibited for General Accounting Office employees.]

The Term "partisan political office" means any office for which any candidate is nominated or elected as representing a party any of whose candidates for Presidential elector received votes in the last preceding election at which Presidental electors were selected, but excludes any office or position within a political party or affiliated organization.

The term "political contribution" means any gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money or anything of value, made for any political purpose; any contract, promise, or agreement, express or implied, whether or not legally enforceable, to make a contribution for any political purpose; any payment by any person, other than a candidate or a political party or affiliated organization, of compensation for the personal services of another person which are rendered to any candidate or political party or affiliated organization without charge for any political purpose; and the provision of personal services for any political purpose.

Section 7323 permits employees to take an active part in political management or in political campaigns, except as prohibited. The section prohibits employees from using their official authority or influence to interfere with or affect the result of an election. It also prohibits employees from knowingly soliciting, accepting, or receiving a political contribution from any person unless that person is a member of the same Federal employee organization and the solicitation is for a contribution to the multicandidate political committee of the Federal employee organization. Additionally, the section prohibits employees from running for the nomination or as a candidate for election to a partisan political office.

[The prohibition against coercion includes pressuring employees to attend political functions. Employee groups can solicit contributions from their members for a political action committee (PAC) in accordance with Federal election laws. Such groups are currently allowed to operate PAC's. The prohibition on running for partisan political office is continued except that Federal employees could run for office within party organizations and affiliated groups such as convention delegate.]

Section 7324 prohibits political activities while on duty. Subsection (a) provides that an employee may not engage in political activity while on duty, in any room or building occupied in the discharge of official duties by an employee or office holder of the Government or any agency or instrumentality thereof, while wearing a uniform or official insignia which identifies his office or position, or using any vehicle owned or leased by the Government or any agency or instrumentality, thereof.

[Politics on the job, including the wearing of political buttons, is prohibited. Involvement in politics after work hours is allowed except that the general solicitation of contributions is prohibited.]

Subsection (b) provides that certain high level political appointees may engage in political activity otherwise prohibited by subsection (a) if the costs associated with that political activity are not paid for by money derived from the Treasury of the United States. Employees covered by this section must be in positions in which the duties and responsibilities continue outside normal duty hours and while away from the normal duty post. Additionally, these employees must be paid from the Executive Office of the President appropriation or be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, be in a position which is located within the United States, and be determining policies to be pursued by the United States in relations with foreign powers or in the nationwide administration of Federal laws.

Section 2(b) makes certain technical and conforming amendments to other provisions of title 5, United States Code. Subsection (b)(1) amends section 3302(2) by deleting references to sections in subchapter III of chapter 73 which have been deleted by this bill.

Subsection (b)(2) conforms the section analysis for subchapter III of chapter 73 of title 5, United States Code, to the amendments made in section 2(a) of the bill.

Section 3 makes certain conforming amendments to title 18, United States Code. Subsection 3(a) amends section 602 of title 18, relating to solicitation of political contributions. Paragraph (a)(3) adds a new subsection (b) to section 602 which provides that the criminal prohibition of solicitation of political contributions applies only to the activity of employees covered under H.R. 3400 to the extent that the activities violate sections 7323 or 7324. Subsection 3(b) makes a similar conforming amendment to section 603 of title 18, concerning making political contributions. A new subsection (c) is added to section 603 which states that the criminal restriction on political contributions applies only to activities of employees covered under H.R. 3400 to the extent that the activities violate section 7323 or 7324.

Section 4 makes a conforming amendment to the provisions of the Voting Rights Act of 1965 (Public Law 89-110) relating to restrictions on examiners appointed to administer the Voting Rights Act.

Section 5 amends chapter 15 of title 5, United States Code. Subsection 5(a) includes District of Columbia employees under coverage of the chapter. Subsection 5(b) repeals section 675(e) of the Community Services Block Grant Act.

Section 6 provides that employees of the United States Postal Service and of the Postal Rate Commission are covered by the amendments made by section 2 of H.R. 3400.

Section 7 provides that the amendments made by the Act shall take effect 120 days after the date of enactment. Subsection 7(b) provides that the amendments made by the Act shall not affect any penalty imposed or any action to enforce a penalty under the preceding provisions of law. Subsection 7(c) provides that no provision of the Act shall affect any proceedings filed on or before the effective date of the act. Ordered under those proceedings and appeals from such proceedings shall be conducted as if the Act has not been enacted.●

Mr. DECONCINI, Mr. President, today I am pleased to join with Senator GLENN, PRYOR, and STEVENS, in introducing what I believe to be one of the principle pieces of equal rights legislation to be addressed by the U.S. Senate during the 101st Congress. I am speaking of legislation to reform the outdated Hatch Act.

The legislation which we are introducing is the same legislation which was reported out of the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee on May 19, 1988. It is a modification of the legislation which overwhelmingly passed the House of Representatives by a vote of 305 to 112 on November 17, 1987.

It is the same legislation that I offered as an amendment to the fiscal year 1989 District of Columbia appropriations bill on September 30, 1988. This amendment had the tacit support of many senators. Unfortunately, because there were concerns about completing action on all appropriations bills before the end of the fiscal year, it was never debated in this body.

As many of my colleagues are aware, the Hatch Act was originally intended to protect the Government worker from undue coercion from his or her supervisor. Unfortunately, it has become a convenient tool to gag and handcuff this Nation's nearly 2 million civilian employees. I believe that any law which is so misunderstood, indeed so feared, as to cause Americans to opt out of the election process and avoid casting a vote for a candidate in a general election or primary, is in reality a constraint on these Americans' constitutional rights. I have no doubts that the fact that this Nation experienced the lowest voter turnout—50.16 percent—in 64 years is due in part to the fears of many Federal employees that voting falls under the Hatch Act.

Mr. President, for too long, this Nation's Federal workers have been "second class" citizens in the eyes of the American people, the courts, the executive branch and, yes, even the Congress of the United States. Many Americans talk, in general, about the lazy government bureaucrat. The Supreme Court has ruled that, for some strange reason, the first amendment does not apply to government employees when it comes to political rights. I have lost count of the number of times recent administrations have run for office by campaigning against Washington and this Nation's Federal workforce. Fortunately, the Bush campaign, and hopefully the Bush administration, understands the importance of the Federal workforce.

Most regrettably, Congress has treated the Government and postal workers as convenient whipping boys who, primarily because they are "hatched," are denied a voice in determining who will represent them and how they will be represented. When we need to find dollar savings to meet some emergency, it has been all too easy to cut 1 or 2 percent from the Federal employees' proposed pay increase, to tax their retirement benefits yet another time, or to freeze their COLA's. Because we have denied them a full opportunity to participate politically, they continue to be used as a scapegoat by many in Congress and elsewhere.

Undoubtedly, there are Government employees who take advantage of the system. They exist and this country does not benefit by their actions. But, on the whole, the Federal worker and the postal service employee work hard. They work hard because they love their country and want to contribute to making this Nation as strong and effective as it can possibly be.

Last year, a visitor to my office from Arizona offered the challenge to other Americans when she said, "We work hard in land acquisition and I would love to show those people all the details that are involved and how hard it really is."

As you know, Mr. President, previous attempts to reform the Hatch Act were vetoed by President Ford and derailed by President Carter. President Reagan, through his spokespersons at OMB and OPM, voiced strong opposition to any legislation, even modest reforms such as those contained in this legislation, and threatened yet another veto.

While I do not like to oppose the President, I strongly felt that he was being unwisely counseled on this issue. When time for consideration of Hatch Act reform appeared to be slipping away at the end of the 100th Congress, I offered this legislation as an amendment in order to get the Senate to begin debate of this important legislation. While I was not successful, at least the issue was raised on the Senate floor.

When it was passed in 1939, the Hatch Act had a specific and, on the whole, positive purpose—protecting Federal employees from coercion by overzealous supporters of President Franklin Roosevelt.

Over the years, however, the Hatch Act's interpretation by the various agencies charged with regulation of the law have convoluted and twisted its initial premise. Instead of protecting the Federal employees from coercion by their supervisors, it has been used as a barrier to the exercise of free speech.

During the 1988 primary campaign, the Hatch Act became an issue capturing national media attention during the Washington State caucuses. Both parties' candidates ultimately lost support because of a strict application of the Hatch Act regulations regarding party caucuses by Federal officials. In the end, a Washington State campaign official was quoted as saying that the Reagan administration is "interpreting something rigidly that has always been on the books but never enforced." Obviously, this law needs to be revised if it is selectively enforced in some instances and totally ignored in others.

The law as it is interpreted today permits a Federal employee wear a campaign button for a candidate, but does not allow that employee to pass out buttons to his coworkers. The regulations allow a postal worker to sign a nominating petition, but they prohibit that same worker from organizing a petition drive. The regulations even say that the Federal employee can place a campaign sign on his or her car that is 15 inches by 30 inches, but that campaign yard signs can only be 14 inches by 22 inches. Essentially, under the interpretations, a bumper sticker can be larger than a yard sign. As I stated in testimony before the Governmental Affairs Committee last year, these trivial regulations render the Hatch Act ludicrous.

As these examples of selective enforcement and confusing interpretations demonstrate, there is a compelling need to revise and streamline this law. The bill which we are introducing today accomplishes these goals.

MAJOR PROVISIONS OF THE BILL

As the committee report accompanying the last year's modified Governmental Affairs Committee bill states, the legislation is designed to "provide for Federal civilian employees to participate voluntarily, as private citizens, in the political processes of the Nation and to protect such employees and the General citizenry from improper political solicitations."

Briefly, the bill we introduce today retains and strengthens the current prohibitions against political activity on the job and allows Federal civilian and postal employees to participate voluntarily in these on their own time. The bill maintains two current prohibitions against running for partisan elective office and against solicitation of political contributions from the general public.

This legislation clarifies the hundreds of regulations and streamlines the prohibitions regarding what an employee can do and when he or she can do it.

The bill defines the term "political contribution" to include personal services provided for any political purpose. This indicates that restrictions on coercion and use of official influence should be interpreted broadly to prevent any activity that hints of impropriety.

The bill also prohibits the use of official information obtained in connection with Government employment for political purposes unless such information were available to the general public.

The bill allows employees to place bumper stickers on their private automobiles and to continue parking them in government parking lots. Political bumper stickers, however, are expressly forbidden on any government-owned or leased vehicle. Additionally, the bill prohibits Federal employees from wearing political buttons in Government buildings or while performing Government business. This provision is more strict than current law, which allows Federal employees to wear such buttons.

The bill continues the prohibition on the use of Government buildings for political activities.

Finally, the penalties included in this bill for violations are stronger than those in current law. Just as the law has been selectively applied, so have the penalties varied in their severity and utility. According to some, the current minimum penalty of 30 days' suspension for any violation has probably deterred prosecution for minor Hatch Act violations. Under the bill which we introduce today, the punishment would truly "fit the crime." For example, violators of the section concerning solicitations shall be fined or imprisoned for up to 3 years.

I also want to reassure some people on a few of the things that this bill does not do. It does not allow an IRS agent to collect political contributions from people he or she may be auditing. It does not allow a letter carrier to deliver mail wearing a political candidate's campaign button. It does not allow Federal workers to circulate political petitions around the office.

CONCLUSIONS

This bill is a modest step at reforming an outdated law and expanding the right of political free speech to a large group of Americans. It does not unleash the Federal employees to work their political will on the Nation. The bill must be taken for what it is, not for what some people would make it out to be.

The Governmental Affairs Committee performed yeomen's labor last year in holding hearings on the House passed bill, H.R. 3400. Their amendment, the basis for this legislation, was a wise and thoughtful one. Particularly, Senators GLENN, PRYOR, and STEVENS are to be congratulated for their hard work and vision. I appreciated their providing me with the opportunity to testify before the committee in support of Hatch Act reform on the first day of hearings last February.

I look forward to continuing to work with these gentlemen and other Senate colleagues in an attempt to bring Hatch Act reform legislation to the Senate floor at the earliest date. Last year, time ran out and the leadership decided against bringing up the legislation. That is why I offered my amendment last year and that is why I am joining in introducing this legislation today, the first real day of Senate legislative business in the 101st Congress.

My belief is that this legislation will serve as a catalyst, a focus for Senate consideration and debate of Hatch Act reform. The Governmental Affairs Committee will have a full platter of issues this session. They will consider pay reform, health benefits reform, and other legislation important to Federal and postal employees. I want to get this issue—reform of the Hatch Act—on the Senate agenda early, so that we can then focus on other issues. I offer my willingness and my time to work with the Committee and others to see that this law is reformed on the 50th anniversary of its enactment.

I believe that the bill that being introduced is a good one. I am hopeful that the Senate will consider the merits of the legislation and what it does—not what some think it may do. I am hopeful that the new Bush administration will work with this Senator and others to reach an agreeable compromise.

I urge my colleagues to support this legislation. The time to revise the Hatch Act is now. Let us not lose this precious opportunity.

By Mr. ADAMS (for himself, Mr. RIEGLE, Mr. STEVENS, and Mr. DECONCINI):

S. 136. A bill to amend title 3, United States Code, to establish a single poll closing time in the continental United States for Presidential general elections; to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

UNIFORM POLL CLOSING ACT OF 1989

● Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, today Senator RIEGLE, my distinguished colleague from Michigan, and I are happy to introduce a bill to establish a uniform poll closing time for Presidential elections.

As you know, early media projections of Presidential elections and their effect on voter turnout and outcome has become of increasing concern to many of our constituents. In 1980 President Carter conceded at 6:50 p.m. Pacific standard time, more than 1½ hours after NBC began flashing "Reagan wins" on television screens across the Nation. In 1984, President Reagan and Walter Mondale agreed not to make a statement, either claiming victory or conceding defeat, until the polls had closed in the West. Unfortunately, by 5:30 p.m. Pacific standard time, all three of the networks had declared President Reagan's reelection. Polls in 26 States across the Nation were still open. Thus, despite the candidates' agreement, many voters went to the polls already knowing the winner of the election while many others may have simply decided not to exercise one of their most fundamental constitutional rights: suffrage.

I know that many of you recieved angry letters from your constituents as I did, decrying the fact that voters were informed, almost 2 hours before the polls closed on the west coast, that once again, a new President had been elected. They are concerned—some are outraged—and they have a right to be. The issue here is whether or not every American voter has a right to go to the polls and feel that he or she is making a difference. I believe that they do have that right. I also believe that early projections before the pools close threaten that right and have an adverse effect on voter turnout.

Voter turnout has been declining over a long period of time in this country. If we allow the perception to grow that our votes don't count then we are adding to that problem. I believe we have a responsibility to encourage every citizen to exercise his or her right to vote. Early announcements undermine the American people's belief in the role they have to play in our democratic process.

Uniform poll closing is the least disruptive, least drastic answer to a complex problem. Other suggestions have been offered but I believe uniform poll closing is the most reasonable solution.

My friend and colleague from Washington State, Representative AL SWIFT, has held extensive hearings on this subject before the House Subcommittee on Elections. AL and Congressman BILL THOMAS deserve much of the credit for the progress that has been made in bringing this issue to the attention of the Congress. Uniform poll closing has passed the House of Representatives twice. The bill I introduce today was reported from the Rules Committee last session—I hope that this is the year that the full Senate passes this much needed legislation.

Mr. President I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 136

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Uniform Poll Closing Act of 1989".

SINGLE POLL CLOSING TIME FOR PRESIDENTIAL GENERAL ELECTIONS IN THE CONTINENTAL UNITED STATES

SEC. 2. Chapter 1 of title 3, United States Code, is amended by—

(1) redesignating section 21, and all references to such section, as section 22; and

(2) inserting after section 20 the following new section:

"§ 21. Single poll closing time in continental United States

"(a) Each polling place in the continental United States shall close, with respect to a Presidential general election, at 10:00 o'clock post meridiem, eastern standard time. Any person who, as determined under the law of the State involved, arrives at a polling place after that time shall not be permitted to vote in the Presidential general election.

"(b) With respect to a Presidential general election, in the case of a polling place at which each person who is eligible to vote has voted, such polling place may close, as provided by the law of the State involved, notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (a).

"(c) As used in this section, the term—

"(1) 'continental United States' means the States of the United States (other than Alaska and Hawaii) and the District of Columbia; and

"(2) 'Presidential general election' means the election for electors of President and Vice President.

TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS TO TITLE 3, UNITED STATES CODE

SEC. 3. The table of sections for chapter 1 of title 3, United States Code, is amended by striking out the item relating to section 21 and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"21. Single poll closing time in continental United States.

"22. Definitions.".

By Mr. BOREN (for himself, Mr. MITCHELL, Mr. BYRD, Mr.

BINGAMAN, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. DODD, and Mr. REID):

S. 137. A bill to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for a voluntary system of spending limits and partial public financing of Senate general election campaigns, to limit contributions by multicandidate political committees, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

SENATORIAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT OF 1989

● Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, for the past few years, this legislative body has deliberated the need to reform the system of congressional campaign financing as well as how to accomplish it. As this past election cycle again shows, the system is in critical need of fundamental reform to reestablish the emphasis of running for public office on issues, ideas, and qualifications—not on the amount of special interest money one candidate can raise more than the other.

As the 101st Congress convenes, we must bring a renewed focus on the perceptions and realities that excessive money in politics plays.

Previous debate has centered on some very basic questions. Should the financial influence of political action committees be brought into closer balance with grass-roots involvement? Should Members of Congress spend increasingly amounts of time raising millions of dollars for their campaigns? Should potential challengers be foreclosed from running for office because they do not have or cannot raise $3 million to run an average campaign? Should overall campaign spending be limited by a voluntary means? And finally, is the national interest best served when congressional campaigns are being more and more financed by special, narrow interests.

It is due to my continued and growing concern over this serious problem facing representative democracy that I have redrafted last year's debated extensively campagin finance reform proposal.

Mr. President, campaign finance reform is not an easy issue with simple answers. There is the ever present danger of partisan maneuvering for advantage. There is the danger of changing one area of the system which in turn will only open up loopholes and abuses somewhere else in the system. Finally, there is the danger of giving lengthy lip service to the concept of reform, demanding the perfect solution, and as a result, never acting to make substantial change.

The legitimacy of our democratic political system rests on the integrity of the election process. We have a clear duty to act now to protect that integrity.

There is only one way in which to practically limit campaign spending while staying within the confines of a 1976 Supreme Court decision—Buckley versus Valeo—that is through the implementation of a system calling for voluntary spending limits, coupled with provisions to encourage candidates to accept those limits.

That is why I now introduce this bill to set voluntary spending limits, mandate aggregate PAC limits for every candidate, and address some of the more egregious forms of loopholes that have developed in our campaign financing system. A summary of the bill will follow my statement.

The bill also includes the same aggregate limit on the amount of PAC contributions that a candidate can receive. Additionally, there is included a provision calling for an aggregate limit on the amount of PAC contributions that a national or State party can receive as well.

A feature of this legislation deals with the soft money loophole which has gone unchecked by the slow ineffective regulatory attitude of the Federal Election Commission nor by legislation. In addition to full disclosure requirements on State and national party committees, three new provisions would be added by this bill:

First. A 4-cent per voting age population cap would be placed on State party committees on funds they use for "mixed activities," where efforts have an impact on State and Federal elections; for example, get-out-the-vote and voter registration projects.

Second. State party committee would not be allowed to allocate contributions for these mixed activities as is currently the practice.

Third. Each Presidential general election candidate, before being eligible to receive public funds, must certify that their campaign will not authorize or retain an agent of the campaign to raise any such soft money funds which could influence the election.

Another feature of the bill would repeal the current grandfather clause in the statutes that would allow retiring Members, who were in Congress prior to January 8, 1980, to keep for personal use any excess campaign funds.

Finally, the bill would also restructure the Federal Election Commission to be a seven-member board. After the bill's enactment, an additional commissioner would be added. While no more than four commissioners could be of the same political party, the partisan makeup of the commission would change annually. While this is not meant to be a perfect nor permanent solution to the persistent problem of partisan stalemate, this would be a way to show our growing concern over the FEC's inability to enforce the campaign laws with quick, decisive actions.

Mr. President, at a time when the need for national leadership and consensus is so great—with looming budget deficits, a frightening trade imbalance, and grave concerns over foreign policy, we in the Congress must promote integrity within this body and unity among our citizens, rather than falling into the trap of division promoted by our system of having special economic interests or single-issue groups finance our campaigns.

Even former President Reagan in a departing speech last month discussed the role of an "iron triangle" which paralyzes the Government's ability to work effectively. The corner of that triangle that can be most easily dealt with is the influence of special interest money in Congress. It was the first time in his 8 years, that the President touched on a key element of stalemate in Congress: special interests.

If we allow our democratic system of elections to continually be placed on the auction block, we cannot hope to fairly address the national needs or our country. Instead, our energies will be expended in raising money and responding to the constant pressures of narrow, special interests.

How can any institution effectively serve the needs of its people when its central concern centers around raising millions of dollars for reelection campaigns? How can it survive when challenging candidates cannot overcome the PAC-advantage of incumbents? And, finally, how can it safeguard the world's most admired system of democratic representation when political competition is increasingly based on money instead of issues, ideas, and qualifications. I fear that if this 101st Congress does not address and eventually enact comprehensive reforms of election financing, it's hope of ever being brought into proper balance may not occur until it is too late.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a summary of the bill and the text of the legislation be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SUMMARY OF SENATOR BOREN'S "SENATORIAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT"

VOLUNTARY SYSTEM OF SENATE CAMPAIGN SPENDING LIMITS

It would establish a voluntary system for campaign spending limits set by a formula based on voting age population of each state, ranging from $950,000 to $5,500,000 for general elections.

I. Requirements for Benefits:

A. Be nominated for the general election ballot.

B. Spent no more than 67 percent of the general election limit during the primary.

C. Spend no more than $20,000 of personal funds in the general election.

D. Raise a threshold requirement of small contributions—totalling between $150,000 and $650,000; of $250 or less; 75 percent of which come from in-state contributors.

E. Agree in writing to comply with the state's spending limit, based on formula which reflects voting age population. (Between $950,000 and $5.5 million.)

II. Benefits for Participants:

A. Broadcast rates: Only candidates who voluntarily comply with spending limits will be eligible for the "lowest unit rate" for broadcast advertising.

B. Reduced Mail Rate: Complying candidates will be eligible for a 5.5 cents per piece 1st class mail rate OR 2 cents below current 3d class rate. (This will be off-set by removing the bulk mail rate for political party committees.) This will be capped at 5 percent of the General Election Limit.

C. Compensation for "Independent Expenditures":

(1) Primary candidate's spending limit can be raised to the extent of the independent expenditure.

(2) General candidate's qualify for matching funds above a $10,000 threshold from the voluntary tax check-off fund.

D. Non-participating candidate's ads must carry a disclaimer that "this candidate does not comply with voluntary spending limits."

E. "Insurance Policy" Against Outspending Opponents.

(1) At the point a non-participating candidate comes within 75 percent of the limit, that candidate must report to FEC in 5 percent increments of limits.

(2) At the point a non-participating candidate exceeds the general election spending limit, the complying candidate is eligible for a grant equal to ⅔ of the general election limit.

(3) At the point a non-participating candidate spends ⅓ over the limit, the complying candidate is entitled to an additional grant equal to ⅓ of the general election limit.

AGGREGATE PAC LIMITS

(1) Aggregate Limit for Candidates: All candidates would be subject to an overall limit on PAC contributions varying with the population of their state—with a low of $190,950 in small states and a cap of $825,000 in large states. This provision would be applicable to ALL candidates, regardless of whether they opt to participate in the spending limits system. Also, a $100,000 limit is placed on House candidates.

(2) Aggregate Limit for Parties: A 30 percent aggregate limit per tow-year election cycle on "hard money" would be established for the national political parties and for each of the congressional party campaign committees.

"SOFT MONEY" DISCLOSURE AND REFORM

This provision requires disclosure for national and state political party building funds and for political committees active in non-federal elections but engaging in activities that influence federal elections.

It would also impose a 4 cent per VAP cap (similar to that which exists for national party committees) for state party committees on "coordinated expenditure" funds spent on federal elections. Further, state committees would not be allowed to "allocate" contributions for "mixed activities" (e.g. Get-Out-The-Vote, Voter Registration) as these activities have an impact on federal elections. Finally, each general election nominee under the Presidential system would have to certify that (s)he would not authorize or retain an agent of the campaign to raise any funds that would be used in whole or in part to influence the election.

BUNDLING

This provision would close the bundling loophole in current law by requiring that contributions bundled or otherwise arranged by a PAC, Party Committee, registered lobbyist or other intermediary would count toward the intermediary's contribution limit, as well as the original contributor's limit.

INDEPENDENT EXPENDITURES

This provision would further define when an independent expenditure has been coordinated with a candidate's campaign and is therefore required to be treated as a contribution and subject to the contribution limits of the Act.

In addition, televised advertisements financed by independent expenditures would be required to continuously display throughout the length of the advertisement the name of the individual, political committee, or organization that paid for it, as well as its presentation is "not subject to any campaign contribution limits". Direct mailings would also have to clearly disclose who paid for them.

EXCESS CAMPAIGN FUNDS

It would repeal the "grandfather clause" which allows Members serving before January 8, 1980 to convert excess campaign funds for personal use.

FEDERAL ELECTION COMMISSION REFORM

It would provide that the first Commissioner to step down after enactment not be replaced, thus creating a 7-member Commission, giving a rotating ⅔ partisan split.

S. 137

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Senatorial Election Campaign Act of 1989."

SEC. 2. The Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (hereinafter referred to as "the Act") is amended by adding at the end the following new title:

"TITLE V—SPENDING LIMITS AND PUBLIC FINANCING FOR SENATE GENERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGNS

"DEFINITIONS

"SEC. 501. For purposes of this title—

"(1) unless otherwise provided in this title the definitions set forth in section 301 of this Act apply to this title;

"(2) the term 'authorized committee' means, with respect to any candidate for election to the office of United States Senator, any political committee which is authorized in writing by such candidate to accept contributions or make expenditures on behalf of such candidate to further the election of such candidate;

"(3) the term 'candidate' means an individual who is seeking nomination for election, or election to the office of United States Senator and such individual shall be deemed to seek nomination for election, or election, if such individual meets the requirements of subparagraph (A) or (B) of section 301(2);

"(4) the term 'election cycle' means—

"(A) in the case of a candidate or the authorized committee of a candidate, the term beginning on the day after the date of the last previous general election for such office or seat which such candidate seeks and ending on the date of the next election; or

"(B) for all other persons, the term beginning on the first day following the date of the last general election and ending on the date of the next election;

"(5) the term 'eligible candidate' means a candidate who is eligible under section 502 to receive benefits under this title;

"(6) the term 'general election' means any election which will directly result in the election of a person to the office of United States Senator, but does not include an open primary election;

"(7) the term 'general election period' means the period beginning on the day after the date of the primary or runoff election, whichever is later, and ending on the date of such general election or the date on which the candidate withdraws from the campaign or otherwise ceases actively to seek election, whichever occurs first;

"(8) the term 'immediate family' means a candidate's spouse, and any child, stepchild, parent, grandparent, brother, half-brother, sister or half-sister of the candidate, and the spouse of any such person, and any child, stepchild, parent, grandparent, brother, half-brother, sister or half-sister of the candidate's spouse and the spouse of any such person.

"(9) the term 'major party' has the meaning given such term in section 9002(6) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, the Presidential Election Campaign Fund Act, provided that a candidate in a general election held by a State to elect a Senator subsequent to an open primary in which all the candidates for the office participated and which resulted in the candidate and at least one other candidate qualifying for the ballot in the general election, shall be treated as a candidate of a major party for purposes of this title;

"(10) the term 'primary election' means any election which may result in the selection of a candidate for the ballot of the general election;

"(11) the term 'primary election period' means the period beginning on the day following the date of the last Senate election for the same Senate office and ending on the date of the first primary election for such office following such last Senate election for such office, or the date on which the candidate withdraws from the election or otherwise ceases actively to seek election, whichever occurs first;

"(12) the term 'runoff election' means the election held after a primary election, and prescribed by applicable State law as the means for deciding which candidate(s) should be certified as nominee(s) for the Federal office sought;

"(13) the term 'runoff election period' means the period beginning on the day following the date of the last primary election for such office and ending on the date of the runoff election for such office;

"(14) the term 'Senate Fund' means the Senate Election Campaign Fund maintained pursuant to section 506 by the Secretary of the Treasury in the Presidential Campaign Fund established by section 9006(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986; and

"(15) the term 'voting age population' means the resident population, 18 years of age or older, as certified pursuant to section 315(e).

"ELIGIBILITY TO RECEIVE BENEFITS

"SEC. 502. (a) To be eligible to receive benefits under this title, in addition to the requirements of subsection (d), a candidate shall, within 7 days after qualifying for the general election ballot under the law of the State involved or, if such candidate is a candidate in a State which has a primary election to qualify for such ballot after September 1, within 7 days after the date such candidate wins in such primary, whichever occurs first—

"(1) certify to the Commission under penalty of perjury that during the period beginning on January 1 of the calendar year preceding the year of the general election involved, or in the case of a special election for the office of United States Senator, during the period beginning on the day on which the vacancy occurs in that office, and ending on the day of such certification, such candidate and the authorized committees of such candidate have received contributions in an amount at least equal to 10 cents multiplied by the voting age population of such State or $150,000, whichever is greater, up to an amount that does not exceed $650,000;

"(2) certify to the Commission under penalty of perjury that all contributions received for purposes of paragraph (1) have come from individuals and that no contribution from such individual, when added to all contributions to or for the benefit of such candidate from such individual, was taken into account to the extent such amount exceeds $250;

"(3) certify to the Commission under penalty of perjury that such candidate and the authorized committees of such candidate have not expended for the primary election, more than the amount equal to 67 percent of the general election spending limit applicable to such candidate pursuant to section 503(b), or more than $2,750,000, whichever amount is less;

"(4) certify to the Commission under penalty of perjury that such candidate and the authorized committees of such candidate have not expended for any runoff election, more than an amount equal to 20 percent of the general election spending limit applicable to such candidate pursuant to section 503(b);

"(5) certify to the Commission under penalty of perjury that 75 per centum of the aggregate amount of contributions received for purposes of paragraph (1) have come from individuals residing in such candidate's State;

"(6) certify to the Commission under penalty of perjury that at least one other candidate has qualified for the same general election ballot under the law of the State involved;

"(7) agree in writing that such candidate and the authorized committees of such candidate—

"(A) have not made and will not make expenditures which exceed the limitations established in section 503, except as otherwise provided in this title;

"(B) will not accept any contributions in violation of section 315;

"(C) will not accept any contribution for the general election involved except to the extent that such contribution is necessary to defray expenditures for such election that in the aggregate do not exceed the amount of the limitation on expenditures established in section 503(b), unless otherwise provided in this Act;

"(D) will deposit all payments received under this section in an account insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation or the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation from which funds may be withdrawn by check or similar means of payment to third parties;

"(E) will furnish campaign records, evidence of contributions and other appropriate information to the Commission; and

"(F) will cooperate in the case of any audit and examination by the Commission under section 507; and

"(8) notify the Commission of their intention to make use of the benefits provided for in section 504.

"(b) For the purposes of subsection (a)(1) and paragraph (2)(B) of section 504(a), in determining the amount of contributions received by a candidate and the candidate's authorized committees—

"(1) no contribution other than a gift of money made by a written instrument which identifies the person making the contribution shall be taken into account;

"(2) no contribution made through an intermediary or conduit referred to in section 315(a)(8) shall be taken into account;

"(3) no contribution received from any person other than an individual shall be taken into account, and no contribution received from an individual shall be taken into account to the extent such contribution exceeds $250 when added to the total amount of all other contributions made by such individual to or for the benefit of such candidate beginning on the applicable date specified in paragraph (4) of this subsection; and

"(4) no contribution received prior to January 1 of the calendar year preceding the year in which the general election involved or received after the date on which the general election involved is held shall be taken into account, and in the case of a special election, no contribution received prior to the date on which the vacancy occurs in that office or received after the date on which the general election involved is held shall be taken into account.

"(c) The threshold amounts in subsection (a)(1) shall be increased at the beginning of each calendar year based on the increase in the price index as determined under section 315(c), except that for purposes of determining such increase, the term 'base period', as used in such section shall mean the calendar year of the first election after the date of enactment of the Senatorial Election Campaign Act of 1987.

"(d) In addition to the requirements of subsection (a), to be eligible to receive benefits under this title a candidate shall, on the day such candidate files as a candidate for the primary election—

"(1) file with the Commission a declaration of whether or not—

"(1) such candidate and the authorized committees of such candidate intend to make expenditures, for the primary election, more than an amount equal to 67 percent of the general election spending limit applicable to such candidate pursuant to section 503(b), or more than $2,750,000, whichever amount is less;

"(2) such candidate and the authorized committees of such candidate intend to make expenditures, for any runoff election, more than an amount equal to 20 percent of the general election spending limit applicable to such candidate pursuant to section 503(b); and

"(3) such candidate and the authorized committees of such candidate intend to make expenditures, for the general election, more than an amount equal to the general election spending limit applicable to such candidate pursuant to section 503(b).

"LIMITATIONS ON EXPENDITURES

"SEC. 503. (a) No candidate who is entitled to a benefit in a general election under this title shall make expenditures from the personal funds of such candidate, or the funds of any member of the immediate family of such candidate, or incur personal loans in connection with such candidate's campaign for the Senate, aggregating in excess of $20,000, during the election cycle.

"(b)(1) Except as otherwise provided in this Act, no candidate who is entitled to a benefit for use in a general election under this title shall make expenditures for such general election which in the aggregate exceed $400,000, plus—

"(A) in States having a voting age population of 4 million or less, 30 cents multiplied by the voting age population; or

"(B) in States having a voting age population over 4 million, 30 cents multiplied by 4 million, plus 25 cents multiplied by the voting age population over 4 million; except that the amount of the limitation under this subsection, in the case of any candidate, shall not be less than $950,000, nor more than $5,500,000.

"(2) Notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph (1), in any State with no more than one transmitter for a commercial Very High Frequency (VHF) television station licensed to operate in that State, no candidate in such State who receives a benefit for use in a general election under this title shall make expenditures for such general election which in the aggregate exceed the higher of—

"(A) $950,000; or

"(B) $400,000 plus 45 cents multiplied by the voting age population of 4 million or less, plus 40 cents multiplied by the voting age population over 4 million, up to an amount not exceeding $5,500,000.

"(c) The limitations on expenditures in subsections (b), (d), and (e) shall be subject to the provisions of subsections (b) and (c) of section 504.

"(d) No candidate who is otherwise eligible to receive benefits for a general election under this title may receive any such benefits if such candidate spends for the primary election, more than the amount equal to 67 percent of the limitation on expenditures for the general election as determined under subsection (b), or more than $2,750,000, whichever amount is less.

"(e) No candidate who is otherwise eligible to receive benefits for a general election under this title may receive any such benefits if such candidate spends for a runoff election, if any, more than an amount which in the aggregate exceeds 20 percent of the maximum amount of the limitation applicable to such candidate as determined under subsection (b).

"(f)(1) For purposes of this section, the amounts set forth in subsections (b), (d), and (e) of this section shall be increased at the beginning of each calendar year based on the increase in the price index as determined under section 315(c), except that for purposes of determining such increase, the term 'base period', as used in section 315(c), means the calendar year of the first election after the date of enactment of the Senatorial Election Campaign Act of 1989.

"(2) The limitation set forth in subsection (b) shall not apply to expenditures by a candidate or a candidate's authorized committees from a compliance fund established to defray the costs of legal and accounting services provided solely to insure compliance with this Act; provided however that—

"(A) such fund contains only contributions (including contributions received in excess of any amount necessary to defray qualified campaign expenditures pursuant to section 313) received in accordance with the limitations, prohibitions, and reporting requirements of this Act;

"(B) the aggregate total amount of contributions to, and expenditures from, such fund do not exceed 10 percent of the limitation on expenditures for the general election as determined under subsection (b); and

"(C) no transfers may be made from such fund to any other accounts of the candidate's authorized committees, except that the fund may receive transfers from such other accounts at any time.

In the event that, subsequent to any general election, a candidate determines that the costs of necessary and continuing legal and accounting services require contributions to and expenditures from the fund in excess of the limitations of this paragraph, the candidate may petition the Commission for a waiver of such limitations up to any additional amounts as the Commission may authorize in connection with such waiver. Any waiver, or denial of a waiver, by the Commission under this paragraph shall be subject to judicial review under section 508. Any money remaining in such fund when the candidate decides to terminate or dissolve such fund, shall be—

"(i) contributed to the United States Treasury to reduce the budget deficit, or

"(ii) transferred to a fund of a subsequent campaign of that candidate.

"(g) If, during the primary and runoff period portion of the two-year election cycle preceding the candidate's general election, independent expenditures by any person or persons aggregating an amount in excess of $10,000 are made, or are obligated to be made, in opposition to a candidate or for the opponent of such candidate, the limitations provided in subsections (d) and (e), as they apply to such candidate, shall be increased for that primary or runoff election in an amount equal to the amount of such expenditures made during the period covered by such election.

"ENTITLEMENT OF ELIGIBLE CANDIDATES TO BENEFITS

"SEC. 504. (a) Except as otherwise provided in section 506(c)—

"(1) all eligible candidates shall be entitled to—

"(A) the broadcast media rates provided under section 315(b)(3) of the Communications Act of 1934;

"(B) mailing rates provided in section 3629 of title 39 of the United States Code; and

"(C) payments under section 506 equal to the aggregate total amount of independent expenditures made or obligated to be made, in the general election involved, by any person in opposition to, or on behalf of an opponent of such eligible candidate, as such expenditures are reported by such person or determined by the Commission under subsection (f) of section 304;

"(2) if any candidate in the same general election not eligible to receive funds under this title either raises aggregate contributions or makes or obligates to make aggregate expenditures for such election which exceed the amount of the limitation determined under section 503(b) for such election—

"(A) an eligible candidate who is a major party candidate shall be entitled to receive a payment under section 506 in an amount equal to—

"(i) two-thirds of the amount of the limitation determined under section 503(b) with regard to such candidate when a candidate in the same election not eligible to receive funds under this title either raises aggregate contributions or makes or obligates to make aggregate expenditures for such election which exceed 100 percent of such limitation determined under section 503(b); and

"(ii) one-third of the amount of the limitation determined under section 503(b) with regard to such candidate when a candidate in the same election not eligible to receive funds under this title either raises aggregate contributions or makes or obligates to make aggregate expenditures for such election which exceed 133⅓ percent of such limitation determined under section 503(b); or

"(B) an eligible candidate who is not a major party candidate shall be entitled to matching payments under section 506, equal to the amount of each contribution received by such eligible candidate and the candidate's authorized committees, provided that in determining the amount of each such contribution—

"(i) the provisions of section 502(b) shall apply; and

"(ii) contributions required to be raised under section 502(a)(1) shall not be eligible to be matched; and the total amount of payments to which a candidate is entitled under this subparagraph shall not exceed 50 percent of the amount of the limitation determined under section 503(b) applicable to such candidate.

"(b) A candidate who receives payments under paragraph (1)(C) or (2) of subsection (a) may spend such funds to defray expenditures in the general election without regard to the provisions of section 503(b).

"(c)(1) A candidate who receives benefits under this section may make expenditures for the general election without regard to the provisions of subparagraph (A) of section 502(a)(7) or subsection (a) or (b) of section 503 if and when any candidate in the same general election not eligible to receive payments under this section either raises aggregate contributions or makes or obligates to make aggregate expenditures for such election which exceed the amount of 133⅓ percent of the expenditure limit applicable to such candidate under section 503(b) for such election.

"(2) A candidate who receives benefits under this section may receive contributions for the general election without regard to the provisions of subparagraph (C) of section 502(a)(7) if any major party candidate in the same general election is not eligible to receive benefits under this section, or if and when any other candidate in the same general election who is not eligible to receive benefits under this section raises aggregate contributions or makes or obligates to make aggregate expenditures for such election which exceed 75 percent of the amount of the expenditure limit applicable to such candidate under section 503(b) for such election.

"(d) Benefits received by a candidate under this section shall be used to defray expenditures incurred with respect to the general election period for such candidate. Such benefits shall not be used (1) to make any payments, directly or indirectly, to such candidate or to any member of the immediate family of such candidate, (2) to make any expenditure other than expenditures to further the general election of such candidate, (3) to make any expenditures which constitute a violation of any law of the United States or of the State in which the expenditure is made, or (4) to repay any loan to any person except to the extent the proceeds of such loan were used to further the general election of such candidate.

"CERTIFICATION BY COMMISSION

"SEC. 505. (a) No later than 48 hours after an eligible candidate files a request with the Commission to receive benefits under section 506 the Commission shall certify such eligibility to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment in full of the amount to which such candidate is entitled, unless the provisions of section 506(c) apply. The request referred to in the preceding sentence shall contain—

"(1) such information and be made in accordance with such procedures, as the Commission may provide by regulation; and

"(2) a verification signed by the candidate and the treasurer of the principal campaign committee of such candidate stating that the information furnished in support of the request, to the best of their knowledge, is correct and fully satisfies the requirements of this title.

"(b) Certifications by the Commission under subsection (a) and all determinations made by the Commission under this title, shall be final and conclusive, except to the extent that they are subject to examination and audit by the Commission under section 507 and judicial review under section 508.

"ESTABLISHMENT OF FUND; PAYMENTS TO ELIGIBLE CANDIDATES

"SEC. 506. (a)(1) The Secretary shall maintain in the Presidential Election Campaign Fund (hereafter referred to as the 'Fund') established by section 9006(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, in addition to any other accounts maintained under such section, a separate account to be known as the 'Senate Fund'. The Secretary shall deposit into the Senate Fund, for use by candidates eligible to receive payments under this title, the amounts available after the Secretary determines that the amounts in the Fund, plus the amounts of revenue the Secretary projects will accrue to the Fund during the remainder of the period ending on December 31 of the year of the next Presidential election, equal 110 percent of the amount the Secretary projects will be necessary for payments under subtitle H of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 during such remainder of such period. The monies designated for the Senate Fund shall remain available without fiscal year limitation.

"(2) On May 15 of each year following the year during which a regularly scheduled biennial Senate election has occurred, the Secretary shall determine the total amount in the Senate Fund, and evaluate if such amount, plus the amount of revenue it projects will accrue to the Senate Fund (based on the computation made by the Secretary with respect to the Fund, as provided in paragraph (1)) during the period beginning on such date and ending on December 31 of the year of the next regularly scheduled biennial election, exceeds 110 percent of the total estimated expenditures of the Senate Fund during such period. If the Secretary determines that an excess amount exists, the Secretary shall transfer such excess to the general fund of the Treasury of the United States.

"(b) Upon receipt of a certification from the Commission under section 505, the Secretary shall promptly pay to the candidate involved in the certification, out of the Senate Fund, the amount certified by the Commission.

"(c)(1) If at the time of a certification by the Commission under section 505 for payment to an eligible candidate, the Secretary determines that the monies in the Senate Fund are not, or may not be, sufficient to satisfy the full entitlement of all such eligible candidates, the Secretary shall withhold from such payment such amount as he determines to be necessary to assure that an eligible candidate will receive a pro rata share of such candidate's full entitlement. Amounts so withheld shall be paid when the Secretary determines that there are sufficient monies in the Senate Fund to pay such amounts, or portions thereof, to all eligible candidates from whom amounts have been withheld, but, if there are not sufficient monies in the Senate Fund to satisfy the full entitlement of an eligible candidate, the amounts so withheld shall be paid in such manner that each eligible candidate receives his or her pro rata share of his or her full entitlement. The Secretary shall notify the Commission and each eligible candidate by registered mail of the reduction in the amount to which that candidate is entitled under section 505.

"(2) If the provisions of this subsection result in a reduction in the amount to which an eligible candidate is entitled under section 505 and payments have been made under this section in excess of the amount to which such candidate is entitled, such candidate is liable for repayment to the Fund of the excess under procedures the Commission shall prescribe by regulation.

"EXAMINATION AND AUDITS; REPAYMENTS

"SEC. 507. (a)(1) After each general election, the Commission shall conduct an examination and audit of the campaign accounts of 10 per centum of the eligible candidates of each major party and 10 per centum of all other eligible candidates, as designated by the Commission through the use of an appropriate statistical method of random selection to determine, among other things, whether such candidates have complied with the expenditure limits and other conditions of eligibility and requirements of this title.

"(2) After each special election, the Commission shall conduct an examination and audit of the campaign accounts of each eligible candidate in such election to determine whether such candidates have complied with the expenditure limits and other conditions of eligibility and requirements under this title.

"(3) The Commission may conduct an examination and audit of the campaign accounts of any eligible candidate in a general election if the Commission, by an affirmative vote of four members, determines that there exists reason to believe that such candidate has violated any provision of this title.

"(b) If the Commission determines that any portion of the payments made to a candidate under this title was in excess of the aggregate payments to which such candidate was entitled, the Commission shall so notify such candidate, and such candidate shall pay to the Secretary an amount equal to the excess.

"(c) If the Commission determines that any amount of any benefit made to a candidate under this title was not used as provided for in this title, the Commission shall so notify such candidate and such candidate shall pay to the Secretary an amount equal to 200 per centum of the amount of such benefit.

"(d) If the Commission determines that any candidate who has received benefits under this title has made expenditures which in the aggregate exceed by 5 per centum or less the limitation set forth in section 503(b), the Commission shall so notify such candidate and such candidate shall pay to the Secretary an amount equal to the amount of the excess expenditure.

"(e) If the Commission determines that any candidate who has received benefits under this title has made expenditures which in the aggregate exceed by more than 5 per centum the limitation set forth in section 503(b), the Commission shall so notify such candidate and such candidate shall pay the Secretary an amount equal to three times the amount of the excess expenditure.

"(f) Any amount received by an eligible candidate under this title may be retained for a period not exceeding sixty days after the date of the general election for the liquidation of all obligations to pay general election campaign expenses incurred during this general election period. At the end of such sixty-day period any unexpended funds received under this title shall be promptly repaid to the Secretary.

"(g) No notification shall be made by the Commission under this section with respect to an election more than three years after the date of such election.

"(h) All payments received under this section shall be deposited in the Senate Fund.

"CRIMINAL PENALTIES

"SEC. 507A. (a) No candidate shall knowingly or willfully accept benefits under this title in excess of the aggregate benefits to which such candidate is entitled or knowingly or willfully use such benefits for any purpose not provided for in this title or knowingly or willfully make expenditures from his personal funds, or the personal funds of his immediate family, in excess of the limitation provided in this title.

"(b) Any person who violates the provisions of subsection (a) shall be fined not more than $25,000, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both. Any officer or member of any political committee who knowingly consents to any expenditure in violation of the provisions of subsection (a) shall be fined not more than $25,000, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

"(c)(1) It is unlawful for any person who receives any benefit under this title, or to whom any portion of any such benefit is transferred, knowingly and willfully to use, or authorize the use of, such benefit or such portion except as provided in section 504(d).

"(2) Any person who violates the provisions of paragraph (1) shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

"(d)(1) It is unlawful for any person knowingly and willfully—

"(A) to furnish any false, fictitious, or fraudulent evidence, books, or information (including any certification, verification, notice, or report), to the Commission under this title, or to include in any evidence, books, or information so furnished any misrepresentation of a material fact, or to falsify or conceal any evidence, books, or information relevant to a certification by the Commission or an examination and audit by the Commission under this title, or

"(B) to fail to furnish to the Commission any records, books, or information requested by it for purposes of this title.

"(2) Any person who violates the provisions of paragraph (1) shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

"(e)(1) It is unlawful for any person knowingly and willfully to give or accept any kickback or any illegal payment in connection with any benefits received by any candidate, or the authorized committees of such candidate, who receives benefits under this title.

"(2) Any person who violates the provisions of paragraph (1) shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

"(3) In addition to the penalty provided by paragraph (2), any person who accepts any kickback or illegal benefit in connection with any benefits received by any candidate pursuant to the provisions of this title, or received by the authorized committees of such candidate, shall pay to the Secretary for deposit in the Fund, an amount equal to 125 percent of the kickback or benefit received.

"JUDICIAL REVIEW

"SEC. 508. (a) Any agency action by the Commission made under the provisions of this title shall be subject to review by the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit upon petition filed in such court within thirty days after the agency action by the Commission for which review is sought. It shall be the duty of the Court of Appeals, ahead of all matters not filed under this title, to advance on the docket and expeditiously take action on all petitions filed pursuant to this title.

"(b) The provisions of chapter 7 of title 5, United States Code, apply to judicial review of any agency action, as defined in section 551(13) of title 5, United States Code, by the Commission.

"PARTICIPATION BY COMMISSION IN JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS

"SEC. 509. (a) The Commission is authorized to appear in and defend against any action instituted under this section and under section 508 either by attorneys employed in its office or by counsel whom it may appoint without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointments in the competitive service, and whose compensation it may fix without regard to the provisions of chapter 51 and subchapter III of chapter 53 of such title.

"(b) The Commission is authorized through attorneys and counsel described in subsection (a), to institute actions in the district courts of the United States to seek recovery of any amounts determined under section 507 to be payable to the Secretary.

"(c) The Commission is authorized, through attorneys and counsel described in subsection (a), to petition the courts of the United States for such injunctive relief as is appropriate in order to implement any provision of this title.

"(d) The Commission is authorized on behalf of the United States to appeal from, and to petition the Supreme Court for certiorari to review, judgments or decrees entered with respect to actions in which it appears, pursuant to the authority provided in this section.

"REPORTS TO CONGRESS; REGULATIONS

"SEC. 510. (a) The Commission shall, as soon as practicable after each election, submit a full report to the Senate setting forth—

"(1) the expenditures (shown in such detail as the Commission determines appropriate) made by each eligible candidate and the authorized committees of such candidate;

"(2) the amounts certified by the Commission under section 505 for payment to each eligible candidate;

"(3) the amount of repayments, if any, required under section 507, and the reasons for each payment required; and

"(4) the balance in the Presidential Election Campaign Fund, and the balance in the Senate Fund and any other account maintained in the Fund.

Each report submitted pursuant to this section shall be printed as a Senate document.

"(b) The Commission is authorized to prescribe such rules and regulations in accordance with the provisions of subsection (c), to conduct such examinations and investigations, and to require the keeping and submission of such books, records, and information, as it deems necessary to carry out the functions and duties imposed on it by this title.

"(c) Thirty days before prescribing any rules or regulation under subsection (b), the Commission shall transmit to the Senate a statement setting forth the proposed rule or regulation and containing a detailed explanation and justification of such rule or regulation.

"AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 511. There are authorized to be appropriated to the Commission for the purpose of carrying out functions under this title, such sums as may be necessary.".

SEC. 3. Section 6096(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended—

(1) by striking out "$1" each place it appears in that subsection and inserting in lieu thereof "$2"; and

(2) by striking out "$2" each place it appears in that subsection and inserting in lieu thereof "$4".

BROADCAST RATES

SEC. 4. Section 315(b)(1) of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 315(b)(1)) is amended by striking the semicolon and inserting in lieu thereof the following: ": Provided, That in the case of candidates for United States Senator in a general election, as such term is defined in section 501(6) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, this provision shall apply only if such candidate has been certified by the Federal Election Commission as eligible to receive benefits under title V of such Act and such candidate is identified or identifiable during 50 percent of the time of any broadcast of a political announcement or advertisement by such candidate;".

REPORTING REQUIREMENTS

SEC. 5. (a) Section 304 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 434) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"(d)(1) Not later than the day after the date on which a candidate for the United States Senate qualifies for the ballot for a general election, as such term is defined in section 501(6), or, if such candidate is a candidate in a State which has a primary election to qualify for such ballot after September 1, within 7 days after the date such candidate wins in such primary, whichever occurs first, each such candidate in such election shall file with the Commission a declaration of whether or not such candidate intends to make expenditures in excess of the amount of the limitation on expenditures for such election, as determined under section 503(b).

"(2) Any declaration filed pursuant to paragraph (1) may be amended or changed at any time within 7 days after the filing of such declaration. Such amended declaration may not be amended or changed further.

"(e)(1) Any candidate for the United States Senate who qualifies for the ballot for a general election, as such term is defined in section 501(6)—

"(A) who is not eligible to receive benefits under section 502, and

"(B) who either raises aggregate contributions or makes or obligates to make aggregate expenditures for such election which exceed 75 percent of the amount of the limitation determined under section 503(b) for such Senate election, shall file a report with the Commission within 24 hours after such contributions have been raised or such expenditures have been made or obligated to be made, or within 24 hours after the date of qualification for the general election ballot, whichever is later, setting forth the candidate's total contributions and total expenditures for such election, and thereafter shall file additional reports with the Commission within 24 hours after each time additional contributions are raised or expenditures are made, or are obligated to be made which aggregate an additional 5 percent of such limit. Such reports shall continue to be filed pursuant to the provisions of this section until such candidate has raised aggregate contributions or made or has obligated to make aggregate expenditures equal to 133⅓ percent of the limit provided for such State pursuant to section 503(b).

"(2) The Commission, within 24 hours after each such report has been filed, shall notify each candidate in the election involved who is eligible to receive benefits pursuant to the provisions of this title under section 504, about such report, and after an opposing candidate has raised aggregate contributions or made or has obligated to make aggregate expenditures in excess of the limit provided for such State pursuant to section 503(b), the Commission shall certify, pursuant to the provisions of subsection (i), such eligibility to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment of any amount to which such eligible candidate is entitled.

"(3) Notwithstanding the reporting requirement established in this subsection, the Commission may make its own determination that a candidate in a general election, as such term is defined in section 501(6), who is not eligible to receive benefits under section 504, has raised aggregate contributions or made or has obligated to make aggregate expenditures for such election which exceed the amount of the limitation determined under section 503(b) for such election. The Commission, within 24 hours after making such determination, shall notify each candidate in the general election involved who is eligible to receive benefits under section 504 about such determination, and shall certify, pursuant to the provisions of subsection (i), such eligibility to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment of any amount to which such candidate is entitled.

"(f)(1) All independent expenditures, if any, (including those described in subsection (b)(6)(B)(iii)) made by any person after the date of the last Federal election with regard to a general election, as such term is defined in section 501(6), and all obligations to make such expenditures incurred by any person during such period, if any, shall be reported by such person to the Commission as provided in paragraph (2), if such expenditure or obligation is described in such paragraph.

"(2) Independent expenditures by any person as referred to in paragraph (1) shall be reported within 24 hours after the aggregate amount of such expenditures incurred or obligated first exceeds $10,000. Thereafter, independent expenditures referred to in such paragraph, made by the same person in the same election, shall be reported within 24 hours after each time the aggregate amount of such expenditures incurred or obligated, not yet reported under this subparagraph, exceeds $5,000.

"(3) Each report under this subsection shall be filed with the Commission and the Secretary of State for the State of the election involved and shall contain (A) the information required by subsection (b)(6)(B)(iii) of this section, and (B) a statement filed under penalty of perjury by the person making the independent expenditures, or by the person incurring the obligation to make such expenditures, as the case may be, that identifies the candidate whom the independent expenditures are actually intended to help elect or defeat. The Commission shall, within 24 hours after such report is made, notify each candidate in the election involved who is eligible to receive benefits pursuant to section 504(a)(1)(C) of this Act, about each such report, and shall certify such eligibility to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment in full of any amount to which such candidate is entitled.

"(4)(A) Notwithstanding the reporting requirements established in this subsection, the Commission may make its own determination that a person has made independent expenditures, or has incurred an obligation to make such expenditures, as the case may be, with regard to a general election, as defined in section 501(6), that in the aggregate total more than the applicable amount specified in paragraph (2).

"(B) The Commission shall, within 24 hours after such determination is made, notify each candidate in the election involved who is eligible to receive benefits under section 504(a)(1)(C) about each determination under subparagraph (A), and shall certify, pursuant to the provisions of subsection (i), such eligibility to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment in full of any amount to which such candidate is entitled.

"(g)(1) When two or more persons make an expenditure or expenditures in coordination, consultation, or concert (as described in paragraph (2) or otherwise) for the purpose of promoting the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate, each such person shall report to the Commission, under subsection (f), the amount of such expenditure or expenditures made by such person in coordination, consultation, or concert with such other person or persons when the total amount of all expenditures made by such persons in coordination, consultation, or concert with each other exceeds the applicable amount provided in such subsection.

"(2) An expenditure by one person shall constitute an expenditure in coordination, consultation, or concert with another person where—

"(A) there is any arrangement, coordination, or direction with respect to the expenditure between such persons making the expenditures, including any officer, director, employee or agent of such person;

"(B) in the same two-year election cycle, one of the persons making the expenditures (including any officer, director, employee or agent of such person) is or has been, with respect to such expenditures—

"(i) authorized by such other person to raise or expend funds on behalf of such other person; or

"(ii) receiving any form of compensation or reimbursement from such other person or an agent of such other person;

"(C) one of the persons making expenditures (including any officer, director, employee or agent of such person) has communicated with, advised, or counseled such other person in connection with such expenditure; or

"(D) one of the persons making expenditures and such other person making expenditures each retain the professional services of the same individual or person in connection with such expenditures.

"(h)(1) Every political committee, as defined in section 301(4), active in non-Federal elections and maintaining separate accounts for this purpose shall file with the Commission reports of funds received into and disbursements made from such accounts for activities which may influence an election to any Federal office. For purposes of this section, activities which may influence an election to any Federal office include, but are not limited to—

"(A) voter registration and get-out-the-vote drives directed to the general public in connection with any election in which Federal candidates appear on the ballot;

"(B) general public political advertising which includes references, however incidental, to clearly identified Federal as well as non-Federal candidates for public office; or which does not clearly identify Federal candidates but urges support for or opposition to all the candidates of a political party or other candidates in a classification or context which includes Federal candidates; and

"(C) any other activities which require an allocation of costs between a political committee's Federal and non-Federal accounts reflecting the impact on Federal elections in accordance with regulations prescribed or Advisory Opinions rendered by the Commission.

"(2) Reports required to be filed by this subsection shall be filed for the same time-periods required for political committees under section 304(a), and shall include:

"(A) a separate statement, for each of the activities in connection with which a report is required under paragraph (1), of the aggregate total of disbursements from the non-Federal accounts; and

"(B) supporting schedules, providing an identification of each donor together with the amount and date of each donation with regard to those receipts of the non-Federal account which comprise disbursements reported under subparagraph (A), provided, however, that such schedules are required only for donations from any one source aggregating in excess of $200 in any calendar year.

"(3) Reports required to be filed by this subsection need not include donations made to or on behalf of non-Federal candidates or political organizations in accordance with the financing and reporting requirements of State laws, or other disbursements from the non-Federal accounts in support of exclusively non-Federal election activities, provided that such donations or disbursements are governed solely by such State laws and not subject to paragraph (1) of this subsection.

"(i) The certification required by this section shall be made by the Commission on the basis of reports filed with such Commission in accordance with the provisions of this Act, or on the basis of such Commission's own investigation or determination, notwithstanding the provisions of section 505(a).

"(j) Within 15 days after a candidate for the Senate qualifies for the primary ballot under applicable State law, such candidate shall file with the Commission, a declaration stating whether or not such candidate intends to expend from his personal funds, and the funds of his immediate family, and incur personal loans, in connection with his campaign for such office, in the aggregate of $250,000 or more, for the election cycle.

"(k)(1) Any candidate for the United States Senate who expends from his personal funds and the funds of his immediate family, and incurs personal loans, in connection with his campaign for such office, in the aggregate of $250,000 or more, for the election cycle, shall file a report with the Commission within 24 hours after such expenditures have been made or loans incurred. Thereafter the expenditures referred to in this paragraph shall be reported within 24 hours after each time the aggregate of such expenditures or loans exceeds $10,000.

"(2) The Commission within 24 hours after a report has been filed under paragraph (1) shall notify each candidate in the election involved who is eligible to receive payments pursuant to the provisions of this title under section 504 about each such report.

"(3) Notwithstanding the reporting requirements in this subsection, the Commission may make its own determination that a candidate for the United States Senate has made expenditures from the personal funds of such candidate or the funds of any member of the immediate family of such candidate or incurred personal loans in connection with his campaign aggregating in excess of $250,000, or thereafter in increments of $10,000 during the election cycle. The Commission within 24 hours after making such determination shall notify each candidate in the general election involved who is eligible to receive benefits under section 504 about each such determination.".

(b) Section 301(8)(B) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 431(8)(B)) is amended by—

(1) inserting "except for purposes of reporting and disclosing, pursuant to section 304, such amounts in excess of $200," at the beginning of subparagraphs (v), (viii), (x), and (xii); and

(2) inserting at the end thereof the following:

"(C) The exclusions provided in subparagraphs (v), (viii), (x), and (xii) of paragraph (B) shall not be exclusions from the definition of contributions for purposes of reporting contributions as required by section 304, and all such contributions shall be reported.".

(c) Section 301(4) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"For purposes of this section, the receipt of contributions or the making of, or obligating to make expenditures shall be determined by the Commission on the basis of facts and circumstances, in whatever combination, demonstrating a purpose of influencing any election for Federal office, including, but not limited to, the representations made by any person soliciting funds about their intended uses; the identification by name of individuals who are candidates for Federal office, as defined in paragraph (2) of this section, or of any political party, in general public political advertising; and the proximity to any primary, run-off, or general election of general public political advertising designed or reasonably calculated to influence voter choice in that election.".

(d) Section 301(9)(B) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 431(9)(B)) is amended by—

(1) inserting "except for purposes of reporting and disclosing, pursuant to section 304, such amounts in excess of $200," at the beginning of subparagraphs (iv), (vi), (viii), and (ix); and

(2) inserting at the end thereof the following:

"(C) The exclusions provided in subparagraphs (iv), (vi), (viii), and (ix) of paragraph (B) shall not be exclusions from the definition of expenditures for purposes of reporting expenditures as required by this Act, and all such expenditures shall be reported.".

(e) Section 301 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 431) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(20) The term 'election cycle' means—

"(A) in the case of a candidate or the authorized committees of a candidate, the term beginning on the day after the date of the last previous general election for such office or seat which such candidate seeks and ending on the date of the next election; or

"(B) for all other persons, the term beginning on the first day following the date of the last general election and ending on the date of the next election.".

(f) Section 304(b)(2) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 434(b)(2)) is amended by striking out "for the reporting period and calendar year," and inserting in lieu thereof "for the reporting period and calendar year in the case of committees other than authorized committees of a candidate, and for the reporting period and election cycle in the case of authorized committees of candidates,".

(g)(1) Section 304(b)(4) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 434(b)(4)) is amended by striking out "for the reporting period and calendar year," and inserting in lieu thereof "for the reporting period and calendar year in the case of committees other than authorized committees of a candidate, and for the reporting period and election cycle in the case of authorized committees of candidates,".

(2) Section 304(b)(3) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 434(b)(3)) is amended—

(A) in subparagraph (A), by inserting after "calendar year," the following: "in the case of committees other than authorized committees or in excess of $200 within the election cycle in the case of authorized committees,";

(B) in subparagraph (F), by inserting after "calendar year," the following: "in the case of committees other than authorized committees or in excess of $200 within the election cycle in the case of authorized committees,"; and

(C) in subparagraph (G), by inserting after "calendar year," the following: "in the case of committees other than authorized committees or in excess of $200 within the election cycle in the case of authorized committees,".

(3) Section 304(b)(5)(A) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 434(b)(5)(A)) is amended by inserting after "calendar year," the following: "in the case of committees other than authorized committees or in excess of $200 within the election cycle in the case of authorized committees,".

(4) Section 304(b)(6)(A) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 434(b)(6)(A)) is amended by striking out "calendar year" and inserting in lieu thereof "election cycle".

(h) Section 301(13) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 431(13)) is amended by striking out "mailing address" and inserting in lieu thereof "permanent residence address".

(i) Section 304(b)(5)(A) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 434(b)(5)(A)) is amended by adding before the semicolon at the end thereof the following: ", except that if a person to whom an expenditure is made is merely providing personal or consulting services and is in turn making expenditures to other persons who provide goods or services to the candidate or his authorized committees, the name and address of such other person, together with the date, amount and purpose of such expenditure shall also be disclosed".

LIMITS ON CONTRIBUTIONS BY MULTICANDIDATE POLITICAL COMMITTEES AND SEPARATE SEGREGATED FUNDS

SEC. 6. (a) Section 315(a)(2) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 441a(a)(2)) is amended by—

(1) striking out "or" at the end of subparagraph (B);

(2) striking out the period at the end of subparagraph (C) and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon; and

(3) adding at the end the following new subparagraphs:

"(D) to any candidate for the office of Member of, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner to, the House of Representatives and the authorized political committees of such candidate with respect to—

"(i) a general or special election for the office of Representative in, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner to, the Congress (including any primary election, convention, or caucus relating to such general or special election) which exceed $100,000 ($125,000 if at least two candidates qualify for the ballot in the general or special election involved and at least two candidates qualify for the ballot in a primary election relating to such general or special election), when added to the total of contributions previously made by multicandidate political committees and separate segregated funds, other than multicandidate committees of a political party, to such candidate and his authorized political committees with respect to such general or special election (including any primary election, convention, or caucus relating to such general or special election); or

"(ii) a runoff election for the office of Representative in, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner to, the Congress which exceed $25,000 when added to the total of contributions previously made by multicandidate political committees and separate segregated funds, other than multicandidate committees of a political party, to such candidate and his authorized political committees with respect to such runoff election;

"(E) to any candidate for the office of Senator and the authorized political committees of such candidate with respect to—

"(i) a general or special election for such office (including any primary election, convention, or caucus relating to such general or special election) which, when added to the total of contributions previously made by multicandidate political committees and separate segregated funds, other than multicandidate committees of a political party, to such candidate and his authorized political committees with respect to such general or special election (including any primary election, convention, or caucus relating to such general or special election) exceeds an amount equal to 30 percent of the amount provided in section 315(i); or

"(ii) a runoff election for the office of United States Senator which exceeds, when added to the total of contributions previously made by multicandidate political committees and separate segregated funds, other than multicandidate committees of a political party, to such candidate and his authorized political committees with respect to such runoff election, an amount equal to 30 percent of the limitation on expenditures provided in section 315(j), for runoff elections; or

"(F) to any State committee of a political party, including any subordinate committee of a State committee, which, when added to the total of contributions previously made by multi-candidate political committees and separate segregated funds, other than multi-candidate committees of a political party, to such State committee exceeds an amount equal to—

"(i) 2 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the State of such State committee, or whichever is greater. The limitation of this subparagraph shall apply separately with respect to each two-year Federal election cycle, covering a period from the day following the date of the last Federal general election held in that State through the date of the next regularly scheduled Federal general election.".

"(ii) $25,000,

(b)(1) Section 315 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 441a) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(i) For purposes of subsection (a)(2)(E)(i), such limitation shall be an amount equal to 67 percent of the aggregate of $400,000, plus—

"(1) in States having a voting age population of 4 million or less, 30 cents multiplied by the voting age population; or

"(2) in States having a voting age population over 4 million, 30 cents multiplied by 4 million plus 25 cents multiplied by the voting age population over 4 million; except that such amount shall not be less than $950,000, nor more than $5,500,000.

"(j) For purposes of subsection (a)(2)(E)(ii), such limitation shall be an amount equal to 20 percent of the aggregate of $400,000, plus—

"(1) in States having a voting age population of 4 million or less, 30 cents multiplied by the voting age population; or

"(2) in States having a voting age population over 4 million, 30 cents multiplied by 4 million plus 25 cents multiplied by the voting age population over 4 million; except that such amount shall not be less than $950,000, nor more than $5,500,000.".

(2) Section 315(c) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 441a(c)) is amended by—

(A) striking out "subsection (b) and subsection (d)" in paragraph (1) and inserting in lieu thereof "subsections (b), (d), (i), and (j)"; and

(B) inserting "for subsections (b) and (d) and the term 'base period' means the calendar year of the first election after the date of enactment of the Senatorial Election Campaign Act of 1987, for subsections (i) and (j)" before the period at the end of paragraph (2)(B).

(c) Section 315(d) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 441a(d)) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1), by striking out "(2) and (3)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(2), (3), (4), and (5)";

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(4) No congressional campaign committee may accept, during any two-year election cycle, contributions from multicandidate political committees and separate segregated funds which, in the aggregate, exceed 30 percent of the total expenditures which may be made during such election cycle by that campaign committee on behalf of candidates for Senator, Representative, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner pursuant to the provisions of paragraph (3).

"(5) No national committee of a political party may accept contributions from multicandidate political committees and separate segregated funds, during any two-year election cycle, which, in the aggregate, equal an amount in excess of an amount equal to 2 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the United States.

"(6) The limitations contained in paragraphs (2) and (3) shall apply to any expenditure through general public political advertising, whenever made, which clearly identifies by name an individual who is, or is seeking nomination to be, a candidate in the general election for Federal office of President, Senator or Representative; provided that this paragraph shall not apply to direct mail communications designed primarily for fundraising purposes which make only incidental reference to any one or more Federal candidates.".

INTERMEDIARY OR CONDUIT

SEC. 7. (a) Section 315(a)(8) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 441a(a)(8)) is amended to read as follows:

"(8) For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) contributions made by a person, either directly or indirectly, to or on behalf of a particular candidate, including contributions which are in any way earmarked or otherwise directed through an intermediary or conduit to such candidate, shall be treated as contributions from such person to such candidate;

"(B) contributions made by a person either directly or indirectly, to or on behalf of a particular candidate, through an intermediary or conduit, including all contributions delivered or arranged to be delivered by such intermediary or conduit, shall also be treated as contributions from the intermediary or conduit, if—

"(i) the contributions made through the intermediary or conduit are in the form of a check or other negotiable instrument made payable to the conduit or intermediary rather than the intended recipient; or

"(ii) the conduit or intermediary is a political committee, other than an authorized committee of a candidate, within the meaning of section 301(4), or an officer, employee or other agent of such a political committee, or an officer, employee or other agent of a connected organization, within the meaning of section 301(7), acting in its behalf; or

"(iii) the conduit or intermediary is required to register as a lobbyist or lobby organization as defined under 2 U.S.C. § 266, or an officer, employee or other agent of such an organization."

"(C) the limitations imposed by this paragraph shall not apply to—

"(i) bona fide joint fundraising efforts conducted solely for the purpose of sponsorship of a fundraising reception, dinner, or other event in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the Commission by (I) two or more candidates, (II) two or more national, State, or local committees of a political party within the meaning of section 301(4) acting on their own behalf, or (III) a special committee formed by (a) two or more candidates or (b) one or more candidates and one or more national, State, or local committees of a political party acting on their own behalf;

"(ii) fundraising efforts for the benefit of a candidate which are conducted by another candidate within the meaning of section 301(2).

In all cases where contributions are made by a person either directly or indirectly to or on behalf of a particular candidate through an intermediary or conduit, the intermediary or conduit shall report the original source and the intended recipient of such contribution to the Commission and to the intended recipient.".

INDEPENDENT EXPENDITURES

SEC. 8. (a) Section 301(17) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 431(17)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "An expenditure shall constitute an expenditure in coordination, consultation, or concert with a candidate and shall not constitute an 'independent expenditure' where—

"(A) there is any arrangement, coordination, or direction with respect to the expenditure between the candidate or the candidate's agent and the person (including any officer, director, employee or agent of such person) making the expenditure;

"(B) in the same election cycle, the person making the expenditure (including any officer, director, employee or agent of such person) is or has been—

"(i) authorized to raise or expend funds on behalf of the candidate or the candidate's authorized committees,

"(ii) serving as an officer of the candidate's authorized committees, or

"(iii) receiving any form of compensation or reimbursement from the candidate, the candidate's authorized committees, or the candidate's agent;

"(C) the person making the expenditure (including any officer, director, employee or agent of such person) has communicated with, advised, or counseled the candidate or the candidate's agents at any time on the candidate's plans, projects, or needs relating to the candidate's pursuit of nomination for election, or election to Federal office, in the same election cycle, including any advice relating to the candidate's decision to seek Federal office;

"(D) the person making the expenditure retains the professional services of any individual or other person also providing those services to the candidate in connection with the candidate's pursuit of nomination for election, or election to Federal office, in the same election cycle, including any services relating to the candidate's decision to seek Federal office;

"(E) the person making the expenditure (including any officer, director, employee or agent of such person) has communicated or consulted at any time during the same election cycle about the candidate's plans, projects, or needs relating to the candidate's pursuit of election to Federal office, with: (i) any officer, director, employee or agent of a party committee that has made or intends to make expenditures or contributions, pursuant to subsections (a), (d), or (h) of section 315 in connection with the candidate's campaign; or (ii) any person whose professional services have been retained by a political party committee that has made or intends to make expenditures or contributions pursuant to subsections (a), (d), or (h) of section 315 in connection with the candidate's campaign; or

"(F) the expenditure is based on information provided to the person making the expenditure directly or indirectly by the candidate or the candidate's agents about the candidate's plans, projects, or needs, provided that the candidate or the candidate's agent is aware that the other person has made or is planning to make expenditures expressly advocating the candidate's election.".

INDEPENDENT EXPENDITURE BROADCAST DISCLOSURE

SEC. 9. Section 318(a)(3) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 441d(a)(3)) is amended by deleting the period at the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof the following: ", except that whenever any person makes an independent expenditure through (A) a broadcast communication on any television station, the broadcast communication shall include a statement clearly readable to the viewer that appears continuously during the entire length of such communication setting forth the name of such person and in the case of a political committee, the name of any connected or affiliated organization, or (B) a newspaper, magazine, outdoor advertising facility, direct mailing or other type of general public political advertising, the communication shall include, in addition to the other information required by this subsection, the following sentence: 'The cost of presenting this communication is not subject to any campaign contribution limits.', and a statement setting forth the name of the person who paid for the communication and, in the case of a political committee, the name of any connected or affiliated organization and the name of the president or treasurer of such organization.".

SEC. 14 Section 318(a) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 441d) is amended by—

(1) striking out the period at the end of paragraph (3) and inserting in lieu thereof "; and"; and

(2) adding at the end thereof the following:

"(4) if paid for or authorized by a general election candidate for the Senate, or the authorized committee of such candidate who has not agreed to abide by the expenditure limits in section 503, such advertisement or announcement shall contain the following sentence: 'This candidate has not agreed to abide by the spending limits for this Senate election campaign set forth in the Federal Election Campaign Act.'.".

EXCESS CAMPAIGN FUNDS

SEC. 15. Section 313 of the Federal Elections Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 439A) is amended by striking out "political party;" through the end of the paragraph and inserting in lieu thereof "political party.".

POLITICAL COMMITTEE POSTAL RATES

SEC. 16. Subsection (e) of section 3626 of title 39, United States Code, is hereby repealed.

CERTIFICATION BY PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATES ACCEPTING PUBLIC FUNDS CONCERNING COMPLIANCE WITH FUNDRAISING AND EXPENDITURE LIMITATIONS

SEC. 17. Title 26 U.S.C., Section 9006 is amended by adding at the end of that section the following subsection:

"(d) In order to be eligible to receive any payments under this section, a candidate described in sections (b) and (c) above shall certify to the Commission, under penalty of perjury, that during the Presidential primary and the general election period, the candidate, and his or her authorized committees and agents, has not and will not solicit, receive or spend, directly or indirectly, any funds in connection with a federal, state or local election, including funds for get out the vote, voter registration and generic campaign activities unless such funds are subject to the provisions of this Act, including its limitations and prohibitions. For purpose of this subsection, the term "agent" includes but is not limited to any person who is, or has been authorized to raise funds; who is, or has been, an officer of any authorized committee; who is, or has been, receiving any form of compensation or reimbursement from the candidate or his authorized committees; who has, or has had, actual oral or written authority, either express, or implied, to make or authorize the making or expenditures on behalf of a candidate or to authorize the receipt of contributions on behalf of a candidate.

"SOFT MONEY"

SEC. 18. (a) Insert after 2 U.S.C. § 441(a)(d)(2) the following new section:

(3) A State committee of a political party, including any subordinate committee of a political party, may not make any expenditure in connection with the general election campaign of any candidate for President of the United States who is affiliated with such party which exceeds an amount equal to 4 cents multiplied by the voting age population of that State (as certified under subsection (g) of this section).

(b) Title 2, U.S.C., Section 431 is amended by repealing the following clauses: clause (x) and clause (xii) of subsection 431(8)(B) and clause (viii) and clause (ix) of subsection 431(9)(B).

(c) At the appropriate place in the Act, insert the following new section.

Any amount solicited, received or spent by a national, state or local committee of a political party, directly or indirectly, shall be subject to the provisions of this Act, if such amount is solicited, received or spent in connection with a federal election. No part of such amount may be allocated to a non-Federal account or otherwise maintained in, or paid from, an account that is not subject to this Act. This section shall not apply to amounts described in section 431(b)(B)(viii) or Title 2.

For purposes of this section, the term "in connection with a federal election" includes any activity that may affect a federal election including but not limited to the following:

(1) voter registration and get out the vote activities;

(2) generic activities, including but not limited to any broadcasting, newspaper, magazine, billboard, mail, or similar type of communication or public advertising;

(3) campaign materials which identify a federal candidate, regardless of any other candidate who may also be identified.

FEDERAL ELECTION COMMISSION REFORM

SEC. 19. Section 306(a)(1) of the Federal Election Campaign Act 1971 (2 U.S.C. 437e(a)(1)) is amended by—

(1) striking out "6 members" and inserting in lieu thereof "7 members"; and

(2) amending the last sentence to read as follows: "No more than 4 members of the Commission appointed under this paragraph may be affiliated with the same political party, and such appointments shall be made in a manner to assure that the same political party shall not have 4 or more members affiliated with such party on such Commission for two succeeding years.".

(b) Section 306(a)(2) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 437c(a)(2)) is amended to read as follows:

"(2)(A) Members of the Commission shall serve for terms of 7 years, except that of the members appointed after April 30, 1989—

"(i) one of the two members appointed for the term beginning May 1, 1991, shall be appointed for a term of 6 years;

"(ii) one of the two members appointed for the term beginning May 1, 1993, shall be appointed for a term of 6 years; and

"(iii) one of the two members appointed for the term beginning May 1, 1995, shall be appointed for a term of 6 years.

"(B) One additional member of the Commission shall be appointed for a term beginning May 1, 1989, and shall be appointed for a term of 5 years.".

SEVERABILITY

SEC. 20. If any provision of this Act or any amendment made by this Act, or the application of any such provision to any person or circumstance is held invalid, the validity of any other such provision and the application of such provision to other persons and circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 21. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b), this Act and the amendments made by this Act shall become effective for any election held in 1990 or thereafter.

(b) The amendments made by section 3, section 7, section 8, and section 9 shall become effective on the date of enactment of this Act.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I am joining Senator BOREN today in the introduction of campaign finance reform legislation. This bill is based upon legislation considered on the Senate floor in the last Congress that would have imposed overall spending limits on Senate election campaigns. The bill this year also includes new provisions that would reestablish spending limits in the Presidential campaign system and deal with the problem of soft money.

It has been 14 years since enactment of the current system of campaign finance. The ensuing years have witnessed continual increases in campaign spending that have substantially altered the political process by placing paramount importance in fundraising.

I believe the time has now arrived where a consensus exists among Members of Congress that the current campaign finance system is in need of change. Republicans and Democrats in the House and Republicans and Democrats in the Senate agree that the system of financing Federal election campaigns no longer serves the best interests of our Nation. Money has overtaken the election process. It has created a system which is demeaning to Congress as the elected representatives of the people, demeaning to our constituents who elect us to office, and demeaning to the Nation and its great democratic traditions.

I am pleased that the Democratic and Republican leadership in the House have given a priority to campaign finance reform legislation this year. As majority leader in the Senate I, too, will give a priority to this effort. I believe the Republican leader, Senator DOLE, will also.

Campaign finance reform was much debated in the last Congress and although considerable progress was made in defining our interests, I recognize that Republicans and Democrats remain far apart on this issue. While we may agree that the present system does not serve this Nation's interest, we remain far apart on just what "reform" means.

Unfortunately, some would define the problem as that fundraising technique which the other political party is most able to utilize. Not surprisingly then, the solution they propose is to impose greater limits on the means by which the other party raises campaign funds.

That should not be the standard that guides this legislative process. It is my hope that we can avoid the partisan polarization of this issue which occurred in the last Congress. I would like for representatives of the two parties in the Senate to get together, discuss what each sees as the problem and find areas where we can agree that change is in order.

The legislation that Senator BOREN and I are introducing today is a starting point. We seek no partisan advantage but instead propose a system that is fair to Republicans and Democrats, incumbents and challengers alike. The bill includes several provisions which I believe must be a part of true reform. That includes an overall limit on campaign spending, restrictions that reduce the role of political action committees, limits on the receipt and expenditure of so-called soft money outside Federal limitations, and rules governing independent expenditures. In addition, we must also address the problems which have recently developed in the Presidential campaign finance system.

As Members of Congress, we are caught up in a tread mill of campaign spending that moves faster with each election cycle. Every year, we must devote more and more time to the financing of campaigns, both for ourselves and our colleagues. There is not a Member of Congress today who can be pleased with the current system; with the demands the pursuit of money places on our time to be effective legislators; or with the attitudes the current system engenders in the American people.

Final figures have not yet been compiled for the 1988 elections so we don't know to what extent campaign spending growth continued to escalate in the last election. However, it would not be surprising if spending continued to escalate as it did in each previous election cycle. In the 1986 elections, total spending for House and Senate candidates was more than $420 million, a 20-percent increase over the previous election and a 400-percent increase over the amount of money spent by House and Senate candidates in 1976; the first election after enactment of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1974. That suggests a rapidly changing campaign finance system not contemplated when the current rules were written.

In many races, campaigns have degenerated into a nonstop fundraising effort to finance unlimited television commercials, without time for candidates to communicate directly to the electorate.

The effect of this continuing rise in campaign spending has been to make the political process increasingly dependent on money. Candidates for Federal office must start fundraising earlier and devote more and more of their energies and time to the effort. Based on the average cost of a Senate campaign, a Senator must raise approximately $10,000 a week over a 6-year term to run for office. Senators must spend too great a proportion of their available time on fundraising at the expense of developing policy to guide our Nation.

There are many ways to improve the current campaign finance system but only an overall limit on campaign spending will address the central problem with the current system. As a result of the Supreme Court decision in Buckley versus Valeo, candidates for Federal office cannot be compelled to limit their spending. Instead, such limits must be voluntarily agreed to.

In the past, I have proposed legislation establishing a matching system of public finance which would be available to candidates who agree to voluntary spending limits. I believe that is a good approach because it limits fundraising demands and because it strikes an appropriate balance between the requirement that a candidate show that he is a serious candidate with a base of voter support and the granting of substantial public funds. I would again prefer this approach but out of deference to the concerns of those who oppose public funding of elections, this legislation only proposes public funds where an opposing candidate has exceeded the voluntary spending limits.

A commonly expressed criticism of spending limits is that they inherently benefit incumbents. I agree that can be the case if the spending limits are set so low that a challenger does not have the financial resources to reach the voting public. On the other hand, if spending limits are set sufficiently high that a challenger can communicate effectively with the voters, any system of limits will be of prime benefit to challengers because it is incumbents who now have the greatest access to money and will thus be most effected by spending limitations.

This legislation would establish generous limits on general election campaign spending ranging from $950,000 in the smallest States to $5.5 million in the largest States. That should be enough funds to get their message across without distorting the election process.

Under the current system, incumbents have an overwhelming advantage raising campaign funds over their challengers. Every PAC in Washington can attest to that. They simply will not give contributions to challengers to run against an incumbent who votes almost every day on legislation affecting the PAC.

The numbers bear this out. In the 1986 Senate election, the last one for which final numbers are available, incumbents raised almost twice as much as challengers in total campaign receipts. Of the 68 candidates for the Senate in the 1986 election, 42 were incumbent Members of either the House or Senate. Of those 42 incumbents, 31 spent more than would be permitted by this legislation. In other words, 74 percent of the incumbents in that election would have been limited by this legislation. In contrast, only 6 of the 26 nonincumbent challengers—23 percent—would have been limited by this bill.

Although political action committees have been around for decades, their growth really began with the enactment of the 1974 campaign finance legislation. There are about seven times as many PAC's today as there were in 1974 and the role they play in the election process has been completely transformed. Particularly in the House, but also in the Senate, candidates have become increasingly reliant on these interest group committees to fund federal election campaigns.

While I believe changes are necessary to reduce the importance of PAC's in congressional elections, I recognize that political action committees, representing the interests of millions of voters, have a valid role to play. That role is valid only so long as it is in perspective. This legislation attempts to reduce candidate reliance on PAC's by limiting to 30 percent their share of total campaign receipts.

This restriction will also be of substantial benefit to challengers because they now have such an overwhelming disadvantage in raising PAC funds. In the 1986 election, incumbent Senators raised almost 2½ times as much from PAC's as did challengers. And, most of that PAC money that was raised by challengers was raised by those who were Members of the House of Representatives and thus more able to depend on PAC's than challengers from outside of Washington.

Thirty-nine of those forty-two incumbents raised more contributions from PAC's than would be permitted under this legislation. In contrast, of the 26 challengers running for the Senate who were not Members of Congress, only 10 raised enough contributions from PAC's to be effected by the limits in this bill. This bill would have reduced the PAC contributions received by 93 percent of the incumbents running in the last election while it would have limited the PAC contributions of only 38 percent of the challengers.

As Federal law has imposed restrictions on the amount of money spent and raised in connection with Federal elections, increasing use has been made of so-called soft money used outside the limits of the law. These money funds are spent for State, local, and national party activities which theoretically, do not directly benefit a candidate for Federal office and are therefore, not covered by the limits of the Federal law.

In reality, however, soft money is often used to circumvent Federal election law limitations. These unregulated funds from corporations, unions, and wealthy individuals are spent for voter registration drives, get out the vote efforts, party building activities and generic advertising often designed specifically to benefit Federal candidates.

If permitted to continue, soft money will severely undermine Federal election law limitations, particularly if spending limits are imposed on congressional races. This legislation attempts to address this problem by bringing under Federal limits all spending which is in connection with a Federal election, including voter registration, get out the vote, party building, and generic advertising activities which may affect a Federal election.

This is a tough new provision designed to deal comprehensively with the soft money problem. I recognize that some concern will be expressed that these restrictions may interfere with party committee activities which are not intended to benefit Federal candidates. If that is the case, I am certainly willing to consider alternatives but I join Senator BOREN in a belief that this issue must be addressed.

The last Presidential election witnessed a return to the pre-Watergate era when wealthy individuals bankrolled campaigns for the Presidency. Both political parties raised more than $60 million outside the limits of the law effectively ending the Presidential spending limits. We believe it is time to restore those limits to the law.

Under the Presidential public funding system, the national parties were permitted to spend about $8.3 million in 1988 to supplement the $46 million of public funds provided to the Presidential candidate. In addition, State party committees were permitted to spend unlimited amounts of money for "exempt activities," such as voter registration and get out the vote activities and volunteer materials distributed on behalf of the candidate.

In the last election, this "exempt activities" provision was used to channel funds through the State parties to be spent on behalf of the Presidential candidate. Although this has typically been described as a soft money problem, it actually goes further than that. There are no firm figures on this but it has been estimated that of the approximately $60 million raised on behalf of the Presidential candidates perhaps half of the money met the contribution limitations of the law. This so-called hard money was allocated to "exempt activity" expenditures by the State committees. The other half was soft money contributions received from prohibited sources such as corporations and labor unions, and in prohibited amounts, from wealthy individuals giving large sums in excess of the contribution limits.

Although not required by the law, both the Republican National Committee and the Democratic National Committee have partially disclosed their list of large contributors. The RNC for example released a list on Monday of 249 individuals who gave at least $100,000 to the Bush election. The money raised from these individuals was spent at the State level, theoretically, on generic party activities, but in reality on behalf of the Presidential candidate. Both parties are equally at fault. Both campaigns engaged in aggressive fundraising efforts that were clearly in contravention of the spending limits established in the law.

The bill that Senator BOREN and I are introducing today would address this problem in two ways. First, as described above, by specifying that funds spent in connection with a Federal campaign, although not directly on behalf of a Federal campaign, are, in fact, hard money subject to the contribution and expenditure limits of the law. This will remove corporate and individual soft money from the Federal election process. It will not, however, prevent substantial expenditures in the Presidential race through the "exempt activity" provision. We propose to address this problem by repealing the "exempt activities" provision and replacing it with general authority for the State party committees to spend 4 cents per voter on behalf of a Presidential candidate. This will restore independence to the State committees and give them greater latitude in their spending decisions.

This is a substantial departure from current law but it is essential that we take these steps to preserve the presidential public financing system. The State party limits are based on the general 441(d) authority provided in the law to the State and national parties to be spent on behalf of Federal candidates. We have decided, however, to double the spending authority that would go to the State parties for Presidential races. Like the soft money limits included in this legislation, we recognize there will be differences of opinion about this approach to State party activities. We welcome comment and will be receptive to other approaches to save the presidential election finance system.

Except for election years, calls for campaign reform do not galvanize public attention. But there are instances when it is our duty to act even in the absence of public demand. Election campaign reform is precisely such an instance, because it is, by its nature, an issue that does not evoke public demand until there is a scandal. Instead, the current campaign finance system has the much more subtle effect on the public of breeding a growing cynicism in our system of government. While it may not now be reflected in strong support for public financing today, we cannot afford further decline of public confidence in our election system.

As Members of Congress who participate in the campaign funding process, we are all well acquainted with the current system. I don't know of one Member of Congress who is pleased with that system. It is awkward to try to change the system while we must operate within it. To do so opens us up to charges of inconsistency and hypocracy. Yet we must be prepared to move forward, even in the face of such criticisms, because the only realistic alternative is to do nothing. And that is unacceptable.

Many proposals have been offered in the past to make improvement in the campaign finance laws no legislation has been acted upon in the last 10 years. We have been stalemated in our desire to improve the system. This is due in large part because we perceive the issue through the prism of what is in our own personal interest or what we believe to be the interest of the political party of which we are a member. Because the stakes are so great, there is a reluctance to change.

But this issue demands more. We must put aside our self interest and act for the common good. I intend to work to bring all sides together this year to reach an agreement that will restore public confidence in the Federal election campaign finance system.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I congratulate the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma for again bringing this critical matter to the floor of the Senate. The introduction of S. 137 on this day marks a continuation of the effort to stop the ever-spiraling cost of congressional campaigns in this country.

Democratic government is built upon the foundation of public trust. Nothing poisons the public trust faster and more completely than the taint of big money. Mr. President, the congressional campaign financing system has become toxic with money. Those of us who serve here in the Congress often bemoan the lack of public confidence in this institution. We bristle when we have our integrity questioned. We chafe over the burden of having to take our time to go, tin cup in hand, begging to PAC's for the money to run for public office. Yet, we have it in our power to stop the madness—begin to restore the people's confidence in our branch of Government, and rid ourselves of this onerous and demeaning fundraising burden if we will but act to take congressional seats off the auction block.

In the last Congress, I attempted 8 times to get cloture on S. 2 and have a vote in this Senate on the critical matter of campaign finance reform. Progress on S. 2 was stopped 8 times by misguided partisanship.

We have begun a new Congress. We have inaugurated a new President. For the moment there seems to be a sense that we can begin afresh in a bipartisan spirit. I hope that spirit will extend to campaign finance reform. I hope any and all interested Senators will join with me and with Senator MITCHELL and Senator BOREN to try to enact spending limits in this Congress. This is not a partisan issue. Anyone who continues to believe that this bill represents a search for partisan advantage is mistaken. That view is yet another reflection of the growing cynicism about public office in this country. We in this body feed that cynicism every day that we delay action on this critical issue.

Meanwhile, we are doing fundamental violence to our system of government. America's stories of accomplishments reflect America's morals. We teach our children about achievement—about national heroes, about great men who have risen from humble beginnings because of their hard work, honesty, character, and intelligence. The lesson is, anyone can make it. The moral is shoot high, work hard, you can get there, you can be a member of the House or the Senate. But increasingly reality bears little resemblance to those time-honored lessons we teach our young people. Today, to be able to serve in the U.S. House or Senate the size of one's pocketbook often outweights the size of one's intellect, or the quality of one's character. And stamina for fundraisers and receptions has given a new meaning to the traditional concept of hard work.

By example, we in public office are exploding the old myths. By example, we are teaching new lessons and what we are teaching is that public office is for sale, that the end justifies the means, that the little guy is increasingly shut out of politics and out of the process, that the big money and the big spender are what counts. Mr.

President, that is a long way from the American dream and a far cry from front-porch American values.

The ultimate result of the unchecked current system of congressional campaign financing will be to rot this democracy from within. Special interest money is addicting, and we in public office have gotten hooked. Breaking that dependence has to start with the will in this Congress to do so. Hope that that will exists. I hope that we are strong enough. Cleaning up the system must not wait another year. The public is disgusted, and it is past time to take a step toward real reform.

The Boren, Mitchell, Byrd bill sets up voluntary spending limits for Senate candidates and mandatory aggregate limits for PAC's. It has other provisions to deal with "bundling," "soft money," and disclosure. The bill is not perfect, but it is a start. The issue is not going to go away. We will have to deal with it. The only question is when. I hope the answer is soon, and I hope the decision is a positive vote for change.

I don't want to see reform thrust upon us from the outside because of a scandal. I want us to clean up our own act. We have lessened the influence of the special interests by enacting spending limits in Presidential campaigns. Should we not rid the people's branch of the undue influence of special interest money? In the 100th Congress, I put hundreds of editorials in support of cleaning up the congressional campaign financing system in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. These editorials were from newspapers big and small all across this Nation.

The editorial support for reform was evident, still the Senate did not act. We hear much about the power of the press, but the power of the press was not enough to beat the power of the special interests in this body.

And what do the American people get for all of this big money. Enlightening, uplifting campaigns? Hardly. We are seeing new lows and excesses in campaigning with each election cycle.

Left to itself, the problem will only worsen, the sums become more enormous, the public more cynical. But if we have the courage to act, we can turn the corner on the erosion of public trust in the people's branch. We can also do something else that is fundamentally important. We can regain a measure of our own self respect.

This year on March 4, the Congress will celebrate its bicentennial year. There will be celebrations and tributes and speeches marking that momentous occasion. But to this Senator, one who loves this institution for what it has been and could be again, there is nothing that would be more fitting than to enact this legislation in this bicentennial year. It is the right thing to do. I intend to work with my colleagues toward that end.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise today to lend my strong support to the Senate Election Campaign Act of 1989, and to commend my colleague, Senator BOREN, for his dogged efforts to improve the electoral process.

Mr. President, our elected form of government is beseiged by a crisis, a crisis which will erode the process for selecting leaders first established by our founders if an immediate and lasting solution is not found. I speak of the shameful cost of elections in America. Leadership positions are rapidly becoming bastions of the wealthy, because the process by which we elect our representatives has become reduced to one common denominator: money. Rather than red, white and blue, it is the color green which more appropriately symbolizes our elections. It is no coincidence that about one-third of the U.S. Senators are millionaires. Few others can afford the undertaking.

A few numbers will tell the tale of the growing influence of money in American campaigns.

It is no longer uncommon for Senate candidates to spend between $5–$10 million, and even beyond. For my recent successful reelection bid, my campaign spent about $5 million, almost double what it spent in 1982. While my campaigns were expensive, consider the North Carolina Senate race of 1984 in which $26 million was spent, and the nearly $25 million spent in the 1986 Senate race in California. In the 1986 South Dakota Senate race, $22.91 was spent for every vote cast.

In 1974, the average amount spent by Senate candidates was $437,482. Twelve years later, this average was $2.7 million, with winning candidates spending over $3 million.

Although the final numbers are not calculated for the 1988 races, it is estimated that the combined cost of Senate races in 1988 was $464 million; up nearly $40 million from 1986, and a staggering increase from the $88.2 million spent in 1974.

The role of independent expenditures has increased dramatically over the years. In 1978, $168,000 was spent in independent expenditures in Senate races; by 1986, that figure exceeded $5.3 million. For all Federal races combined in 1984, including Presidential, independent expenditures passed the $23 million mark.

The influence of political action committees also continues to rise. The FEC reports PAC contributions accounted for 24 percent of receipts in Senate general elections; up from 13.7 percent in 1972. PACs contributed $132.7 million to congressional candidates in the 1986 election; a significant increase from the $8.5 million contributed in 1972.

Fat cat political spending on Federal races unreported to the FEC has increased dramatically in the form of soft money. Soft money is those funds which are used in Federal elections as well as State and local elections for various grass-roots and party building activities (such as registration efforts and election day "get-out-the-vote" drives), but which are not subject to FEC regulations. In recent years, national parties have raised vast sums from corporate, labor union and individual contributors for State and local parties to spend on such activities on behalf of Presidential and other Federal candidates. It is estimated that each party raised and spent about $20 million for such party building activities during the 1988 Presidential contest, most of it completely unreported at the State or Federal level. This represents a tripling of such spending from 1984.

Although the influence of money in campaigns has grown exponentially, there is hope. The reform process begun in the aftermath of Watergate 14 years ago can be revitalized. Public financing of Federal elections is an idea whose time may have come, albeit a bit late for some like President Teddy Roosevelt who first proposed the concept. The new Congress presents us with new opportunities to reverse the trend toward greater reliance on money as the vehicle to elected office. The Senatorial Election Campaign Act of 1989, introduced today by Senators BOREN, BYRD, MITCHELL, and myself, is one part of that effort.

The reforms embodied in the Senatorial Election Campaign Act combine a number of approaches to what I consider the four dangers which threaten our democratic process: excessive influence of political action committees in relation to that of individuals; prohibitive cost of running for office; uncontrolled independent expenditures; and the increased influence of so-called soft money.

To curtail the influence of PAC's, the act places an aggregate limit on the total amount of PAC funds that may be received by any candidate for House or Senate.

The amounts spent on campaigning can be kept down by limiting total expenditures and providing public financing. The Senatorial Election Campaign Act provides breaks on the costs of mailing and broadcast advertising for those candidates who spend within maximums based on a State population formula for eligible candidates. In order to be eligible for these benefits, candidates must raise a threshold amount of funds from small contributors, three-quarters of whom are from the candidate's State. The bill includes a built-in incentive to participate: participating candidates can receive additional public funds over the limit to the extent that their non-participating opponent spends over that amount.

In addition, the benefits of independent expenditures will be significantly diminished under this proposal. If independent expenditures in excess of $10,000 are made to oppose a candidate receiving public financing, or on behalf of a candidate who is not, the candidate receiving public funding is entitled to receive additional funds in the amount of the independent expenditures.

Finally, the Senatorial Election Campaign Act contains provisions which will require greater limits and some disclosure on party building funds—soft money. The provisions require disclosure for national and State party building funds and for political committees active in local, non-Federal elections, but engaging in activities that do have some influence on Federal elections. The bill would also place a cap for State party committees for funds for activities which could are not targeted to Federal elections but which do influence them, such as voter registration drives and election day get-out-the-vote efforts. These changes will make it more difficult for large contributors, subject to few if any reporting requirements, to have a large impact on Federal elections.

It is a start, and I believe a good one. The integrity of our electoral process is at stake; we are compelled to act. Let not our candidates be judged by their money, but by their qualifications, convictions, and ability.

In the 100th Congress, the Senate was seven votes short of closing debate on a comprehensive campaign finance reform measure offered by my distinguished colleagues Senator BYRD of West Virginia, and Senator BOREN of Oklahoma. Sadly, debate was characterized by partisan acrimony, and the bill was not brought to a vote. The recent election, however, seems to have convinced some skeptics in the minority party that a reform effort is needed to protect the election process from becoming little more than an auction, with Senate seats going to the highest bidder. I look forward to working with all Members in order to reform this tainted system.

By Mr. DURENBERGER (for himself, Mr. COHEN, Mr. MCCAIN, Mr. BRADLEY, and Mrs. KASSEBAUM):

S. 142. A bill to amend title XVIII of the Social Security Act to establish a program of voluntary certification of long-term care insurance policies and to protect Medicare beneficiaries from marketing practices related to such policies, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

● Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, few issues are both as long-range and immediate in their impact on American families as the issue broadly known as long-term care.

That is why I am pleased to introduce today a series of bills dealing with tax and employee benefits policies affecting long-term care insurance. Four of these bills act in various ways to encourage the purchase of long-term care insurance by working and retired Americans and the provision—by employers—of long-term care insurance as a fringe benefit. And, a fifth bill is designed to protect consumers from both poor quality long-term care insurance products and deceptive marketing practices used in selling long-term care insurance.

I should emphasize that fact that these five bills are not intended to provide all the answers to concerns Americans have about long-term care. In fact, they are intended to provide only part of what will have to be a comprehensive national strategy involving housing policy, tax policy, health care policy, and strong support for private initiatives and the family.

In addition to these five bills I am introducing today, I intend to introduce a second major contribution to this debate—in the form of a comprehensive proposal to expand the role of Medicare in financing long-term care—within the next several weeks. And, I look forward to working closely with my colleagues on the Finance Committee as we begin to shape what I trust will be a truly bipartisan solution to this growing national problem.

A UNIQUELY INTER-GOVERNMENTAL ISSUE

Mr. President, long-term care is uniquely inter-generational in nature. It's an issue that can both divide and unite families. It's an issue as important to my parents as it is to me as it is to my own four sons.

In fact, the demographic trends that are partly driving the current debate over long-term care are easier to understand if they're thought of in the context of the generations that make up a typical America family.

The largest of these demographic trends is the growing numbers of elderly in this country that will be needing long-term care in the future.

When my father was born—in the first decade of the 20th century—there were just over 3 million Americans over age 65. Today, there are almost 30 million. And, in 2040—when the youngest of my four sons is as old as his grandfather is today—there will be an estimated 66.6 million Americans past age 65.

Longer life expectancy is an equally important demographic factor in the growing need for long-term care, particularly the need for nursing home care for the most frail elderly.

As an example, in 1900, average life expectancy in this country was about 47.7 years. By 1990, it will be over 75.

Again, in 1900, there were only 100,000 Americans over age 85. Today, there are about 3 million. And, in 2040, there will be an estimated 12.9 million.

It's no wonder that more and more Americans—of all ages—are forcing long-term care to the top of the Nation's health care policy agenda.

In fact, a recent survey done for the American Association of Retired Persons [AARP] found that four out of five Americans have had—or expect to have—some experience with long-term care.

Almost half—47 percent—said they or a family member have needed long-term care. Another 14 percent have a close friend or relative who has needed care. And, another 20 percent anticipate needing some type of long-term care in the next 5 years. Only 19 percent had no present or anticipated experience with long-term care.

So, this is clearly not an issue just for my parents' generation—although they both worry every day about what happens if one or the other of them have to go into a nursing home. At $20,000 to $30,000 per year, nursing home care would eat up their life savings in very short order.

And, it's not an issue just for my generation either—although the children of today's elderly are among those most immediately affected by long-term care decisions made by and for their parents.

And, long-term care is also not just an issue for my sons' generation—although they have the most to gain or lose from decisions we start making now about how long-term care will be provided and financed in the future.

LTC "DOWN PAYMENT" IN CATASTROPHIC LAW

I would be remiss, Mr. President, if I did not at least make note of the down payment which we and our colleagues in the House made last year in addressing the problems associated with long-term care. That down payment came in the form of several important provisions of the new catastrophic law which began taking effect on January 1.

The most important of those provisions deals with the painful issue of spousal impoverishment. Under the new law, spouses of nursing home residents who are on Medicaid will be able to keep a larger share of their income and assets.

Under a second provision in the catastrophic law, many families of frail elderly will be able to place their loved ones in a respite care facility at Medicare expense. I was proud to offer the amendment adding that new benefit in response to testimony I heard at several of the 12 long-term care forums I held throughout Minnesota last year.

STRATEGIC MIX OF PUBLIC AND PRIVATE

Mr. President, as I noted earlier, long-term care is such a huge and complex issue that no one solution will suffice. Both public sector financing and incentives to produce private sector initiatives will be required.

But, as we approach what I would prefer to call the long-term care opportunity, I am hopeful that we will keep in mind several important principles.

First, we must remember that long-term care is not just nursing home care. In fact, a recent survey in Minnesota found that—even for the State's 100,000 most frail elderly—most long-term care is provided in noninstitutional settings. Yet this same survey found that the 60 percent of those most severely impaired elderly cared for in noninstitutional settings receive only 12 percent of the public funds devoted to long-term care in the State.

One primary goal of our efforts, therefore, must be to protect the income and assets needed by individuals to remain independent, regardless of whether these individuals are patients receiving care in the community, nursing home patients who will likely return to the community, or nursing home residents who may need care indefinitely.

One might argue, in fact, that both society and the individuals and families involved would be best served by early enough intervention through relatively low cost long-term care services that prolong independence and postpone or even cancel the need for more expensive institutional care.

This reality would argue for providing access to a continuum of care that respects most people's desire to remain at home for as long as possible, using a range of services to support independent living.

A second principle we must consider is that—for most people—the need for some type of long-term care is predictable and therefore insurable. Because of advancing life expectancy, long-term care is a more expected cost of retirement. Therefore, it is an expense that can and should be planned for by many of us during our working years.

This is especially important to consider in light of our changing demographics and the ability of future generations of workers to support their parents in retirement. Not only are today's younger workers poorer than their parents were at a comparable age, but their generation is also smaller.

At the same time, however, it's important to remember a third principle—that long-term care is not an issue only for the elderly. Americans of all ages—children as well as nonelderly adults—may be disabled to the point where they must depend on human assistance to perform very basic activities of daily living.

It is estimated that between 5 and 8 million Americans under age 65 are in need of such services. They include individuals with illnesses such as cerebral palsy, muscular dystrophy, renal failure, respiratory dysfunction and multiple sclerosis; developmental disabilities such as mental retardation; and injuries such as those to the brain and spinal cord. This reality means that any truly comprehensive national strategy to deal with long-term care must not be limited to only those who have reached the age of retirement.

Mr. President, these and other underlying principles help make the case for a comprehensive approach to long-term care which includes components to assist both today's and tomorrow's elderly; which includes support for both public and private sector initiatives; which includes a broad continuum of care aimed at prolonging independence; and which is available to all Americans, regardless of age.

As the first step in building such a comprehensive approach, I am today introducing five separate pieces of legislation. Four deal primarily with tax incentives to purchase long-term care insurance and save for the anticipate costs of long-term care. A fifth provides consumer protection in the purchase and marketing of long-term care insurance. Following is a brief summary of each of these five bills:

EMPLOYER CONTRIBUTION INCENTIVES

Mr. President, the first of these five bills is S. 138. "The Retiree Health Protection and Long-term Care Insurance Act of 1989." This bill would greatly expand incentives for employers to offer long-term care insurance as a fringe benefit.

Briefly, this legislation clarifies the tax code to permit employers to pay into qualified plans on behalf of their employees for the purchases of long-term care insurance which could be used after the employee has retired. When enacted, employers would be free to contribute without tax liability to the individual's health accounts to prefund long-term health care. Eligible services would include nursing homes, hospices, adult day care programs, rehabilitative centers, retirement homes, or qualified home care programs.

USE OF IRAS FOR LTC INSURANCE

Mr. President, my second proposal being introduced today is S. 139, "The Long-term Care Insurance Premium Tax Protection Act of 1989." This bill would allow retired individuals to use a portion of their tax deferred savings to pay for long-term care insurance without suffering any tax penalty.

Under the proposal, a citizen over age 59½ would be permitted to withdraw up to $2,000 per year from his or her individual retirement account [IRA] to purchase long-term care insurance. Such withdrawals would not be subject to federal income tax.

LONG-TERM CARE TAX-FREE SAVINGS ACCOUNTS

Mr. President, I am also introducing today my "Long-term Care Savings Accounts Act of 1989," S.140. This legislation would allow individuals to set up to $2,000 per year in tax-exempt savings accounts, the proceeds of which could be used for long-term health care.

Under this legislation, an individual would be permitted to establish a long-term care savings account, the interest on which would be exempt from taxation. In addition, taxpayers would qualify for a 10-percent Federal income tax credit for contributions for such accounts, with a maximum credit of $200 per year. The tax credit mechanism would equalize the tax benefit available to all taxpayers, and, unlike a tax deduction, would not discriminate in favor of upper income taxpayers.

EMPLOYEE INCENTIVES FOR LTC INSURANCE

Mr. President, my fourth proposal is the "Tax Credit for Cost of Long-term Health Care Insurance Act of 1989," S. 141. This bill would encourage individuals to purchase long-term care insurance for themselves and for their parents. This important piece of legislation recognizes the intergenerational implications of long-term care by assisting families who are facing the prospect that a spouse or parent may eventually have to enter to a long-term care facility.

This bill provides a 15-percent tax credit for purchasing a long-term care insurance policy that covers the taxpayer, or the taxpayer's spouse or parents. The maximum annual credit that could be claimed would be $300—or $600 if the policy covers two elderly individuals. The credit would phase out a income of the individual purchasing the insurance policy increases.

Under this legislation, if a person purchases long-term care insurance for his or her parents, a credit could be claimed even if the parents are not considered dependents as defined by the Federal Tax Code. And, if the costs of insurance for parents are shared by brothers and sisters, the credit could be allocated among the purchasers of the policy.

LTC CONSUMER PROTECTION ACT

Mr. President, Federal tax policies which encourage purchase of long-term care insurance would be incomplete without assurances that quality insurance products will be offered.

That's why my final proposal being introduced today is the "Long-term Care Consumer Protection Act of 1989," S. 142. This bill would provide Federal leadership to protect older Americans from both poor quality insurance products and deceptive marketing practices to sell them. It should also help boost consumer confidence in legitimate long-term care insurance products and hopefully help stimulate our Nation's long-term care insurance market.

In designing this bill, I worked very hard to achieve a balance between Federal leadership and State authority; and between the consumer's need for protection and the insurer's need for flexibility to develop innovative and experimental products.

Briefly, this bill would establish a nine-member long-term care insurance panel that would be chaired by the Secretary of Health and Human Services and would include representatives of State insurance officials, Medicare beneficiaries, employers, labor, and the insurance industry. This panel would be charged with determining whether each State's laws and regulations meet or exceed certain standards and also certifying policies issued in States that meet these standards. In States whose regulatory programs fail to meet the criteria for certification, insurers could apply directly to the Secretary for certification.

Under my proposal, once a policy is certified, the insurer could display an emblem denoting the Secretary's certification in the policy's marketing materials. Consumers could rely on the emblem as evidence that the policy meets the Secretary's criteria for certification.

A policy would earn the Secretary's certification if it meets or exceeds standards in the National Association of Insurance Commission's Long-Term Care Insurance Model Act. The certified policies would also be required to allow purchasers a minimum 30-day free look period, guarantee that the policy would be renewable, inform consumers of the availability and limitations of long-term care benefits under Medicare, and meet or exceed other requirements set by the Secretary in consultation with State insurance officials.

In addition, this proposal requires the long-term care insurance panel to report to Congress within 1 year from the date of enactment on whether certified policies should meet minimum loss ratios or other value measures, and whether they should be required to disclose loss ratios or other important financial information.

And, finally, this bill establishes penalties for fraudulent marketing practices and use of the U.S. Postal Service to set a policy in a State where such a policy has not been approved by the State's insurance officials.

Let me emphasize, again, Mr. President, the need for a comprehensive and multifaceted approach to dealing with what is one of the most challenging problems we as a nation must face together. The legislation I am introducing today addresses important aspects of this issue. I intend to add a comprehensive proposal establishing a new and much expanded role for Medicare in financing long-term care in the next several weeks. And, I look forward to working closely on this issue with my colleagues in both Houses—and with what I trust will be strong leadership from President Bush and his administration—in the weeks and months ahead.

I ask unanimous consent that copies of the five bills I am introducing today appear at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bills were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 138

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Retiree Health Protection and Long-Term Care Insurance Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. TREATMENT OF EMPLOYER-PROVIDED HEALTH CARE BENEFITS FOR RETIRED EMPLOYEES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subchapter D of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to deferred compensation, etc.) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new part:

"PART III—VOLUNTARY RETIREE HEALTH PLANS

"Sec. 431. Deduction for employer contributions.
"Sec. 432. Benefits excluded from gross income, etc.
"Sec. 433. Plan qualification requirements.
"Sec. 434. Qualified retiree health care trust.
"Sec. 435. Voluntary retiree health accounts.
"Sec. 436. Preemption; special rules.

"SEC. 431. DEDUCTION FOR EMPLOYER CONTRIBUTIONS.

"(a) GENERAL RULE.—Amounts paid by an employer under a qualified voluntary retiree health plan—

"(1) shall not be allowable as a deduction under this chapter, but

"(2) if they would otherwise be deductible, shall be allowed as a deduction under this section for the taxable year in which paid.

"(b) LIMITATION.—The amount allowed as a deduction under subsection (a) for the taxable year shall not exceed the limitation under section 433(e) for plan years ending with or within such taxable year.

"(c) AMOUNTS MUST BE PAID TO QUALIFIED TRUST.—A payment may be taken into account under subsection (a) for any taxable year only if it is made to a qualified retiree health care trust which is exempt from tax under section 501(a) for the taxable year of such trust in which or with which the taxable year of the employer ends.

"(d) PAYMENTS AFTER CLOSE OF TAXABLE YEAR.—For purposes of subsection (a), a payment made after the close of a taxable year shall be treated as made on the last day of such year if the payment is made—

"(1) on account of such year, and

"(2) not later than the time prescribed by law for filing the return for such year (including extensions thereof).

"SEC. 432. BENEFITS EXCLUDED FROM GROSS INCOME, ETC.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—Except as otherwise provided in this section, no amount shall be included in the gross income of an individual or his spouse by reason of—

"(1) any employer contribution under a qualified voluntary retiree health plan, or

"(2) the receipt of any post-retirement long-term health care benefit under such a plan.

"(b) INCLUSION IN INCOME WHERE MORE THAN 1 ACCOUNT.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—If—

"(A) an individual is a participant or beneficiary under 2 or more qualified voluntary retiree health plans or voluntary retiree health accounts, and

"(B) such individual does not (within a reasonable period) consolidate the present value of the individual's nonforfeitable accrued benefit in all such plans and the assets of all such voluntary retiree health accounts into 1 such plan or into 1 voluntary retiree health account, then an amount equal to the sum of the present value of such benefits and the fair market value of such assets shall be treated as distributed in cash to such individual at the close of the plan year for the plan or account involved and such distribution shall be included in gross income.

"(2) SPECIAL RULES.—

"(A) EMPLOYEE MUST CONSOLIDATE INTO PLAN OF CURRENT EMPLOYER.—In the case of an employee who is employed by an employer maintaining a qualified voluntary retiree health plan, a consolidation satisfies paragraph (1) only if such consolidation is into a qualified voluntary retiree health plan maintained by such employer.

"(B) MORE THAN 1 CURRENT EMPLOYER.—If an individual is a participant in more than 1 qualified voluntary retiree health plan by reason of being currently employed by more than 1 employer, such plans shall be treated as 1 plan for purposes of paragraph (1).

"(C) EMPLOYEE WITH NO CURRENT EMPLOYER MAINTAINING PLAN.—In the case of an employee who is currently not employed by an employer maintaining a qualified voluntary retiree health plan, a consolidation satisfies paragraph (1) only if such consolidation is into—

"(i) a qualified voluntary retiree health plan maintained by his most recent employer maintaining such a plan, or

"(ii) a voluntary retiree health account of the individual.

"(3) AMOUNT TRANSFERRED NOT INCLUDIBLE IN INCOME.—No amount shall be includible in gross income by reason of any transfer which is part of a consolidation required under this subsection.

"(c) INCLUSION IN INCOME WHERE PLAN CEASES TO BE QUALIFIED.—If a retiree health care trust is not exempt from tax under section 501(a) for any taxable year of such trust, the present value of the nonforfeitable accrued benefit of any beneficiary under the plan of which such trust is a part shall be treated as distributed (at the close of such taxable year) in cash to the beneficiary and such distribution shall be included in gross income.

"(d) INCLUSION IN INCOME WHERE INTEREST IN PLAN ASSIGNED, ETC.—If during any taxable year an individual assigns (or agrees to assign) or pledges (or agrees to pledge) any portion of his interest in a qualified voluntary retiree health plan, such portion shall be treated as having been received by such individual as a distribution in cash and such distribution shall be included in gross income.

"(e) EXCESS BENEFITS PENALTY.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—If—

"(A) the benefits with respect to a participant, when expressed as an annual benefit, exceed

"(B) the maximum amount which may be provided under section 433(h)(2) for a taxable year, such excess shall be included in gross income for the taxable year and the participant's tax under this chapter for such taxable year shall be increased by the applicable percentage of such excess.

"(2) APPLICABLE PERCENTAGE.—For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The term 'applicable percentage' means 20 percent.

"(B) INDIVIDUALS OTHER THAN EMPLOYEES AND SPOUSES.—In the case of an individual other than an employee or spouse of the employee, the applicable percentage is 100 percent.

"(3) ANNUAL BENEFIT.—For purposes of this subsection, the annual benefit shall be determined in such manner as the Secretary may prescribe.

"(f) SPECIAL RULES.—

"(1) AMOUNTS TAXED ONLY ONCE.—An amount shall not be includible in gross income under this section for any taxable year if such amount was includible in gross income under this section for a prior taxable year.

"(2) CERTAIN RULES TO APPLY.—For purposes of subsection (c), rules similar to the rules of the last 2 sentences of section 402(b)(1) and the rules of section 402(b)(2)(A) shall apply.

"SEC. 433. PLAN QUALIFICATION REQUIREMENTS.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this part, the term 'qualified voluntary retiree health plan' means any defined benefit plan (as defined in section 414(j))—

"(1) which meets the requirements of paragraph (1) of section 89(k), and

"(2) which meets the requirements of each of the following subsections of this section.

"(b) PLAN MUST PROVIDE ONLY HEALTH BENEFITS TO RETIRED EMPLOYEES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—A plan meets the requirements of this subsection if—

"(A) the only benefits provided by the plan are post-retirement long-term health care benefits, and

"(B) such benefits are provided only through 1 or more of the following:

"(i) insurance acquired by the plan,

"(ii) self-insurance by the employer or the plan, or

"(iii) reimbursement of expenses paid by a former employee or his spouse for insurance providing long-term health care benefits for such employee or spouse.

"(2) POST-RETIREMENT LONG-TERM HEALTH CARE BENEFITS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this part, the term 'post-retirement long-term health care benefits' means long-term health care benefits provided to a former employee (or the spouse of such employee) after the former employee has attained age 70 or is disabled (within the meaning of section 72(m)(7)).

"(B) BENEFITS PROVIDED TO SPOUSE OF DECEASED EMPLOYEE.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), the spouse of a deceased employee shall be treated—

"(i) as a former employee, and

"(ii) as satisfying the requirements of subparagraph (A) if such spouse was receiving benefits under the plan immediately before the death of the employee.

"(C) QUALIFIED DOMESTIC RELATIONS ORDERS.—In the case of benefits payable under a qualified domestic relations order (as defined under rules similar to the rules of section 414(p)) to a former spouse of an employee, except as provided in regulations, such former spouse shall be treated as a former employee for purposes of subparagraph (A).

"(D) LONG-TERM CARE BENEFITS.—For purposes of this section, the term 'long-term health care' means providing necessary diagnostic, preventive, therapeutic, and rehabilitative services, or maintenance or personal care services, required by a chronically ill individual in a facility by a qualified provider.

"(E) OTHER DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of subparagraph (D)—

"(i) QUALIFIED FACILITY.—The term 'qualified facility' means—

"(I) a nursing, rehabilitative, hospice, or adult day care facility, including a hospital, retirement home, nursing home, skilled nursing facility, intermediate care facility, or similar institution, licensed under State law, or

"(II) an individual's home if a physician, licensed under State law, certifies that without home care the individual would have to be cared for in a facility described in subclause (I), except that such home shall be treated as a qualified facility only to the extent the cost of such services is not greater than the cost of similar services provided in a facility described in subclause (I).

"(ii) CHRONICALLY ILL INDIVIDUAL.—The term 'chronically ill individual' means an individual who has been certified by a physician, licensed under State law, as requiring assistance with eating, toileting, mobility, bathing, or dressing.

"(iii) MAINTENANCE OR PERSONAL CARE SERVICES.—The term 'maintenance or personal care services' means any service the primary purpose of which is to provide needed assistance with any of the activities of daily living described in clause (ii).

"(iv) QUALIFIED PROVIDER.—The term 'qualified provider' means a medical practitioner licensed under State law, registered nurse, licensed registered nurse, qualified therapist, trained home health aid employed by a licensed home health agency, or trained home health aid licensed under State law, but does not include a relative or other person who ordinarily resides in the home.

"(v) PHYSICIAN.—The term 'physician' has the meaning given to such term by section 213(d)(4).

"(F) FORMER EMPLOYEE.—For purposes of this paragraph, an individual shall not be treated as a former employee of the employer if such individual is a current employee of such employer.

"(3) BENEFITS PROVIDED THROUGH INSURANCE OR SELF-INSURANCE MUST BE UNDER GUARANTEED RENEWABLE CONTRACTS, ETC.—A plan shall not be treated as meeting the requirements of this subsection unless—

"(A) the renewal of the insurance contract (if any) through which the long-term health care benefits are provided (including any contract for which a reimbursement described in paragraph (1)(B)(iii) is made) is guaranteed,

"(B) the renewal of coverage by covered individuals is guaranteed,

"(C) the cost to covered individuals on renewal of the insurance will not vary by reason of the medical condition of the covered individuals, and

"(D) the annual cost of coverage for each covered individual is the same.

"(c) NO EMPLOYEE CONTRIBUTIONS.—A plan meets the requirements of this subsection if the only contributions permitted under the plan are—

"(1) nonelective employer contributions, and

"(2) transfers which are part of a consolidation referred to in section 432(b).

"(d) CONTRIBUTIONS AND BENEFITS MAY NOT DISCRIMINATE IN FAVOR OF HIGHLY COMPENSATED EMPLOYEES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—A plan meets the requirements of this subsection if—

"(A) the contributions and benefits provided under the plan do not discriminate in favor of highly compensated employees, and

"(B) no participant in the plan is a participant in any other qualified voluntary retiree health plan maintained by the employer.

"(2) UNIFORM RATE OF ACCRUAL OF BENEFITS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in this paragraph, a plan shall not be treated as meeting the requirements of this subsection unless the rate at which benefits accrue during a plan year is the same for all participants.

"(B) SPECIAL RULES FOR CERTAIN INDIVIDUALS AGE 55 AND OVER.—A plan shall not be treated as failing to meet the requirements of this subsection if the plan provides that an employee who as of the close of the plan year in which he attains age 55 has accrued less than 30 percent of the maximum amount of benefits which may be accrued under the plan, may accrue benefits during succeeding plan years at a greater rate than the rate for other employees (but not in excess of 125 percent of such other rate).

"(C) MINIMUM HOURS OF SERVICE.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), an employee shall not be treated as a participant for any plan year unless such individual completes more than 500 hours of service during such year.

"(3) INTEGRATION WITH BENEFITS CREATED UNDER OTHER LAWS NOT PERMITTED.—A plan shall not meet the requirements of this subsection unless such plan meets such requirements without regard to contributions or benefits under chapter 2 or 21, the Social Security Act or other Federal law, or any State or foreign law or under any other plan.

"(e) FUNDING LIMITATIONS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—A plan meets the requirements of this subsection if the plan meets—

"(A) the minimum funding requirement of paragraph (2), and

"(B) the maximum funding limitation of paragraph (3).

"(2) MINIMUM FUNDING STANDARD.—A plan meets the requirements of this paragraph if the value of the plan assets as of the close of the plan year are not less than the termination liability as of such time.

"(3) MAXIMUM FUNDING LIMITATION.—A plan meets the requirements of this paragraph if the employer contributions to the plan for the plan year do not exceed the excess (if any) of—

"(A) 110 percent of the termination liability of the plan as of the close of the plan year, over

"(B) the value of the plan assets as of such time (without regard to employer contributions for such year).

"(4) CORRECTIONS MAY BE MADE WITHIN 2½ MONTHS.—A plan shall not be treated as failing to meet the requirements if within 2½ months following the close of the plan year—

"(A) in the case of a failure under paragraph (2), employer contributions are made to the plan as are necessary to meet the requirements of such paragraph, or

"(B) in the case of a failure under paragraph (3)—

"(i) the plan distributes to the employer the excess contributions (and any earnings thereon), and

"(ii) no deduction was allowed with respect to such contributions.

Any amount distributed under subparagraph (B) shall be includible in income in the taxable year for which the contribution was made.

"(5) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) TERMINATION LIABILITY.—The term 'termination liability' means the present value of the benefits of the plan determined on the basis of actuarial assumptions each of which is reasonable.

"(B) CONTINGENT BENEFITS.—In computing termination liability, there shall not be taken into account any benefit which is contingent on an event other than completion of years of service.

"(C) VALUE OF PLAN ASSETS.—The value of the plan assets means the actuarial value (within the meaning of section 412(c)(2)) of such assets, except that such valuation shall not be based on a range of other than market value.

"(f) MINIMUM PARTICIPATION STANDARDS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—A plan meets the requirements of this subsection if the plan meets the requirements of—

"(A) subparagraphs (A) and (B) of paragraph (2) (relating to participation requirements), and

"(B) subparagraphs (A) and (B) of paragraph (3) (relating to minimum coverage requirements).

"(2) PARTICIPATION REQUIREMENTS.—

"(A) MINIMUM AGE AND SERVICE CONDITIONS.—A plan meets the requirements of this subparagraph if the plan does not require, as a condition of participation in the plan, that an employee complete a period of service with the employer maintaining the plan extending beyond the later of:

"(i) the date on which the employee attains age 21, or

"(ii) the date on which the employee completes 1 year of service.

For purposes of the preceding sentence, a rule similar to the rule of section 410(a)(1)(B)(i) shall apply.

"(B) MAXIMUM AGE CONDITIONS.—A plan meets the requirements of this subparagraph only if the plan does not exclude from participation (on the basis of age) employees who have attained a specified age.

"(C) CERTAIN RULES TO APPLY.—For purposes of subparagraphs (A) and (B), rules similar to the rules of paragraphs (3), (4), and (5) of section 410(a) shall apply.

"(3) MINIMUM COVERAGE REQUIREMENTS.—

"(A) 70 PERCENT TESTS.—A plan meets the requirements of this subparagraph if on each day of the plan year—

"(i) the plan benefits at least 70 percent of employees who are not highly compensated employees, or

"(ii) the plan benefits—

"(I) a percentage of employees who are not highly compensated employees which is at least 70 percent of

"(II) the percentage of highly compensated employees benefiting under the plan.

"(B) 40 PERCENT TEST.—A plan meets the requirements of this subparagraph if on each day of the plan year the plan benefits the lesser of—

"(i) 50 employees of the employer, or

"(ii) 40 percent or more of all employees of the employer.

"(C) EXCLUSION OF CERTAIN EMPLOYEES.—For purposes of this paragraph, there shall be excluded from consideration employees described in paragraphs (3)(A) and (3)(C) of section 410(b).

"(D) CERTAIN RULES TO APPLY.—

"(i) For purposes of this paragraph, rules similar to the rules of paragraphs (4) and (6)(C) of section 410(b) shall apply.

"(ii) For purposes of subparagraph (A), rules similar to the rules of section 410(b)(5) shall apply.

"(4) SPECIAL RULES.—

"(A) APPLICATION OF PARTICIPATION STANDARDS TO CERTAIN PLANS.—A plan described in a subparagraph of section 410(c)(1) shall be treated as meeting the requirements of this subsection if such plan meets requirements similar to the requirements such plan is required to meet under section 410(c)(2); except that no other plan or trust may be taken into account in determining whether the requirements of this subparagraph are met.

"(B) ELECTION BY CHURCH TO HAVE CERTAIN RULES APPLY.—An election similar to the election under section 410(d) shall apply for purposes of this section.

"(g) MINIMUM VESTING STANDARDS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—A plan meets the requirements of this subsection if the plan satisfies the requirements of—

"(A) paragraph (2) (relating to accrued benefit), and

"(B) paragraph (3) (relating to special rules).

"(2) ACCRUED BENEFIT.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—A plan meets the requirements of this paragraph if an employee has a nonforfeitable right to 100 percent of the employee's accrued benefit.

"(B) FORFEITURE ON ACCOUNT OF DEATH.—A right to an accrued benefit shall not be treated as forfeitable solely because the plan provides that it is not payable—

"(i) with respect to the participant if the participant dies and has no spouse, or

"(ii) with respect to the spouse of the participant if such spouse dies.

"(C) CERTAIN OTHER RULES TO APPLY.—Rules similar to the rules of—

"(i) subparagraphs (A), (C), and (D) of section 411(a)(4), and

"(ii) paragraphs (3)(B), (3)(C), (5), (6), (7)(A)(i), and (10) of section 411(a), shall apply for purposes of this paragraph.

"(3) SPECIAL RULES.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this subsection, rules similar to the rules of section 411(b)(1) shall apply.

"(B) CERTAIN FORFEITURES.—This subsection shall not be applied to preclude forfeitures described in paragraph (2)(B) or forfeitures of benefits which, under the provisions of the plan adopted pursuant to rules prescribed by the Secretary to preclude the discrimination prohibited by subsection (d), may be used for designated employees in the event of early termination of the plan.

"(C) CERTAIN OTHER RULES TO APPLY.—For purposes of this paragraph, rules similar to the rules of paragraphs (1), (2), and (6) of section 411(d) shall apply.

"(4) APPLICATION OF VESTING STANDARDS TO CERTAIN PLANS.—A plan described in a subparagraph of section 411(e)(1) shall be treated as meeting the requirements of this subsection if such plan meets requirements similar to the requirements such plan is required to meet under section 411(e)(2).

"(h) DISTRIBUTION REQUIREMENTS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—A plan meets the requirements of this subsection if—

"(A) the plan meets the requirements of paragraphs (2) and (3) with respect to each former employee under the plan, or

"(B) the plan provides that as of any date specified by the employee (after attaining age 70 or becoming disabled) the present value of the employee's nonforfeitable accrued benefit as of such date will be used to acquire paid-up insurance which—

"(i) will provide long-term health care benefits for such employee (or in the case of an employee who is married and who elects to provide coverage for his spouse, for such employee and his spouse) for each year such employee could (but for this subparagraph) receive a distribution from such plan, and

"(ii) does not provide benefits for any year in excess of the maximum amount for such year under paragraph (2).

"(2) MAXIMUM ANNUAL BENEFIT.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—A plan meets the requirements of this paragraph if the plan provides that the amount of benefits accrued under the plan on behalf of any employee during any plan year may not exceed the lesser of—

"(i) $2,000, or

"(ii) the earned income of the employee derived from the trade or business with respect to which such plan is established.

"(B) ACTUARIAL ADJUSTMENTS.—The benefit provided to any participant under the plan shall be actuarially adjusted to reflect—

"(i) any commencement of benefits before or after age 70, or

"(ii) the providing of benefits to the spouse of a participant.

"(C) COST-OF-LIVING ADJUSTMENT.—The Secretary shall adjust annually the dollar amount in subparagraph (A) for increases in the medical component of the Consumer Price Index (as defined in section 1(f)(5)), using as a base period the calendar quarter beginning October 1, 1989.

"(3) MINIMUM ANNUAL DISTRIBUTION.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—A plan meets the requirements of this paragraph if the plan provides that the amount distributed with respect to a former employee during any plan year does not exceed the amount which would be distributed each year if the former employee's accrued benefit were distributed in substantially equal periodic payments (not less frequently than annually)—

"(i) over the life (or life expectancy) of the former employee, or

"(ii) over the joint lives (or joint life expectancies) of the former employee or his spouse.

"(B) COST-OF-LIVING ADJUSTMENT.—The amount determined under subparagraph (A) shall be adjusted each year at the same time and in the same manner as under paragraph (2)(C).

"(i) PLAN MAY NOT PERMIT LOANS.—A plan meets the requirements of this subsection if the plan does not permit any participant or beneficiary to receive (directly or indirectly) any amount as a loan from such plan.

"(j) PLAN MAY NOT PERMIT SELF-DIRECTED ASSETS.—A plan meets the requirements of this subsection if the plan does not permit any participant or beneficiary to exercise control over the assets under the plan.

"(k) PLAN MUST PERMIT TRANSFERS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), a plan meets the requirements of this subsection if, in accordance with procedures determined by the Secretary, at the request of an individual who is a participant or former participant under the plan—

"(A) the plan transfers the present value of the nonforfeitable accrued benefit of the individual under the plan to another qualified voluntary retiree health plan or to a voluntary retiree health account, and

"(B) the plan accepts transfers under subparagraph (A) from any other qualified voluntary retiree health plan or from any voluntary retiree health account.

"(2) SPECIAL RULES.—

"(A) NO TRANSFERS FROM PLAN OF CURRENT EMPLOYER EXCEPT ON PLAN TERMINATION.—A plan maintained by an employee's employer shall be treated as not meeting the requirements of this subsection if such plan permits any transfer under the plan except in the case of a termination of such plan.

"(B) TRANSFERS MUST BE TO PLAN MAINTAINED BY EMPLOYER OR FORMER EMPLOYER OR TO VOLUNTARY RETIREE HEALTH ACCOUNT.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—A plan shall not be treated as meeting the requirements of this subsection if such plan permits any transfer under the plan to any plan or account not described in clause (ii) if there is a plan or account described in clause (ii) with respect to such individual.

"(ii) PLANS AND ACCOUNTS DESCRIBED.—For purposes of clause (i), a plan or account is described in this clause with respect to an individual if such plan is—

"(I) a qualified voluntary retiree health plan maintained by an employer of such individual, or

"(II) if the employer of such individual does not maintain such a plan, a qualified voluntary retiree health plan maintained by a former employer of such individual, or except as provided in subparagraph (E), a voluntary retiree health account of such individual.

"(C) TRANSFERS PERMITTED AMONG MEMBERS OF CONTROLLED GROUP, ETC.—Section 414 shall not apply for purposes of determining under this subsection from which plan and to which plan a transfer may be made.

"(D) SPOUSE OF DECEASED EMPLOYEE TREATED AS FORMER PARTICIPANT.—For purposes of paragraph (1) and this paragraph, the spouse of a deceased employee shall be treated as a former participant.

"(E) NO TRANSFERS TO HEALTH ACCOUNTS AFTER AGE 55.—A plan shall not meet the requirements of this subsection if it permits the transfer of any benefit to a voluntary retiree health account of an individual after such individual attains age 55.

"(l) PLAN YEAR AND TRUST YEAR MUST BE THE SAME.—A plan meets the requirements of this subsection if the plan year of such plan and the taxable year of the trust of which such plan forms a part are the same.

"(m) LIMITATION ON HOLDINGS OF EMPLOYER SECURITIES AND EMPLOYER REAL PROPERTY.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—A plan meets the requirements of this subsection if—

"(A) the plan does not hold any employer security which is not a readily tradable employer security,

"(B) the plan does not hold any employer real property which is not qualifying employer real property, and

"(C) the plan does not acquire any readily tradable employer security or qualifying employer real property if, immediately after such acquisition, the aggregate fair market value of readily tradable employer securities and qualifying employer real property held by the plan exceeds 10 percent of the fair market value of the assets of the plan.

"(2) READILY TRADABLE EMPLOYER SECURITY.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'readily tradable employer security' means any employer security which is readily tradable on an established securities market.

"(3) EMPLOYER SECURITY.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'employer security' means—

"(A) any stock or other equity interest in the employer, and

"(B) any bond, debenture, note, or certificate, or other evidence of indebtedness issued by the employer.

"(4) EMPLOYER REAL PROPERTY; QUALIFYING EMPLOYER REAL PROPERTY.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'employer real property' and 'qualifying employer real property' have the respective meanings given such terms by section 407 of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974.

"(n) ACTUARIAL ASSUMPTIONS.—A plan meets the requirements of this subsection if each actuarial assumption used by the plan is reasonable.

"(o) CERTAIN OTHER RULES TO APPLY.—A plan meets the requirements of this subsection if the plan meets—

"(1) requirements similar to the requirements of—

"(A) paragraph (12) of section 401(a), and

"(B) paragraph (13) of section 401(a) (other than the material following the 1st sentence in subparagraph (A)), and

"(2) requirements prescribed by the Secretary with respect to the duties of any fiduciary with respect to the plan.

"SEC. 434. QUALIFIED RETIREE HEALTH CARE TRUST.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this part, the term 'qualified retiree health care trust' means any trust created or organized in the United States and forming part of a qualified voluntary retiree health plan of an employer for the exclusive benefit of his employees or their spouses if—

"(1) contributions are made to the trust by such employer for the purposes of distributing to such employees or their spouses the corpus and income of the fund accumulated by the trust in accordance with such plan, and

"(2) under the trust instrument it is impossible, at any time before the satisfaction of all liabilities with respect to employees and their spouses under the trust, for any part of the corpus or income to be (within the taxable year or thereafter) used for, or diverted to, purposes other than for the exclusive benefit of his employees or their spouses.

"(b) CERTAIN REVERSIONS PERMITTED.—A trust instrument shall not be treated as failing to satisfy the requirements of subsection (a)(2) solely by reason of the fact that the trust instrument permits distributions described in section 4976A(c)(2).

"SEC. 435. VOLUNTARY RETIREE HEALTH ACCOUNTS.

"(a) VOLUNTARY RETIREE HEALTH ACCOUNT.—For purposes of this part, the term 'voluntary retiree health account' means a trust created or organized in the United States for the exclusive benefit of an individual or of an individual and his spouse, but only if the written governing instrument creating the trust meets the following requirements:

"(1) No contributions to the trust will be accepted other than transfers under this part from a qualified voluntary retiree health plan or from another voluntary retiree health account.

"(2) The trustee is a bank (as defined in section 408(n)) or such other person who demonstrates to the satisfaction of the Secretary that the manner in which such other person will administer the trust will be consistent with the requirements of this section.

"(3) No part of the trust funds will be invested in life insurance contracts.

"(4) The interest of an individual in the balance of his account is nonforfeitable.

"(5) The assets of the trust will not be commingled except in a common investment fund.

"(b) TAX TREATMENT OF DISTRIBUTIONS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as otherwise provided in this subsection, if any amount is paid or distributed out of a voluntary retiree health account, such amount shall be included in the gross income of the payee or distributee for the taxable year in which the payment or distribution is made.

"(2) EXCEPTION FOR CERTAIN DISTRIBUTIONS.—Paragraph (1) shall not apply to any payment or distribution which—

"(A) is used exclusively to pay post-retirement long-term health care benefits of the individual for whose benefit the account is established, or

"(B) is part of a transfer required under section 432(b).

"(c) TAX TREATMENT OF ACCOUNTS.—

"(1) EXEMPTION FROM TAX.—A voluntary retiree health account is exempt from taxation under this subtitle unless such account has ceased to be such an account by reason of paragraph (2) or (3). Notwithstanding the preceding sentence, any such account is subject to the taxes imposed by section 511 (relating to imposition of tax on unrelated business income of charitable, etc. organizations).

"(2) ACCOUNT TREATED AS DISTRIBUTING ALL ITS ASSETS.—In any case in which any account ceases to be a voluntary retiree health account, paragraph (1) of subsection (b) shall apply as if there were a distribution on such first day in an amount equal to the fair market value (on such first day) of all assets in the account (on such first day).

"(3) LOSS OF EXEMPTION OF ACCOUNT WHERE INDIVIDUAL ENGAGES IN PROHIBITED TRANSACTION.—If during any taxable year an individual for whom a voluntary retiree health account is established engages in any transaction prohibited by section 4975 with respect to the account, the account ceases to be a voluntary retiree health account as of the first day of that taxable year.

"(4) EFFECT OF PLEDGING ACCOUNT AS SECURITY.—If, during any taxable year, the individual for whose benefit a voluntary retiree health account is established uses the account or any portion thereof as security for a loan, the portion so used shall be treated as distributed to that individual.

"(d) EXCESS BENEFITS PENALTY.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—If—

"(A) the benefits with respect to a participant, when expressed as an annual benefit, exceed

"(B) the maximum amount which may be provided under section 433(h)(2) for a taxable year, such excess shall be included in gross income for the taxable year and the participant's tax under this chapter for such taxable year shall be increased by the applicable percentage of such excess.

"(2) APPLICABLE PERCENTAGE.—For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The term 'applicable percentage' means 20 percent.

"(B) INDIVIDUALS OTHER THAN EMPLOYEES AND SPOUSES.—In the case of an individual other than an employee or spouse of the employee, the applicable percentage is 100 percent.

"(3) ANNUAL BENEFIT.—For purposes of this subsection, the annual benefit shall be determined in such manner as the Secretary may prescribe.

"(e) MINIMUM DISTRIBUTION REQUIREMENTS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—An account shall not be treated as a voluntary retiree health account unless the plan provides that the amount which is distributed with respect to an individual during any taxable year—

"(A) may not be less than 100 percent of the pro rata amount with respect to such individual, or

"(B) if a lesser amount is specified by the individual, shall be the amount specified by the individual.

The Secretary shall prescribe regulations which specify the circumstances under which the failure of an individual to specify an amount under subparagraph (B) shall be treated as a specification of a zero amount.

"(2) PRO RATA AMOUNT.—For purposes of this subsection, the pro rata amount with respect to any individual for any taxable year is the amount (determined as of the beginning of each taxable year during which a distribution from such account to the employee is permitted) equal to—

"(A) the individual's account balance at such time, divided by

"(B) the life expectancy of such individual at such time.

The life expectancy of each individual shall be redetermined annually.

"(f) CERTAIN REQUIREMENTS FOR HEALTH PLANS MADE APPLICABLE.—An account shall not be treated as a voluntary retiree health account unless, under regulations, the requirements of subsections (b), (h), (i), (j), and (k) of section 433 are met.

"(g) COMMUNITY PROPERTY LAWS.—This section shall be applied without regard to any community property laws.

"(h) REPORTS.—The trustee of a voluntary retiree health account shall make such reports regarding such account to the Secretary and to the individual for whose benefit the account is maintained with respect to contributions, distributions, and such other matters as the Secretary may require under regulations. The reports required by this subsection shall be filed at such time and in such manner and furnished to such individuals at such time and in such manner as may be required by those regulations.

"SEC. 436. PREEMPTION; SPECIAL RULES.

"(a) PREEMPTION.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), this part shall supersede all State laws insofar as they may now or hereafter relate to any health plan for former employees and their spouses.

"(2) EXCEPTIONS.—

"(A) BANKING AND SECURITIES LAWS.—

"(i) Except as provided in clause (ii), nothing in this part shall be construed to exempt or relieve any person from any law of any State which regulates banking or securities.

"(ii) Any qualified voluntary retiree health plan qualified retiree health care trust, or voluntary retiree health account shall not be deemed to be a bank, trust company, or investment company or to be engaged in the business of banking for purposes of any law of any State purporting to regulate banks, trust companies, or investment companies.

"(B) GENERALLY APPLICABLE CRIMINAL LAWS.—Paragraph (1) shall not apply to any generally applicable criminal law of a State.

"(C) QUALIFIED DOMESTIC RELATIONS ORDERS.—Paragraph (1) shall not apply to qualified domestic relations orders (as defined in section 414(p)).

"(3) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) STATE LAW.—The term 'State law' includes all laws, decisions, rules, or regulations (or other State action having the effect of law) of any State. A law of the United States applicable only to the District of Columbia shall be treated as a State law rather than a law of the United States.

"(B) STATE.—The term 'State' means a State, any political subdivision of a State, the District of Columbia, any possession of the United States, and any agency or instrumentality of any of the foregoing.

"(4) LAWS OF THE UNITED STATES.—Nothing in this part shall be construed to alter, amend, modify, invalidate, impair, or supersede any law of the United States or any rule or regulation issued under any such law.

"(b) HIGHLY COMPENSATED EMPLOYEE DEFINED.—For purposes of this part, the term 'highly compensated employee' has the meaning given such term by section 414(q).

"(c) CERTAIN RETROACTIVE CHANGES IN PLAN.—Rules similar to the rules of section 401(b) shall apply for purposes of this part.

"(d) RULES RELATING TO SELF-EMPLOYED INDIVIDUALS.—Rules similar to the rules of subsections (c) and (d) of section 401 (other than subsection (c)(6)) shall apply for purposes of this part.

"(e) CERTAIN OTHER RULES TO APPLY.—Rules similar to the rules of section 414 (other than subsections (f), (h), (i), (k), and (s)) shall apply for purposes of this part.

"(f) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out the provisions of this part, including regulations requiring reports from individuals having accounts in qualified voluntary retiree health plans to employers and the Secretary."

(b) TAX ON DISTRIBUTIONS OTHER THAN POST-RETIREMENT MEDICAL BENEFITS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 43 of such Code (relating to qualified pension, etc., plans) is amended by inserting after section 4976 the following new section:

"SEC. 4976A. TAXES WITH RESPECT TO QUALIFIED VOLUNTARY RETIREE HEALTH PLANS AND VOLUNTARY RETIREE HEALTH ACCOUNTS.

"(a) GENERAL RULE.—If—

"(1) an employer maintains a qualified voluntary retiree health plan or an individual maintains a voluntary retiree health account, and

"(2) there is a disqualified benefit provided during any taxable year, there is hereby imposed on such employer or individual, as the case may be, a tax equal to 50 percent of such disqualified benefit.

"(b) QUALIFIED VOLUNTARY RETIREE HEALTH PLAN; VOLUNTARY RETIREE HEALTH ACCOUNT.—For purposes of subsection (a)—

"(1) QUALIFIED VOLUNTARY RETIREE HEALTH PLAN.—The term 'qualified voluntary retiree health plan' has the meaning given such term by section 433. Such term includes any plan which, at any time, has been determined by the Secretary to be a qualified voluntary retiree health plan.

"(2) VOLUNTARY RETIREE HEALTH ACCOUNT.—The term 'voluntary retiree health account' has the meaning given such term by section 435.

"(c) DISQUALIFIED BENEFIT.—For purposes of subsection (a)—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The term 'disqualified benefit' means any distribution or deemed distribution (other than a transfer required under section 432(b)) which is not a post-retirement long-term health care benefit (as defined in section 433(b)).

"(2) EXCEPTIONS.—The term 'disqualified benefit' shall not include any distribution to the employer—

"(A) by reason of mistake of fact, the failure of the plan to initially qualify, or the failure of contributions to be deductible, or

"(B) after such employer ceases to have employees.

"(d) EMPLOYER.—In the case of a plan which provides contributions or benefits for employees some or all of whom are self-employed within the meaning of section 401(c)(1), the term 'employer' means the person treated as the employer under section 401(c)(4)."

(2) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for such chapter 43 is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 4976 the following new item:

"Sec. 4976A. Taxes with respect to qualified voluntary retiree health plans and voluntary retiree health accounts."

(c) QUALIFIED RETIREE HEALTH CARE TRUST EXEMPT FROM TAX.—Subsection (a) of section 501 of such Code (relating to exemption from tax on corporation, certain trust, etc.) is amended by inserting "or a qualified retiree health care trust under section 434" after "or section 401(a)".

(d) TAX ON PROHIBITED TRANSACTIONS.—Section 4975 of such Code (relating to prohibited transactions) is amended—

(1) by adding at the end of subsection (c) the following new paragraph:

"(4) SPECIAL RULE FOR VOLUNTARY RETIREE HEALTH ACCOUNTS.—An individual for whose benefit a voluntary retiree health account is established shall be exempt from the tax imposed by this section with respect to any transaction concerning such account (which would otherwise be taxable under this section) if, with respect to such transaction, the account ceases to be a voluntary retiree health account by reason of the application of section 435(c)(3) to such account.", and

(2) by inserting "or a voluntary retiree health account described in section 435" in subsection (e)(1) after "described in section 408(a)".

(e) FAILURE TO PROVIDE REPORTS ON VOLUNTARY RETIREE HEALTH ACCOUNTS.—Section 6693 of such Code (relating to failure to provide reports on individual retirement account or annuities) is amended—

(1) by inserting "OR A VOLUNTARY RETIREE HEALTH ACCOUNT" after "AN-NUITIES" in the heading of such section, and

(2) by adding at the end of subsection (a) the following: "The person required by section 435(h) to file a report regarding a voluntary retiree health account at the time and in the manner required by such section shall pay a penalty of $50 for each failure unless it is shown that such failure is due to reasonable cause."

(f) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of parts for subchapter D of chapter 1 of such Code is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"Part III. Voluntary Retiree Health Plans.".

SEC. 3. EFFECTIVE DATE.

The amendments made by section 2 shall apply to plan years beginning after December 31, 1989.

S. 139

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. EXCLUSION FROM GROSS INCOME FOR AMOUNTS WITHDRAWN FROM INDIVIDUAL RETIREMENT PLANS FOR LONG-TERM HEALTH CARE INSURANCE PREMIUMS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subsection (d) of section 408 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to tax treatment of distributions from individual retirement plans) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(7) DISTRIBUTIONS FOR QUALIFIED LONG-TERM HEALTH CARE INSURANCE PREMIUMS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—No amount (which but for this paragraph would be includible in the gross income of the payee or distributee under paragraph (1)) shall be included in gross income during the taxable year if—

"(i) the payee or distributee has attained age 59½ on or before the date of the distribution, and

"(ii) the distribution is used during such year to pay premiums for any qualified long-term health care insurance policy for the benefit of the payee or distributee or the spouse of the payee or distributee if such spouse has attained age 59½ on or before the date of the distribution.

"(B) DOLLAR LIMITATION.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—The amount excluded from gross income under subparagraph (A) shall not exceed $2,000 ($1,000 in the case of a separate return by a married individual).

"(ii) COST-OF-LIVING ADJUSTMENT.—The Secretary shall adjust the dollar amounts under clause (i) for taxable years beginning in calendar years after 1989 in the same manner as under section 1(f), except that only increases in the medical component of the Consumer Price Index shall be taken into account.

"(C) DEFINITION OF LONG-TERM HEALTH CARE INSURANCE.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'long-term health care insurance' means an insurance contract through which long-term health care benefits are provided and the renewal of such contract is guaranteed.

"(D) LONG-TERM HEALTH CARE.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'long-term health care' means providing necessary diagnostic, preventive, therapeutic, and rehabilitative services, or maintenance, or personal care services, required by a chronically ill individual in a facility by a qualified provider.

"(E) OTHER DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of subparagraph (D)—

"(i) QUALIFIED FACILITY.—The term 'qualified facility' means—

"(I) a nursing, rehabilitative, hospice, or adult day care facility, including a hospital, retirement home, nursing home, skilled nursing facility, intermediate care facility, or similar institution, licensed under State law, or

"(II) an individual's home if a physician, licensed under State law, certifies that without home care the individual would have to be cared for in a facility described in subclause (I), except that such home shall be treated as a qualified facility only to the extent the cost of such services is not greater than the cost of similar services provided in a facility described in subclause (I).

"(ii) CHRONICALLY ILL INDIVIDUAL.—The term 'chronically ill individual' means an individual who has been certified by a physician, licensed under State law, as requiring assistance with eating, toileting, mobility, bathing, or dressing.

"(iii) MAINTENANCE OR PERSONAL CARE SERVICES.—The term 'maintenance or personal care services' means any service the primary purpose of which is to provide needed assistance with any of the activities of daily living described in clause (ii).

"(iv) QUALIFIED PROVIDER.—The term 'qualified provider' means a medical practitioner licensed under State law, registered nurse, licensed registered nurse, qualified therapist, trained home health aid employed by a licensed home health agency, or trained home health aid licensed under State law, but does not include a relative or other person who ordinarily resides in the home.

"(v) PHYSICIAN.—The term 'physician' has the meaning given to such term by section 213(d)(4).".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by this Act shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1989.

S. 140

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. LONG-TERM HEALTH CARE SAVINGS ACCOUNTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subpart A of part IV of subchapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to nonrefundable personal credits) is amended by inserting after section 25, the following new section:

"SEC. 25A. LONG-TERM HEALTH CARE SAVINGS ACCOUNT.

"(a) CREDIT ALLOWED.—In the case of an individual who makes a contribution to a qualified long-term health care savings account, there shall be allowed as a credit against the tax imposed by this chapter for the taxable year an amount equal to the lesser of—

"(1) 10 percent of such contribution for the taxable year, or

"(2) $200.

"(b) LIMITATIONS.—

"(1) ACCOUNT MAY NOT BE ESTABLISHED FOR BENEFIT OF MORE THAN 1 INDIVIDUAL.—A long-term health care savings account may not be established for the benefit of more than 1 individual.

"(2) AMOUNT OF CONTRIBUTION.—With respect to any individual, no contribution under subsection (a) shall be allowed for the taxable year in excess of $2,000.

"(3) NO OTHER LONG-TERM HEALTH CARE PLAN AVAILABLE.—No credit shall be allowed under subsection (a) in the case of an individual for whom an employer provides a long-term health care plan during the taxable year if such plan provides substantially the same benefits as defined in paragraphs (5) and (6) of subsection (c).

"(4) INDIVIDUAL MAY NOT BE BENEFICIARY OF MORE THAN 1 ACCOUNT.—If an individual is the beneficiary of more than 1 long-term health care savings account during any calendar year, no credit shall be allowed under subsection (a) for any amount paid or transferred for such calendar year to any account established for the benefit of such individual.

"(c) DEFINITIONS AND SPECIAL RULES.—

"(1) LONG-TERM HEALTH CARE SAVINGS ACCOUNT.—For purposes of this section, the term 'long-term health care savings account' means a trust created or organized in the United States exclusively for the purpose of paying only 1 individual's long-term health care expenses, but only if the written governing instrument creating the trust meets the following requirements:

"(A) No contribution will be accepted unless it is in cash, stocks, bonds, or other securities which are readily tradeable on an established securities market.

"(B) No contribution will be accepted unless it is from the individual for whose benefit the trust is established.

"(C) The trustee is a bank (as defined in section 408(n)) or another person who demonstrates to the satisfaction of the Secretary that the manner in which that person will administer the trust will be consistent with the requirements of this section.

"(D) No part of the trust assets will be invested in life insurance contracts (other than contracts the beneficiary of which is the trust and the face amount of which does not exceed the amount by which the maximum amount which can be contributed to the account exceeds the sum of the amounts contributed to the account for all taxable years).

"(E) The assets of the account may be invested in accordance with the direction of the individual contributing to the account.

"(F) The assets of the trust will not be commingled with other property except in a common trust fund or common investment fund.

"(2) TIME WHEN CONTRIBUTIONS DEEMED MADE.—For purposes of this section, a taxpayer shall be deemed to have made a contribution on the last day of a calendar year if the contribution is made on account of such calendar year and is made not later than the time prescribed by law for filing the return for the taxable year (not including extensions thereof) with or within which the calendar year ends.

"(3) STOCK, ETC., TO BE VALUED AS OF TRANSFER DATE.—The fair market value of stocks, bonds, and other securities shall be determined as of the date on which they are transferred to the account. If the date of transfer falls on a Saturday, Sunday, or public legal holiday, then the fair market value shall be determined by reference to the last preceding day on which they could have been traded on an established securities market.

"(4) LONG-TERM HEALTH CARE EXPENSES.—The term 'long-term health care expenses' means—

"(A) the cost of insurance that provides long-term health care benefits, or

"(B) the cost of long-term health care benefits.

"(5) DEFINITION OF LONG-TERM HEALTH CARE INSURANCE.—For purposes of this section the term 'long-term health care insurance' means an insurance contract through which long-term health care benefits are provided and the renewal of such contract is guaranteed.

"(6) LONG-TERM HEALTH CARE.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this section, the term 'long-term health care' means providing necessary diagnostic, preventive, therapeutic, and rehabilitative services, or maintenance or personal care services, required by a chronically ill individual in a facility by a qualified provider.

"(B) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of subparagraph (A)—

"(i) QUALIFIED FACILITY.—The term 'qualified facility' means—

"(I) a nursing, rehabilitative, hospice, or adult day care facility, including a hospital, retirement home, nursing home, skilled nursing facility, intermediate care facility, or similar institution, licensed under State law, or

"(II) an individual's home if a physician, licensed under State law, certifies that without home care the individual would have to be cared for in a facility described in subclause (I), except that such home shall be treated as a qualified facility only to the extent the cost of such services is not greater than the cost of similar services provided in a facility described in subclause (I).

"(ii) CHRONICALLY ILL INDIVIDUAL.—The term 'chronically ill individual' means an individual who has been certified by a physician, licensed under State law, as requiring assistance with eating, toileting, mobility, bathing, or dressing.

"(iii) MAINTENANCE OR PERSONAL CARE SERVICES.—The term 'maintenance or personal care services' means any service the primary purposes of which is to provide needed assistance with any of the activities of daily living described in clause (ii).

"(iv) QUALIFIED PROVIDER.—The term 'qualified provider' means a medical practitioner licensed under State law, registered nurse, licensed registered nurse, qualified therapist, trained home health aid employed by a licensed home health agency, or trained home health aid licensed under State law, but does not include a relative or other person who ordinarily resides in the home.

"(7) PHYSICIAN.—The term 'physician' has the meaning given to such term by section 213(d)(4).

"(d) TAX TREATMENT OF DISTRIBUTIONS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Any amount received from a long-term health care savings account shall be included in gross income of the recipient for the taxable year in which the amount is received, except to the extent that paragraph (2) or (3) applies to such amount.

"(2) EXCEPTION FOR DISTRIBUTIONS FOR LONG-TERM HEALTH CARE EXPENSES.—Paragraph (1) shall not apply to any payment or distribution which is used exclusively to pay for long-term health care expenses incurred by the individual for whose benefit the account is established.

"(3) EXCESS CONTRIBUTIONS RETURNED BEFORE DUE DATE OF RETURN.—Paragraph (1) shall not apply to the distribution of any contribution paid during a taxable year to long-term health care savings account to the extent that such contribution exceeds the amount allowable under subsection (b)(2) if—

"(A) such distribution is received on or before the day prescribed by law (including extensions of time) for filing such individual's return for such taxable year,

"(B) no credit is allowed under subsection (a) with respect to such excess contribution, and

"(C) such distribution is accompanied by the amount of net income attributable to such excess contribution.

Any net income described in subparagraph (C) shall be included in the gross income of the individual for the taxable year in which it is received.

"(e) TAX TREATMENT OF LONG-TERM HEALTH CARE SAVINGS ACCOUNTS.—

"(1) EXEMPTION FROM TAX.—Each long-term health care savings account shall be exempt from taxation under this subtitle. Notwithstanding the preceding sentence, such account shall be subject to the taxes imposed by section 511 (relating to imposition of tax on unrelated business income of charitable, etc., organizations).

"(2) EFFECT OF ENGAGING IN PROHIBITED TRANSACTION.—

"(A) DISQUALIFICATION OF TRUST.—If the individual for whose benefit a long-term health care savings account is established or any individual who contributes to such account engages in any transaction prohibited by section 4975 with respect to the account, the account ceases to be a long-term health care savings account as of the first day of the taxable year of such individual during which such prohibited transaction begins.

"(B) ASSETS TREATED AS DISTRIBUTED.—In any case in which any account ceases to be a long-term health care savings account by reason of subparagraph (A) on the first day of any taxable year, subsection (d)(1) shall apply as if there were a distribution on such first day in an amount equal to the fair market value (on such first day) of all assets in the account (on such first day).

"(3) EFFECT OF PLEDGING ACCOUNT AS SECURITY.—If, during any taxable year, the individual for whose benefit a long-term health care savings account is established uses the account or any portion thereof as security for a loan, the portion so used shall be treated as distributed to that individual.

"(f) ADDITIONAL TAX ON CERTAIN AMOUNTS INCLUDED IN GROSS INCOME.—

"(1) DISTRIBUTION NOT USED FOR LONG-TERM HEALTH CARE EXPENSES.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), if a distribution—

"(A) is made from a long-term health care savings account, and

"(B) is not used in connection with the payment of long-term health care expenses of the individual for whose benefit the account was established, the tax liability (for the taxable year in which such distribution is received) of the individual who contributed to the account shall be increased by an amount equal to—

"(A) 25 percent of the amount of the distribution which is includible in the gross income of such individual for such taxable year if such individual has not attained age 59 before the close of such individual's taxable year, or

"(B) 20 percent of the amount of such distribution if such individual has attained age 59 before the close of such individual's taxable year.

"(2) DISQUALIFICATION CASES.—If an amount is includible in the gross income of an individual for a taxable year under subsection (e), the tax liability of such individual under this chapter for such taxable year shall be increased by an amount equal to 10 percent of such amount required to be included in his gross income.

"(3) DEATH OF INDIVIDUAL FOR WHOM ACCOUNT ESTABLISHED.—Paragraphs (1) and (2) shall not apply if the payment or distribution is made after the individual for whose benefit the long-term health care savings account dies.

"(g) COMMUNITY PROPERTY LAWS.—This section shall be applied without regard to any community property laws.

"(h) REPORTS.—The trustee of a long-term health care savings account shall make such reports regarding such account to the Secretary and to the individual for whose benefit the account is maintained with respect to contributions, distributions, and such other matters as the Secretary may require under regulations. The reports required by this subsection shall be filed at such time and in such manner and furnished to such individual at such time and in such manner as may be required by those regulations.".

(b) TAX ON EXCESS CONTRIBUTIONS.—Section 4973 of such Code (relating to tax on excess contributions to individual retirement accounts, certain section 403(b) contracts, and certain individual retirement annuities) is amended—

(1) by inserting "long-term health care savings accounts," after "accounts," in the heading of such section,

(2) by striking out "or" at the end of paragraph (1) of subsection (a),

(3) by redesignating paragraph (2) of subsection (a) as paragraph (3) and by inserting after paragraph (1) the following:

"(2) a long-term health care savings account (within the meaning of section 25A(c)), or", and

(4) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d) EXCESS CONTRIBUTIONS TO LONG-TERM HEALTH CARE SAVINGS ACCOUNTS.—For purposes of this section, in the case of a long-term health care savings account, the term 'excess contributions' means the amount by which the amount contributed for the taxable year to the account exceeds the amount allowable under section 25A(b)(2) for such taxable year. For purposes of this subsection, any contribution which is distributed out of the long-term health care savings account in a distribution to which section 25A(d)(3) applies shall be treated as an amount not contributed.".

(c) TAX ON PROHIBITED TRANSACTIONS.—Section 4975 of such Code (relating to prohibited transactions) is amended—

(1) by adding at the end of subsection (c) the following new paragraph:

"(4) SPECIAL RULE FOR LONG-TERM HEALTH CARE SAVINGS ACCOUNTS.—An individual for whose benefit a long-term health care savings account is established shall be exempt from the tax imposed by this section with respect to any transaction concerning such account (which would otherwise be taxable under this section) if, with respect to such transaction, the account ceases to be a long-term health care savings account by reason of the application of section 25A(e)(2)(A) to such account.", and

(2) by inserting ", a long-term health care savings account described in section 25A(c)," in subsection (e)(1) after "described in section 408(a)".

(d) FAILURE TO PROVIDE REPORTS ON LONG-TERM HEALTH CARE SAVINGS ACCOUNTS.—Section 6693 of such Code (relating to failure to provide reports on individual retirement account or annuities) is amended—

(1) by inserting "OR ON LONG-TERM HEALTH CARE SAVINGS ACCOUNT" after "ANNUITIES" in the heading of such section, and

(2) by adding at the end of subsection (a) the following: "The person required by section 25A(h) to file a report regarding a long-term health care account at the time and in the manner required by such section shall pay a penalty of $50 for each failure unless it is shown that such failure is due to reasonable cause."

(e) EXCLUSION FROM GROSS INCOME.—

(1) Part III of subchapter B of chapter 1 of such Code (relating to items specifically excluded from gross income) is amended by redesignating section 136 as section 137 and by inserting after section 135 the following new section:

"SEC. 136. LONG-TERM HEALTH CARE SAVINGS ACCOUNT DISTRIBUTIONS.

"In the case of an individual, gross income does not include distributions from a long-term health care savings account used exclusively for the payment of long-term health care expenses of that individual (within the meaning of section 25A(c)(4)).".

(2) The table of sections for such part III is amended by striking out the item relating to section 135 and inserting in lieu thereof the following new items:

"Sec. 136. Long-term health care savings account distributions.

"Sec. 137. Cross references to other Acts.".

(f) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) The table of sections for subpart A of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 of such Code is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 25 the following new item:

"Sec. 25A. Long-term health care savings accounts.".

(2) The table of sections for chapter 43 of such Code is amended by striking out the item relating to section 4973 and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"Sec. 4973. Tax on excess contributions to individual retirement accounts, long-term health care savings accounts, certain 403(b) contracts, and certain individual retirement annuities.".

(3) The table of sections for subchapter B of chapter 68 of such Code is amended by inserting "or on long-term health care savings accounts" after "annuities" in the item relating to section 6693.

(g) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1989.

S. 141

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. LONG-TERM HEALTH CARE INSURANCE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subpart A of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to nonrefundable personal credits) is amended by inserting after section 25, the following new section:

"SEC. 25A. LONG-TERM HEALTH CARE INSURANCE.

"(a) ALLOWANCE OF CREDIT.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—In the case of an individual, there shall be allowed as a credit against the tax imposed by this chapter for the taxable year an amount equal to the applicable percentage of the long-term health insurance costs paid by such individual during such taxable year for a qualifying individual.

"(2) APPLICABLE PERCENTAGE DEFINED.—

"(A) GENERAL RULE.—For purposes of paragraph (1), the term 'applicable percentage' means 15 percent of the cost of long-term health care insurance incurred by a taxpayer during any taxable year which does not exceed—

"(i) $300 if such insurance covers 1 qualifying individual, or

"(ii) $600 if such insurance covers 2 or more qualifying individuals.

"(B) PHASE OUT OF 15 PERCENT CREDIT.—In accordance with tables developed by the Secretary, the applicable percentage shall be reduced ratably in the same manner and over the same amount as the 15-percent rate is phased out for taxable income in excess of the applicable dollar amount under section 1(g).

"(b) QUALIFYING INDIVIDUAL.—

"(1) DEFINITION.—The term 'qualifying individual' means the beneficiary of long-term health care insurance if such individual is—

"(A) the taxpayer,

"(B) the spouse of the taxpayer, or

"(C) the parent of the taxpayer or of the taxpayer's spouse (in the case of a joint return under section 6013).

"(2) PARENT NEED NOT BE DEPENDENT.—For purposes of paragraph (1), a parent of the taxpayer or of the taxpayer's spouse need not qualify as a dependent under section 152.

"(3) INSURANCE COSTS PAID BY MORE THAN 1 PERSON.—If more than 1 individual contributes to the long-term health care insurance costs for a parent, the amount of such costs shall be allocated proportionately among all individuals contributing to such costs during that year on the basis of the amounts contributed by such individual.

"(c) DEFINITIONS OF LONG-TERM HEALTH CARE INSURANCE AND LONG-TERM HEALTH CARE.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) LONG-TERM HEALTH CARE INSURANCE.—The term 'long-term health care insurance' means an insurance contract through which long-term health care benefits are provided and the renewal of such contract is guaranteed.

"(2) LONG-TERM HEALTH CARE.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this section, the term 'long-term health care' means providing necessary diagnostic, preventive, therapeutic, and rehabilitative services, or maintenance or personal care services, required by a chronically ill individual in a qualified facility by a qualified provider.

"(B) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of subparagraph (A)—

"(i) QUALIFIED FACILITY.—The term 'qualified facility' means—

"(I) a nursing, rehabilitative, hospice, or adult day care facility, including a hospital, retirement home, nursing home, skilled nursing facility, intermediate care facility, or similar institution, licensed under State law, or

"(II) an individual's home if a physician, licensed under State law, certifies that without home care the individual would have to be cared for in a facility described in subclause (I), except that such home shall be treated as a qualified facility only to the extent the cost of such services is not greater than the cost of similar services provided in a facility described in subclause (I).

"(ii) CHRONICALLY ILL INDIVIDUAL.—The term 'chronically ill individual' means an individual who has been certified by a physician, licensed under State law, as requiring assistance with eating, toileting, mobility, bathing, or dressing.

"(iii) MAINTENANCE OR PERSONAL CARE SERVICES.—The term 'maintenance or personal care services' means any service the primary purpose of which is to provide needed assistance with any of the activities of daily living described in clause (ii).

"(iv) QUALIFIED PROVIDER.—The term 'qualified provider' means a medical practitioner licensed under State law, registered nurse, licensed registered nurse, qualified therapist, trained home health aid employed by a licensed home health agency, or trained home health aid licensed under State law, but does not include a relative or other person who ordinarily resides in the home.

"(3) PHYSICIAN.—The term 'physician' has the meaning given to such term by section 213(d)(4).".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for subpart A of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended by adding after the item relating to section 25 the following new item:

"Sec. 25A. Long-Term Health Care Insurance.".

SEC. 2. DEDUCTION FOR NON-DEPENDENT PARENT LONG-TERM HEALTH CARE EXPENSES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 213 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to medical, dental, etc., expenses) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(f) SPECIAL RULE FOR NON-DEPENDENT PARENT.—A taxpayer may treat as a deductible expense for purposes of subsection (a), any expense incurred by a taxpayer during the taxable year for long-term health care (as defined by section 25A(c)(2)) if such expense is incurred for a non-dependent parent of the taxpayer or the taxpayer's spouse (in the case of joint return under section 6013).".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1989.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Long-Term Care Insurance Consumer Protection Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. ESTABLISHMENT OF PROGRAM OF VOLUNTARY CERTIFICATION OF LONG-TERM CARE INSURANCE POLICIES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Title XVIII of the Social Security Act is amended by inserting immediately after section 1882 the following new section:

"VOLUNTARY CERTIFICATION OF LONG-TERM CARE INSURANCE POLICIES

"SEC. 1882A. (a) The Secretary shall establish a procedure whereby long-term care insurance policies (as defined in subsection (f)(1)) may be certified by the Secretary as meeting minimum standards and requirements set forth in subsection (c). Such procedure shall provide an opportunity for any insurer to submit any such policy, and such additional data as the Secretary finds necessary, to the Secretary for his examination and for his certification thereof as meeting the standards and requirements set forth in subsection (c). Such certification shall remain in effect if the insurer files a notarized statement with the Secretary no later than June 30 of each year stating that the policy continues to meet such standards and requirements and if the insurer submits such additional data as the Secretary finds necessary to verify independently the accuracy of such notarized statement. Where the Secretary determines such a policy meets (or continues to meet) such standards and requirements, he shall authorize the insurer to have printed on such policy (but only in accordance with such requirements and conditions as the Secretary may prescribe) an emblem which the Secretary shall cause to be designed for use as an indication that a policy has received the Secretary's certification. The Secretary shall provide each State commissioner or superintendent of insurance with a list of all the policies which have received his certification.

"(b)(1) Any long-term care insurance policy issued in any State that the Long-Term Care Insurance Panel (established under paragraph (2)) determines has established under State law a regulatory program that—

"(A) provides for the application of standards with respect to such policies equal to or more stringent than the NAIC Model Act Standards (as defined in subsection (f)(2)(A)),

"(B) includes requirements equal to or more stringent than the requirements described in subsection (c)(2), and

"(C) provides for application of the standards and requirements described in subparagraphs (A) and (B) to all long-term care insurance policies (as defined in subsection (f)(1)) issued in such State; shall be deemed (for so long as the Long-Term Care Insurance Panel finds that such State regulatory program continues to meet the standards and requirements of this paragraph) to meet the standards and requirements set forth in subsection (c).

"(2)(A) There is hereby established a panel to be known as the Long-Term Care Insurance Panel (hereinafter in this section referred to as the 'Panel'). The Panel shall consist of the Secretary, who shall serve as the Chairman, three State commissioners or superintendents of insurance, one representative of the insurance industry, and four individuals chosen from among medicare beneficiaries and representatives of employers and labor. Such commissioners or superintendents and individuals shall be appointed by the President and serve at his pleasure, with the first such appointments made not later than December 31, 1989.

"(B) The provisions of subparagraphs (B) through (E) of section 1882(b)(2) shall apply to the Panel to the same extent as they apply to the Supplemental Health Insurance Panel under such section.

"(c) The Secretary shall certify under this section any long-term care insurance policy, or continue certification of such a policy, only if he finds that such policy—

"(1) meets or exceeds (either in a single policy, or, in the case of nonprofit hospital and medical service associations, in one or more policies issued in conjunction with one another) the NAIC Model Act Standards; and

"(2)(A) is guaranteed to be renewable on the basis of the same premium rate (or, if a different rate, a rate that is adjusted on a class basis),

"(B) allows an individual a period of at not less than 30 days to rescind the purchase of a policy,

"(C) contains a statement of the availability of (and limitation upon) long-term care benefits under the insurance programs established under this title (to the same extent as is provided to beneficiaries under this title by the Secretary under section 4 of the Long-Term Care Insurance Consumer Protection Act of 1988), and

"(D) meets or exceeds such other requirements as the Secretary (in consultation with State commissioners or superintendents of insurance) shall by regulation prescribe.

"(d)(1) Whoever knowingly and willfully makes or causes to be made or induces or seeks to induce the making of any false statement or representation of a material fact with respect to the compliance of any policy with the standards and requirements set forth in subsection (c) or in regulations promulgated pursuant to such subsection, or with respect to the use of the emblem designed by the Secretary under subsection (a), shall be guilty of a felony and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not more than $25,000 or imprisoned for not more than 5 years, or both.

"(2)(A) Whoever knowingly, directly or through his agent, mails or causes to be mailed any matter for a prohibited purpose (as determined under subparagraph (B)) shall be guilty of a felony and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not more than $25,000 or imprisoned for not more than 5 years, or both.

"(B)(i) For purposes of subparagraph (A), a prohibited purpose means the advertising, solicitation, or offer for sale of a long-term care insurance policy, or the delivery of such a policy, in or into any State in which such policy has not been approved by the State commissioner or superintendent of insurance.

"(ii) For purposes of clause (i), a long-term care insurance policy shall be deemed to be approved by the commissioner or superintendent of insurance of a State if—

"(I) the policy has been certified by the Secretary pursuant to subsection (c) or was issued in a State with an approved regulatory program (as defined in subsection (f)(2)(B));

"(II) the policy has been approved by the commissioners or superintendents of insurance in States in which more than 30 percent of such policies are sold; or

"(III) the State has in effect a law which the commissioner or superintendent of insurance of the State has determined gives him the authority to review, and to approve, or effectively bar from sale in the State, such policy; except that such a policy shall not be deemed to be approved by a State commissioner or superintendent of insurance if the State notifies the Secretary that such policy has been submitted for approval to the State and has been specifically disapproved by such State after providing appropriate notice and opportunity for hearing pursuant to the procedures (if any) of the State.

"(C) Subparagraph (A) shall not apply in the case of a person who mails or causes to be mailed a long-term care insurance policy into a State if such person has ascertained that the party insured under such policy to whom (or on whose behalf) such policy is mailed is located in such State on a temporary basis.

"(D) Subparagraph (A) shall not apply in the case of a person who mails or causes to be mailed a duplicate copy of a long-term care insurance policy previously issued to the party to whom (or on whose behalf) such duplicate copy is mailed, if such policy expires not more than 12 months after the date on which the duplicate copy is mailed.

"(e) The Secretary shall provide to all individuals entitled to benefits under this title (and, to the extent feasible, to individuals about to become so entitled) such information as will permit such individuals to evaluate the value of long-term care insurance policies to them and the relationship of any such policies to benefits provided under this title.

"(f)(1)(A) Subject to the last sentence of this subparagraph, for purposes of this section, a long-term care insurance policy is any insurance policy offered by a private entity that provides coverage—

"(i) for not less than 12 consecutive months for each covered person,

"(ii) on an expense incurred, indemnity, prepaid or other basis, and

"(iii) for one or more long-term health care services.

No insurance policy that is offered primarily to provide basic medicare supplement coverage, basic hospital expense coverage, basic medical-surgical expense coverage, hospital confinement indemnity coverage, major medical expense coverage, disability income protection coverage, accident only coverage, specified disease or specified accident coverage, or limited benefit health coverage shall be considered a long-term care insurance policy under this section.

"(B)(i) For purposes of subparagraph (A)(iii), the term 'long-term health care services' includes any service that—

"(I) consists of the providing of necessary diagnostic, preventive, therapeutic, and rehabilitative services, or maintenance or personal care services, required by an individual who is chronically ill or disabled, and

"(II) is provided in a qualified facility by a qualified provider.

"(ii) For purposes of this subparagraph, the term 'qualified facility' means—

"(I) a nursing, rehabilitative, hospice, or adult day care facility, including a hospital, retirement home, nursing home, skilled nursing facility, intermediate care facility, or similar institution, or

"(II) an individual's home if a medical practitioner, licensed under State law, certifies that without home care the individual would have to be cared for in a facility described in subclause (I), except that such home shall be treated as a qualified facility only to the extent the cost of such services is greater than the cost of similar services provided in a facility described in subclause (I).

"(iii) For purposes of this subparagraph, the term 'chronically ill individual' means an individual who has been certified by a medical practitioner, licensed under State law, as requiring assistance with eating, toileting, mobility, bathing, or dressing.

"(iv) For purposes of this subparagraph, the term 'maintenance and personal care services' means any service the primary purpose of which is—

"(I) to provide needed assistance with any of the activities of daily living described in clause (iii), or

"(II) to provide needed assistance with any of the following instrumental activities of daily living: housekeeping, shopping, errands, food preparation, laundry, and chores.

"(v) For purposes of this subparagraph, the term 'qualified provider' means a medical practitioner licensed under State law, registered nurse, licensed registered nurse, qualified therapist, trained home health aid, or homemaker, but does not include a relative or other person who ordinarily resides in the home.

"(2) For purposes of this section—

"(A) the term 'NAIC Model Act Standards' means the standards set forth in the Long-Term Care Insurance Model Act (as revised), adopted by the National Association of Insurance Commissioners in January, 1988;

"(B) the term 'State with an approved regulatory program' means a State for which the Panel has made a determination under subsection (b)(1); and

"(C) the State in which a policy is issued means—

"(i) in the case of an individual policy, the State in which the policyholder resides, and

"(ii) in the case of a group policy, the State in which the holder of the master policy resides.

"(g)(1) No long-term care insurance policy shall be certified and no such policy may be issued bearing the emblem authorized by the Secretary under subsection (a) until July 1, 1990. On and after such date, policies certified by the Secretary may bear such emblem, including policies that were issued prior to such date and were subsequently certified, and insurers may notify holders of such certified policies prior to such date using such emblem in the notification.

"(2)(A) The Secretary shall not implement the certification program established under subsection (a) with respect to policies issued in a State unless the Panel makes a finding that such State cannot be expected to have established, by July 1, 1990, an approved State regulatory program meeting the standards and requirements of subsection (b)(1). If the Panel makes such a finding, the Secretary shall implement such program under subsection (a) with respect to long-term care insurance policies issued in such State, until such time as the Panel determines that such State has a program that meets the standards and requirements of subsection (b)(1).

"(B) Any finding by the Panel under subparagraph (A) shall be transmitted in writing, not later than January 1, 1990, to the Committee on Finance of the Senate and to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and shall not become effective until 60 days after the date of its transmittal to the Committees of the Congress under this subparagraph.

"(h) Nothing in this section shall be construed so as to affect the right of any State to regulate long-term care insurance policies that, under the provisions of this section, are considered to be issued in another State.".

(b) REPORT TO CONGRESS.—Not later than one year after the date of enactment of this Act, the Long-Term Care Insurance Panel established under section 1882A(b)(2)(A) of the Social Security Act (as added by the amendment made by subsection (a)) shall report to the Congress its recommendations on whether the standards and requirements set forth in section 1882A(c) of such Act (as so added) should include with respect to any long-term care insurance policy either of the following requirements:

(1) Any such policy must meet a minimum loss ratio (or other value measure).

(2) Any such policy must disclose minimum loss ratios or other key financial information.

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall become effective on the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 3. CLARIFICATION OF CRIMINAL SANCTION FOR SALE OF HEALTH INSURANCE POLICIES THAT DUPLICATE MEDICARE BENEFITS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 1882(d)(3) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395ss(d)(3)) is amended by striking "entitled," and inserting "entitled (including benefits furnished by a skilled nursing facility or home health agency),".

SEC. 4. NOTICE TO MEDICARE BENEFICIARIES REGARDING AVAILABILITY OF LONG-TERM CARE BENEFITS UNDER MEDICARE PROGRAM.

(a) NOTICE REQUIRED.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services (in this section referred to as the "Secretary") shall notify each individual who is entitled to benefits under title XVIII of the Social Security Act of the availability of (and limitation upon) long-term care benefits (as defined by the Secretary) under the insurance programs that are established under title XVIII of the Social Security Act.

(b) TIMING.—The Secretary shall provide the notice described in subsection (a)—

(1) when an individual applies for benefits under part A or enrolls under part B of such title on or after January 1, 1990, and

(2) in November of 1989 and annually thereafter.

By Mr. INOUYE:

S. 143. A bill to establish the Indian Development Finance Corporation; to the Select Committee on Indian Affairs.

INDIAN DEVELOPMENT FINANCE CORPORATION ACT

● Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, during the last Congress both the House and Senate passed legislation to create an Indian Development Finance Corporation. This bill was sent to the White House in the final days of the 100th Congress and was pocket vetoed. Today I am reintroducing this bill.

The cycle of poverty and unemployment on Indian reservations has remained unbroken for over 100 years. Although the Federal Government has spent millions of dollars over the past 20 years to stimulate economic development on reservations, the only result has been an even stronger dependency on the Federal Government for income and support. The reasons for this failure have been documented in many reports and they include inadequate levels of funding, lack of coordination between programs, and a lack of private business experience on the part of the program administrators.

The Indian Development Finance Corporation Act is a proposal which would depart from the failed policies of the past by emulating the successful experiences of the World Bank. The IDFC would stimulate economic development by furnishing long-term capital, providing project development and business venture assistance through a combination of equity investments, direct loans and loan guarantees. The proposal that passed last year was the result of years of discussion among economic experts, tribal leaders, and Members of Congress, and represented the first truly innovative and significant step toward addressing the economic problems plaguing Indian reservations.

I believe that President Reagan was advised to veto this bill primarily because the administration was not involved in the development of the legislation. However, I am convinced that this proposal has merit and that the hearing I have scheduled for March 3, 1989, will provide an opportunity for the new administration to present views that will be constructive and germane.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 143

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Indian Development Finance Corporation Act".

CONGRESSIONAL FINDINGS AND PURPOSE

SEC. 2. (a) The Congress finds that—

(1) a special relationship has existed between the United States and the Indian tribes which is recognized in clause 3, section 8, article I of the United States Constitution,

(2) Congress, through statutes, treaties and the exercise of administrative authorities, has implemented the Federal Government's responsibility for the protection and preservation of Indian tribes and their resources,

(3) despite the availability of abundant, natural resources on Indian lands and a rich, cultural legacy which places great value on self-determination, self-reliance and independence, American Indians and Alaskan Natives experience poverty and unemployment along with the associated incidences of social pathology, to an extent unequaled by any other group in America,

(4) the reasons for such unparalleled poverty and unemployment have been widely studied and documented by the Congress, the General Accounting Office, the United States Department of the Interior, private academic institutions and the Indian tribes themselves and that such studies have consistently identified as fundamental obstacles to balanced economic growth and progress—

(A) the very limited availability of long term development capital and sources of financial credit necessary to support the development of a private sector economy in Indian country comprised of Indian owned business enterprises,

(B) the lack of effective control by the Indians over their own lands and resources, and

(C) the scarcity of experienced Indian managers and technicians,

(5) previous efforts of the Federal Government directed at stimulating Indian economic development through the provision of grants, direct loans, loan guarantees, and interest subsidies have fallen far short of their objectives due to—

(A) inadequate funds,

(B) lack of coordination,

(C) arbitrary project selection criteria,

(D) politicalization of the delivery system, and

(E) other inefficiencies characteristic of a system of publicly administered financial intermediation, and

(6) the experience acquired by multilateral lending institutions among the so-called lesser developed countries has demonstrated the value and necessity of development financing institutions in achieving economic growth in underdeveloped economies and societies which are strikingly similar to Indian and Alaskan Native communities in relation to such matters as control over natural resource management and the absence of experienced, indigenous managers and technicians, as well as the availability of long term development capital and private sources of financial credit.

(b) It is hereby declared to be the policy of Congress that, in fulfillment of its special and longstanding responsibility to the Indian tribes, the Federal Government should provide assistance to the Indian people in their efforts to break free from the devastating effects of extreme poverty and unemployment and achieve lasting economic self-sufficiency through the development of the private sector of tribal economies by establishing a federally chartered, mixed ownership development financing institution which shall provide a broad range of financial intermediary services including working capital, direct loans, loan guarantees and project development assistance utilizing the proven efficiencies of the private market mode of operation.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 3. For purposes of this Act—

(1) The term "Indian" means any person who is a member of any Indian tribe.

(2) The term "Indian tribe" means any Indian tribe, band, nation, or other organized group or community, which is recognized by the United States as eligible for the special programs and services provided by the United States to Indians because of their status as Indians including any Alaska Native village or regional or village corporation as defined in, or established under, the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act (43 U.S.C. 1601 et seq.).

(3) The term "reservation" means any Indian reservation, public domain Indian allotment, or former Indian reservation in Oklahoma.

(4) The term "tribal organization" means the governing body of any Indian tribe or any entity established, controlled, or owned by such governing body.

(5) The term "Indian business enterprise" means any commercial, industrial or business entity—

(A) at least 51 percent of which is owned by one or more Indian tribes or Indians who are members of Indian tribes which are shareholders of the Corporation,

(B) which produces or furnishes goods, services, or facilities, which is operated, or organized on a for-profit basis, and

(C) whose—

(i) principal place of business is located within, or adjacent to, the boundaries of an Indian reservation or land held by any Alaska Native village or regional or village corporation (as defined in, or established under, the provisions of the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act), or

(ii) principal business activities in addition to the production of a stream of income are determined by the Corporation to be directly beneficial to an Indian tribe, to contribute to the economy of such Indian tribe, and to have a significant impact on the entrepreneurial and employment opportunities and levels within an Indian reservation or within Indian lands.

Such term includes any subsidiary entity which is owned and controlled by any commercial, industrial or business activity described in the preceding sentence.

(6) The term "Corporation" means the Indian Development Finance Corporation established under section 101(a).

(7) The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of the Interior.

CONSTRUCTION OF THIS ACT

SEC. 4. Except as may be specifically provided in this Act, nothing in this Act may be construed to—

(1) affect the sovereign immunity of any Indian tribe,

(2) authorize the Corporation to acquire any trust assets of an Indian tribe, or

(3) diminish the trust obligation of the United States to any Indian tribe or any member of an Indian tribe.

TITLE I—ESTABLISHMENT OF CORPORATION

CREATION

SEC. 101. (a) There is hereby established the Indian Development Finance Corporation.

(b) The Corporation shall have succession until dissolved by Act of Congress. Only the Congress shall have the authority to revise or amend the charter of the Corporation.

FUNCTIONS

SEC. 102. (a) It shall be the duty of the Corporation to—

(1) assist in strengthening Indian tribal economies through the development of Indian business enterprises whose activities are directed at contributing to such economies by having a significant positive impact on the employment opportunities within Indian reservations or Indian lands of tribal members;

(2) provide development capital through the financial services that the Corporation is authorized to provide under subsections (b), (c), and (d);

(3) encourage the development of new and existing Indian business enterprises eligible for its assistance by providing and coordinating the availability of—

(A) long term capital and working capital,

(B) loans, loan guarantees and other forms of specialized credit, and

(C) technical and managerial assistance and training;

(4) maintain broad based control of the Corporation in its voting stockholders; and

(5) encourage active participation in the Corporation by Indian tribes by ownership of its equity securities.

(b)(1) The Corporation may—

(A) make loans or commitments for loans to any Indian business enterprise, or

(B) purchase, insure or discount any obligations of an Indian business enterprise, if such enterprise meets the requirements of paragraph (2).

(2) An Indian business enterprise meets the requirements of this paragraph if the Corporation makes an independent determination that—

(A) such enterprise has or will have—

(i) a sound organizational and financial structure,

(ii) income in excess of its operating costs,

(iii) assets in excess of its obligations, and

(iv) a reasonable expectation of a continuing demand for—

(I) its production, goods, commodities, or services, or

(II) its facilities, and

(B) the loan or obligation of such enterprise will be fully repayable in accordance with the terms and conditions of such loan or obligation.

(3)(A) In setting the terms, rates, and charges for loans made under this subsection the objective of the Corporation shall be to provide the type of credit needed by Indian business enterprises at the lowest reasonable cost and on a sound business basis, taking into account—

(i) the cost of money to the Corporation,

(ii) the necessary reserve and expenses of the Corporation, and

(iii) the technical and other assistance attributable to loans made available by the Corporation under this subsection.

(B) The terms of any loan made under this subsection may provide for interest rates which vary from time to time during the repayment period of the loan in accordance with the rates being charged by the Corporation for new loans at such times.

(4) The proceeds of a loan made under this subsection may be advanced or reloaned by the borrower to its members or stockholders for the development of individually owned businesses on or adjacent reservations, or land held by any Alaska Native village or regional or village corporation (as defined in, or established under, the provisions of the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act), under circumstances permitted under the bylaws or rules of the Corporation.

(c)(1) The Corporation may guarantee up to, but not exceeding, 90 percent of the principal and interest of any loan made by any State or federally chartered lending institution to any Indian business enterprise if—

(A) such loan is to an Indian business enterprise that meets the requirements of subsection (b)(2), and

(B) such loan was made on terms and conditions (including the rate of interest) which would be permissible terms and conditions if such loan were a direct loan made by the Corporation.

(2) The Corporation may impose a charge for any loan guarantee made under this subsection.

(3) No loan may be guaranteed by the Corporation under this subsection if the income from such to the lender is excludable from such lender's gross income for purposes of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.

(4) Any loan guarantee made under this subsection shall be assignable to the extent provided in the contract of guarantee entered into by the Corporation.

(5) Any guarantee made under this subsection shall be uncontestable, except in the case of fraud or misrepresentation of which the holder had actual knowledge at the time he acquired the loan.

(6) The Corporation, in lieu of requiring the original lender to service a loan guaranteed under this subsection until final maturity or liquidation, may purchase such guaranteed loan for an amount equal to the balance of the principal and the amount of interest accrued thereon without penalty if the Corporation determines that the purchase would not be detrimental to the interests of the Corporation and—

(A) the liquidation of such guaranteed loan would result in the insolvency of the borrower or deprive the borrower of assets essential to its continued operation,

(B) such guaranteed loan will be repayable with revision of the loan rates, terms, payment periods, or other conditions consistent with loans made by the Corporation under subsection (b), and

(C) the lender or other holder of such guaranteed loan is unwilling to make such revision.

(d)(1) For purposes of providing long-term capital and working capital to Indian business enterprises, the Corporation is authorized to purchase, or make commitments to purchase, no more than 30 percent of the equity or ownership interest in any Indian business enterprise if the Corporation determines, after a full and complete appraisal of all project and business plans associated with the investment taking into account the criteria set forth in subsection (b)(2) that such an investment does not expose the Corporation to any unreasonable business risks considering the applicable standards prevailing in the field of development finance as applied to Indian economic development (or, in light of the socio-economic, political and legal conditions unique to Indian reservations).

(2) The Corporation is also authorized to supervise or participate in the management of Indian business enterprises in which an investment has been made under paragraph (1) according to such terms and conditions as are agreed to by the Corporation and the principals of the enterprise, including the assumption of a directorship in the corporate body of such Indian business enterprise by an officer of the Corporation.

GENERAL POWERS

SEC. 103. In carrying out the provisions of this Act, the Corporation shall have the power, consistent with the provisions of this Act—

(1) to adopt and alter a corporate seal, which shall be judicially noticed,

(2) to make agreements and contracts with persons, Indian tribes, and private or governmental entities and to make payments or advance payments under such agreements or contracts without regard to section 3324 of title 31, United States Code, except that the Corporation shall provide financial assistance only in accordance with this Act,

(3) to—

(A) lease, purchase, accept gifts or donations of, or otherwise to acquire,

(B) own, hold, improve, use, or otherwise deal in or with, and

(C) sell, convey, mortgage, pledge, lease, exchange, or otherwise dispose of, any property, real, personal, or mixed, or any interest therein,

(4) to sue and be sued in its corporate name and to complain and defend in any court of competent jurisdiction,

(5) to represent itself, or to contract for representation, in all judicial, legal, and other proceedings,

(6) to make provision for and designate such committees, and the functions thereof, as the Board of Directors may deem necessary or desirable,

(7) with the approval of the agency concerned, to make use of services, facilities, and property of any board, commission, independent establishment, or executive agency or department of the executive branch in carrying out the provisions of this Act and to pay for such use (such payments to be credited to the applicable appropriation that incurred the expense),

(8) to use the United States mails on the same terms and conditions as the executive departments of the United States Government,

(9) to obtain insurance or make other provisions against losses,

(10) to participate with one or more other financial institutions, agencies, instrumentalities, trusts, or foundations in loans or guarantees made under this Act on terms as may be agreed upon,

(11) to accept guarantees from other agencies for which loans made by the Corporation may be eligible,

(12) to establish, as soon as practicable, regional offices in order to more efficiently serve the widely disbursed Indian population,

(13) to buy and sell—

(A) obligations of, or instruments insured by, the United States or any agency or instrumentalities thereof, or

(B) securities backed by the full faith and credit of any such agency or instrumentality,

(14) to make such investments as may be authorized by the Board of Directors of the Corporation,

(15) to establish such offices within the Corporation as may be necessary including offices for—

(A) Project Development,

(B) Project Evaluation and Auditing,

(C) Fiscal Management,

(D) Research and Development, and

(E) any other offices as may from time to time be authorized by the Board of Directors, and

(16) to exercise all other lawful powers necessarily or reasonably related to the establishment of the Corporation in order to carry out the provisions of this Act and the exercise of its powers, purposes, functions, duties, and authorized activities.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS

SEC. 104. (a) The powers of the Corporation shall be vested in the Board of Directors.

(b)(1) The Board of Directors shall consist of the following 15 members:

(A) 1 officer of the United States Government designated by the Secretary of the Interior,

(B) 13 individuals appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and

(C) the President of the Corporation.

(2)(A) Of the members of the Board of Directors described in paragraph (1)(B)—

(i) at least 7 members shall be Indians, and

(ii) no more than 7 members may be members of the same political party.

(B) In making appointments under paragraph (1)(B) and paragraph (4), the President shall take into account the experience of the individual in private business enterprises and in development or commercial finance and shall consult with, and receive recommendations from Indian tribes.

(3)(A) Of the initial members of the Board of Directors appointed by the President under paragraph (1)(B)—

(i) 3 members shall have a term of office of 1 year,

(ii) 3 members shall have a term of office of 2 years,

(iii) 3 members shall have a term of office of 3 years, and

(iv) 4 members shall have a term of office of 4 years.

The term of office assigned to each of these initial members of the Board of Directors shall be determined by the President at the time of appointment.

(B) Except as otherwise provided in this paragraph, the term of office for any members of the Board of Directors described in paragraph (1)(B) shall be 4 years.

(4) If a vacancy occurs on the Board of Directors prior to the expiration of the term of office to which a member described in paragraph (1)(B) was appointed, the President shall appoint an individual, by and with the consent of the Senate, to fill such vacancy until the expiration of such term of office.

(5) A member of the Board of Directors may be removed from office by the President only for neglect of duty or malfeasance in office.

(c)(1) The Board of Directors shall establish the policies of the Corporation and shall supervise the management of the Corporation.

(2)(A) A majority of the Board of Directors shall constitute a quorum.

(B) Except as provided in subparagraph (C), any action of the Board of Directors shall be effected by majority vote of the members of the Board of Directors.

(C) The Board of Directors may take an action which is contrary to a policy adopted, or decision made, by the shareholders of the Corporation in an election held under the bylaws of the Corporation only if two-thirds of the members of the Board of Directors vote to take such contrary action.

(3) The Board of Directors shall annually elect from among the members described in subsection (b)(1)(B) a Chairman and Vice Chairman.

(4) The Board of Directors shall adopt, and may amend, such bylaws as are necessary for the proper management and functioning of the Corporation.

(5)(A) The Board of Directors shall meet at any time pursuant to the call of the Chairman and as may be provided by the bylaws of the Corporation, but not less than quarterly.

(B) Subject to such rules adopted by the Board of Directors as are necessary for the orderly conduct of business, all meetings of the Board of Directors shall be open to representatives of Indian tribes, Indian business enterprises, and Indian organizations and any individual who has an identifiable interest in the affairs of the Corporation. The Board of Directors may meet in private executive session if the matter under discussion in such session involves any matter which may impinge on the right of privacy of any individual.

(d) Each member of the Board of Directors not otherwise employed by the Federal Government or a State government shall receive compensation at a rate equal to the daily rate for GS-18 of the General Schedule under section 5332 of title 5, United States Code, for each day, including traveling time, the member is engaged in the actual performance of duties as a member of the Board of Directors. A member of the Board of Directors who is an officer or employee of the United States Government or of a State government shall serve without additional compensation. All members of the Board of Directors shall be reimbursed for travel, subsistence, and other necessary expenses incurred by them in the performance of their duties.

OFFICERS; EMPLOYEES

SEC. 105. (a) The Board of Directors shall appoint a President of the Corporation. The President of the Corporation may be removed from office by the Board of Directors in accordance with the bylaws of the Corporation.

(b) The President of the Corporation shall serve as the chief executive officer of the Corporation. Subject to the direction of the Board of Directors and the general supervision of the Chairman, the President of the Corporation shall have the responsibility for carrying out the policies and functions of the Corporation, and shall have authority over all personnel and activities of the Corporation.

(c) The President of the Corporation, with the approval of the Board of Directors, shall have the authority to appoint and fix the compensation and duties of such officers and employees as may be necessary for the efficient administration of the Corporation. Such appointments and compensation may be made without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointments in the competitive service, and chapter 51 and subchapter III of chapter 53 of title 5, United States Code.

CONFLICTS OF INTEREST AND FINANCIAL DISCLOSURE

SEC. 106. (a) The financial disclosure provisions of the Ethics in Government Act of 1978 (92 Stat. 1824; Public Law 95-521) applicable to individuals occupying positions compensated under the Executive Schedule shall apply to the members of the Board of Directors, the officers of the Corporation and to employees of the Corporation whose position is compensated at a rate equivalent to that payable for grade GS-16 or above of the General Schedule established by chapter 53 of title 5, United States Code. The financial disclosure provisions of the Ethics in Government Act of 1978 shall apply to the Corporation as if it were a Federal agency.

(b)(1) Except as permitted by paragraph (3), no member of the Board of Directors shall vote on any matter respecting any application, contract, claim, or other particular matter pending before the Corporation, in which, to his knowledge—

(A) such member,

(B) his spouse, child, or partner,

(C) an organization (other than the Corporation) in which he is serving as officer, director, trustee, partner, or employee, or

(D) any person or organization with whom he is negotiating, or has any arrangement concerning, prospective employment, has a financial interest.

(2) Action by any member of the Board of Directors contrary to the prohibition contained in paragraph (1) shall be cause for removal of such member pursuant to section 104(b)(5), but shall not impair or otherwise affect the validity of any otherwise lawful action by the Corporation in which such member participated.

(3) The prohibition contained in paragraph (1) shall not apply if the member first advises the Board of Directors of the nature of the particular matter in which he or she proposes to participate and makes full disclosure of such financial interest, and the Board of Directors determines by majority vote that the financial interest is too remote or too inconsequential to affect the integrity of such member's services for the Corporation in that matter. The member involved shall not participate in such determination.

(c) Subsection (a) of section 207 of title 18, United States Code (and subsections (f), (h), and (j) of such section to the extent they relate to subsection (a)) shall apply to former members of the Board of Directors, officers, and employees of the Corporation as if they were former officers or employees of the executive branch of the United States Government. Such section shall apply to the Corporation as if it were an agency of the executive branch of the United States Government.

ANNUAL MEETINGS

SEC. 107. (a) The Corporation shall hold an annual meeting of its shareholders which shall be open to the public. At such meeting, the Corporation shall give a full report of its activities during the year and its financial condition and may present proposals for future action and other matters of general concern to shareholders and Indian business enterprises eligible for services from the Corporation.

(b) Shareholders and representatives of Indian business enterprises may present motions or resolutions at the annual meeting of shareholders relating to matters within the scope of this Act and may participate in the discussion thereof and other matters on the agenda of such meeting.

(c) At least 30 days notice of the time and place of the annual meeting required under subsection (a) shall be given to all shareholders.

(d) Each member tribe shall be entitled to vote their common stock on all matters before the annual shareholders meeting.

REPORTS TO CONGRESS

SEC. 108. (a) The Board of Directors of the Corporation shall report annually to the appropriate committees of the Congress on the Corporation's capital, operations, and financial condition. Such report shall include recommendations for legislation needed to improve the services of the Corporation.

(b) At the close of the first calendar year beginning after enactment of this Act, the Corporation shall submit to the Congress a comprehensive, 5-year organizational development plan which includes:

(1) financial projections,

(2) a description of a corporate structure and locations, and

(3) operational guidelines, particularly the coordinating relationship the Corporation has, or will have, with Federal domestic assistance programs which allocate financial resources and services to Indian tribes and reservations for economic and business development purposes.

(c) By no later than the date that is 3 years after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall submit to the Congress a report on an evaluation of the activities of the Corporation that the Secretary shall conduct for purposes of determining whether there is excessive duplication of services between the activities of the Corporation and the credit and financial activities of the Secretary, conducted through the Bureau of Indian Affairs, under the authority of the Indian Financing Act of 1974 (25 U.S.C. 1451, et seqq.). The report shall include recommendations on—

(1) appropriate actions that the Congress should take, and

(2) the advisability of transferring the administration of such credit and financial activities of the Secretary to the Corporation.

ADVISORY COUNCIL

SEC. 109. (a) There is hereby established the Advisory Council to the Indian Development Finance Corporation (hereafter in this section referred to as the "Council"), which shall provide advice on the policies and operations of the Corporation.

(b) The Council shall consist of—

(1) the Comptroller of the Currency,

(2) the Secretary of Interior, and

(3) the Chairman of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System.

(c) The Council shall—

(1) recommend to the Board of Directors of the Corporation general policy directives,

(2) be available to provide financial and technical assistance upon request of the Board of Directors,

(3) transmit to the Board of Directors and the Congress an annual report with respect to the policies of the Corporation that contains data on the operations and policies of the Corporation, recommendations concerning the Corporation, and such other data and material as the Council may deem appropriate, and

(4) make reports and recommendations to the Board of Directors as it may from time to time request or as the Council may consider necessary to more effectively or efficiently accomplish the purposes of this section or the purposes for which the Council is created.

(d) The Board of Directors of the Corporation shall keep the Council fully informed of its activities and shall provide the Council with such further information or data in its possession as the Council may deem necessary to the appropriate discharge of the responsibilities of the Council under this section.

CONFORMING AMENDMENTS

SEC. 120. (a) Paragraph (2) of section 9101 of title 31, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(K) the Indian Development Finance Corporation."

(b) Paragraph (3) of section 9107(c) of such title is amended by inserting "the Indian Development Finance Corporation," after "the Regional Banks for Cooperatives,".

(c) Paragraph (2) of section 9108(d) of such title is amended by inserting "the Indian Development Finance Corporation," after "the Regional Banks for Cooperatives,".

(d) Section 5315 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"President, Indian Development Finance Corporation.".

TITLE II—CAPITALIZATION

ISSUANCE OF STOCK

SEC. 201. (a)(1) The Corporation is authorized to issue shares of stock in the Corporation in an amount and of such class as may be determined by the Board of Directors subject to the provisions of this section.

(2) Shares of stock in the Corporation may only be issued to and may only be held by Indian tribes and the United States.

(3) The Corporation is authorized to redeem or repurchase any share of stock issued by the Corporation at a price determined by the Board of Directors.

(b)(1) The Corporation shall make an initial offering of a total of 2,100,000 shares of common stock of the Corporation for sale at $50 per share to Indian tribes.

(2) The number of such shares of stock required to be purchased by each Indian tribe in order to become a member of the Corporation shall be determined on the basis of an equitable formula established by the Board of Directors taking into account indicators of the economic condition of each tribe applying for membership such economic indicators to be developed by the Board and thereafter applied on a uniform basis.

(3)(A) Twenty percent of the value of the stock to be purchased by each tribe as a condition of membership shall be paid into the Corporation in the form of cash or cash equivalent securities and 80 percent shall be in the form of a legally binding commitment available for call by the Board to meet the obligations of the Corporation but not for use of the Corporation in lending activities or for administrative expenses.

(B) For the purposes of this paragraph, the term "legally binding commitment" shall not include any trust assets except that contingent upon the approval of the Secretary, it may include callable assignments of income from specified trust sources.

(C) For the purpose of entering into such legally binding commitment, Indian tribes may enter into contracts providing for a limited waiver of sovereign immunity, except that such waivers of sovereign immunity shall be limited as specifically provided in such contracts and shall not extend beyond the terms of such contracts.

(c)(1) The Secretary is authorized to subscribe to 2,000,000 shares of capital stock in the Corporation.

(2) The Secretary—

(A) shall, subject to availability of appropriations made in advance for this purpose, pay $20,000,000, representing 20 percent of the value of the shares of capital stock in the Corporation subscribed under paragraph (1), to the Corporation within a 2-year period beginning on the date of enactment of this Act, and

(B) beginning in fiscal year 1991, is authorized to agree on behalf of the United States to pay up to $80,000,000, representing 80 percent of the value of the shares of capital stock in the Corporation subscribed under paragraph (1), or any portion thereof, to the Corporation upon call of the Board of Directors of the Corporation. The amount of this request for funds to establish a reserve for loss, will be determined by the Secretary of Interior and the Board of Directors based upon an assessment of need, taking into account a risk analysis of the investment and credit policies and practices of the Corporation. Any commitment to make such contributions shall be made subject to obtaining the necessary appropriations, and shall be made when funds are required to meet obligations of the Corporation for funds borrowed by the Corporation or for loans guaranteed by the Corporation, but not for use of the Corporation in lending activities of the Corporation or for administrative expenses of the Corporation.

(3) The capital stock subscribed by the Secretary on behalf of the United States under paragraph (1)—

(A) shall be valued at $50 per share,

(B) shall be nonvoting stock,

(C) shall not accrue dividends, and

(D) may not be transferred to any person or entity other than the Corporation.

(d) The board shall establish policies for payment of dividends to the Corporation's shareholders to be based on sound business practices and fiscal management principles and which shall give a priority to providing a return on investment based on each shareholders pro-rata interest in income generated from the capital contribution of common stock shareholders as compared to income attributable to capital contributed by the United States.

(e) The stock or other securities or instruments issued by the Corporation shall, to the same extent as securities which are the direct obligations of the United States, be exempted securities, within the meaning of the laws administered by the Securities and Exchange Commission.

BORROWING AUTHORITY

SEC. 202. (a) The Corporation is authorized, subject, in any fiscal year, to appropriations made in advance, to issue bonds, notes, and other evidences of indebtedness. Such obligations shall be issued at such times, bear interest at such rates, and contain such terms and conditions as the Board of Directors shall determine after consultation with the Secretary of the Treasury.

(b) The aggregate amount of obligations issued under subsection (a) shall not exceed an amount equal to—

(1) the product of ten multiplied by the sum of—

(A) the paid-in capital of the Corporation, plus

(B) retained earnings and profits of the Corporation, and

(2) the book value of callable capital represented by the total commitments of tribal shareholders and the $80 million subscribed to by the United States as provided for in section 201(c)(2)(B).

(c) An obligation issued under subsection (a) may be sold through an agent by negotiation, offer, bid, syndicate sale or otherwise and such transaction completed by book entry, wire transfer, or such other means as may be appropriate.

TITLE III—AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

GENERAL OPERATIONAL EXPENSES

SEC. 301. In addition to amounts authorized to be appropriated under section 302, there are authorized to be appropriated—

(1) $2,000,000 for fiscal year 1990 for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this Act,

(2) $2,500,000 for each of the fiscal years 1990, 1991, 1992, 1993 and 1994 for the purpose of project development activities under this Act, and

(3) such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act for each of the fiscal years 1991 and 1992.

AUTHORIZATIONS FOR PAID-IN CAPITAL STOCK

SEC. 302. There are authorized to be appropriated for each of the fiscal years 1990 and 1991, $10,000,000 for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of section 201(c)(2)(A). Such sums shall remain available until expended. Beginning in fiscal year 1992, such amounts, not to exceed a total of $80,000,000, are authorized to be appropriated for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of section 201(c)(2)(B).●

By Mr. METZENBAUM:

S. 146. A bill to provide comprehensive Federal assistance for day care; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

FEDERAL ASSISTANCE FOR DAY CARE

● Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I am today introducing the Day Care for Working Families Act of 1989, legislation which will expand the availability of quality, affordable day care in this country.

Day care is not a luxury—it's a necessity. The majority of young couples today must both work to put food on the table and a roof over their heads. But increasingly, quality day care is hard to find at any price.

A national survey done 2 years ago, found that 42 percent of the parents with children under 6 said the child care they need is not available, and 28 percent said the quality of their child's care was not as good as it should be.

In 1981, I introduced legislation to expand the day care tax credit. At that time, I noted in the RECORD how fare we had fallen behind in providing essential day care services. I am sad to say that the situation has not improved very much over the last 7 years.

Mr. President, we have a challenge on our hands. The American labor force has been transformed over the past two decades, and the Federal Government has been asleep at the switch.

The result is long waiting lists for day care, complex arrangements with family members and babysitters, and a lot of anxiety.

There is nothing more important to a parent than knowing their child is being cared for in a safe and loving environment. If you don't have that, you don't have peace of mind.

America needs quality day care and what we've got is a shortage—a shortage of crisis proportions for infants, for handicapped children and for kids after school.

The legislation which I am introducing today will help us to come to grips with that shortage.

First, the bill provides for a separate line item for title XX day care services. A reserve fund is created and States must spend these funds for day-care services.

According to CBO, the title XX block grant currently includes $500 million for day care. My bill increases that amount by $200 million and does not reduce the funding for any other program within the title XX block grant. It is important that these services be held harmless since they are vital to the welfare of so many people in need in our society.

I believe that this increase for day care services is long overdue. A study completed in Ohio by the children's defense fund has shown that $1 spent on day care saves $3 in welfare costs.

With all the attention currently being devoted to the reform of our welfare system, there is every reason to invest in day care for low-income families. It is the key to successful reform of the system.

The bill which I am introducing today will also provide demonstration grants for the establishment of employer-community day care councils. These councils will be made up of employers from the private and public sectors, as well as day care providers, parents, and other local community officials.

The demonstration grants, which will be administered by the Secretary of Labor, will be a 50-50 split between Federal funds and funds from State and local communities.

These grants can be used to provide startup and operating costs for day care resource and referral programs in local communities. Such programs have proven to be of enormous help in directing parents to the day care services which are best suited to their needs. In addition, they have helped expand the availability of day care by recruiting, training, and licensing family day care homes.

The grants can also be used to fund the start up, renovations, and expansion of day care facilities, and to support day care services for handicapped children.

There is a severe shortage of day care options for special needs children. Oftentimes the only option available is very costly in home care.

Finally the grants under this section of the bill can also be used to provide financial assistance to low-income families who do not qualify for title XX day care services.

I believe that the employer-community day care councils will allow the maximum flexibility at the local level and provide businesses with incentives to get more involved in providing their employees with support in their search for quality and affordable day care services.

Mr. President, we need more day care centers in this country. Toward this end, the legislation establishes a special SBA loan guarantee program for day care centers. The SBA will conduct and outreach program to provide advice and assistance to prospective providers of day care services.

Although day care providers can currently request SBA loans, they often encounters barriers since their loan amounts are typically much smaller than SBA is used to handling.

In addition to establishing a $30 million loan fund exclusively for day care, the bill requires the SBA to report to Congress within 4 months on how the needs of day care providers are being addressed.

Finally, Mr. President, the Day Care for Working Families Act includes a minimum set of standards for day care which States must enforce if they are to avail of funds under that act.

States can and should go much further than these provision to ensure that children are cared for in a clean and safe environment. However, these provisions establish some basic safeguards like regular and unannounced inspections; and open visiting policy for parents; training for day care center staff in child abuse prevention and identification; and a posting of a toll-free number to the State licensing authority.

Mr. President, as I said at the outset, the time has come to make day care a national priority.

I am hopeful that the legislation I am introducing today will be a significant contribution to that effort.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the full text of the Day Care for Working Families Act be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 146

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Day Care for Working Families Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

The Congress makes the following findings:

(1) One of the most significant changes in the labor force in the last 20 years has been the increase in the number of mothers in the workforce.

(2) Half of American mothers return to work before their baby's first birthday.

(3) In 65 percent of married-couple families with children, both the husband and wife are in the labor force.

(4) In less than 10 years time, 3 out of every 4 school-age children and 2 out of 3 preschool children will have mothers in the labor force.

(5) Over 62 percent of all new jobs created since the mid-1970's were filled by women. One in every 5 American workers is a mother. By 1990, two-thirds of all new workers will be women.

(6) Working women have helped to maintain the standard of living for many American families.

(7) There is a serious shortage of quality day care services.

(8) A majority of working parents report difficulty in finding the kind of child care they need at a price they can afford.

(9) A recent national survey of working parents has revealed that 42 percent of those parents with children under 6 found that the child care they need is not available, and 28 percent said the quality of their child's care is not as good as it should be.

(10) The provision of day care services can be the key to returning many of those on public assistance to productive jobs in the labor force.

(11) Therefore, the expansion of affordable, quality day care services is a national priority given the current and projected needs of the American workforce.

SEC. 3 EMPLOYER-COMMUNITY DAY CARE COUNCILS.

(a) GRANTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Labor shall establish a demonstration program under which matching grants are provided to employer-community day care councils to expand the availbility of affordable, high quality day care services to individuals, particularly low-income families.

(2) FEDERAL SHARE.—The Federal share of a grant provided under this section shall be 50 percent.

(b) COUNCILS.—To be eligible to obtain a grant under this section, a employer-community day care council must be established that may consist of representatives of private employers, child care programs, parents, local governments, and other local community institutions.

(c) PURPOSES.—A council may use a grant obtained under this section to provide funds for—

(1) affordable, high quality day care services for individuals, particularly low-income families;

(2) the start-up and operation of day care resource and referral programs in local communities;

(3) the support of day care services for handicapped children;

(4) day care services required by low-income families that do not qualify for assistance under title XX of Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1397 et seq.); and

(5) the establishment, renovation, and expansion of day care facilities, with priority given to facilities in which a significant portion of children cared for are low-income children.

(d) AUTHORIZATION.—To carry out this section, there are authorized to be appropriated $50,000,000 for fiscal year 1988.

SEC. 4. INCREASE IN TITLE XX AUTHORIZATION; RESERVATION FOR CHILD DAY CARE SERVICES.

(a) INCREASED AUTHORIZATION.—Section 2003(c) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1397b(c)) is amended—

(1) by striking "and" at the end of paragraph (2); and

(2) by striking paragraph (3) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(3) $2,700,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1984, 1985, 1986, and 1987; and

"(4) $2,900,000,000 for the fiscal year 1988 and each succeeding fiscal year.".

(b) RESERVATION FOR CHILD DAY CARE SERVICES.—

(1) Section 2003 of such Act is further amended by striking subsection (d) and inserting in lieu thereof the following new subsections:

"(d)(1) Of the amounts made available under subsection (c) for each fiscal year (beginning with fiscal year 1986), $700,000,000 shall be reserved by the Secretary for allotment under paragraph (2).

"(2) The amount reserved by the Secretary under paragraph (1) in any fiscal year shall be allotted among the States in the same proportions as their regular allotments determined under subsections (a) and (b) for such fiscal year.

"(e) The funds allotted to a State under subsection (d)—

"(1) shall be expended by the State only for the provision of child day care services;

"(2) shall be expended only to supplement the level of any funds that would, in the absence of such allotment, be available from other sources (including any amounts available under this title without regard to such subsection) for provision of child day care services, and shall in no case supplant such funds from other sources or reduce the level thereof;

"(3) shall be separately accounted for in the reports and audits provided for in section 2006; and

"(4) shall not be subject to the provisions of section 2002(d) (permitting a State to transfer up to 10 percent of its title XX funds for purposes authorized under other Federal block grant programs).".

(2) Section 2003(b) of such Act is amended—

(A) by adding "and further reduced by" after the comma at the end of paragraph (2); and

(B) by inserting immediately after paragraph (2) the following new paragraph:

"(3) the amounts reserved by the Secretary for that fiscal year under subsection (d).".

SEC. 5. SBA CHILD CARE LOAN PROGRAM.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 7 of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 636) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(m)(1) The Administration is also authorized to make loans (either directly or in cooperation with banks or other lending institutions through agreements to participate on an immediate or deferred basis) as the Administration determines to be necessary or appropriate to assist child care providers in constructing and renovating space to be used for child care. In providing assistance under this subsection, the Administration shall give a priority to proposed projects in areas with the greatest need and to organizations which serve or will serve significant numbers of children of low-income families.

"(2) The amount of loans under this subsection in any fiscal year shall not exceed $30,000,000.

"(3) The Administration shall establish and carry out under this subsection an outreach program to provide advice and assistance to prospective providers of day care services.

"(4) Not later than 4 months after the date of enactment of this subsection, the Administration shall transmit to the Congress a report on the structure of the program under this subsection as it affects day care providers and particularly with respect to the means by which the Administration is addressing the needs of those providers for loan amounts which are smaller than those typically made by the Administration.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 4(c)(1) of such Act (15 U.S.C. 633(c)(1)) is amended by inserting "7(m)," after "7(l)".

SEC. 6. MINIMUM REQUIREMENTS FOR DAY CARE CENTERS.

(a) Effective after October 1, 1989, no State may receive financial assistance—

(1) under title XX of the Social Security Act with respect to the portion of the allotment of the State under such title XX available for day care;

(2) or under this Act;

unless the Secretary of Health and Human Services determines that the State has established the minimum requirements for day care centers described in subsection (b).

(b) The minimum requirements described in subsection (a) are—

(1) open visiting policy for parents;

(2) posting of a toll-free number to State licensing authority;

(3) a State plan for inspections, which provides for the posting at the day care center of the last date of inspection, and includes provision for unannounced inspections of day care centers;

(4) training for day care center staff in child abuse prevention and identification; and

(5) a State plan for meeting day care needs.

SEC. 7. DAY CARE SERVICES FOR SCHOOL AGED CHILDREN REPORT.

(a) The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall carry out a thorough study on the availability of and the need for day care services for school aged children in each State.

(b) The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall, within one year after the date of enactment of this Act prepare and submit a report on the study required by subsection (a) of this section, together with such recommendations, including recommendations for legislation as the Secretary deems appropriate.●

By Mr. INOUYE:

S. 147. A bill to amend title 10, United States Code to provide for jurisdiction, apprehension, and detention of members of the Armed Forces and certain civilians accompanying the Armed Forces outside the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Armed Services.

CRIMINAL OFFENSES COMMITTED OUITSIDE THE UNITED STATES

● Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, the purpose of this bill is to fill certain jurisdictional voids involving offenses committed by U.S. nationals abroad. The Supreme Court has held that, at least in peacetime, civilians may not be tried by courts martial for offenses against military law that they may have committed abroad when they were members of the U.S. Armed Forces or when they were serving with, employed by, or accompanying the Armed Forces. Further, under existing statutes, acts committed by U.S. nationals abroad generally do not constitute offenses against any U.S. law even though they would constitute such offenses if they had been committed in this country. Thus, civilian nationals of the United States are generally not accountable to U.S. courts for their conduct abroad.

This bill would remedy this situation for conduct abroad by civilians who, at the time of the acts in question, were members of the Armed Forces or were serving with, employed by, or accompanying the Armed Forces. The bill would generally provide that such conduct would be subject to the same civilian criminal proscriptions that apply in areas under Federal jurisdication.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 147

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. CRIMINAL OFFENSES COMMITTED OUTSIDE THE UNITED STATES

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subtitle A of title 10 of the United States Code is amended by inserting after chapter 49 the following new chapter:

"CHAPTER 50—CRIMINAL OFFENSES COMMITTED OUTSIDE THE UNITED STATES

"Sec.
"991. Definitions.
"992. Criminal offenses committed by a member of the armed forces or by any person serving with, employed by, or accompanying the armed forces outside of the United States.
"993. Delivery to authorities of foreign countries.

"§ 991. Definitions

"In this chapter:

"(1) The term 'United States' includes the special maritime and territorial jurisdiction of the United States.

"(2) The term 'special maritime and territorial jurisdiction of the United States' has the same meaning as is provided in section 7 of title 18.

"(3) The term 'criminal offense' means an offense classified in section 1 of title 18 as a felony or a misdemeanor (not including a petty offense).

"§ 992. Criminal offenses committed by a member of the armed forces or by any person serving with, employed by, or accompanying the armed forces outside of the United States

"(a) Except as otherwise provided in this section, any person who, while serving as a member of the armed forces outside the United States, or while serving with, employed by, or accompanying the armed forces outside the United States, engages in conduct which would constitute a criminal offense if the conduct were engaged in within the special maritime and territorial jurisdiction of the United States shall be guilty of a like offense against the United States and shall be subject to the same punishment as is provided under the provisions of title 18 for such like offense.

"(b) A member of the armed forces may not be tried pursuant to an indictment or information charging an offense described under subsection (a) while such member is subject to trial by court-martial for the conduct charged in such indictment or information.

"(c) A person employed by the armed forces outside the United States is not punishable under subsection (a) of this section for conduct described in such subsection if such person is not a national of the United States and was appointed to his position of employment in the country in which such person engaged in such conduct.

"(d)(1) Except in the case of a prosecution approved as provided in paragraph (2), prosecution of a person may not be commenced under this section for an offense described in subsection (a) if a foreign government, in accordance with jurisdiction recognized by the United States, has prosecuted such person for the conduct constituting such offense.

"(2) The Attorney General of the United States, the Deputy Attorney General of the United States, the Associate Attorney General of the United States, or an Assistant Attorney General of the United States may approve a prosecution which, except for this paragraph, is prohibited under paragraph (1). An approval of prosecution under this paragraph must be in writing. The authority to approve a prosecution under this paragraph may not be delegated below the level of Assistant Attorney General.

"(e)(1) The Secretary of Defense may designate and authorize any member of the armed forces serving in law enforcement position in a criminal investigative agency of the Department of Defense to apprehend and detain, outside the United States, any person described in subsection (a) who is reasonably believed to have engaged in conduct which constitutes a criminal offense under such subsection.

"(2) A person apprehended and detained under paragraph (1) shall be released to the custody of civilian law enforcement authorities of the United States for removal to the United States for judicial proceedings in relation to conduct referred to in such paragraph unless (A) such person is delivered to authorities of a foreign country under section 993 of this title, or (B) such person is pending court-martial under chapter 47 of this title for such conduct.

"§ 993. Delivery to authorities of foreign countries

"(a) Any member of the armed forces designated and authorized under subsection (e) of section 992 of this title may deliver any person described in subsection (a) of such section to the appropriate authorities of a foreign country in which such person is alleged to have engaged in conduct described in such subsection (a) if—

"(1) the appropriate authorities of that country request the delivery of the person to such country for trial for such conduct as an offense under the laws of that country; and

"(2) the delivery of such person to that country is authorized by a treaty or other international agreement to which the United States is a party.

"(b) The Secretary of Defense may confine or otherwise restrain a person whose delivery is requested under subsection (a) until the completion of the trial of such person by the foreign country making such request.

"(c) The Secretary of Defense shall determine what officials of a foreign country constitute appropriate authorities for the purposes of this section.".

(b) TECHNICAL AMENDMENT.—The tables of chapters at the beginning of such title and such subtitle are each amended by inserting after the item relating to chapter 49 the following:

"50. Criminal Offenses Outside the United States .....991.".●

By Mr. PRESSLER:

S. 148. A bill to require the Secretary of the Treasury to mint coins in commemoration of the Golden Anniversary of the Mount Rushmore National Memorial; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

1991 MOUNT RUSHMORE COMMEMORATIVE COIN ACT

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, our Nation has just inaugurated its 41st President. This event offers an opportunity for us to reflect on the men who have served in the highest office in the land.

Four such men, George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, Abraham Lincoln, and Theodore Roosevelt, had a particular impact on the formation of our country. George Washington, the father of our country. Thomas Jefferson, the author of the Declaration of Independence. Abraham Lincoln, the Great Emancipator. And Theodore Roosevelt, the champion of "the little and forgotten people."

For time immemorial, these Presidents will be remembered and their contributions recognized because of Mount Rushmore. The faces carved in granite rise out of the Black Hills as a remainder to us all—not just of these great Presidents—but of humanity's determination to complete gigantic tasks.

When he began the colossal art project in 1927, sculptor Gutzon Borglum said:

We are not here trying to carve an epic, portray a moonlight scene, or write a sonnet; neither are we dealing with mystery or tragedy, but rather the constructive and dramatic moments or crises in our amazing history. We are cool-headedly, clear-mindedly setting down a few crucial, epochal facts regarding the accomplishments of the old World radicals who shook the shackles of oppression from their light feet and fled despotism to people a continent; who built an empire and rewrote the philosophy of freedom and compelled the world to accept a wiser, happier form of government. Therefore, we believe a nation's memorial should, like Washington, Jefferson, Lincoln and Roosevelt, have a serenity, a nobility, a power that reflects the gods who inspired them and suggest the gods they have become. Hence, let us place there, carved high, as close to heaven as we can, the words of our leaders, their faces, to show posterity what manner of men they were. Then breathe a prayer that these records will endure until the wind and the rain alone shall wear them away.

Today, Mount Rushmore is one of the most recognizable symbols of freedom and democracy in the world. Over 2 million people walk the winding path to view this shrine of democracy every year.

We will soon be reaching a milestone in the life of Mount Rushmore, an event that gives each of us an opportunity to reflect on the message on the mountain. In 1991, Mount Rushmore will be 50 years old. Gutzon Borglum died in 1941 when our country was becoming involved in World War II. Work on the project ground to a halt that year and Mount Rushmore remains in the same condition today.

I am introducing legislation today calling for the minting of a commemorative coin by the U.S. Mint to recognize Mount Rushmore on its Golden Anniversary in 1991. A series of commemorative coins would be an appropriate way to recognize the important role of Mount Rushmore in our Nation's identity.

Mr. President, you will recall the massive fundraising effort leading up to the centennial celebration for the Statue of Liberty. We are all touched by the sentiment and message of that statue. To help raise the money for improvements to Lady Liberty, the U.S. Mint issued commemorative coins. A portion of the surcharge on the sale of each coin was directed to the Statue of Liberty Foundation for upgrading and improving the statue.

I suggest we commit ourselves to the same kind of program for Mount Rushmore, which is also badly in need of improvements. There have been no substantial improvements to the present Mount Rushmore facilities [parking lot, restrooms, dining areas] since 1964. Since that time, annual visitation has doubled from one million to 2 million.

My legislation earmarks 50 percent of the proceeds from the coins to be directed to the Mount Rushmore Memorial Society, a nonprofit organization that has had an active part in the support and operation of the Memorial for nearly 58 years. The Society is working with the National Park Service to bring about necessary changes and improvements to the Mount Rushmore facilities. The remaining 50 percent of the proceeds would be designated to the Federal Treasury specifically for the reduction of the national debt.

In my view, the fundraising prospects from the coin are merely an added benefit. The primary purpose, of course, is to provide suitable and well-deserved recognition to Mount Rushmore.

I urge my colleagues to reflect on the importance of the four Presidents depicted in South Dakota granite. Take time to also reflect on the importance of Mount Rushmore as a national symbol. I am sure that kind of introspection will lead to support of the Mount Rushmore Commemorative Coin Act.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

S. 148

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "1991 Mount Rushmore Commemorative Coin Act".

SEC. 2. COIN SPECIFICATIONS.

(a) FIVE DOLLAR GOLD COINS.—

(1) ISSUANCE.—The Secretary of the Treasury (hereafter in this Act referred to as the "Secretary") shall issue not more than 500,000 five dollar coins which shall weigh 8.359 grams, have a diameter of 0.850 inches, and shall contain 90 percent gold and 10 percent alloy.

(2) DESIGN.—The design of such five dollar coins shall be emblematic of the Mount Rushmore National Memorial. On each such five dollar coin there shall be a designation of the value of the coin, an inscription of the year "1991", and inscriptions of the words "Mount Rushmore: Shrine of Democracy", "Golden Anniversary 1941-1991", "Liberty", "In God We Trust", "United States of America", and "E Pluribus Unum".

(b) ONE DOLLAR SILVER COINS.—

(1) ISSUANCE.—The Secretary shall issue not more than 2.5 million one dollar coins which shall weigh 26.73 grams, have a diameter of 1.500 inches, and shall contain 90 percent silver and 10 percent copper.

(2) DESIGN.—The design of such dollar coins shall be emblematic of the Mount Rushmore National Memorial. On each such coin there shall be a designation of the value of the coin, an inscription of the year "1991", and inscriptions of the words "Mount Rushmore: Shrine of Democracy", "Golden Anniversary 1941-1991", "Liberty", "In God We Trust", "United States of America", and "E Pluribus Unum".

(c) HALF DOLLAR CLAD COINS.—

(1) ISSUANCE.—The Secretary shall issue not more than 2.5 million half dollar coins which shall be minted to the specifications for half dollar coins contained in section 5112(b) of title 31, United States Code.

(2) DESIGN.—The design of such half dollar coins shall be emblematic of the Mount Rushmore National Memorial. On each such coin there shall be a designation of the value of the coin, an inscription of the year "1991", and inscriptions of the words "Mount Rushmore: Shrine of Democracy", "Golden Anniversary 1941-1991", "Liberty", "In God We Trust", "United States of America", and "E Pluribus Unum".

(d) LEGAL TENDER.—The coins issued under this Act shall be legal tender as provided in section 5103 of title 31, United States Code.

SEC. 3. SOURCES OF BULLION.

(a) The Secretary shall obtain silver for the coins minted under this Act from stockpiles established under the Strategic and Critical Minerals Stock Piling Act (50 U.S.C. 98 et seq.).

(b) The Secretary shall obtain gold for the coins minted under this Act pursuant to the authority of the Secretary under existing law.

SEC. 4. SELECTION OF DESIGN.

The design for each coin authorized by this Act shall be selected by the Secretary after consultation with the Mount Rushmore National Memorial Society of Black Hills (hereafter in this Act referred to as the "Society").

SEC. 5. SALE OF COINS.

(a) SALE PRICE.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the coins issued under this Act shall be sold by the Secretary at a price equal to the face value, plus the cost of designing and issuing such coins (including labor, materials, dies, use of machinery, overhead expenses, marketing, and shipping).

(b) BULK SALES.—The Secretary shall make bulk sales at a reasonable discount to reflect the lower costs of such sales.

(c) PREPAID ORDERS AT A DISCOUNT.—The Secretary shall accept prepaid orders for the coins prior to the issuance of such coins. Sales under this subsection shall be at a reasonable discount to reflect the benefit of prepayment.

(d) SURCHARGE REQUIRED.—All sales shall include a surcharge of $35 per coin for the five dollar coins, $7 per coin for the one dollar coins, and $1 for the half dollar coins.

SEC. 6. ISSUANCE OF THE COINS.

(a) TIME FOR ISSUANCE.—The coins authorized under this Act shall be issued beginning on January 1, 1991.

(b) PROOF AND UNCIRCULATED COINS.—The coins authorized under this Act shall be issued in uncirculated and proof qualities and shall be struck at no more than one facility of the United States Mint.

SEC. 7. GENERAL WAIVER OF PROCUREMENT REGULATIONS.

No provision of law governing procurement or public contracts shall be applicable to the procurement of goods or services necessary for carrying out the provisions of this Act. Nothing in this section shall relieve any person entering into a contract under the authority of this Act from complying with any law relating to equal employment opportunity.

SEC. 8. DISTRIBUTION OF SURCHARGES.

Of the total surcharges received by the Secretary from the sale of the coins issued under this Act—

(1) 50 percent shall be returned to the Federal Treasury for purposes of reducing the national debt; and

(2) 50 percent shall be promptly paid by the Secretary to the Society to assist the Society's efforts to improve, enlarge, and renovate the Mount Rushmore National Memorial.

SEC. 9. AUDITS.

The Comptroller General shall have the right to examine such books, records, documents, and other data of the Society as may be related to the expenditure of amounts paid under section 8.

SEC. 10. COINAGE PROFIT FUND.

Notwithstanding any other provision of law—

(1) all amounts received from the sale of coins issued under this Act shall be deposited in the coinage profit fund;

(2) the Secretary shall pay the amounts authorized under this Act from the coinage profit fund to the Mount Rushmore National Memorial Society of Black Hills; and

(3) the Secretary shall charge the coinage profit fund with all expenditures under this Act.

SEC. 11. FINANCIAL ASSURANCES.

(a) The Secretary shall take such actions as may be necessary to ensure that the minting and issuance of the coins referred to in section 2 shall not result in any net cost to the Federal Government.

S. 149. A bill to establish the Economic Policy Council; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

ECONOMIC POLICY COUNCIL ACT OF 1989

● Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, today I rise to introduce the Economic Policy Council Act of 1989. The purpose of this bill is to create in statute the Economic Policy Council [EPC] and to clarify its responsibilities.

The proposal is aimed at strengthening the policymaking and coordination process in the Federal Government. Lack of coordinated policymaking lies at the heart of our trade and competitiveness problem. Without an adequate process for making and implementing an overall strategy to improve our ability to compete in the world market, all our efforts may simply result in greater confusion.

The legislation I introduce today is the same as that which passed the Governmental Affairs Committee in the last Congress, as part of the Omnibus Trade and Competitiveness Act. Unfortunately, it was dropped from the trade bill on the floor when the proposed reorganization of the Commerce Department was struck.

It is unfortunate that this provision was dropped from the trade bill because the hearing record of the Governmental Affairs Committee clearly shows a need for Cabinet-level coordination of trade and economic policy. During the previous administration, the EPC was an effective mechanism for coordinating policy on economic issues across departments and agencies. Because of the broad focus of the EPC, it also served as a mechanism for coordinating the various aspects of economic policy, such as trade, macroeconomics, investment, exchange rates, and international debt.

It is my understanding that President Bush intends to retain the EPC as his chief economic policy coordination tool. I commend the President for his decision. However, the foundations upon which the EPC is built rest on shifting sands. There is no statutory mandate for coordinated economic policymaking. The history of international economic policymaking in the Federal Government illustrates the problem. The EPC itself is a creation of the second Reagan administration after a less successful attempt at Cabinet Councils. The earlier organizational structure consisted of the Senior Interagency Group on International Economic Policy and seven Cabinet Councils, including a Cabinet Council on Commerce and Trade and a Cabinet Council on Economic Affairs. Earlier versions of international economic policy coordination efforts include the Cabinet-level Council on Foreign Economic Policy in the Eisenhower administration, the Council on International Economic Policy and the Council on Economic Policy under the Nixon administration, the Economic Policy Board in the Ford administration and the Economic Policy Group in the Carter administration.

Many of these councils, however, were narrow bodies, concentrating solely on international economics. At the same time, we had the Trade Agreements Committee, chaired by the Secretary of State, until 1975 when it was replaced by the Trade Policy Committee, now chaired by the USTR. As the recent history of the interrelationship between exchange rates, interest rates, the Federal budget deficit and the U.S. trade deficit has shown, international economic policy, fiscal policy and trade policy are all related. We need a coordination mechanism that goes beyond a single policy area.

Some would suggest that the history of economic policymaking bodies shows that each President has his own style of decisionmaking. They would argue, as did the previous administration, that a statutory body would limit a President's flexibility in organizing the Cabinet. I would argue that this history shows not the importance of flexibility but the lack of continuity. It is a history of reinventing the wheel. Each President has found the need to coordinate economic policy and each has had to start from scratch to create a mechanism for that purpose. I believe we need to stop this history of rearranging the deck chairs. We must codify the EPC in statute in order to give it the status and powers it needs to better coordinate policy within the Federal Government, as well as to provide historical continuity from one administration to the next.

As proposed, the members of the Economic Policy Council would be the President, the Vice President, the Secretary of State, the Secretary of Treasury, the Secretary of Defense, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce, the Secretary of Labor, the U.S. Trade Representative, and any other Federal official whom the President may designate. The President shall be the presiding officer, just as he chairs the National Security Council. In his absence, the President may designate a member as presiding officer. However, when the Council considers trade matters or when it acts as the trade council designated in section 242 of the Trade Expansion Act of 1962, the USTR shall preside in the President's absence. This one limitation on the President's authority is intended to preserve the preeminent position of the USTR as the top U.S. trade official.

The function of the Economic Policy Council is to advise the President with respect to national and international economic policies and their integration so as to enable the President and the department and agencies of the Federal Government to make and coordinate more effectively economic policy. The EPC's mandate includes oversight for trade policy, monetary policy, fiscal policy, international financial and investment policy, national security economics policy, and foreign aid policy. To preserve administrative flexibility, the EPC may also perform such other functions as the President may direct.

The bill specifically authorizes a broad charter for the EPC in economic affairs. In addition to the duties of the Council described in section 242 of the Trade Expansion Act of 1962, the EPC shall assess and appraise the international trade policies—including commodity and direct investment matters—and international trade objectives of the United States, consider policies on matters of common interest to the departments and agencies of the Federal Government concerned with international trade, consider the relationship between the standard of living in the United States and the international trade policies of the United States, and evaluate the effects of international trade policies and objectives of the United States on the national security.

Mr. President, it is clear that areas such as international economic policy, fiscal policy, and trade policy need to be better integrated into broader economic policy. But we also need to pay more attention to the relationship between economic policy and national security policy. National security depends on our economic strength as well as our military power. While economic security issues have received much rhetorical attention, we have no mechanisms for giving them the attention they need within the decisionmaking process. For example, as constituted under the previous administration, the EPC did not even include the Secretary of Defense as a standing member. DOD was simply invited to participate when others felt the situation warranted.

To remedy this situation, some have even gone so far as to call for the creation of a Cabinet-level National Economic Security Council. Others have suggested that the National Security Council be given additional economic policy responsibilities. While I share the concern behind these ideas, I believe national economic security and other economic policy matters cannot and should not be separated. Nor should we simply transfer our economic responsibility to the regime of national security. National economic security matters should be coordinated between those concerned with national security and those concerned with economic policy, not made separate areas.

This is the approach taken in my bill. The Secretaries of State and Defense are made statutory members of the EPC and the EPC is given specific authority for national security economics policy.

Mr. President, coordination of economic policy is crucial. I believe we have a workable mechanism for economic policymaking and coordination. I believe the Economic Policy Council should be made permanent and given the mandate it requires. I hope my colleagues will support this legislation. I urge the administration to seriously consider this proposal and look forward to working with it to improve economic policymaking for this country.

S. 150. A bill to authorize the transportation of motor vehicles owned by Federal employees on Johnston Island to their families in Hawaii; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

TRANSPORTATION OF CERTAIN MOTOR VEHICLES

● Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, my bill would allow married employees on Johnston Island who elect to relocate their families to Hawaii to ship one vehicle to Hawaii. Current travel regulations allow employees to move their families and household goods at government expense to Hawaii; however, no authority exists for shipment of the family vehicle. The annual cost of this program would be approximately $4,800.●

S. 151. A bill to amend title 5, United States Code, to provide a remote maintenance allowance to certain officers and employees of the United States assigned to Johnston Island; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

REMOTE MAINTENANCE ALLOWANCE FOR ASSIGNMENT TO JOHNSTON ISLAND

● Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President. This bill provides for a remote maintenance allowance for civilians who must maintain two separate households since they are not allowed to bring families to Johnston Island. An allowance is currently available for Federal employees working in foreign areas who are separated from their families. However, employees on Johnston Island are ineligible to draw this allowance since Johnston Island is classified as a U.S. possession. This bill would correct that inequity. The remote maintenance allowance would range from $2,800 to $9,000 per employee, depending on family size. The total cost of this program for Johnston Island would be approximately $89,000 per year.●

S. 153. A bill to defer congressional pay adjustments until the first March 1 following the beginning of the Congress next following the Congress during which certain actions with respect to pay rates are taken, to provide that appropriations of funds for congressional pay be considered separately from appropriations for other purposes, to require a recorded vote in each House on such appropriations, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

CONGRESSIONAL PAY

Mr. COATS. Mr. President, I am pleased to introduce today the Congressional Pay Reform Act of 1989.

On December 15, 1989, the President's Commission on Executive, Legislative and Judicial Salaries issued its quadrennial report recommending major adjustments in Federal salaries, including a pay increase to $135,000 for Members of Congress, a boost of over 50 percent above the current level of $89,500 a year. These recommendations will go into effect automatically within 30 days, that is, on February 8, unless both House vote it down in separate resolutions of disapproval.

The Senate leadership has promised that the issue will come to a vote in the Senate. When it does, I shall vote against the pay raise. In my opinion, it would be inappropriate for me, as an appointed Senator, to accept any raise. Therefore, if the increase goes into effect, I shall find a way to distribute the funds to charity.

Congressional salary adjustments are a perpetual source of controversy and embarrassment. There should be a better, more effective way of dealing openly and equitably with this issue. I believe that the Congressional Pay Reform Act will provide the kind of reforms we need to avoid future public condemnation of the way in which we handle Federal salary questions generally and congressional pay increases in particular.

The Congressional Pay Reform Act, which was first introduced in the House in 1979 by Congressman TOM TAUKE of Iowa and has been reintroduced by him this year as H.R. 401, would institute the following reforms in the way salary increases are considered:

First, congressional pay adjustments would be deferred until an election has intervened and the next Congress is seated, thereby preventing Members from voting for a pay raise which would go into effect during their current term of office. This reform was first recommended by our Founding Fathers in the First Session of Congress 200 years ago and was included in one of the proposed first 12 amendments to the Constitution.

Second, recorded votes would be required in both Houses of Congress. It is outrageous that the Commission's recommended pay raises may go into effect without a rollcall vote in the House of Representatives. This reform would enable the public to know how their elected Representatives stood on the issue and would dispel the popular perception that pay raises are pushed through by anonymous voice vote or obtained through artifice and deception.

Finally, under this legislation congressional pay adjustments would be considered independently of other appropriation measures. This would end the practice of combining congressional salary increase with adjustments for federal Judges and other federal employees and with agency appropriations, holding them hostage to the pay raises. Moreover, automatic cost-of-living increases would not accrue to Members, and future increases for other Government officials would not be linked to congressional raises.

I hope you will join me in supporting these reforms. If enacted, they will go a long way to restoring public trust and confidence in the Congress and faith in the process by which we address controversial issues.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the full text of the Congressional Pay Reform Act, together with several editorials and columns from Indiana newspapers, be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 153

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Congressional Pay Reform Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. (a)(1) Paragraph (2) of section 601 (a) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 (2 U.S.C. 31), relating to congressional salary adjustment, is amended by striking out "Effective at the beginning of the first applicable pay period commencing on or after the first day of the month in which an adjustment takes effect under section 5305 of title 5, United States Code, in the rates of pay under the General Schedule,", and inserting in lieu thereof "Effective on the first March 1 following the beginning of the Congress next following any Congress during which an adjustment takes effect under section 5305 of title 5, United States Code, in the rates of pay under the General Schedule,".

(2) Such section 601(a) is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(3) The rates of pay for positions referred to in paragraph (1) of this subsection recommended by the President under subsection (h) of section 225 of the Federal Salary Act of 1967 (2 U.S.C. 358) in any year shall take effect on the later of (A) the first March 1 following the beginning of the Congress next following the Congress during which the recommendations for such rates of pay were transmitted by the President under such subsection or (B) the date prescribed by the President under subsection (i)(2) of such section (2 U.S.C. 359(2)).".

(b)(1) Subsection (h) of section 225 of the Federal Salary Act of 1967 (2 U.S.C. 358) is amended—

(A) by striking out "include, in the budget" and all that follows through "Commission" in the first sentence and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "transmit to the Congress, within the period of fifteen calendar days beginning on the date on which the Congress convenes for the first session which begins after the date on which the report and recommendations of the Commission are required to be submitted", and

(B) by striking out the second sentence.

(2) Paragraph (1) of subsection (i) of such section (2 U.S.C. 359(1)) is amended—

(A) by inserting "(A)" after "(1)";

(B) in the first sentence—

(i) by inserting "the office of Vice President of the United States and" before "the offices and positions"; and

(ii) by striking out "(A),";

(C) in the second sentence—

(i) by striking out "described in any such subparagraph" and inserting in lieu thereof "referred to in the preceding sentence"; and

(ii) by striking out "the offices and positions covered by such subparagraph" and inserting in lieu thereof "such offices and positions"; and

(D) by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(B) The rates of pay for offices and positions within the purview of subsection (f)(A) of this section (other than the office of Vice President of the United States) recommended by the President under subsection (h) of this section in any year shall take effect as provided in section 601(a)(3) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 (2 U.S.C. 31(3)).".

(3) Subsection (j) of such section (2 U.S.C. 360) is amended—

(A) by striking out "if approved by the Congress as provided in subsection (i)" and inserting in lieu thereof "upon taking effect as provided in subsection (i)"; and

(B) by striking out "(other than any provision of law enacted in the period specified in paragraph (1) of subsection (i) of this section with respect to such recommendations)" in clause (A) and inserting in lieu thereof "(other than any provision of law which, in the case of any recommendation to which subsection (i)(1)(A) of this section applies, is enacted in the period specified in such subsection (i)(1)(A) with respect to such recommendation or which, in the case of any recommendation to which subsection (i)(1)(B) of this section applies, is enacted with respect to such recommendation after the date on which the President transmitted such recommendation to the Congress)".

SEC. 3. (a) For purposes of this section, the term "Member of the Congress" means any person who holds the office of Senator, Member of the House of Representatives, Delegate to the House of Representatives, Resident Commissioner from Puerto Rico, President pro tempore of the Senate, majority or minority leader of the Senate or the House of Representatives, or the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

(b)(1) It shall not be in order in either the House of Representatives or the Senate to consider any bill or joint resolution which includes an appropriation, or a limitation on the use of appropriated funds, for the compensation of Members of the Congress for any fiscal year or part of a fiscal year if such bill or joint resolution also includes an appropriation, or a limitation on appropriations, for any other purpose.

(2) Paragraph (1) of this subsection is enacted by the Congress—

(A) as an exercise of the rulemaking power of the House of Representatives and the Senate, respectively, and as such they shall be considered as part of the rules of each House, respectively, and such rules shall supersede other rules only to the extent that they are inconsistent therewith; and

(B) with full recognition of the constitutional right of either House to change such rules (so far as relating to that House) at any time, in the same manner, and to the same extent as in the case of any other rule of that House.

(c) The vote of each House on each bill or joint resolution which includes an appropriation, or a limitation on the use of appropriated funds, for the compensation of Members of the Congress for any fiscal year or part of a fiscal year shall be recorded so as to reflect the vote of each Member of the Congress thereon.

SAY NO TO SNEAKING

Pay raises are supposed to be given for good performance on the job.

In this case, the performance smells.

In the familiar cute, roundabout way to which Washington observers have grown accustomed, a pay raise of 50 percent has been proposed for 2,500 high-level federal officials, including members of Congress.

It was proposed by the Quandrennial Commission on Executive, Legislative and Judicial Salaries, which makes pay recommendations at intervals to take the heat off Congress.

It would be better to handle this matter openly. Let Congress make the proposals for increases which could not be granted until the following term. Let the voting go on the record. End this sneak-play game.

The recommendation of a congressional salary increase from the current $89,500 to $135,000 is now before the president for his approval or revision. Whatever he proposes takes effect automatically unless Congress votes to reject it.

As Sen. Ted Stevens, R-Alaska, pointed out, "the costs of housing, food, education, transportation and the other necessities of life rise for all Americans."

Yes. Senator, Americans who are making $8,000 a year and $12,000 a year and $20,000 a year know that. A lot of taxpayers would like to try scraping by on half or a third of what a member of Congress makes.

As for Congress' job performance, it has not been all that great.

The gargantuan national debt is not getting any smaller.

The deficits are still big enough to choke a head of dinosaurs.

Let Congress balance the budget. Then it will be time to talk pay raise.

Until then—No!

[From the Fort Wayne (IN) Journal Gazette, Dec. 17, 1988]

THE PAY RAISE HOAX

A 50 percent pay increase for members of Congress?

Phooey.

A boost from $89,500 to $135,000?

Double phooey.

But this is precisely what the pay commission proposes, as members of the commission were completely oblivious that the average American didn't gain one inflation-adjusted red cent in take-home pay throughout the entire Reagan era.

No wonder people are mad.

No wonder angry letters to the editor are already pouring in to newspaper offices.

And Congress won't even vote up or down on the proposal. It will vote if the House and Senate don't like the raise that's in the president's final recommendation.

The thing is rigged to keep members of Congress from having to go back to their districts and explain why they deserve a fat raise but their constituents don't.

There is some good in the commission's plan. A big increase for federal judges—that's good. We're losing good judges because able people can earn so much more in the private sector. It's foolhardy to let this continue.

An increase for Cabinet officers—that's probably justified, too. Again, capable people, on the average, are leaving the government after only 18 months.

There's one more good thing in the commission's plan. It's the best. That's the ban on outside honoraria for members of Congress. Members of Congress allow themselves to earn up to $2,000 for each speech or appearance.

Last month, members collected $10 million for such services rendered. And the special interest groups line up to invite representatives and senators to a banquet or even a vacation weekend to "say a few words."

Do you suppose these groups just like the congressman's company? Be serious. They want his ear and his vote. Even when the congressman gives the $1,500 fee to charity—which is common practice—he surely finds it harder to vote against the interests of a group that had just applauded him the night before.

Accepting such fees and other perks is a blatant conflict-of-interest. The practice is inherently corrupting. The ban should be clear and absolute.

As for a pay raise for members of Congress, let them make the case. If they've suffered a real loss in income because of inflation, let them build in reasonable, automatic cost-of-living increases.

If the main problem is that they can't afford to keep up two homes, one in the Washington area, and one back home in their district, let them create a housing allowance for members who need it.

But it's yet to be demonstrated that we can't get dedicated, capable people to serve in Congress because a $89,500 salary is not enough to live on. Most Americans would be only too happy to sit through a few boring committee hearings and give a speech or two for such a salary.

[From The Indianapolis Star, Jan. 19, 1989]

IMPERIAL ROT

Congress, the imperial Congress, is on a collision course with the American public.

Nearly nine out of 10 Americans oppose the 50 percent pay increase for Congress. Congressional leaders, and presumably a majority of members, want to "allow" themselves the increase under a devious, cowardly and probably unconstitutional scheme which reaches fruition Feb. 8 unless public pressure forces floor votes.

The overwhelming public disapproval is shown in a new poll sponsored by the Washington Post.

Congress normally responds to such public opinion.

Consider: When the president, with a constitutional duty to defend the national interest, told Congress military aid should be given to the Contras fighting the Moscow-sponsored Nicaraguan regime. Congress repeatedly balked. Its supposed trump card argument was that polls showed the American public did not want to aid the Contras militarily.

Now a poll shows the American public does not want Congress to get a 50 percent pay hike, overwhelmingly the public opposes it. And this is not a complex issue of American security, but a housekeeping question of whether Congress would be overpaid. The public says it would, at $135,000 a year.

Congress knows better: that is the prevailing attitude in Washington. It is an attitude fed assidously by the coteric of well-paid lobbyists and other Washington insiders who make up the window dressing commission that recommended the egregious pay grab.

Some supporters say a raise would be money well spent, since Congress would then forgo the disreputable honoraria members collect for speeches and public appearances.

What's wrong with passing up the pay grab and barring the side deals? What's wrong with members of Congress living within the pay that was specified when they were elected? They can't live on $89,000 a year? Then they should not be handling the public business.

They have staff members hauling their suitcases, free medical care, bargain and free lunches, housing allowances, trip "home" allowances, taxpayer-financed reelection gimmicks by the score, huge pensions and something resembling job security.

In return they give us monster deficits and a "fail safe" pay like plan for themselves.

When Congress reopened, Speaker Jim Wright, spoke about the glories of the House. Seemingly for the benefit of new members, who might have qualms about an automatic pay raise, he quoted approvingly from a half-century old speech of one of his mentors, the late Speaker Sam Rayburn.

Speaker Sam Wright intoned, told House members that he was vowing eternal vigilance, untiring effort, to a sacred cause. The cause? The rights and privileges of the House of Representatives.

That attitude is problem No. 1 in Washington, and the pay hike would worsen it, not better it.

The people should make Congress vote on the raise. They should tell members now they want this outrageous grab defeated.

[From the Herald-Argus]

RAISE PROPOSAL FOR CONGRESS IS RIDICULOUS

It mystifies us, although it's probably explainable under human greediness, that the first order of this year's congressional business should be a 50-percent pay increase for members of Congress.

A jump from $89,500 a year to $135,000 base pay. How about that? The increase is ridiculous. Unfortunately, the proposal must be taken seriously.

The federal commission making this thoughtless recommendation reported that inflation has cut the purchasing power of congressional salaries by 35 percent since 1969. It was conveniently ignored that members of Congress gave themselves a 40-percent pay hike in that very year of 1969.

But what baffles us about this incredible proposal is that it arrives while Congress is discussing spending restraint and how to deal with a $150 billion federal budget deficit, the trade deficit, and the dismal job Congress had done with the nation's fiscal matters, we might add.

Actually, figures quoted here only pertain to congressional base pay. Members are awarded office expenses in addition to their pay. The pension perks among their fringe benefits are mind-boggling.

The other day U.S. House Speaker James Wright, Democrat, and House Minority Leader Robert Michel, Republican, mentioned their support of a joint review of standards of conduct within the U.S. House.

Now there's a congressional topic that should be the first order of business. We advocate a delay in salary increases until new conduct rules are adopted and a balanced federal budget is in place, which under law is mandatory by 1993. Thus, pay increases would be based on congressional performance.

Under standards of conduct, Congress should investigate member incomes from speaking fees, which reportedly grossed close to $10 million last year for all members of the House and Senate.

How about congressional campaign financing reform? What's happening to accumulated excess campaign contributions? Is that money converted to taxable income? Not now it isn't.

What about placing limits on campaign spending? On political action committee (PAC) donations?

And what about the congressional pension plan? Are we making millionaires out of long-time members of Congress through a faulty, out-of-date pension system?

Those are ethical issues and should be dealt with before members of Congress are given another dime increase in salary.

[From the Lafayette (IN) Journal & Courier, Jan. 3, 1989]

HERE'S A GOLDEN OPPORTUNITY FOR CONGRESS

A government commission has proposed that Congresmen boost their salaries by 50 percent, from $89,500 to $135,000 a year.

The commission makes compelling arguments about comparative government and private-sector compensation for comparable responsibility. But of course it does not take into account that Congress depends on biennial approval and election by the people while the private sector does not.

A one-shot 50 percent pay raise is politically asinine, as all members of Congress well know. Few Americans will sympathize with that big a pay raise unless they also get one, nor will they elect a person who voted it for himself.

It makes sense to spread the raise over, say, a five-year period with sufficient increments to reach $135,000 by 1994.

In fact, from a political standpoint, Congress would be wise to forgo most if not all of the 50 percent. It would be inspiring, for a change, for Congress to show a new resolve, a signal of responsibility, a proclamation by action rather than words that it is seeking to save very dollar possible in a quest to get the national debt under control.

This is a golden opportunity for our representatives and senators to show responsibility and leadership in the war against our national debt. It would send a businesslike signal to the nation, instead of just the opposite.

FAIRNESS DEMANDS FEDERAL PAY HIKE

(By James Kilpatrick)

On this matter of salary levels in the federal government, could we just knock off the demagoguery? Probably not. A few members of Congress see political advantage in opposing fair pay. We are in for a noisy time.

This is the situation. On Dec. 15, the Commission on Executive, Legislative and Judicial Salaries made its quadrennial report to the president. The commission recommended substantial increases for senators, representatives, top executives and federal judges. President Reagan may endorse the proposals exactly as recommended. More likely, he will discreetly reduce them. Once the president's figures go to Capitol Hill, Congress will have 30 days in which to adopt a resolution of disapproval. If no such resolution is passed, the new salary levels will go into effect.

The commission's report was titled "Fairness for Our Public Servants," and "fairness" is the operative word. No one expects the taxpayers to be generous. But in good conscience, the American people ought to be fair. Present salary levels for executives and judges simply are not fair levels.

Federal executives now are paid at five levels, ranging from $75,500 to $99,500 a year. These are the Cabinet secretaries, deputy and assistant secretaries, and of greatest importance, the Senior Executive Service. The commission recommends new levels ranging from $115,000 to $155,000. In the demagogic view, such increases are scandalous. In fact, they are not. The proposed increases would not even restore the purchasing power such executives enjoyed 20 years ago.

The federal judiciary includes 799 district judges and 234 judges on the circuit courts of appeals. The district judges now earn $89,500, the circuit judges $95,000. Compared to the salaries paid to talented lawyers in the private sector, the present federal salaries are ridiculous. The commission's recommendation of $135,000 and $140,000 would accord the judges something close to respectability among their peers.

Most of the hullabaloo involves salaries for members of Congress. Here the commission proposes a deal. If members will renounce their acceptance of "honoraria," their present salaries of $89,500 a year would be raised to $135,000. The figure is a tad to high. Members enjoy all kinds of perquisites and subsidies that are not acknowledged in the commission's report, but the deal itself has a sound basis in public policy.

If one is looking for scandal, abundant scandal may be found in the direction of "honoraria." Members of the House and Senate—especially high-ranking members who are subcomittee chairmen—accept invitations to speak to a trade association or other special-interest group. The member makes a little talk, and picks up a check for $2,000 plus travel expenses. Even the little talk may be waived. The practice smells to high heaven.

Many members themselves are uncomfortable with the system. They defend it only as a matter of survival. Living costs in Washington, especially housing costs, are among the highest in the nation.

These are men and women who bear tremendous responsibilities. For the most part they work hard; they take public service seriously. Yes, among the 538 members who could identify a fair share of incompetents and nincompoops, but the answer to that problem is to turn the dullards out of office. We ought not to penalize the good ones.

We ought to seek uncommon talent for Congress, the courts and the executive agencies. To get above-average talent, we ought to offer above-average salaries. We ought, in brief, to be fair.

By Mr. ARMSTRONG:

S. 155. A bill to amend the Impoundment Control Act of 1974 to provide for enhanced rescission procedures; pursuant to the order of August 4, 1977, referred jointly to the Committee on the Budget and the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

ENHANCED RESCISSION PROCEDURES

● Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, there's a rule around here that a bad idea can get enacted into law very quickly, but it often takes years for a very worthwhile law to gain favor. So, it was with a mixture of pride and relief that I saw a call for enhanced rescission in the final budget of former President Reagan. In this "valedictory address," he strongly urged Congress to support enhanced rescission authority as a key budget process reform, a measure I have long advocated. He called for:

Enhanced Rescission Authority—To enhance the President's ability to control Government spending, I recommend that line-item veto authority by complemented by a change in law that would require the Congress to vote "yea" or "nay" on any rescission proposed by the President. Current law allows the Congress to duck responsibility by simply ignoring proposed rescissions for 45 days.

Today, I am introducing legislation to strengthen the executive power of the President to control Federal spending. Specifically, this legislation would enhance the President's ability to rescind appropriated funds. This proposal would accomplish many, if not all, of the goals of a line-item veto, but would do so in a much simpler fashion by enhancing an existing authority rather than creating new powers and complicated procedures.

Under current law, the President may propose to Congress that previously appropriated budget authority be rescinded. A proposed rescission does not take effect unless Congress specifically approves it by joint resolution within 45 calendar days of submission. Congress can simply ignore rescissions and kill these proposed savings by inaction. In contrast, a proposal by the President to defer spending for a period of time takes effect unless specifically rejected by Congress.

This legislation would amend the Budget and Impoundment Act of 1974 to provide that proposed rescissions take effect unless specifically disapproved by Congress by joint resolution. The current veto by inaction would be replaced by a requirement that Congress step up to the plate and openly reject proposed savings, if that is its determination.

The President of the United States presides over the largest budget in the world and yet has less executive control over that budget than the chief executive of a business or most State Governors. The rescission power as currently drawn has more often than not been ineffective in allowing the President executive control over appropriated funds. Since 1975, Congress has rejected more than $32 billion in proposed savings that three Presidents determined were necessary. In most years since the power has existed, only a fraction of proposed Presidential rescissions have been granted.

Mr. President, the Budget and Impoundment Act of 1974 severely restricted Presidential authority over appropriated funds while establishing what most believed would be a budget process creating incentives for Congress to control fiscal policy. After a decade's experience, it is clear that spending money is still the main incentive in Congress. The time has come to reestablish a greater role for the President in the budget process. Under this legislation Congress would still have the opportunity to reject a Presidential rescission if it believes appropriated funds should be spent. What it could not do is simply ignore the proposal and allow billions to be spent that our Nation's Chief Executive believes should be saved.

Using enhanced recession authority, the President can reduce or eliminate spending for low-priority programs. The American people were justifiably dismayed last year when the media revealed examples of unnecessary and wasteful spending packed into the continuing resolution. Just a slight sample would include: $43 million for the Asian Development Bank, using tax dollars to subsidize overseas competitiors, $82 million for congressional mailing expenses, $750,000 for "fishing-gear entanglement studies," and $540,000 for the International Coffee Organization. It would not be difficult to improve upon this record.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a table detailing the historical data on proposed Presidential rescissions be printed at this point in the RECORD. I also ask unanimous consent that this proposed legislation be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 155

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) section 1011(3) of the Impoundment Control Act of 1974 is amended to read as follows:

"(3) 'rescission resolution' means joint resolution of the Congress that—

"(A) disapprives, in whole or in part, the rescission of budget authority proposed in a special message transmitted by the President under section 1012; and

"(B) is adopted by the Congress and becomes law before the end of the first period of 45 calendar days of continuous session of the Congress after the date on which the President's message is received by the Congress;".

(b) Section 1012(b) of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"(b) REQUIREMENT TO MAKE AVAILABLE FOR OBLIGATION—Any amount of budget authority or any part thereof proposed to be rescinded or that is to be reserved as set forth in such special message shall be made available for obligation if, within the prescribed 45-day period, a rescission resolution disapproving the rescission or reservation of such amount or part thereof is adopted by the Congress and becomes law.".

(c)(1) Section 1017 of such Act is amended—

(A) by striking out "rescission bill" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "rescission resolution"; and

(B) by striking out "bill or" each place it appears.

(2) Section 1017(c)(5) of such Act is amended by striking out "bills and",

(3) Section 1017(d)(2) of such Act is amended—

(A) by striking out "the bill" in the first sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "the resolution";

(B) by striking out "such a bill" the first place it appears in the second sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "such a resolution"; and

(C) by striking out "such a bill" the second place it appears in the second sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "a rescission resolution".●

By Mr. DECONCINI:

S. 157. A bill to remove the study and recommendation of pay increases for Members of Congress from the jurisdiction of the Commisison on Executive, Legislative, and Judicial Salaries, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

By Mr. DECONCINI (for himself and Mr. BRYAN):

S. 158. A bill to prohibit the receipt of honoraria by Senators; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

By Mr. DECONCINI (for himself, Mr. SIMON, and Mr. BRYAN):

S.J. Res. 4. Joint resolution disapproving the recommendations of the President relating to rates of pay of certain officers and employees of the executive and legislative branches of the Federal Government; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

CONGRESSIONAL PAY RAISE

● Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, as we are all aware, President Reagan left office with the highest approval ratings of any President since Franklin Roosevelt. He survived many difficult moments and did so with grace. This Senator supported the President when he felt the President was correct. And this Senator opposed the President when he felt the President was incorrect. Although President Reagan has now left office, I must disagree with one of his final acts as President.

In his final budget proposal for fiscal year 1990, President Reagan proposed increasing the pay levels for Federal judges, Cabinet members, senior executives, and Members of Congress. He proposed raises of 50 percent and more to make up for what he termed the "substantial erosion in the real level of Federal executive pay which has occurred since 1969."

The buying power of the dollar has eroded since 1969. It has eroded for Members of Congress and agency heads. But it has also eroded for teachers and nurses and plumbers and architects and other working Americans. These individuals are able to make ends meet. They balance their family budgets and do not spend money that they do not have. They do this on salaries that are substantially less than those of Members of Congress.

As you know, Mr. President, we receive annual salaries of $89,500. According to the Census Bureau, the median family income for a family of four in 1986 was $34,716. In my State of Arizona, the median family income for the same year was $33,477.

Granted, the Washington, DC area is an expensive one. Many in Congress maintain two residences—one in Washington and one back home. Also, many of us have children who are in college or one day will be.

The American people face the same fiscal and family responsibilities as Members of Congress. After all, we are "of the people." The American people are able to provide for their families on incomes substantially lower than those of Senators and Representatives. Why should we get a 50-percent pay raise—increasing our salaries to $135,000—when the median income of the American people is less than $35,000? Are we somehow better than they are because we are elected to Congress? I do not think so.

I feel so strongly about this issue that today I am introducing three bills to correct the whole issue of congressional pay. They are simple bills which, if enacted, would go a long way toward resolving this emotional issue. They might even restore some of Congress' tarnished image.

The three bills are: One, a joint resolution of disapproval of the pay raise for Members of Congress, two, a bill to ban honoraria for Senators, and three a bill to remove the consideration of pay raises for Members of Congress from the deliberation of the Quadrennial Commission and to require affirmative vote on future pay raises before they can take effect.

These bills are simple and direct as they should be. The current method by which Congress considers its pay raises was devised by Congress so that it would not have to actually consider raises. It established a commission to report to the President who then makes recommendations to Congress. These recommendations go into effect unless both Houses of Congress vote against accepting the raise. This is confusing and was expressly intended to be that way.

This system must be changed. We must ensure that if Congress feels it deserves a pay raise then each and every Member must step forward and be counted. We must say "Aye" or "Nay," not hide behind the findings of a Commission and say that the raise was forced on us.

Unfortunately, we are under the gun because of the 30-day time period in which Congress must deny the raise or have it go into effect. Therefore, we must first deny this raise before we attempt to change the system for future raises.

Two of my bills go straight to the issue at hand. One is a joint resolution of disapproval called for in the Federal Salary Act of 1967. I am extremely pleased that my friend and colleague on the Judiciary Committee, Senator SIMON, as well as Senator BRYAN, have joined me as original cosponsors.

This resolution will deny the pay raises for Members of Congress and other legislative branch officials only. It does not deny the increase for executive branch officials and members of the Federal Judiciary.

There are many people who support the congressional pay increase. Current and former Government officials have gone on record in support of the raise. Even some Members of Congress have stated that they believe they have earned this exorbitant salary boost. Common Cause has sent a great deal of information in support of the recommendations and has included copies of editorials from around the country justifying and supporting the raise.

Many papers in Arizona, however, are of a different opinion. I would like to share with my colleagues what some of the papers in Arizona are saying about these raises. I ask unanimous consent that these editorials be entered into the RECORD at the end of my statement.

I have also received literally thousands of letters from my constituents on this issue. Rarely has an issue generated such strong and heated opinions. Of the mail I have received, hundreds with tea bags enclosed, only three support the raise. The rest of the letters suggest, request, and demand that the raise be stopped, that it be subjected to a roll call vote, and that it be returned if it goes into effect.

As the people of Arizona know, I returned the last raise I received to the Treasury for deficit reduction. If this raise goes into effect, I will return that as well. I do not do this to cast my colleagues in a negative light. I was a wealthy man before I came to the Senate. I do not need the extra money as do some of my colleagues. But, in this time of budget crisis—and I believe it is a crisis—we must send a signal to the American people that the business as usual attitude in Congress is over. The proposed raises would cost an estimated $59 million for the current fiscal year and a whopping $127.8 million in fiscal year 1990. With a current Federal budget deficit of more than $155 billion, I cannot justify adding nearly $200 million to the deficit because I might like a pay raise.

If we are asking the American people to take hits in programs that directly affect their lives, they have the right to ask us to take a hit in something important to us in return. If the widow in Chandler, AZ, is able to get by on $375 a month, then we certainly can do the same on our current salaries. We are "of the people" and should share the burden with our constituents. It is blatantly unfair that we ask the American people to make sacrifices while we line our own pockets.

That is why I am also introducing another bill to ban Senate honoraria. I am pleased that the junior Senator from Nevada, Mr. BRYAN has joined me in this effort. This is the one recommendation made by President Reagan and echoed by Common Cause and others with which I am in full agreement. Honoraria, payments made to Members of Congress by corporations and special interests for speeches given on any number of topics, have become a major supplement of congressional salaries. Under Senate rules, Senators may earn an additional 40 percent of their salaries through honoraria. Similarly, Representatives can supplement their salaries by an additional 30 percent through honoraria.

That means that Senators are allowed to earn $38,500 a year beyond the $89,500 salary. This supplemental income is greater than the national median family income. Members of Congress earned a record $9.8 million in this outside income in 1987. There's a lot of potential for conflict of interest when the corporations and special interests shell out big bucks to hear Senators and Congressmen talk.

The influence of this supplementary income has reached unacceptable levels. I do not understand why we, as public officials, should be paid for speaking to a group about issues before Congress. One of our duties as public officials is to educate and inform the electorate. When I go back to Apache Junction, AZ, and talk about legislation I do not charge the listeners a fee. The people who are listening have already paid to hear me speak because they pay my salary; because they pay taxes. Why then should I be paid a speaking fee for addressing a group of patent lawyers in Chicago? They too are taxpayers. The fact that I am chairman of the Patents Subcommittee should make no difference. I am a public official. I should not charge others to hear me speak. I may not be able to get votes from the patent lawyers in Chicago but I am a U.S. Senator and I feel an obligation to speak to national groups who request my views on issues of concern to them and over which I have legislative jurisdiction.

As the Washington Post stated, "Public officials should surely be publicly paid. A system that gives just Congress more money through the back door of honoraria while freezing the pay of others is doubly wrong. It's time for a little truth in compensation."

The final issue I address with my legislation is the method for determining congressional pay. By eliminating legislative branch pay from the deliberations of the Quadrennial Commission, I am returning the discussion of the issue to Congress where it belongs. We can no longer hide behind the recommendations of a commission and legislative subterfuges. Instead, under my legislation, Congress will have to determine whether or not it deserves a raise and how much that raise will be. And, every Member will have to go on record on their position on future raises by voting on the issue.

We in Congress are adults who must shoulder many responsibilities. In the Senate, we pass laws; we consent to nominations; we ratify treaties involving war and peace; we even act as a jury at times. Certainly we can shoulder the responsibility of determining our rate of pay and then voting on it.

In conclusion, Mr. President, the bills I am introducing are simple and direct. The bills would deny the proposed 50-percent pay raise to Members of Congress, ban Senators from receiving honoraria, and clarify the way Congress addresses future pay raises. I ask unanimous consent that the bills be printed in the RECORD following my remarks and I urge my colleagues to join me in congressional house cleaning by cosponsoring these measures.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 157

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. RENAMING THE COMMISSION.

Section 225(a) of the Federal Salary Act of 1967 (2 U.S.C. 351) is amended by striking out ", Legislative,".

SEC. 2. FUNCTIONS OF COMMISSION.

Section 225(f) of the Federal Salary Act of 1967 (2 U.S.C. 356) is amended to read as follows:

"(f) FUNCTIONS OF COMMISSION.—(1) The Commission shall conduct, in each of the respective fiscal years referred to in subsection (b)(3), a review of the rates of pay of—

"(A) justices, judges, and other personnel in the judicial branch referred to in section 403 of the Federal Judicial Salary Act of 1964 (78 Stat. 434; Public Law 88-426) and magistrates and the judges of the United States Claims Court;

"(B) offices and positions under the Executive Schedule in subchapter II of chapter 53 of title 5, United States Code; and

"(C) the Governors of the Board of Governors of the United States Postal Service appointed under section 202 of title 39, United States Code.

"(2) Such review by the Commission shall be made for the purpose of determining and providing—

"(A) the appropriate pay levels and relationships between and among the respective offices and positions covered by such review; and

"(B) the appropriate pay relationships between such offices and positions and the offices and positions subject to the provisions of chapter 51 and subchapter III of chapter 53 of title 5, United States Code, relating to classification and General Schedule pay rates.

"(3) In reviewing the rates of pay of the offices or positions referred to in paragraph (1)(B) of this subsection, the Commission shall determine and consider the appropriateness of the executive levels of such offices and positions.".

SEC. 3. CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.

(a) REPORT TO PRESIDENT.—Section 225(g) of the Federal Salary Act of 1967 (2 U.S.C. 357) is amended in the first sentence by striking out "subparagraphs (A), (B), (C), and (D)" and inserting in lieu thereof "subparagraphs (A) and (B)".

(b) RECOMMENDATIONS OF THE PRESIDENT TO CONGRESS.—Section 225(h) of the Federal Salary Act of 1967 (2 U.S.C. 358) is amended by striking out "subparagraphs (A), (B), (C), and (D)" and inserting in lieu thereof subparagraphs (A) and (B)".

SEC. 4. CONGRESSIONAL VOTE ON ANY INCREASE IN THE RATES OF PAY OF MEMBERS OF CONGRESS.

(a) JOINT RESOLUTION.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, any increase in the rates of pay of Members of Congress shall become effective only after the enactment of a joint resolution as provided in subsection (b).

(b) FORM OF JOINT RESOLUTION.—The joint resolution described under subsection (a) shall—

(1) relate only to the issue of the increase in the rates of pay of Members of Congress; and

(2) be recorded to reflect the vote of each Member of Congress thereon.

S. 158

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) notwithstanding any other provision of law, on and after the date of enactment of this Act, a Member of the Senate shall not accept honoraria for or on account of any service performed on or after such date.

(b) For the purposes of this Act—

(1) "honorarium" means a payment of money or anything of value to a Member for an appearance, speech, or article, by the Member; but there shall not be taken into account for the purposes of this section any actual and necessary travel expenses, incurred by the Member, and spouse or an aide to the extent that such expenses are paid or reimbursed by any other person, and the amount otherwise determined shall be reduced by the amount of any such expenses to the extent that such expenses are not paid or reimbursed; and

(2) "travel expenses" means with respect to a Member, and spouse or an aide, the cost of transportation, and the cost of lodging and meals while away from his or her residence or the metropolitan area of Washington, District of Columbia.

(c) Section 908 of the Supplemental Appropriations Act, 1983 (2 U.S.C. 31-1) is repealed.

S.J. RES. 4

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the recommendations of the President relating to rates of pay for offices and positions within the purview of subparagraphs (A), (B), (D), and (E) of section 225(f) of the Federal Salary Act of 1967 (2 U.S.C. 356 (A), (B), (D), and (E)), as included (pursuant to section 225(h) of such Act) in the budget transmitted to the Congress for fiscal year 1990, are disapproved.

ARIZONA'S SENATORS OPPOSE PAY RAISES

A proposed 50 percent pay raise for 2,500 high-level federal officials, including the members of Congress, not only appears to be quite unpopular among local residents, but both Arizona senators firmly oppose the measure. If enacted, the annual salaries of Senators Dennis DeConcini and John McCain would go up from $89,500 to $135,000.

The pay raises were recommended by the Commission on Executive, Legislative and Judicial Salaries, a presidential advisory commission. Their proposal contained a new twist this time: End the profitable practice of senators and representatives who collect speaking fees (honorariums). These fees amounted to $9.8 million last year.

DeConcini, the state's senior senator, not only opposes the wage increase—he has not pocketed the last one, said aide Jamie Ridge on Friday. Monthly for the past nine months, DeConcini has mailed the U.S. Treasury a check for $1,008.83, the size of a pay increase given to members of Congress last March.

"An outrageous proposal" is how McCain described the raises during a phone interview with the Westsider Friday. The freshman senator pledged "to do everything" he can to oppose the pay raises. McCain said he does welcome the proposed ban on honorariums, which he knocked as "a clear conflict of interest."

During 1987, McCain collected $30,250, monies he gave charity in $500 donations. The Make-A-Wish Foundation, which treats terminally-ill youngsters to special occasions, was one of the organizations to which he contributed.

DeConcini, doesn't accept honorariums to start with. If one is offered by a sponsoring group, the Democrat from Tucson suggests that they send the money to an Arizona non-profit organization. The Arizona Museum for Youth was one of more than 20 organizations that benefited from DeConcini's recommendations.

Speaking for this boss, Ridge said, "He'd like to see the pay stay the way it is as well as end the honorariums.

The two senators—and their staffers—have received a much negative comment on the pay raises from their constituents as they prepare to go back into session next month. Ridge reported that many DeConcini callers were "miffed" about the manner in which the last increase was given—senators and representatives had to essentially veto the raise or it became law, which it barely did.

The proposal, which also will raise the President's salary $150,000 (to $350,000) and that of appellate judges from $95,000 to $140,000, will probably come before the House of Representatives in early February.—Michael Higgins.

[From the Mesa Tribune, Dec. 20, 1988]

JUST SAY NO TO PAY RAISE

It was only natural that after the news got out about members of Congress being in line for a 50-percent pay increase reporters would want to know what our own senators and representatives thought about it. Quite frankly, the response from those contacted was less than reassuring.

A presidential commission has recommended that the salaries of a bunch of top federal officials be increased by 50 percent. Because of federal law, the members of Congress must get the same increase. If the president accepts the recommendations and passes them on to Congress, the members of Congress will automatically get the pay raise unless they call for a special vote to reject it.

Fat chance they'll vote to cut themselves out of a fat pay raise, right?

It must first be noted that Sen. Dennis DeConcini, D-Arizona, refused to accept the last pay raise Congress let itself have.

That said, DeConcini now says he is uncertain what he'd do if this next pay raise comes up for a vote. For DeConcini, it may wll depend on whether the pay raise would come with the elimination of the tradition of honoraria for members of Congress.

Sen. John McCain. R-Arizona, said, "It would be wrong to vote for a pay raise when the people of the state are telling me to vote against it." Does the senator mean to suggest that he would vote for it if the people didn't mind?

Rep. Morris Udall, D-Arizona, said he might accept the pay raise if it ended honoraria.

Rep. Jay Rhodes, R-Arizona, said he's waiting to see what President Reagan will do with the recommendations.

Rep. Jim Kolbe and Jon Kyl, both Republicans, were described as unavailable for comment.

Here's what we think.

Each and every member of the Arizona delegation had darn well better make himself available to declare loudly and clearly that there is no way on this green Earth that Congress deserves any raise, let alone this one, and vow to fight said raise tooth and nail.

CONGRESSIONAL RAISES: TELL REAGAN IT'S TIME TO "JUST SAY NO"

(By Sandy Schwartz)

You probably have seen those books that give you advice on how to handle your boss. They tell you what you should and shouldn't say to your boss, and they tell you how to complain about a fellow worker.

What I like best is the section that tells you how and when to ask for a raise. I don't know about you, but some of that advice wouldn't cut it around our place.

The first of the year is just about here and many people are up for pay raise consideration. As you sit at home today trying to figure out how you are going to pay for all of those Christmas gifts, I am going to give you sound advice on how to get a healthy salary increase.

You won't find this in any of those books. Here's what you do: Get a presidential commission appointed at your place of employment and have it propose annual salary increases.

Then, have a system that almost automatically puts those recommended increases into place.

That is roughly how raises are considered for about 2,500 of the top federal officials in our land. Included are the president, vice president, senators, congressmen and presidential cabinet members.

Every four years the commission meets and makes blanket recommendations on pay raises, which are then passed along to the president. The president can accept or modify the raise recommendations, before including them in his budget. In 1989, the president will send his budget to Congress on Jan. 9.

Here's the real catch in this deal. The increases automatically take effect 30 days later unless both the House and Senate vote to reject the recommendations. Incidentally, the House will be out of session more than half of those 30 days.

Oh yeah, this time around there is even more reason to be upset about the process. The commission has come back and suggested the 2,500 employees be given a 50 percent pay raise. In exchange for the pay raise, the commission also is suggesting honoraria for congressmen be abolished.

The issue of honoraria should not be tied to the salary increase issue. A 50 percent salary increase is the main issue. Yes, honoraria should be abolished, but ethical standards should dictate that, not one's salary.

I don't know too many people who are getting 50 percent pay raises this year. In fact, it probably will take most people 10 years to get accumulative raises of 50 percent.

For the record, Arizona Sens. Dennis DeConcini and John McCain and Rep. Jay Rhodes have taken strong stands in opposition to the raises. In a Tribune editorial earlier this week, the stands of Rhodes and McCain were not accurately portrayed.

I appeared on a radio talk show with Rhodes, during which he clearly stated his position. "I feel strongly that the commission's proposal is totally inappropriate," Rhodes said. "Congress received, over my objections, a substantial salary increase in the 100th Congress.

"Another increase for members of Congress in light of our nation's budgetary deficits is unthinkable. Clearly, Congress is dodging its responsibilities."

McCain didn't mince words, either. In a conversation this week, he told me, "The American people are totally offended by this, and so am I. I think this is an act of arrogance and insensitivity."

The last time a pay raise like this was ramrodded through, DeConcini, who bitterly opposed it then too, refused to accept it. He said he writes a personal sheck monthly to the Treasury Department for the amount of the raise.

The solution sounds simple. All our elected officials have to do is vote against the raise and all of this will be solved. Unfortunately, it isn't that easy. Most Washington insiders figure this won't come before Congress because of the way the process works. Thus, annual salaries for members of Congress will go from $89,500 to $135,000. You should know this same group of people received a 47 percent raise in 1979, which brought them to $89,500.

For now, the ball is in the president's court. He has pared the commission's proposed increases in the past before sending them to Congress. If he does this time, he will have a lot of cutting to do. And, keep in mind this is a president who is on his way out and who has been on record as saying we must pay public officials more if we are to attract good people into those positions.

Rhodes said he will introduce a four-point plan of legislation right after the first of the year to short-circuit this type of action.

You, too, can do something. If you are a person of immediate action, call 202-456-7639. That will get you to President Reagan's office, or at least to someone in his office with whom you can lodge a complaint.

If you want to write, direct your letter to the president at the White House, Washington, D.C., 20500. You also should direct complaints to the Speaker of the House, Jim Wright, Washington, D.C., 20515.

Somehow, I just don't believe this is the way the American system is supposed to work.

[From the Green Valley News]

PAY RAISES EXCESSIVE

Pardon us, but are we hearing this correctly? If so, something doesn't add up.

It seems like only yesterday newly elected President George Bush and members of Congress were calling the nation's ballooning budget deficit the No. 1 priority for the federal government to resolve.

Congress even voted to freeze the minimum wage.

They did do that, didn't they,

As far as we know, the deficit hasn't disappeared and the minimum wage remains at $3.35 per hour, which adds up to a yearly income of $6,968 (before taxes).

So how come a federal panel is now recommending 50 percent pay raises for members of Congress, the president, cabinet secretaries, Supreme Court judges and others who already earn more money than 98 percent of Americans?

The panel, the Commission on Executive, Legislative and Judicial Salaries, this week recommended that the president's salary be upped to at least $350,000 a year from $200,000 and that the pay of representatives and senators rise from $89,500 to $135,000.

Party leaders in both houses, of course, would get more. The panel wants both the vice president and Speaker of House to get a $60,000 raise.

There is a catch, but a minor one.

The raise for congressmen is contingent upon them accepting a ban on travel and speaking fees, which the panel believes often pose a conflict of interest.

But the ban amounts to an obvious smoke screen to blur the public outcry that should greet this pay raise proposal.

Sure, congressmen and federal officials need to keep up a more expensive lifestyle than most Americans.

Yes, they do get paid much less than many in private industry or professional life. But the point is that congressmen and federal officials are supposed to live and act as public servants, not robber barons or industry tycoons.

No one is forcing any senator or congressmen to run for office or stay in office if they want to earn more money elsewhere.

A reasonable raise proposal for federal officials would undoubtedly win support, but this one goes too far.

It will also be hard to stop because of the ingenious way it's been presented.

The proposal will probably be included in the president's final budget.

If so, it will become law unless Congress votes against it within 30 days of the time the budget is presented.

That way, lawmakers will be spared the embarrassment of voting for this calculated rape of the American taxpayer.

The pay raise proposal is excessive, outrageous, and inappropriate in these times of tight money and mounting federal debt.

If you write only one letter this year to your congressmen, write this one. Tell them Green Valley area residents won't support this ripoff and gross betrayal of public trust.

NO EXAMPLE PROVIDED

It seems that one of the best and easiest ways to teach something to someone else is through example. If you want to teach someone the value of honesty, one would be truthful in all dealings with that person. It just makes sense.

What does not make sense is the federal government continually preaching the importance of reducing the national deficit and having Congress turn around and seek a 50 percent pay increase for themselves. They are the ones that should provide that example. Right now, it is just an example of greed and hypocracy.

If accepted by Presidnet Reagan and not voted down by both houses of the Congress, the recommendations of the Commission on Executive, Legislative and Judicial Salaries automatically become law. The proposal includes, among other things, a 50 percent raise for members of Congress and other top-level government officials.

The Commission recommends that the salaries of congressmen and federal district judges be raised from $89,500 to $135,000 annually. Other hefty hikes are proposed for the President, Vice President, Cabinet members and Supreme Court justices.

Increasing the compensation for some public jobs is justified, but it hardly seems such a large and sweeping salary hike is based on job performance or economic conditions.

Public officials are to serve in their positions for the good of the public, not the money. With this recent increase, if approved, it means more and more of the offices of federal government will be held by professional politicians. Not public servants, not people interested in doing the best for their district, but professional politicians. Raising the salaries this much in one swoop makes politics even more appealing for those looking more for money than service to others.

Arizona residents recently turned down a proposal which would increase salaries for state legislators to $25,000 annually from the current $15,000. These state legislators play an important role on what really happens to the citizens of this state and do impact on federal issues.

If people feel these legislators are being paid enough at $15,000 for a six-month session, what makes federal legislators feel they are worth almost 10 times that

Times are tough with the large deficit. Which programs will have to scrifice in service if the federal officers receive such a large pay increase. We are talking about more than a $45,000 increase for every member of the House and Senate as well as federal district judges.

Why should any program or citizen have to suffer because of what appears to be a case of severe greed. It is time for the Congress to be that example instead of part of the problem.

[From the Sierra Vista Herald and Bisbee Review, Dec. 14, 1988]

CONGRESS CAN DO WITHOUT RAISE

With the Christmas season and all, don't be surprised if the guys and gals on Capitol Hill don't make some impassioned speeches in the coming weeks on behalf of the less-fortunate: Themselves.

The always-laughable ritual of Congressional hand-wringing over pay rates for lawmakers is beginning.

This year, there's a new twist. An executive department report prepared by the Commission on Executive, Legislative and Judicial Salaries recommended Tuesday that salaries for member of Congress, Cabinet members and federal judges be raised 50 percent.

Even through Congress has rejected every annual budget sent over by the Reagan White House, we imagine the numbers in this report will be embraced.

If the report's suggestions are adopted, pay for members of Congress would increase from the current $89,500 annually to $135,000. Supreme Court justices are paid $115,000 now and their pay would increase by a similar percentage.

The report, in a nutshell, says things are darn tight on nearly 90 grand a year. Members of Congress are forced to accept speech honoraria at up to $2,000 a pop to supplement their incomes.

The panel preparing the report has heard testimony in the past few weeks tht low pay levels are keeping the good people away from public offices in all three branches of the government.

Tell that to the working poor of Cochise County or any other location in the country. Tell it to people making minimum wage and trying to decide whether to buy a coat or shoes for their children. Tell it to working mothers who must find affordable day care and hope that their children are safe. Tell it to those who live with no health insurance, prenatal care or dental visits. Or to those who risk malnourishment and disease because they eat high-fat food because it's all they can afford.

The report's rationale is that pay for House and Senate members, about 1,100 federal judges and some 3,000 top executive positions should be raised so the spending power equals 1969 levels.

Many Congressional incumbents have held their offices since 1969, so they can attest to the dwindling purchasing power of the dollar. If the low pay is keeping people from public office, why do we wind up with so few freshmen lawmakers every year?

The men and women of Congress could have done something to prevent their dollars from becoming so valueless: They could have balanced budgets, been more careful with credit, and attacked the crippling federal deficit before it got out of hand.

Congress has done a horrible job of managing the nation's economy. They don't deserve any higher salary. Nor should they be allowed to grovel for speeches in front of special interest groups. The provision allowing for honoraria for speeches should be abolished. And those zany Congresspeople should be forced to tough it out on $90,000 a year.

[From the Mesa Tribune]

PAY RAISE FOR WHOM?

What's your opinion of the job Congress had done? If you were a manager and all the members of Congress worked for you and it was time to have them in for a salary review, how would you rate their performance? More importantly, would you put them in for a pay raise?

Would you put them in for a 50 percent pay raise?

Yeah, that's what we thought.

Believe it or not, a presidential commission has recommended a 50 percent pay raise for such top federal officials as Supreme Court judges, federal judges, the vice president and president and Cabinet members.

The Quadrennial Commission on Executive, Legislative and Judicial Salaries has recommended to President Reagan that salaries for some 2,500 top federal jobs be increased by 50 percent.

Because of federal law—drafted by guess who—congressional salaries go along for the ride when federal salaries are increased.

Now, Reagan must first review the commission's recommendation. He can increase or decrease the recommended pay boosts. He also has the option of rejecting them altogether. The president has, in the past, strongly supported the notion that the nation needs to pay higher salaries to compete with the private sector and to keep the top people in public service. On the other hand, Reagan has usually cut such proposals before turning them over to Congress.

Once Reagan turns the recommendations over to Congress, its members are in the fascinating position of being able to give themselves a pay raise by doing absolutely nothing.

That's right. The law is set up so that the pay raises take effect automatically unless both the House and Senate vote to reject the recommendations.

It's not difficult to imagine the pitch to the folks back home "Hey, I didn't vote for any pay raise . . . check the Congressional Record,"

Getting a vote on the pay raise is going to be tough. After Reagan hands the recommendations over on Jan. 9, Congress has 30 days in which to vote on the measure. If it does not vote, the pay raise go through. Congress will be out of session at least 19 of those 30 days.

Keep in mind, the commission's recommendations may be completely sensible. It may well be that we need to pay our top federal officials more money or face losing them to the private sector. The chief justice of the Supreme Court makes $115,000 a year. A lawyer of such an obviously high caliber would be able to make many times that in a prestigious private law firm. Maybe these salaries should be 50 percent higher than they are now but to retify the situation in one full swoop is illogical.

And no matter what the increase, Congress hitchhikes to more money for its members. Members now make $89,500 a year. That's 47 percent more than they made in 1979. Is there a congressman anywhere worth $135,000 a year?

And don't forget the little matter of honoraria, the tons of money members of Congress make for speaking engagements, often with special interest groups who use the speaking fee as a way to make a political contribution right at the source. Last year, the members of Congress raked in $9.8 million in honoraria, more than $18,300 each—and they did not share equally in the wealth.

Sure, the commission recommended that Congress swap honoraria for the pay raise, but it takes an act of Congress (literally) to do away with the honoraria, while the pay increase—whatever is is—will come automatically.

Watch your congressman and senator closely on this one. Insist that they come to a vote on the pay raise and make sure they are held accountable for whatever action they take.●

By Mr. DOMENICI (for himself, Mr. GRASSLEY, Mr. LOTT, and Mr. COATS):

S. 159. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to provide a refundable credit to parents for dependents under age 5, that earned income credit shall not apply to families having such a dependent, and that the dependent care credit shall not apply with respect to such dependents; to the Committee on Finance.

FAMILY CHOICE TAX CREDIT ACT OF 1988

● Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, today I am pleased to introduce the Family Choice Tax Credit Act of 1989. This legislation makes a clear policy statement that the Federal Government has a very important role in helping families meet their child care needs. At the same time it recognizes that mother and father know what is best for their children. This bill is very similar to S. 2620 that I introduced during the 100th Congress. Unfortunately, the Senate lacked the time to address my earlier proposal.

This is legislation that calls for a major investment in America's young children and their families. I am convinced that this legislation is essential and will go far to address the child care needs facing America's families.

Mr. President, the U.S. Senate may be interested, and I am sure the American people will be interested, in the fact that for most of our history as a Nation, our National Government has provided significant assistance to families who are raising children. This was done in the form of personal exemptions. That assistance has eroded due to inflation and because our Tax Code has been changed dramatically, all of which works against raising a family.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a chart showing the total worth of personal exemptions for a family of four and illustrating this erosion from 1912 to today.

There being no objection, the chart was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OUR ANTI-FAMILY TAX SYSTEM

(Personal exemption for family of four)

	Current dollars	1987 Dollars [1]
1912	$4,000	$45,977
1920	2,400	13,636
1931	4,300	32,090
1940	2,800	22,764
1945	2,000	12,658
1948	2,400	11,321
1969	2,400	7,430
1972	3,000	8,152
1984	4,000	4,376
1987	7,600	7,600

[1] 1987 dollars, using CPI: Source: "Federal Tax Policy," Joseph Pechman-Brookings Institution.

Mr. President, if one wants a more recent comparison it would be as follows. An American family of four paid 24 percent of their annual income in Federal income taxes while in 1948 a family of four paid 2 percent of their annual income in Federal taxes. That is an average figure. That is because they received rather significant family oriented exemptions.

Even with the increase in the exemptions that occurred during tax reform, we all still substantially behind what we used to be; and we ask why families cannot afford child care, why families with two or three children cannot carry out the essentials for those children.

Implicitly, we compare it with past history, and we even say that maybe it was easier to raise children on a given standard 20 years ago. I believe that the income tax incentives of those days are at the heart of this.

So my bill, which I introduced last year in a slightly different form—and in his campaign, President Bush included some of the essentials—clearly moves us in a direction of letting mothers and fathers, even if one of them chooses not to work, to receive a significant tax credit if they have children under 5 years of age. They can choose how and where and when to spend the money on child care. It would also make it a family choice. It would provide an incentive even if one or the other chooses to stay home and take care of the children. They do not deserve to be penalized, if that is their choice. So this incentive will be available whether or not both parents are working.

THE BILL'S PROVISIONS

Title 1 of this legislation creates two special tax credits for families with young children. Eligibility for the credits is based upon family income. For families earning less than $30,000 a year, this bill provides a direct, $700 per year tax credit for each child under age 5. That tax credit reduces, dollar for dollar, the amount of taxes owed, or would increase the amount of a taxpayer's refund, by $700. The result is that eligible families will get $700 more each year for each eligible child

My bill provides that once future deficit reduction goals are met with $700 credit will be increased and extended to all families.

The second tax credit I am proposing, called a Young Child Tax Credit [YCTC], will enables us to channel greater assistance to families with greater needs. Expanding upon the current Earned Income Tax Credit [EITC] Program, which already assists many low income families, my YCTC would provide a new, refundable tax credit to families whose income receive earning supplements of as much as 15 percent for their one child under age 5, and a 10-percent supplement for each additional child under that age.

This second credit will enable many low income families to receive even more than $700 per child, with the amount determined by each family's earnings and the number of young children they have. In addition, because the benefits increase with family earnings, it rewards families for working.

Title 2 of this legislation limits liability that many child care providers now face. It provides that licensed providers found liable for a nonintentional tort owes only those damages directly attributable to the provider's proportional share of fault.

Double payment of damages would be eliminated so that damages awarded against a licensed child care provider are reduced by any past or future payment that has already been received. Additionally, assessments of punitive damages would be limited to cases when their justification is proved through clear and convincing evidence.

Also under this title, $75 million is authorized to assist States in establishing liability insurance pools for accredited child care providers.

Title 3 authorizes $25 million to help States establish a revolving loan fund to help family based child care providers. These funds would help such providers make the capital improvements needed to meet accreditation or licensing standards.

Both Titles 2 and 3 in this bill were suggested by my good friend, the distinguished ranking member of the Committee on Labor and Human Resources [Mr. HATCH]. These concepts were included originally in a bill he introduced last year, the Child Care Services Improvement Act. And I was proud to include them in the legislation I offered both then and now.

These are very important provisions, I believe, in helping assure the supply of quality child care options continues to grow.

MEETING THE NEEDS OF AMERICA'S YOUNG FAMILIES

In recent decades, substantial changes have occurred in America's work force and family structure, changes that have focused greater attention on the need for child care. In fairness, as well as for the sake of our economy, we simply must help families in need afford the high costs of caring for their children.

The percentage of working women with children under age 6 has grown since 1950 from 12 percent to 57 percent. And this figure is likely to grow since 60 percent of those who will join the labor force between now and the year 2000 will be women.

For many working parents, quality day care services will be critical. And the availability of high quality day care certainly has dominated public debate over child care.

Yet, from observations, Mr. President, we must broaden our perspective to the child care needs that all families face. In reality, large day care facilities are just one of many ways that a family might select as the way to care for its children. Most children are cared for either by one of their parents, a relative, or a neighbor.

I am convinced that we ought to give our principle attention to the more profound burdens faced by many American families, the tremendous cost of rearing a child. Regardless of how families choose to care for their young children, they all face very high costs. We must help all families, whether parents seek quality group day care, neighborhood family care, or whether a parent stays at home with a child.

I believe that the tax credits I am proposing are the most fair and effective way to accomplish that goal.

First, the tax credits I am proposing are very substantial and will go far to help families in need meet the high costs of child care. While any such plan must be considered within the context of overall budget restraints, this proposal would help reverse a trend of recent decades in which the tax code has recognized less and less the high costs of raising children.

The value of the personal tax exemption has eroded considerably over the past 30 to 40 years. During the 1950's, each personal exemption had a value equal to 42 percent of the average personal, per capita income. Today that percentage is a mere 17 percent.

Second, the tax credit approach is truly a superior way to provide needy families child care assistance. It allows parents maximum freedom to choose how their children should be cared for, and is fair to all families. It does not discriminate against mothers who make the economic sacrifice to stay at home with their child, or who choose one particular form of child care over another.

With the tax credit, the cash assistance is put directly into the hands of parents and not filtered through a huge bureaucracy which will spend money for them. Additionally, the tax credits I am proposing allow us the best method for getting assistance directly to those most in need.

This approach, of course, is very similar to the "Children's Tax Credit" proposal that President Bush recommended last year. I may wish to modify this bill, or propose alternatives, as we learn more about its costs and the details of the President's proposal. I certainly look forward to working with the administration in this area. I urge my colleagues to support the approach taken in this proposal.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 159

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Family Choice Tax Credit Act of 1988".

TITLE I—TAX CREDITS FOR FAMILIES WITH YOUNG CHILDREN

SEC. 101. FAMILIES WITH YOUNG CHILDREN TAX CREDIT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subpart C of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended by redesignating section 35 as section 36 and by inserting after section 34 the following new section:

"SEC. 35. FAMILIES WITH YOUNG CHILDREN TAX CREDIT.

"(a) GENERAL RULE.—In the case of an individual, there is allowed as a credit against the tax imposed by this subtitle for the taxable year an amount equal to the young child tax credit amount for the taxable year.

"(b) YOUNG CHILD TAX CREDIT AMOUNT.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Subject to paragraph (3), the young child tax credit amount for the taxable year is an amount equal to the sum of the applicable credit percentages of so much of the taxpayer's earned income (as defined in section 32(c)(2)) for such year as does not exceed $8,000.

"(2) APPLICABLE CREDIT PERCENTAGES.—For purposes of paragraph (1), the applicable credit percentage is—

"(A) 15 percent for any 1 qualified dependent of the taxpayer, and

"(B) 10 percent for each qualified dependent of the taxpayer other than the qualified dependent taken into account under subparagraph (A).

"(3) PHASEOUT OF CREDIT.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—In the case of a taxpayer whose earned income for the taxable year exceeds $8,000, the amount determined under paragraph (1) shall be reduced by an amount equal to the sum of the applicable phaseout percentages of such excess.

"(B) APPLICABLE PHASEOUT PERCENTAGES.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), the applicable phaseout percentage is—

"(i) 9 percent for any 1 qualified dependent of the taxpayer, and

"(ii) 1 percent for each qualified dependent of the taxpayer taken into account under paragraph (2)(B).

"(C) MINIMUM CREDIT PER QUALIFIED DEPENDENT.—Notwithstanding subparagraph (A), the amount determined under paragraph (1) with respect to each qualified dependent taken into account under paragraph (1) shall not be reduced by reason of this paragraph to less than $700 for each such dependent.

"(D) NO CREDIT FOR TAXPAYERS WITH EARNED INCOME EXCEEDING $30,000.—No credit shall be allowed under subsection (a) for any qualified dependent of a taxpayer whose earned income for the taxable year exceeds $30,000.

"(c) QUALIFIED DEPENDENT.—For purposes of this section, the term 'qualified dependent' means any individual—

"(1) who is a dependent (as defined in section 152) of the taxpayer,

"(2) who is a child (as defined in section 151(c)(3)) of the taxpayer, and

"(3) who has not attained age 5 at the close of the calendar year in which the taxable year of the taxpayer begins.

Such term does not include any dependent of an individual receiving aid or assistance under part A or part E of title IV of the Social Security Act.

"(d) MARRIED INDIVIDUALS.—In the case of an individual who is married (within the meaning of section 7703), this section shall apply only if a joint return is filed for the taxable year.

"(e) TAXABLE YEAR MUST BE FULL TAXABLE YEAR.—Except in the case of a taxable year closed by reason of the death of the taxpayer, no credit shall be allowable under this section in the case of a taxable year covering a period of less than 12 months.

"(f) AMOUNT OF CREDIT TO BE DETERMINED UNDER TABLES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The amount of the credit allowed by this section shall be determined under tables prescribed by the Secretary.

"(2) REQUIREMENTS FOR TABLES.—The tables prescribed under paragraph (1) shall reflect the provisions of subsections (a) and (b) and shall have income brackets of not greater than $50 each for earned income between $0 and the amount of earned income at which the credit is phased down to the amount applicable under subsection (b)(3)(C).

"(g) COORDINATION WITH ADVANCE PAYMENTS OF YOUNG CHILD TAX CREDIT.—

"(1) RECAPTURE OF EXCESS ADVANCE PAYMENTS.—If any payment is made to the individual by an employer under section 3507A during any calendar year, then the tax imposed by this chapter for the individual's last taxable year beginning in such calendar year shall be increased by the aggregate amount of such payments.

"(2) RECONCILIATION OF PAYMENTS ADVANCED AND CREDIT ALLOWED.—Any increase in tax under paragraph (1) shall not be treated as tax imposed by this chapter for purposes of determining the amount of any credit (other than the credit allowed by subsection (a)) allowable under this subpart.

"(h) PHASE-IN OF HIGHER CREDIT.—

"(1) TAXABLE YEARS BEGINNING AFTER FIRST TRIGGER YEAR.—In the case of any taxable year beginning on or after the first trigger year—

"(A) '$1,000 for each such dependent ($750 in the case of any taxpayer whose earned income for the taxable year exceeds $30,000)' shall be substituted for '$700 for each such dependent' in subsection (b)(3)(C), and

"(B) '$50,000' shall be substituted for '$30,000' each place it appears in subsection (b)(3)(D).

"(2) TAXABLE YEARS BEGINNING AFTER SECOND TRIGGER YEAR.—In the case of any taxable year beginning on or after the second trigger year—

"(A) '$35,000' shall be substituted for '$30,000' in subsection (b)(3)(C), and

"(B) subsection (b)(3)(D) shall not apply.

"(3) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) FIRST TRIGGER YEAR.—The term 'first trigger year' means the first fiscal year beginning after September 30, 1993, in which the level of total budget outlays does not exceed the recommended level of Federal revenues set forth for such year (as determined under section 301(i) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974).

"(B) SECOND TRIGGER YEAR.—The term 'second trigger year' means the first fiscal year beginning—

"(i) on October 1, and

"(ii) after the end of the first trigger year, in which the level of total budget outlays does not exceed the recommended level of Federal revenues set forth for such year (as determined under section 301(i) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974).".

(b) ADVANCE PAYMENT OF CREDIT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 25 of such Code is amended by inserting after section 3507 the following new section:

"SEC. 3507A. ADVANCE PAYMENT OF YOUNG CHILD TAX CREDIT.

"(a) GENERAL RULE.—Except as otherwise provided in this section, every employer making payment of wages to an employee with respect to whom a young child tax credit eligibility certificate is in effect shall, at the time of paying such wages, make an additional payment to such employee equal to such employee's young child tax credit advance amount.

"(b) YOUNG CHILD TAX CREDIT ELIGIBILITY CERTIFICATE.—For purposes of this title, a young child tax credit eligibility certificate is a statement furnished by an employee to the employer which—

"(1) certifies that the employee will be eligible to receive the credit provided by section 35 for the taxable year,

"(2) certifies that the employee does not have a young child tax credit eligibility certificate in effect for the calendar year with respect to the payment of wages by another employer, and

"(3) states whether or not the employee's spouse has a young child tax credit eligibility certificate in effect.

For purposes of this section, a certificate shall be treated as being in effect with respect to a spouse if such a certificate will be in effect on the first status determination date following the date on which the employee furnished the statement in question.

"(c) YOUNG CHILD TAX CREDIT ADVANCE AMOUNT.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this title, the term 'young child tax credit advance amount' means, with respect to any payroll period, the amount determined—

"(A) on the basis of the employee's wages from the employer for such period, and

"(B) in accordance with tables prescribed by the Secretary.

"(2) ADVANCE AMOUNT TABLES.—The tables referred to in paragraph (1)(B)—

"(A) shall be similar in form to the tables prescribed under section 3402 and, to the maximum extent feasible, shall be coordinated with such tables, and

"(B) if the employee is not married, or if no young child tax credit eligibility certificate is in effect with respect to the spouse of the employee, shall treat the credit provided by section 35 as if it were a credit—

"(i) of not more than the sum of the applicable credit percentages under section 35(b) of earned income not in excess of the amount of earned income which may be taken into account under section 35(b), which

"(ii) phases down between the amount of earned income at which the phaseout begins under subsection (b) of section 35 and the amount of earned income at which the credit under section 35 is phased down to the amount applicable under section 35(b)(3)(C), and which

"(iii) phases out at the amount of earned income described in section 35(b)(3)(D), and

"(C) if a young child tax credit eligibility certificate is in effect with respect to the spouse of the employee, shall treat the credit provided by section 35 as if it were a credit—

"(i) of not more than the sum of the applicable credit percentages under subsection (b) of section 35 of earned income not in excess of ½ of the amount of earned income which may be taken into account under such subsection, which

"(ii) phases down between amounts of earned income which are ½ of the amounts of earned income described in subparagraph (B)(ii), and which

"(iii) phases out at ½ of the amount of earned income described in subparagraph (B)(iii).

"(d) CERTAIN RULES TO APPLY.—Rules similar to the rules of subsections (d) and (e) of section 3507 shall apply for purposes of this section. Proper adjustments shall be made in the application of such rules under this section to take into account payments under section 3507.".

(2) INFORMATION SHOWN ON W-2.—Subsection (a) of section 6051 of such Code (relating to receipts to employees) is amended by striking the period at the end of paragraph (8) and inserting ", and" and by inserting after paragraph (8) the following new paragraph:

"(9) the total amount paid to the employee under section 3507A (relating to advance payment of young child tax credit).".

(3) REQUIREMENT OF RETURN.—Subsection (a) of section 6012 of such Code (relating to persons required to make returns of income) is amended by inserting after paragraph (9) the following new paragraph:

"(10) Every individual who receives payments during the calendar year in which the taxable year begins under section 3507A (relating to advance payment of young child tax credit).".

(4) CROSS REFERENCE.—Subsection (e) of section 6302 of such Code (relating to mode or time of collection) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(3) For treatment of young child tax credit advance amount as payment of withholding and FICA taxes, see section 3507A(d).".

(c) CLERICAL AMENDMENTS.—

(1) The table sections for subpart C of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 of such Code is amended by striking the item relating to section 35 and inserting the following:

"Sec. 35. Young child tax credit.
"Sec. 36. Overpayments of tax.".

(2) The table sections for chapter 25 of such Code is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 3507 the following new item:

"Sec. 3507A. Advance payment of young child tax credit.".

(d) EFFECTIVE DATES.—

(1) The amendments made by subsections (a) and (b)(3) shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1989.

(2) The amendments made by paragraphs (1) and (2) of subsection (b) shall apply to remuneration paid after December 31, 1989.

SEC. 102. CHANGES IN EARNED INCOME CREDIT AND DEPENDENT CARE CREDIT.

(a) TAXPAYERS WITH DEPENDENTS UNDER AGE 5 INELIGIBLE FOR EARNED INCOME CREDIT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Paragraph (1) of section 32(c) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (defining eligible individual) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(D) TAXPAYERS ELIGIBLE FOR YOUNG CHILD TAX CREDIT INELIGIBLE FOR EARNED INCOME CREDIT.—No credit shall be allowed under this section to a taxpayer for the taxable year if a credit is allowable to the taxpayer under section 35 for such taxable year.".

(2) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by paragraph (1) shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1989.

(b) NO DEPENDENT CARE CREDIT FOR EXPENSES WITH RESPECT TO DEPENDENTS UNDER AGE 5.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Paragraph (1) of section 21(b) of such Code (defining qualifying individual) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence:

"The term 'qualifying dependent' shall not include any qualified dependent (as defined in section 35(c)).".

(2) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by paragraph (1) shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1989.

TITLE II—CHILD CARE LIABILITY

PART A—CHILD CARE LIABILITY REFORM

SEC. 201. DEFINITIONS.

For purposes of this title—

(1) the term "family based child care" means child care located in or on the site of the principal residence (within the meaning of section 1034 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986) of a person who is self-employed as a child care provider, and the children cared for in such facility shall include children who are not the children of such provider;

(2) the term "group child care center" means a child care provider which is a private profit or nonprofit corporation, not located in the principal residence of the provider, and includes on-site child care;

(3) the term "in-home child care" means child care which is provided in a principal residence (within the meaning of section 1034 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986) of a person and to which an outside individual child care provider comes, either for specified hours of the day or on a live-in basis, to provide care for the children of such residence;

(4) the term "on-site child care center" means a child care facility—

(A) operated by an employer for the care of children, at least 30 percent of whom are dependents of employees of such employer; and

(B) located on or near the business premises of such employer;

(5) the term "person" means an individual, corporation, company, association, firm, partnership, society, or any other entity;

(6) the term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Commerce; and

(7) the term "State" means any State, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, Guam, American Samoa, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, and any other territory or possession of the United States.

SEC. 202. APPLICABILITY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—This part shall apply to any civil action in any State or Federal court against any child care provider who is in compliance with the licensing or accreditation requirements of the State in which he is located.

(b) EXCEPTION FOR INTENTIONAL TORTS.—This part shall not apply to any civil action for an intentional tort.

(c) PREEMPTION.—This part shall preempt and supersede Federal or State law only to the extent such law is inconsistent with this part. Any issue arising under this part that is not governed by this part shall be governed by applicable State or Federal law.

(d) DEFENSES NOT AFFECTED.—Nothing in this part shall be construed to—

(1) waive or affect any defense of sovereign immunity asserted by any State under any provision of law;

(2) waive or affect any defense of sovereign immunity asserted by the United States;

(3) affect the applicability of any provision of chapter 97 of title 28, United States Code, known as the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act of 1976;

(4) preempt State choice-of-law rules with respect to claims brought by a foreign nation or a citizen of a foreign nation; or

(5) affect the right of any court to transfer venue or to apply the law of a foreign nation or to dismiss a claim of a foreign nation or of a citizen of a foreign nation on the ground of inconvenient forum.

SEC. 203. JOINT AND SEVERAL LIABILITY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subsection (b), joint and several liability may not be applied to any action subject to this part. A person found liable for damages in any such action may be found liable, if at all, only for those damages directly attributable to the person's pro rata share of fault or responsibility for the injury, and may not be found liable for damages attributable to the pro rata share of fault or responsibility of any other person (without regard to whether such person is a party to the action) for the injury, including any person bringing the action.

(b) CONCERTED ACTION.—

(1) EXCEPTION FROM APPLICATION.—Subsection (a) shall not apply as between persons acting in concert where the concerted action proximately caused the injury for which one or more persons are found liable for damages.

(2) CONCERTED ACTION DEFINED.—As used in this section, "concerted action" or "acting in concert" means the conscious acting together in a common scheme or plan of two or more persons resulting in a tortious act.

SEC. 204. COLLATERAL SOURCE OF COMPENSATION.

(a) REDUCTION OF AWARD.—Any award of damages to a person in a civil action to which this part applies shall be reduced by the court by an amount of any past or future payment or benefit covered by this section which the person has received or for which the person is eligible on account of the same personal injury or death for which such damages are awarded.

(b) PAYMENT OR BENEFITS DEFINED.—As used in this section, "payment or benefit covered by this section" means—

(1) any payment or benefit by or paid for in whole or in part by any agency or instrumentality of the United States, a State, or a local government, or

(2) any payment or benefit by a health insurance program funded in whole or in part by an employer;

but does not include any such payment or benefit that is (or by law is required to be) the subject of a reasonably founded claim of subrogation, reimbursement, or lien.

SEC. 205. STANDARDS AND PROCEDURES FOR AWARD FOR PUNITIVE DAMAGES.

(a) STANDARDS.—Punitive or exemplary damages may, if otherwise permitted by applicable law, be awarded in any civil action to which this part applies only if the claimant establishes by clear and convincing evidence that the harm suffered was the result of conduct manifesting intentional or conscious disregard for the health or safety of those persons who might be harmed.

(b) PROCEDURES.—In any civil action to which this part applies, at the request of the defendant, the trier of fact shall consider in a separate proceeding whether punitive or exemplary damages are to be awarded and, if so, the amount of such award. If a separate proceeding is requested, no evidence which is relevant only to the claim of punitive or exemplary damages, as determined by applicable law, shall be admissible in any proceeding to determine whether compensatory damages are to be awarded.

SEC. 206. LIABILITY OF NONPROFIT ORGANIZATIONS AND PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

(a) LIABILITY OF SEPARATE CORPORATION.—Any eligible nonprofit organization or local educational agency which is the parent or majority owner of any entity incorporated or otherwise organized under applicable State law as a separate business organization providing child care shall not be liable for damages in any civil action to which this part applies brought against that separate corporation or organization.

(b) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section, the following definitions shall apply:

(1) The term "eligible nonprofit organization" means an organization described in section 501(c) or 501(d) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 which is exempt from taxation under section 501(a) of such Code.

(2) The term "local educational agency" has the meaning given to it under section 1001(f) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 3381(f)).

(c) SENSE OF CONGRESS REGARDING EXPEDITED INCORPORATION.—The Congress recognizes that the entities described in subsection (a) are making a significant contribution to society and encourages the States to establish expedited and simplified procedures under which nonprofit organizations and local education agencies may inexpensively and quickly incorporate or otherwise organize such entities as a separate child care provider.

PART B—CHILD CARE LIABILITY RISK RETENTION GROUP

SEC. 210. PURPOSE.

It is the purpose of this part—

(1) to increase the availability of child care by alleviating the serious difficulty faced by child care providers in obtaining affordable liability insurance; and

(2) to provide States with a sufficient capital base for liability insurance purposes that may be increased or maintained through mechanisms developed by the State.

SEC. 211. FORMATION OF CHILD CARE LIABILITY RISK RETENTION GROUP.

(a) ASSISTANCE IN FORMATION AND OPERATION OF GROUP.—Any State may assist in the establishment and operation of a child care liability risk retention group in the manner provided under this part.

(b) CHILD CARE LIABILITY RISK RETENTION GROUP DEFINED.—For purposes of this part, the "child care liability risk retention group" means any corporation (or other limited liability association)—

(1) whose members are child care providers licensed or accredited pursuant to State or local law or standards; and

(2) which otherwise satisfies the criteria for a risk retention group under section 2(4) of the Liability Risk Retention Act of 1986 (15 U.S.C. 3901(4)).

SEC. 212. STATE APPLICATIONS.

(a) APPLICATIONS.—To qualify for assistance under this part, a State shall submit an application to the Secretary, at such time, in such manner, and containing or accompanied by such information as the Secretary may reasonably require, including a State plan which meets the requirements of subsection (b) of this section.

(b) STATE PLANS.—

(1) LEAD AGENCY.—The plan shall identify the lead agency which has been designated and which is to be responsible for the administration of funds provided under this part.

(2) PARTICIPANTS IN RISK RETENTION GROUP.—The plan shall provide that all participants in the child care liability risk retention group are child care providers who are licensed or accredited pursuant to State or local law or standards. In addition, the plan shall provide for maximum membership of family-based child care providers in the group.

(3) USE OF FUNDS.—The plan shall provide that the State shall use at least the amount allotted to the State in any fiscal year to establish or operate a child care liability risk retention group.

(4) CONTINUATION OF RISK RETENTION GROUP.—The plan shall set forth provisions which specify how the child care liability risk retention group will continue to be financed after fiscal year 1992, including financing through contributions by the State or by members of such group.

SEC. 213. FEDERAL ENFORCEMENT.

(a) REVIEW OF PLANS.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall review and approve State plans submitted in accordance with this part and shall monitor State compliance with the provisions of this part.

(b) FINDING OF NONCOMPLIANCE.—If the Secretary, after reasonable notice to a State and opportunity for a hearing, finds—

(1) that there has been a failure to comply substantially with any provision or any requirements set forth in the State plan of that State; or

(2) that there is a failure to comply substantially with any applicable provision of this part, the Secretary shall notify such State of the findings and of the fact that no further payments may be made to such State under this part until the Secretary is satisfied that there is no longer any such failure to comply, or that the noncompliance will be promptly corrected.

SEC. 214. AUTHORIZATION.

(a) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—To carry out the provisions of this part, there are authorized to be appropriated $75,000,000 for fiscal year 1990.

(b) AMOUNTS TO REMAIN AVAILABLE.—The amounts appropriated pursuant to subsection (a) shall remain available for assistance to States for fiscal years 1990, 1991, and 1992 without limitation.

SEC. 215. RESERVATIONS FOR TERRITORIES AND ADMINISTRATIVE COSTS.

From the sums appropriated to carry out the provisions of this part for each fiscal year, the Secretary shall reserve—

(1) 1 percent for payments to Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, and the Northern Mariana Islands, to be allotted in accordance with their respective needs; and

(2) 3 percent for the administrative costs of carrying out the provisions of this part.

SEC. 216. ALLOTMENTS TO STATES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall make an allotment to each State not referred to in section 215 for each fiscal year from the sums appropriated to carry out the provisions of this part for such fiscal year.

(b) ALLOTMENT FORMULA.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The amount of each State's allotment under subsection (a) shall be equal to the product of—

(A) an amount equal to the sums appropriated to carry out the provisions of this part for each fiscal year minus the amount reserved pursuant to section 215 for such fiscal year; and

(B) the percentage described in paragraph (2).

(2) PERCENTAGE.—The percentage referred to in paragraph (1)(B) is a percentage equal to the quotient of—

(A) an amount equal to the number of children under 12 years of age living in the State involved, as indicated by the most recent data collected by the Bureau of the Census; divided by

(B) an amount equal to the number of children under 12 years of age living in the United States, as indicated by the most recent data collected by the Bureau of the Census.

(c) STATE ADMINISTRATIVE COSTS.—Of the amount allotted to a State pursuant to subsection (a), an amount not to exceed 10 percent shall be used by such State to provide for the administrative costs of carrying out such program.

SEC. 217. PAYMENTS.

(a) ENTITLEMENT.—Each State having a plan approved by the Secretary under this part shall be entitled to payments under this section for each fiscal year in an amount not to exceed its allotment under section 216, to be expended by the State under the plan for the fiscal year for which the grant is to be made.

(b) METHOD OF PAYMENTS.—The Secretary may make payments to a State in installments, and in advance or, subject to the requirement of section 214, by way of reimbursement, with necessary adjustments on account of overpayments or underpayments, as the Secretary may determine.

(c) STATE SPENDING OF PAYMENTS.—Payments to a State from the allotment under section 216 for any fiscal year must be expended by the State in that fiscal year or in the succeeding fiscal year.

TITLE III—REVOLVING LOAN FUND

SEC. 301. PURPOSE; DEFINITIONS.

(a) PURPOSE.—It is the purpose of this title to—

(1) increase the availability of family-based child care by enabling family-based child care providers to meet accreditation or licensing standards; and

(2) provide States with a sufficient capital base to make loans that may be increased or maintained through mechanisms developed by the State.

(b) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this title, the following definitions shall apply:

(1) The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Health and Human Services.

(2) The term "State" means any State, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, Guam, American Samoa, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, and any other territory or possession of the United States.

SEC. 302. STATE APPLICATIONS.

(a) SUBMISSION OF APPLICATION.—

(1) FORM OF APPLICATION.—To qualify for assistance under this title, a State shall submit an application to the Secretary, at such time, in such manner, and providing such information as the Secretary may require, including a plan which meets the requirements of paragraph (2).

(2) QUALIFYING FOR LOAN.—The State shall submit a plan which sets forth procedures and requirements whereby any person desiring to make capital improvements to the principal residence of such person (within the meaning of section 1034 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986) in order to become a licensed or accredited family-based child care facility, pursuant to State or local law or standards, may obtain a loan from the State revolving loan fund (hereinafter called the "fund"). Such fund shall be administered by the State and shall provide loans to qualified applicants, pursuant to the terms and conditions established by such State, in an amount, determined by such State, which is not in excess of $1,500.

(b) STATE PLAN.—

(1) ESTABLISHMENT OF FUND.—The State shall provide in its plan, that such State has established a revolving loan fund, and has provided procedures whereby—

(A) moneys are transferred to such fund to provide capital for making loans;

(B) interest and principal payments on loans and any other moneys, property, or assets derived from any action concerning such fund are deposited into such fund;

(C) all loans, expenses, and payments pursuant to the operation of this title are paid from such fund;

(D) loans made from such fund are made to qualified applicants for capital improvements to be made so that such applicant may obtain a State or local accreditation or a license for a family-based child care facility; and

(E) the plan shall set forth provisions which specify how any such revolving loan fund will continue to be financed after fiscal year 1991, such as through contributions by the State or by some other entity.

(2) QUALIFICATIONS.—Such plan shall also set forth procedures and guidelines to carry out the purposes of this title, including provisions which will assure that only applicants who obtain a license or accreditation for a child care facility in accordance with the provisions of State or local law or standards, benefit from loans made available pursuant to the provisions of this title.

SEC. 303. AUTHORIZATION.

(a) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—To carry out the provisions of this title, there are authorized to be appropriated $25,000,000 for fiscal year 1990.

(b) AMOUNTS TO REMAIN AVAILABLE.—The amounts appropriated pursuant to subsection (a) shall remain available for assistance to States for fiscal years 1990, 1991, and 1992 without limitation.

SEC. 304. RESERVATIONS FOR TERRITORIES AND ADMINISTRATIVE COSTS.

From the sums appropriated to carry out the provisions of this title in each fiscal year, the Secretary shall reserve—

(1) 1 percent for payments to Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, and the Northern Mariana Islands, to be allotted in accordance with their respective needs; and

(2) 3 percent for the administrative costs of carrying out the provisions of this title.

SEC. 305. ALLOTMENTS TO STATES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall make an allotment to each State not referred to in section 304 for each fiscal year from the sums appropriated to carry out the provisions of this title for such fiscal year.

(b) ALLOTMENT FORMULA.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The amount of each State's allotment under subsection (a) shall be equal to the product of—

(A) an amount equal to the sums appropriated to carry out the provisions of this title for each fiscal year minus the amounts reserved pursuant to section 304 for such fiscal year; and

(B) the percentage described in paragraph (2).

(2) PERCENTAGE.—The percentage referred to in paragraph (1)(B) is a percentage equal to the quotient of—

(A) an amount equal to the number of children under 12 years of age living in the State involved, as indicated by the most recent data collected by the Bureau of the Census; divided by

(B) an amount equal to the number of children under 12 years of age living in the United States, as indicated by the most recent data collected by the Bureau of the Census.

(c) STATE ADMINISTRATIVE COSTS.—Of the amount allotted to a State pursuant to subsection (a), an amount not to exceed 10 percent shall be used by such State to provide for the administrative costs of carrying out such program.●

By Mr. THURMOND:

S. 160. A bill to require the construction of a memorial on Federal land in the District of Columbia or its environs to honor members of the Armed Forces who served in World War II and to commemorate U.S. participation in that conflict; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

WORLD WAR II VETERANS MEMORIAL

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, as a veteran of World War II, it is a pleasure to rise today to reintroduce legislation which would establish a memorial to our World War II veterans. This bill is identical to S. 2734, which I introduced on August 11, 1988 during the 100th Congress. Though it has been over 40 year since the end of this year, it is never too late to honor those who have given their lives for freedom.

World War II was one of the most significant wars in our history as a nation. Involving more than 16 million Americans, it was the war which preserved freedom for the Western world. Yet, it was not without a heavy toll. The damage and the human suffering were extreme. More than 670,000 Americans were wounded and over 400,000 made the utimate sacrifice by giving their lives. A tribute to these Americans is richly deserved.

World War II memorials are located all over the world. However, there is no single monument that honors the American veterans of World War II as a group. Our Nation's Capital would be an especially fitting location for such a monument, and the legislation I am proposing would provide for such a location.

In addition, Mr. President, this monument would be constructed solely with private contributions. I want to emphasize this point—no Federal tax dollars would be used for construction of the memorial. The only cost to the taxpayer would be for the maintenance and care of the memorial, once it is constructed.

Mr. President, I would now like to briefly explain the provisions of this bill.

Section 1 of this legislation authorizes the American Battle Monuments Commission to build a World War II Memorial on Federal land in the District of Columbia.

Section 2 provides for the establishment of a World War II Memorial Advisory Board. This board will consist of 12 members including World War II veterans, historians, representatives of veterans organizations, and other historical associations knowledgeable on the subject. their responsibilities will include encouraging the donation of private funds for construction, recommending a site for the memorial, and assisting the Battle Monuments Commission in selecting a design for the memorial.

Section 3 of the bill specifies the responsibilities of the Commission. As distinguished from the board, the Commission will be the actual entity which solicits and accepts the private contributions for construction of the memorial.

Section 4 of the bill authorizes other Federal entities to offer their administrative services and support to the Commission in carrying out its functions.

Section 5 specifies that the maintenance and care of the memorial be the responsibility of the Secretary of the Interior.

Section 6 makes the bill subject to Public Law 99-652, which specifies the procedures for approving commemorative works such as this monument.

Finally, section 7 provides a reasonable timetable for the commencement of construction.

Mr. President, this monument pays tribute to the men and women who have given of themselves to make our lives, and the lives of all Americans, better today. It is fitting that there be a memorial in Washington to which they can bring their children and their grandchildren and say "This is why we fought and how we honor those who served." This memorial is long overdue.

Mr. President, we have constructed a Vietnam Veterans Memorial, and have enacted legislation approving the construction of the Korean Veterans Memorial and the Women's Vietnam Memorial. The veterans of World War II deserve no less. I urge my colleagues to join me in support of this bill.

I ask unanimous consent that a copy of this legislation appear in the RECORD immediately following my remarks.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 160

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. (a) The American Battle Monuments Commission (hereinafter referred to as the "Commission") shall construct a memorial on Federal land in the District of Columbia or its environs to honor members of the Armed Forces who served in World War II and to commemorate United States participation in that conflict.

(b) The Commission shall plan, design, and oversee the construction of the memorial.

SEC. 2. (a) There is established a World War II Memorial Advisory Board (hereinafter referred to as the "Board").

(b)(1) The Board shall consist of 12 members appointed by the President.

(2) The members of the Board shall include representatives of veterans organizations, World War II veterans, World War II historians, and representatives of American historical associations and other organizations knowledgeable about World War II.

(3) All appointments under this subsection shall be made within 120 calendar days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(c)(1) Members of the Board appointed by the President shall serve for a term of five years.

(2) Any vacancy in the Board shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointment. Any member appointed to fill a vacancy resulting from the departure of a member before the expiration of his term shall serve for the remainder of the unexpired term of such departing member.

(d) The President shall designate the Chairperson and Vice Chairperson of the Board from among the members of the Board.

(e) The Board shall—

(1) promote and encourage donation of private funds for the construction of the memorial required in section 1; and

(2) recommend the site for and assist the Commission in selecting the design of the memorial.

(f) Members of the Board shall serve without compensation, but shall be allowed travel expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence, at rates authorized for persons serving intermittently in the Government service under subchapter I of chapter 57 of title 5, United States Code, while away from their homes or regular places of business in the performance of the responsibilities of the Board.

(g) The Board established by this section shall terminate on the earlier of—

(1) the date 30 days after the completion of the memorial authorized by this Act; or

(2) the date on which the authority provided in this Act lapses under section 4.

SEC. 3. The Commission may solicit and accept private contributions for the construction of the memorial required by section 1. The Commission shall maintain documentation of such contributions received by the Commission.

SEC. 4. (a) The Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, the Librarian of Congress, and the head of each department, agency, or other establishment of the Executive branch may assist the Commission in the performance of its functions.

(b) The Administrator of Veterans' Affairs may provide administrative services and support to the Commission. The Commission shall reimburse the Administrator for the cost of services and support provided under this subsection.

(c) For the purpose of establishing the memorial required under section 1—

(1) the head of any department, agency, or establishment of the United States may transfer to the administrative jurisdiction of the Commission any real property in the District of Columbia or its environs which is under the administrative jurisdiction of such department, agency, or establishment; and

(2) the Commission may purchase any real property within the District of Columbia or its environs, subject to the consent of the owner of such property.

(d) The United States shall not be liable for any expense incurred for the construction of the memorial required by section 1.

SEC. 5. The maintenance and care of the memorial constructed under this Act and the grounds associated with the memorial shall be the responsibility of the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 6. The authority provided in this Act is subject to the requirements of the Act entitled "An Act to provide standards for placement of commemorative works on certain Federal lands in the District of Columbia", approved November 14, 1986 (100 Stat. 3650; 40 U.S.C. 1001 et seq.).

SEC. 7. The requirements and authority provided in this Act shall lapse unless—

(1) the construction of the memorial required by section 1 is commenced within five years after the date of enactment of this Act; and

(2) prior to the construction of the memorial, funds are certified available in an amount sufficient in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior to insure completion of the memorial.

By Mr. BOREN (for himself and Mrs. KASSEBAUM):

S. 161. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to impose a tax on the importation of crude oil and refined petroleum products; to the Committee on Finance.

EXCISE TAX ON IMPORTATION OF CRUDE OIL AND REFINED PETROLEUM PRODUCTS

● Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, on the first legislative day of the 100th Congress I stood before my colleagues and introduced legislation that would repeal the so-called windfall profit tax, establish an oil import fee and provide small incentives for marginal oil and gas production.

At that time I recounted how in July 1985, the price of oil was around $31 per barrel and we had over 2,000 rigs looking for oil and natural gas in the United States. As a nation in July 1985, we were importing approximately 24 percent of our energy needs from foreign sources, with only 45,000 barrels per day from Saudi Arabia. I then unfortunately had to relate to my colleagues what had happened between July 1985 and January 1987. The price of crude oil had fallen to a low of $9.75 per barrel in August 1986 and had risen only slightly by the following January. Imports had risen to 40 percent of our energy needs, including over 650,000 barrels per day from Saudi Arabia.

Mr. President, on the first legislative day of the 101st Congress we must face the fact that little has been done over the past 2 years to address the problems confronting our domestic energy industry.

The United States is now importing on average over 43 percent of our energy needs from foreign sources. That means that every day over 7.3 million barrels of foreign crude oil and refined petroleum products cross our borders, including over 1 million barrels per day from Saudi Arabia alone—a staggering 2,120-percent increase since July 1985. The United States today produces less oil and natural gas on a daily basis than we did in 1977. Mr. President, let me remind you that 1977 was 2 years before the Iranian crisis and the resulting long lines at gas stations. But perhaps the most telling statistic is our domestic rig count. From a high of over 4,500 a little more than 6 years ago, the U.S. rig count fell to an all time low of 663 on July 14, 1986. Today the rig count stands at 920.

What then does our future hold? Our ability to produce over the next 3 or 4 years has already been determined. If we could barely replace reserves with 4,500 drilling rigs operating, it should be obvious what will happen to our future production with only 920 rigs actively looking for oil and natural gas. Our ability to produce beyond the short term must be questioned. Five years ago there were over 7,000 students pursuing degrees in geology, petroleum engineering and geophysics. This spring that number has dropped below 2,800. Where will the next generation of oil men and women come from?

Mr. President, our domestic production has fallen to levels less than in 1977, consumption of petroleum products is rising, imports of crude oil and refined products are rising and the number of qualified geologists and petroleum engineers is falling. The parallels to the mid 1970's are disturbingly clear and yet we have done nothing to address this growing problem.

For more than 3 years I have called for the consideration of an excise tax on foreign oil. Today I will introduce for the third consecutive Congress legislation that will impose an excise tax on all foreign oil brought into the United States that is priced below $18 per barrel. This will serve to act as a floor price for crude oil in the United States. No longer will domestic producers have to worry whether Saudi Arabia or Iran or some other foreign producer wants to flood the world with cheap oil. This floor mechanism will bring much needed stability to our domestic industry. An industry that needs stability if it is to survive and continue to contribute toward our national security.

Recently Mr. President it was reported that our imports of foreign oil have reached a post-crisis high. For the month of December the United States imported 50.3 percent of our crude oil needs. What however, is truly alarming is the fact that the price of crude oil has risen approximately $6 per barrel since Thanksgiving. So much for the theory that we have broken the grip of OPEC. If they can move the price of oil while utilizing less than 50 percent of their production capacity, think what OPEC will do when they regain the operating efficiencies they enjoyed during the 1970's.

With the price of crude oil now above the $18 per barrel trigger price in my proposed legislation, we have the unique opportunity to establish a safety net for our domestic producers without causing any dislocation to the rest of our economy. We as a nation must act quickly in the short term to preserve existing production to the greatest extent possible. It is vitally important that we keep the stripper well in Kansas, the heavy oil well in California, and the natural gas well in Michigan operational and flowing. Every barrel of oil that continues to flow from marginal and stripper wells is one less barrel that we will have to import; one less barrel we will have to replace should a supply disruption occur; one less barrel subject to the whim of foreign leaders who do not play by the same economic rules as our independent domestic producers must.

Mr. President, as I mentioned previously, the price of crude oil has recently risen above $18 per barrel. While that is certainly good news for our domestic producers, there is no guarantee OPEC will restrain production to maintain this price level. Thus the threat of falling prices remain and the future for stripper well production in the United States is not bright. An analysis of our Nation's energy security done by the RAM group estimates that if the price of crude oil fell to a level of $10 per barrel fully 40 percent of all of our stripper wells will be abandoned resulting in a loss of more than 630,000 barrels per day in domestic production. At the price range, for the most recent quarterly period, of $14 to $15 per barrel 22 percent of all stripper wells will be abandoned. That means at a minimum over 100,000 producing oil wells will be shut down and lost forever. In Oklahoma alone more than 148 million barrels of proven oil reserves will be lost. In fact since 1986 the oil price decline has taken the jobs of 175,000 workers in oil and gas extraction alone, not including related service industries, and has reduced severance tax revenues to states by more than $1.5 billion per year. In addition there is a pressing need for price stability with an assured minimum in order for banks and financial institutions in hard pressed areas of the country to be able to make loans and provide desperately needed capital.

As a result today I will also introduce several revisions in our tax code that will increase domestic production. My legislation will: First, allow for expensing of geological, geophysical, and surface casing costs; second, repeal the 50 percent net income limitation for percentage depletion; third, create a variable percentage depletion rate that is tied to the price of crude oil; fourth, repeal the proven property transfer rule; fifth, repeal the recapture provisions dealing with the disposition of proven properties; sixth, remove intangible drilling costs as a preference item for the alternative minimum tax; seventh, repeal the 65 percent taxable income limitation for percentage depletion; eighth, establish a 10-percent tax credit for marginal production which is fully creditable against the minimum tax; ninth, establish an exploration and development tax credit, 20 percent for the first $1 million in expenditures and 10 percent thereafter, which is fully creditable against the minimum tax; tenth, extend the nonconventional fuels production credit placed-in-service rule by 5 years; and eleventh, provide a taxpayer election to forego the deduction of excess depletion and carryforward the amount.

Mr. President, we are fast approaching the point of no return. Either we act now to mitigate the damage visited upon our domestic energy industry over the past 24 months or we will condemn ourselves to repeat the policy failures of the not to distant past.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"(a) GENERAL RULE.—If the average international price of crude oil for any 4-week period is less than $18, then there is hereby imposed an excise tax on any petroleum product entered into the United States for use, consumption, or warehousing during the week following such 4-week period.

"(b) AMOUNT OF TAX.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The amount of tax imposed by subsection (a) with respect to any barrel shall be equal to the excess of—

"(A) $18, over

"(B) the average international price of crude oil for the preceding 4-week period.

"(2) FRACTIONAL PART OF BARREL.—In the case of a fraction of a barrel, the tax imposed by subsection (a) shall be the same fraction of the amount of such tax imposed on a whole barrel.

"(c) TIME TAX IS IMPOSED.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The tax imposed by subsection (a) shall be on the first sale within the United States of the petroleum product.

"(2) TAX ON CERTAIN USES.—If—

"(A) any petroleum product entered into the United States is used within the United States, and

"(B) before such use, no tax was imposed under subsection (a), then the tax imposed by subsection (a) shall be on such use.

"(d) LIABILITY FOR PAYMENT OF TAX.—

"(1) SALES.—The tax imposed on the first sale described in subsection (c)(1) shall be paid by the seller thereof.

"(2) USE.—The tax imposed on any use described in subsection (c)(2) shall be paid by the person using the petroleum product.

"SEC. 5892. AVERAGE INTERNATIONAL PRICE.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this chapter, the average international price of crude oil for any 4-week period shall be the average of the weighted average price per barrel of crude oil for each week in such period, as estimated and published in the Weekly Petroleum Status Report prepared by the Secretary of Energy or his delegate.

"(b) PUBLICATION.—The Secretary shall publish for each week the average international price determined under subsection (a) for the preceding 4-week period.

"SEC. 5893. DEFINITIONS AND SPECIAL RULES.

"(a) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this chapter—

"(1) CRUDE OIL.—The term 'crude oil' includes crude oil condensates and natural gasoline but does not include domestic crude oil (within the meaning of section 4612(a)(2)).

"(2) BARREL.—The term 'barrel' means 42 United States gallons.

"(3) EXPORT.—The term 'export' includes shipment to a possession of the United States.

"(4) PETROLEUM PRODUCT.—The term 'petroleum product' includes—

"(A) crude oil, and

"(B) refined oil, fuels, and chemical feedstocks which are refined or derived from crude oil.

"(b) TAX-FREE EXPORTS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, no tax shall be imposed under this chapter on the sale of any petroleum product for export or for resale by the purchaser to a second purchaser for export.

"(2) PROOF OF EXPORT.—Where any petroleum product has been sold free of tax under paragraph (1), such paragraph shall cease to apply with respect to the sale of such petroleum product unless, within the 6-month period which begins on the date of the sale, the seller receives proof that the petroleum product has been exported.

"SEC. 5894. REGISTRATION.

"Every person subject to tax under section 5891 shall register with the Secretary at such time and in such manner as the Secretary may prescribe.

"SEC. 5885. PROCEDURES; RETURNS; PENALTIES.

"For purposes of this title (other than chapter 45 or section 6429 thereof), except as provided in regulations, the tax imposed by section 5891 shall be treated in the same manner as the tax imposed by section 4986 (as in effect before the amendments made by the Omnibus Trade and Competitiveness Act of 1988).".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of chapters for subtitle E is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"Chapter 55. Imported crude oil and refined petroleum products.".

(c) DEDUCTIBILITY OF IMPORTED CRUDE OIL TAX.—The first sentence of section 164(a) (relating to deductions for taxes) is amended by inserting after paragraph (5) the following new paragraph:

"(6) The tax on imported petroleum products imposed by section 5891.".

SEC. 2. EFFECTIVE DATE.

The amendments made by this Act shall apply with respect to sales of imported crude oil and imported refined petroleum products in calendar quarters beginning more than 30 days after the date of enactment of this Act.●

S. 162. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to disallow a personal exemption for a child born alive after an induced abortion; to the Committee on Finance.

DEDUCTION FOR EXEMPTION DENIED FOR CHILD WHO DIES AFTER AN ABORTION

● Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I read an observation the other day to the effect that people joke that only two things in life are certain—death and taxes—however, the Internal Revenue Service will let you avoid some of your taxes if you use the proper method to inflict death on your child.

It's true, Mr. President. Under current IRS rulings, Mr. President, taxpayers can receive a dependency exemption in the case of a baby who lives momentarily after an induced abortion and then dies. If parents seek to destroy their own child through abortion, and the abortion momentarily produces a live instead of a dead baby, I do not believe that parents should be rewarded with a tax break.

Mr. President, the bill I am introducing today, the Benefit From Harm Denial Act of 1989, is designed to remove this flagrant anti-child loophole in our tax code.

Mr. President, this issue has a long and arduous history. In 1984, a constituent brought to my attention a revenue ruling which allowed a parent to claim a tax exemption for a live birth abortion where the child ultimately dies as a result of that abortion. After looking into the matter, I was surprised to discover that my constituent was exactly right. Revenue Ruling 73-156 would allow a parent to treat medical expenses incurred from an abortion as the requisite support for the child needed to claim the exemption.

So, Mr. President, on December 31, 1984, I wrote Roscoe L. Egger, Jr., who was the IRS Commissioner at that time, and asked for an explanation. After 7 months of delay, I received a response from the Commissioner in which he stated that the revenue ruling had been modified. Medical expenses incurred from an abortion could no longer be considered support for exemption purposes. However, if additional medical expenses were incurred after the child was born, a parent could claim a tax exempton for the child who lived after an abortion.

In 1986, the Commissioner clarified this position further and stated that if only de minimus expenses are incurred after the child is born alive, the parent cannot claim the exemption. If the medical expenses climb beyond that threshold, the parent can claim the exemption. That was the IRS position in 1986 and that is its position today.

Despite requests to further clarify the definition of de minimus expenses, the IRS refused to do so.

So, Mr. President, by way of example, this is the situation we now have: A parent pays $1,000 for a late-term abortion. A child was born alive, lived momentarily, and then died. While the child was born alive $10 in medical expenses were incurred for the child's benefit, and the parent later paid that small bill. Nothing in the Commissioner's letter would prevent the parent from taking the full dependency deduction for the tax year of the live birth. The $10 of support gets the parent a $1,950 exemption for 1988 or if the abortion occurred in 1989, a $2,000 personal exemption.

Mr. President, this Nation claims to be pro-family. This pro-life, pro-family position has been incorporated into our tax code with dependency exemptions. If you have one child, you get one exemption. If you have five children, you get five exemptions. If you have 10 children, you get 10 exemptions. That has been the law of the land for many years and will probably remain the law for many years to come. The tax code reflects our belief in the sanctity of human life and that life's value to society. Consequently, a parent should not be able to set out to deliberately destroy the life of her child and then get a pat on the back by the IRS with a tax break.

The bill I am introducing today would remove this obvious inequity in the tax code by prohibiting any parent from claiming a child as a tax exemption if that child lives temporarily after an induced abortion. If ever an inequity needs to be corrected in the tax bill, this is it.

I ask unanimous consent that the full text of the bill be printed in the RECORD at this time.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 161

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. DEDUCTION FOR PERSONAL EXEMPTION DENIED FOR CHILD WHO DIES AFTER AN ABORTION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 151 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (allowing deduction for personal exemptions) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e) DEDUCTION DENIED FOR CHILD WHO DIES AFTER ABORTION.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—No deduction shall be allowed under subsection (a) for any child who—

"(A) is born alive after an induced abortion or an attempt to perform an abortion, and

"(B) dies as a result thereof (or of complications resulting therefrom).

"(2) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this subsection.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1988.

By Mr. THURMOND (for himself, Mr. SYMMS, Mr. HATFIELD, Mr. GRASSLEY, Mr. HELMS, and Mr. ARMSTRONG):

S. 163. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to provide that service performed for an elementary or secondary school operated primarily for religious purposes is exempt from the Federal unemployment tax; to the Committee on Finance.

RELIGIOUS SERVICES PERFORMED FOR ELEMENTARY AND SECONDARY SCHOOLS ARE EXEMPT FROM TAXES

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce legislation which would remove an inequity in the current Federal Unemployment Tax Act [FUTA] and in the State unemployment acts which are directly patterned after this act. I am pleased that Senators SYMMS, HATFIELD, GRASSLEY, and HELMS have joined me as original cosponsors.

In enacting FUTA, Congress exempted from coverage of the act employees of churches, and religious organizations operated by churches. The Supreme Court in St. Martin Evangelical Lutheran Church versus South Dakota held that this exemption extends to schools which are operated by churches.

However, no exemption exists in current law for those elementary or secondary schools which are operated primarily for religious purposes, but which are not operated by or otherwise controlled by a church or association of churches. These nonchurch schools are as pervasively religious as the church-operated schools and would not exist except for their religious mission. They are, in every way except church affiliation, religiously, indistinguishable from the exempt schools. Technically, the non-church religious schools are not exempt under the terms of the statute. Further, the Secretary of Labor has notified state unemployment compensation offices that they may not treat this class of schools as exempt.

These non-church-affiliated religious schools are not numerous in the United States. However, they do constitute about 20 percent of the membership of the Protestant evangelical schools in the country. There are some Catholic and Jewish schools, as well as other Protestant schools, which are not operated by churches but are governed by religious lay boards.

The tax plight of these schools is very threatening to them. In 1979, a group of religious schools attempted to litigate the issue of nonexemption of these schools on constitutional grounds, and won a favorable decision from the U.S. District Court in Los Angeles. The Supreme Court refused to review the case on jurisdictional grounds and did not reach the merits. This left the schools to pursue litigation in state courts. These schools simply do not have the major financial resources necessary to pursue new litigation in hopes of eventually getting the case before the Supreme Court. Such litigation could take years, with no certainty that the Supreme Court would hear the case. Therefore, it is imperative that they get exemptive legislation.

This measure is similar to S. 1797 which I introduced in the 100th Congress and is identical to an amendment which was unanimously adopted by the Senate during consideration of the tax technical corrections bill. Unfortunately, this provision was dropped in conference.

This legislation will enable nonchurch operated religious schools, now badly threatened by unemployment compensation tax debt, to continue their fine service to the country in producing good young citizens. Passage of this bill will be welcomed by friends of religious liberty.

In closing, I strongly urge my colleagues to give careful consideration to this important measure. I ask unanimous consent that the text of the legislation appear in the RECORD immediately following my remarks.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 163

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) section 3309(b)(1) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to exemption from unemployment tax) is amended by inserting before the semicolon at the end thereof the following: ", or (C) an elementary or secondary school which is operated primarily for religious purposes, which is described in section 501(c)(3), and which is exempt from tax under section 501(a)".

(b) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply to services performed after December 31, 1988.

By Mr. THURMOND (for himself and Mr. HOLLINGS):

S. 164. A bill to transfer certain lands to the South Carolina Commission of Forestry, an agency of the State of South Carolina; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

REMOVAL FROM NATIONAL WILDLIFE REFUGE SYSTEM

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, it gives me great pleasure to rise today, along with my distinguished colleague, Senator HOLLINGS, to reintroduce legislation authorizing the transfer of certain Federal lands known as the Carolina Sandhills Wildlife Management Area to the South Carolina State Commission of Forestry. This bill is identical to S. 2895 which I introduced on October 14, 1988, during the 100th Congress.

For the past few years, the Department of Interior and the State of South Carolina have been working on various proposals to improve the management and administration of the Carolina Sandhills Wildlife Management area, known as the Sand Hills State Forest. The Interior Department and the State of South Carolina have concluded that the transfer of the property to the State is in the Government's best interest. Although all the details have not been completely finalized, the respective Federal and State entities—the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service and the South Carolina State Commission of Forestry—have reached a tentative agreement for such a transfer.

Located in Chesterfield and Darlington Counties, the land proposed to be transferred is owned by the United States, and under the control of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service. However, it is presently managed under a cooperative agreement by the South Carolina State Forestry Commission.

By way of background, in the early 1930's, the U.S. Department of Agriculture acquired some 92,000 acres, largely in Chesterfield County, as a land utilization project.

In April 1939, this land was leased to the South Carolina State Commission of Forestry for use as a demonstration conservation area for planned multiple land use for forestry, wildlife, and recreation. Under the terms of this lease, the State Commission of Forestry became responsible for administration of one-half of the area, approximately 44,550 acres, as the Sand Hills State Forest. The other half of the area was administered by the Department of Agriculture, and later the Department of the Interior as a national wildlife refuge, and as a game management demonstration and research area.

Later, in August 1940, President Franklin D. Roosevelt signed Executive Order No. 8510, which provided that lands within the Carolina Sandhills Wildlife Management Area were to remain available to the State, but would remain under the custody of the Fish and Wildlife Service and would remain a part of the National Wildlife Refuge System. This arrangement has continued for over 48 years, with both the State of South Carolina and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service providing technical services and assistance on lands of the other.

This present setup has provided for somewhat cumbersome management of the Sandhills Area. Accordingly, the legislation I am introducing today would rectify this situation by removing the 44,550-acre Carolina Sandhills Wildlife Management Area, also known as the Sand Hills State Forest, from the National Wildlife Refuge System. Title to this land would be transferred to the State of South Carolina. The State of South Carolina would, in turn, become the owner of this land and would be solely responsible for the management and administration of this specific acreage.

Mr. President, this legislation also contains certain conditions governing the transfer which include the protection of certain endangered species, the provision of forest fire protection services, and the provision of certain reforestation services.

In closing, Mr. President, I would like to include, for the RECORD, copies of letters of support from the Secretary of the Interior, the Governor of South Carolina, and the South Carolina Chapter of the Wildlife Society.

I ask unanimous consent that these letters, as well as the text of this legislation, appear in the RECORD immediately following my remarks.

There being no objection, the material ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA,
Columbia, SC, September 16, 1988.

Hon. J. STROM THURMOND,
U.S. Senate, Russell Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR STROM: It is my understanding negotiations have concluded between the South Carolina Forestry Commission and the Fish and Wildlife Service over the transfer of the Sandhills State Forest to the State of South Carolina.

The South Carolina Forestry Commission has agreed to endangered species protection and compensation in the form of forest fire protection, reforestation, and prescribed burning on the adjacent refuge. With this agreement legislation can now be drafted to implement the transfer of the property.

I appreciate your efforts on the transfer of Sandhills to the State of South Carolina and look forward to working with you and other Members of the Congressional Delegation to achieve this goal.

With best personal regards, I am
Sincerely,
CARROLL A. CAMPBELL, Jr.,
Governor.

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, DC, February 10, 1988.

Hon. STROM THURMOND,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR THURMOND: This further responds to your letter of June 9, 1987, concerning the possibility of transferring to the State of South Carolina approximately 46,000 acres located in Chesterfield and Darlington Counties.

The Carolina Sandhills Project was established in 1939, under the authority of the National Industrial Recovery Act and the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act. Part of the area became the Carolina Sandhills National Wildlife Refuge and the remainder the Carolina Sandhills Wildlife Management Area (Management Area). A more detailed explanation of the legislative history is enclosed.

The Fish and Wildlife Service (Service) and the State agree the management of the Sandhills area is cumbersome. The Management Area, for all practical purposes, is administered by the State. Provided Service wildlife responsibilities are protected (e.g., proper endangered species protection), and some compensation is provided, possibly in the form of continued fire protection on the adjacent refuge, the Service is in favor of the transfer.

I agree with the position of the Service and will have someone from their staff contact your office to explore transfer by Federal legislation. I look forward to bringing this matter to a successful conclusion.

Sincerely,
DONALD PAUL HODEL.

Enclosure.

LEGISLATIVE HISTORY OF THE CAROLINA SANDHILLS PROJECT

On April 20, 1939, the United States entered into a Cooperative and License Agreement with the State on the remaining lands in the Sandhills Project, now known as the Carolina Sandhills Wildlife Management Area (Management Area). Under the agreement, the lands made available to the State were to be used as a demonstration multiple land use conservation area providing supplementary work to aid in the stabilization of the agricultural community.

On April 29, 1939, the United States and the State entered into a Cooperative Agreement covering the entire Sandhills Project. The lands under license agreement would be managed as a State forest, public shooting ground, and research area, and the remainder as a Federal wildlife refuge and as a game management demonstration and research area.

On August 8, 1940, President Franklin D. Roosevelt signed Executive Order No. 8510, which states that lands within the Management Area are to remain available to the State, under the custody of the Fish and Wildlife Service (Service), as long as the agreement for such use and management is in effect. The cooperative program between the State and Service has been in existence for over 48 years. Each provides technical services and assistance on lands of the other.

DECEMBER 5, 1988.

Mr. LEONARD A. KILIAN, Jr.,
State Forester, South Carolina Forestry Commission, Columbia, SC.

DEAR MR. KILIAN: The Executive Committee of the South Carolina Chapter of The Wildlife Society supports the transfer of title for the Sand Hills State Forest to the state of South Carolina. The Sand Hills State Forest is managed for multiple use and the agreement with the USDI Fish and Wildlife Service guarantees continued multi-resource management.

We commend the S.C. Forestry Commission for past accomplishments in management of the Sand Hills State Forest, and we encourage future management that emphasizes wildlife and recreation.

The South Carolina Chapter of The Wildlife Society supports the transfer of title for the Sand Hills State Forest to the state of South Carolina as agreed to by the USDI Fish and Wildlife Service.

Sincerely,
ROBERT H. FOLK III,
President, SC Chapter TWS.

THE SOUTH CAROLINA WILDLIFE FEDERATION,
Columbia, SC, December 14, 1988.

Mr. LEONARD A. KILIAN, Jr.,
State Forester, South Carolina Commission of Forestry, Columbia, SC.

DEAR MR. KILIAN: The Board of Directors of the South Carolina Wildlife Federation supports the transfer of title for the Sand Hills State Forest to the state of South Carolina. The Sand Hills State Forest is managed for multiple use and the agreement with the USDI Fish and Wildlife Servce guarantees continued multi-resource management.

We commend the S.C. Forestry Commission for past accomplishments in management of the Sand Hills State Forest, and we encourage future management that emphasizes wildlife, recreation, and the protection of endangered species.

The South Carolina Wildlife Federation supports the transfer of title for the Sand Hills State Forest to the state of South Carolina as agreed to by the USDI Fish and Wildlife Service.

Sincerely,
BETTY SPENCE,
Executive Director.

SOUTHEASTERN SECTION,
THE WILDLIFE SOCIETY,
January 9, 1989.

Mr. LEONARD A. KILIAN, Jr.,
State Forester, South Carolina Forestry Commission, Columbia, SC.

DEAR MR. KILIAN: The Southeastern Section of The Wildlife Society supports the proposed transfer of title for the Sand Hills State Forest to the State of South Carolina in cooperation with the USDI Fish and Wildlife Service. It is our understanding that the South Carolina Wildlife and Marine Resources Department does not oppose this transfer and that the property in question will continue to be managed for a variety of resources, including wildlife related recreation.

We appreciate the past working relationship between the Forestry Commission and the state wildlife agency, however, we do support the proposed transfer of the Sand Hills State Forest to the South Carolina Commission of Forestry for future management of the area.

Thank you for the opportunity to comment.

Sincerely,
BOB DUNCAN,
President, Southeastern Section, T.W.S.

S. 164

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. TRANSFER OF LANDS.

(a) REMOVAL FROM NATIONAL WILDLIFE REFUGE SYSTEM.—Pursuant to the requirements of section 4(a)(3) of the National Wildlife Refuge System Administration Act of 1966 (16 U.S.C. 668dd(a)(3)), the approximately 44,550 acres of land designated the Carolina Sandhills Wildlife Management Area and known as the Sand Hills State Forest, as described in Executive Order No. 8510, dated August 8, 1940, are hereby removed from the National Wildlife Refuge System.

(b) TRANSFER OF LANDS.—Subject to the terms and conditions set forth in section 2, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to transfer the title, rights, and interest to the lands identified in subsection (a) to the South Carolina Commission of Forestry, an agency of the State of South Carolina, for use for public purposes as a multiple use State forest providing sustained yield production of forest products, public recreation, wildlife benefits, and demonstration and education projects by the South Carolina Commission of Forestry.

(c) RIGHT OF REVERSION.—If—

(1) the Secretary determines that the South Carolina Commission of Forestry is not in compliance with any of such terms and conditions of transfer;

(2) at any time the land ceases to be used for public purposes (except as provided in subsection (d) of this section); or

(3) the South Carolina Commission of Forestry no longer desires to own or operate the Sand Hills State Forest, the land transferred pursuant to subsection (b) shall revert to the United States, to be managed as part of the National Wildlife Refuge System.

(d) ACQUISITION OF ADDITIONAL LANDS.—(1) Subject to the provisions of paragraph (2), the South Carolina Commission of Forestry may acquire tracts of land within or adjacent to the boundaries of the transferred land by exchange or sale of parcels of transferred land, with the proceeds of any such sale being designated for such acquisition.

(2) The acquisition authorized by paragraph (1) shall be subject to the following conditions:

(A) The South Carolina Commission of Forestry shall provide notification to the United States Fish and Wildlife Service prior to any such acquisition.

(B) The South Carolina Commission of Forestry has determined prior to such acquisition that such acquisition is in the best interest of the public purposes of the State of South Carolina and is necessary in order to facilitate efficient management and administration of the Sand Hills State Forest area.

(e) REPEAL OF EXECUTIVE ORDER.—Executive Order No. 8510, dated August 8, 1940, is repealed as of the date the lands identified in subsection (a) are transferred to the South Carolina Commission of Forestry.

SEC. 2. TERMS AND CONDITIONS.

The transfer of lands authorized in section 1 shall be conditioned upon the South Carolina Commission of Forestry—

(1) managing the transferred lands for the benefit of such endangered and threatened species of plants or animals which may be present there, and particularly in accordance with the objectives of the Recovery Plan for the Red Cockaded Woodpecker, and any amendments to such plan;

(2) consulting with the United States Fish and Wildlife Service regarding the impacts of its management practices upon endangered and threatened species in the transferred lands;

(3) entering into and abiding by an agreement with the United States Fish and Wildlife Service to provide to the Carolina Sandhills National Wildlife Refuge at no cost—

(A) basic forest fire protection services (including presuppression, detection, and initial attack of wildfires) for a period of 50 years from the date of transfer subject to the condition that the United States shall pay the South Carolina Commission of Forestry the actual costs of any wildfire suppression activities after a 12-hour period from the initial attack on the fire;

(B) prescribed burning services as requested, up to a maximum of 5,000 acres annually, for a period of 5 years from the date of transfer, subject to smoke management and other related regulations in effect at the time of the request, and contingent upon the South Carolina Commission of Forestry retaining the legal and physical capability to perform the service; and

(C) reforestation services for converting approximately 2,300 acres of slash pine plantation to more desirable species, as determined by the Refuge, in approximately equal installments over a period not to exceed 10 years from the date of transfer.

By Mr. THURMOND:

S. 165. A bill to require the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to construct a medical research center for the Veterans' Administration and the Medical University of South Carolina in Charleston, SC; to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

CONSTRUCTION OF MEDICAL RESEARCH CENTER IN SOUTH CAROLINA

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I am pleased to reintroduce legislation authorizing the construction of a joint Veterans' Administration—Medical University of South Carolina Research Center in Charleston, SC. This legislation is identical to S. 2899 which I introduced on October 14, 1988, during the 100th Congress.

Our country places a high priority on the well-being of our veterans—and rightly so. After all, veterans have kept our country free. Since 1930, the Veterans' Administration [VA] has provided numerous benefits and health care services to the men and women who have worn the uniform. The bill I am introducing today will further VA health care by authorizing a partnership providing for the joint construction, ownership, management, and use of a medical research center by the Veterans' Administration and the Medical University of South Carolina. This joint research center will provide state-of-the-art medical research into the causes and treatment of diseases that claim the lives of thousands of veterans annually, including, but not limited to, hypertension, chronic heart disease, alzheimers' disease, diabetes, and crippling arthritis. The combined talent and resources of the existing Charleston VA Medical Center and the Medical University of South Carolina will provide the momentum necessary to make great strides foward in medical research, not only for the veterans of this country, but for all Americans.

Under this legislation, the Medical University of South Carolina will be an equal partner with the VA in this project. They will provide one half of the costs of constructing and equiping the center, and one half of the operations and maintenance expenses. In addition, the Medical Univeristy will provide the land for construction of this facility.

This new Medical Research Center will maximize the strengths of the Medical University and the existing VA Medical Center by combining the basic science labs of the university with the disease-oriented research expertise of the VA. The Medical Research Center will consist of laboratories for VA research in geriatrics, diabetes, heart disease, arthritis, and connective tissue disorders; laboratories for molecular and cellular biology; laboratories for epidemiology, neuroscience, neonatal, prenatal and childhood development programs; and shared meeting room facilities.

This facility will free up space in the already crowded VA Medical Center facility. Accordingly, it will increase by approximately 10 percent the number of critical care beds available for the use of South Carolina veterans.

Mr. President, both the Medical University and the Veterans' Administration bring demonstrated records of achievement into the partnership. The Medical University was founded in 1824 as the College of Medicine, and is the oldest medical school in the South. For over 160 years, it has been educating and training doctors, nurses, and other health care professionals. It is comprised of six colleges, and a major teaching hospital. The university also maintains numerous clinical affiliations throughout South Carolina. Similarly, the VA Medical Center in Charleston has developed a rapidly expanding Disease Research Program, with a specific focus on heart disease, neurological disorders, diabetes, and arthritis. With the addition of the center, research can be expanded into the area of geriatrics as well.

Finally, Mr. President, the State of South Carolina strongly supports the development of this joint research center. The Governor of South Carolina, Carroll Campbell, endorses this legislation, and the State of South Carolina, in conjunction with the Medical University, is committed to providing up to $12 million for construction and equipment. In addition, I have received a letter of support from Dr. Thomas Rowland, Jr., the president of the South Carolina Medical Association. This project provides an excellent opportunity for the Federal and State government to work hand-in-hand on a very worthwhile endeavor. I commend this joint partnership to my colleagues.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that copies of the aforementioned letters, as well as the text of this legislation, and other letters of support appear in the RECORD immediately following my remarks.

There being no objection, the material ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 165

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. CONSTRUCTION OF MEDICAL RESEARCH CENTER FOR THE VETERANS ADMINISTRATION AND THE MEDICAL UNIVERSITY OF SOUTH CAROLINA, CHARLESTON, SOUTH CAROLINA.

(a) CONSTRUCTION REQUIRED.—Subject to subsection (b), the Administrator of Veterans Affairs shall construct, at the Veterans Administration medical Center and the Medical University of South Carolina in Charleston, South Carolina, a building to be used as a medical research center and shall appropriately equip such building for such use. The Administrator shall construct such building only on land provided by the Medical University of South Carolina.

(b) COST-SHARING ARRANGEMENT.—(1) The construction and equipping of a medical research center pursuant to subsection (a) may be carried out only if the Administrator of Veterans Affairs, the President of the Medical University of South Carolina, and the Governor of South Carolina enter into a funding agreement described in paragraph (2).

(2) Any funding agreement referred to in paragraph (1) shall provide for—

(A) the Administrator to pay one-half of the cost of constructing and equipping the medical research center authorized by subsection (a); and

(B) the State of South Carolina and the Medical University of South Carolina to pay one-half of such cost.

(3) The Administrator may include in any such funding agreement such terms and conditions as the Administrator considers necessary to protect the interests of the United States.

(4) The Administrator may accept payments from the State of South Carolina and the Medical University of South Carolina pursuant to the funding agreement and apply the amounts so paid to defray the cost of constructing and equipping the medical research center pursuant to subsection (a).

SEC. 2. PURPOSE OF THE MEDICAL RESEARCH CENTER.

Any medical research center constructed pursuant to section 1 shall be used for medical research activities, including medical research regarding geriatrics, diabetes, heart disease, arthritis, and connective tissue disorders.

SEC. 3. JOINT OWNERSHIP, MANAGEMENT, AND USE OF MEDICAL RESEARCH CENTER.

The Administrator may enter an agreement with the President of the Medical University of South Carolina that provides for joint ownership, management, and use of the medical research center by the Veterans Administration and the Medical University of South Carolina. The Administrator may include in any such agreement such terms and conditions as the Administrator considers necessary to protect the interests of the United States.

SEC. 4. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

(a) AMOUNT AUTHORIZED.—There is hereby authorized to be appropriated $12,000,000 for the Veterans Administration share of the cost of carrying out section 1.

(b) AVAILABILITY.—Funds appropriated pursuant to subsection (a) shall remain available until expended.

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA,
Columbia, SC, October 11, 1988.

Hon. STROM THURMOND,
United States Senate, Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR THURMOND: I have recently reviewed your proposed bill to construct a medical research center for the Veterans' Administration and the Medical University of South Carolina in Charleston. I enthusiastically support this legislation.

As you are aware, my top priority for South Carolina is economic development. Without this development we cannot expect our per capita income to rise and to approach the national average. The universities of our State have been assisting in our economic strategies by working to increase their research base and encourage economic activity related to specific research areas of strength in their respective institution.

Senator, no one knows better than you the needs of the veterans and of the need for improving the health of our citizens. The Veterans' Administration Medical Center in Charleston is conducting excellent research and they have requested and demonstrated a need for additional space for at least a decade. In addition, the Medical University has as its first priority a research facility, and in our state's recent Bond Bill we approved funding for the Medical University to begin architectural planning. External research at the University has grown dramatically the past several years and they now have grants of over $18 million annually. By constructing a joint facility, the Veterans and South Carolinans receive more "bang for the buck". I fully support the legislation for the following reasons:

The Veterans' Administration Medical Center in Charleston and the Medical University of South Carolina can demonstrate the need for valuable research space.

The Veterans' Administration Medical and the Medical University of South Carolina have excellent investigators and are conducting medical research of importance to our state and nation.

The Veterans' Administration Medical Center and the Medical University of South Carolina have a long relationship of cooperation which strengthens the services provided by both organizations.

South Carolina and our nation need to continue to diversify the economic mix and basic research in an area with high pay off potential to keep us competitive and productive.

South Carolina has a large veteran and retirement population and much of the research to be conducted at this facility will relate directly to the health of these groups.

It makes "good sense" to share and utilize expensive research equipment and space when possible and this facility will provide for this partnership.

Senator, again you have my full support in this endeavor and please do not hesitate to call if I can be of assistance.

Sincerely,

CARROLL A. CAMPBELL, Jr.,
Governor.

MEDICAL UNIVERSITY OF SOUTH CAROLINA
Charleston, SC, October 7, 1988.

Hon. STROM THURMOND,
Senate Office Building, Washington, DC

DEAR SENATOR: It is my pleasure to serve as vice chairman of the Medical University of South Carolina's Board of Trustees, as well as this year's President of the South Carolina Medical Association. On behalf of these two organizations, I wish to thank you for the many efforts you and other members of the South Carolina delegation do to assist us in improving the health care of South Carolinians.

I have had the opportunity to review the legislation that will authorize the construction of a research facility to the utilized by the Charleston Veterans' Hospital and the Medical University of South Carolina. I fully support the legislation.

Through cooperation of this nature, the Federal Government and State government can maximize their investment and encourage scientific collaboration and discovery while better serving the veterans and other citizens of our State and Nation. Senator, I do not need ro remind you of the need for medical research in our State and Nation and the need to provide better health care to the veterans of this Nation. As the veteran population grows in South Carolina, as the clinic in Savannah, Georgia refers a larger number of veterans to the Charleston facilities, demand for clinical space will rise. By constructing a joint research facility, valuable space in the present hospital which is occupied with research laboratories, will be freed for clinical service. The persent VA research will also be enhanced by a closer working relationship with medical university physicians and scientists.

Again, thank you for your interest in improving the health care of all our citizens and for initiating this joint program. This joint facility should prove to be an asset for our State and Nation.

Sincerely,

THOMAS C. ROWLAND, Jr., M.D.

WEST COLUMBIA, SC.

Senator STROM THURMOND,
Capitol One, DC.

DEAR SENATOR, As commander of the Department of South Carolina Disabled American Veterans representing 11,000 members I recomnend and endorse the legislation which you are going to introduce on the building of the medical research center for the Veterans Administration and Medical University of SC in Charleston.

Respectfully

FREDERICK G STROHM Jr.,
Commander SC DAV.

BURTON, SC.

Hon. STROM THURMOND,
Senate Building, Washington DC.

DEAR SENATOR, on behalf of the Commander and all AMVETS members of our great State I am writing to you in regard to the pending legislation concerning the construction of a research center for the Veterans Administration and the Medical University of South Carolina in Charleston SC. Needless to say we support this effort 100 percent.

It is hoped that Senate will give positive consideration to this project prior to their adjournment the end of this week.

I have always been an admirer of you and will continue to be a supporter of men of high quality, such as yourself, former Governor James B. Edwards, and Charleston Veterans Hospital Director Micheal Linder. With kindest regards, I remain.

Sincerely,

ALBERT F. HYMAN, SR.
Executive Director.

Hon. STROM THURMOND,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR THURMOND: I am writing this letter in reference to the research facility, building which will be shared by the Charleston Veterans' Administration Medical Center and the Medical University of South Carolina.

On Behalf of the AMVETS Auxiliary, I would like to take this opportunity to let you know we fully endorse this project and commend you for your stand on this issue.

We believe that a research facility of this nature will benefit the veterans of this area as well as the general population of the State of South Carolina.

As always, thank you for your consideration on behalf of our veterans.

Sincerely,

MARY E. MADDOX,
AMVETS Auxiliary Department President.

LADIES AUXILIARY TO THE VFW OF THE UNITED STATES, DEPARTMENT OF SOUTH CAROLINA,
October 18, 1988.

Hon. STROM THURMOND,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC 20510

DEAR SENATOR THURMOND I understand you have introduced a bill in support of the $24 million dollar building to be built in Charleston, SC to house a research facility for the Veterans Administration Medical Center and Medical University.

On behalf of the 5500 members of the Veterans of Foreign Wars Auxiliary in the State of South Carolina, I fully endorse this project and commend you for taking this initiative.

We realize that the research that will be accomplished in this building is of prime importance to health care, not only to the veterans in the lowcountry, but also in the entire state of South Carolina and the nation as well.

Once again, thank you for your efforts on behalf of our veterans and if there is any way we can be of assistance to you in this matter, please do not hesitate to contact me.

Sincerely,

JOYCE KING,
Department President, VFW Auxiliary.

By Mr. PRYOR:

S. 166. A bill to improve contracting procedures for procurements of advisory and assistance services by the Federal Government, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

CONSULTANT REGISTRATION AND REFORM ACT OF 1989

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, today I am introducing a bill which my colleagues might recognize; the Consultant Registration and Reform Act of 1989. I introduced a very similar piece of legislation last Congress. That bill did not reach the Senate floor. However, I believe that it is important for us to continue to examine this issue and look very carefully at the Government's use of consultants and the lack of control over their use.

The Federal Services Subcommittee held three hearings last year on Government consultants. At the first hearing, the Office of Management and Budget [OMB] testified that they do not know exactly how much money the Government spends on consulting services or what services consultants are providing the Government.

At the second hearing, we looked at the consultants used by the Department of Defense [DOD]. We heard testimony from witnesses who had participated in the DOD procurement system and provided valuable insights into the problems and strengths of the system. We heard from the DOD deputy inspector general and the Director of the Defense Contract Audit Agency [DCAA] who described their efforts to monitor the use and costs of consultants.

The third hearing concentrated on a special DCAA audit report on the use of consultants by DOD prime contractors. DCAA audited 12 of the 20 largest defense contractors and found that $43 million worth of consulting costs charged to the Government were questionable out of $237 million worth of consulting costs charged to the Government.

These hearings have painted a vivid picture of the way consultants operate. As was demonstrated by last summer's defense scandal, consultants work not just directly for agencies, but for prime Government contractors as well. In addition, they often work concurrently for foreign nations and companies.

This is not true just of the Defense Department. In 1980, in the course of an investigation into consultants used by the Department of Energy, we discovered a consultant who was helping the Department plan their long-term oil reserve strategy. At the very same time, this consultant was working on the other side of the street for OPEC, the group which brought us the energy crisis. The most disturbing aspect of that discovery was that the Department of Energy was not aware of this dual role until we informed them. The Subcommittee on Federal Services will be holding a hearing next week on the use of consultants by the Environmental Protection Agency, and I wouldn't be surprised if we found many of the same problems.

My hearings have shown that nothing has changed since then. These concerns have led me to draft the legislation I am introducing today. This bill tries to let a little sunlight shine on the often hidden world of Government consultants. Its purpose is not to stop agencies' use of consultants where their work is necessary and appropriate but to ensure that agencies are not surprised by a cousultant's other clients and to protect the Government from possible conflicts of interest.

The bill relies on OMB's Circular A-120 which regulates the Government's use of consultants. Consulting services are defined as "advisory and assistance services" which includes management and professional services; and the conduct and preparation of studies, analyses, and evaluation.

The bill would:

Create a monitoring requirement for consulting contracts. For example, before the award of a consulting contract worth more than $25,000 which is based on an unsolicited proposal, the contracting officer must transmit a written notice of the proposed contract and the justification for that contract to the agency's inspector general. An unsolicited proposal is an idea for a contract which comes directly from the consultant. The agency has not requested it, but the consultant thinks that it is such a good idea that he sends it right to the agency. If an agency decides to take the consultant up on his idea, I think it is imperative the agency justify that contract, since it didn't seem important enough to the agency to put out a request for proposals.

Require that each report submitted to an agency by a consultant, and each agency report which is substantially based on a consultant report, be labeled as a consultant report. I believe that it is very important for this information to be readily available and for people to realize when an agency report is actually a consultant report. This point was driven home during our second consultant hearing. The DOD directive which regulates agency use of consultants is in large part lifted verbatim from a report written by a consultant for the Navy. Now, I think that the DOD directive is well written, however, if it were not for some investigating on my subcommittee's part, we would not have known that a consultant was responsible for writing a large part of the directive which governs DOD consultant use.

Require the agency to prepare an evaluation of the contractor's performance which would include: An assessment of the performance judged against the terms of the contract, a description of any differences between the actual cost and time for completion of the contract and the estimated cost and time for completion of the contract, and the purposes for which the consultant service was procured. The contractor will have an opportunity to respond to the agency evaluation.

Require that both agency budget submissions and the President's budget contain itemized statements regarding the amounts that each agency is requesting for consulting services. It also amends section 1114, title 31, to require that agency heads provide the Federal procurement data system with information on consulting contract costs which are embedded in larger procurement contracts. This will allow us to get a complete picture of the Government's consultant spending.

Create a registration requirement for any consultant doing work directly for the Government or doing work for a contractor who is working for the Government. A consultant would be ineligible for a consultant contract unless the consultant complies with the registration requirement and the appropriate contracting officer determines that the consultant does not have a conflict of interest that could be prejudicial to the interests of the United States. A consultant would be required to provide the following information: Name and business address; a description of the services provided by the consultant; a description of the nature of the consultant's clients; a list of all clients to whom, within 3 years, the consultant has provided services directly related to the contract in question; a statement as to whether the consultant has even been convicted of a felony or whether the consultant is under indictment; and a statement as to whether the consultant is currently suspended or debarred by the Government; a certification that the consultant is not in violation of the revolving door statute contained in title 10, United States Code; and a certification that the consultant does not have a conflict of interest.

Last year, I successfully offered an amendment to the defense appropriations bill which would have required consultant registration. That amendment was rewritten in conference to require the Office of Federal Procurement Policy [OFPP] to study the question and advise the President as to whether registration would provide beneficial information. OFPP is the very office which has had responsibility for issuing policy in this very area. While I am more than willing to work with OFPP as it continues to look at this issue, I have introduced this legislation as an example of the type of scrutiny which I believe is imperative.

This legislation will ensure that the Office of Management and Budget will no longer have to come before a Senate committee and tell Congress that they do not know how much is being spent on consultants. The bill will also guarantee that the deputy inspector general of DOD will not have to come before Congress and say that a convicted felon could be working on a defense contract and the IG would have no way of knowing.

As I said before, this bill is not intended to be burdensome or eliminate the use of consultants. The Federal Government should be able to use the best and the brightest talent available in performing its duties. However, when that talent is also working for people who may have competing interests, we should know about it. This bill is intended to shed some sunshine on the all too often shadowy world of consultants.

I urge that my colleagues join me in cosponsoring this legislation. I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill and a bill summary be printed with my statement.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 166

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE

This Act may be cited as the "Consultant Registration and Reform Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS

Congress makes the following findings:

(1) Federal procurement officials have not consistently complied with procurement laws, regulations, and management guidelines in awarding contracts for the procurement of advisory and assistance services.

(2) Procurement practices relating to the procurement of advisory and assistance services do not (A) adequately provide for full and open competition, or (B) adequately prevent conflicts of interest.

(3) Information regarding the Federal Government's use of advisory and assistance services is not maintained in a manner that results in helpful or meaningful information being available to Congress, the executive branch, or the public.

(4) Federal Government agencies have not consistently complied with the requirement in section 1114 of title 31, United States Code, to include in budget justifications submitted to Congress the amounts requested for consulting services, and the Inspector General (and comparable officials) of such agencies have not consistently complied with the requirement in such section to submit to Congress certain evaluations relating to contracts for consulting services.

(5) Full and open competition in the Federal procurement process is consistent with the basis of the free enterprise system and enables the Federal Government to obtain maximum value for Federal procurement expenditures.

(6) The costs of performing governmental functions are borne by the taxpayer regardless of whether the functions are performed in the private or public sector.

(7) The integrity of the governmental process, especially when advisory and assistance services are used in the performance of governmental functions, requires disclosure of the use and role of contractors who perform such functions.

(8) Legislation and oversight is necessary in order to establish and implement consistent policies and practices needed for procurement of advisory and assistance services.

SEC. 3. POLICY

It is the policy of the United States that—

(1) Federal Government policymaking and decisionmaking functions should be performed by accountable Federal Government officials;

(2) the procurement of advisory and assistance services should be carried out in compliance with applicable procurement laws and regulations; and

(3) Federal Government functions should be performed using the most economical means available while recognizing the inherently governmental nature of certain activities.

SEC. 4. DEFINITIONS

In this Act:

(1) The term "agency" has the same meaning as is provided in section 552(f) of title 5, United States Code.

(2) The term "contract" means (A) any agreement, including any amendment to or modification of an agreement, entered into by the Federal Government for the procurement of property or services, and (B) any letter authorizing the provision of property or services to the United States prior to a specification of the compensation for the provision of such property or services.

(3) The term "contractor" means any person, including, in the case of a business organization, any affiliate of such organization and including any consultant and any organization of consultants, which is a party to a contract with the Federal Government.

(4) The term "report" means a written study, plan, evaluation, analysis, manual, or similar document, in draft or final form, which is prepared by a contractor pursuant to a contract with an agency and which is submitted to such agency or is submitted on behalf of such agency to any other agency. Such term does not include a billing document, invoice, or other routine business transmittal made with respect to the contract.

(5)(A) The term "advisory and assistance services" means services described in subparagraph (B) that an agency acquires by contract from a nongovernmental source for the support or improvement of agency policy development, decisionmaking, management, and administration, or the support or improvement of the operation of management systems.

(B) The services referred to in subparagraph (A)—

(i) are management and professional services, the conduct and preparation of studies, analyses, and evaluations, and engineering and technical services; and

(ii) are furnished in the form of information, advice, opinions, alternatives, conclusions, recommendations, training, or direct assistance.

SEC. 5. MONITORING PROCUREMENTS OF ADVISORY AND ASSISTANCE SERVICES

(a) CONTRACT AWARDS.—Before an employee of an agency awards a contract for advisory and assistance services for an amount of $25,000 or more on the basis of an unsolicited proposal, such employee shall transmit to the Inspector General of such agency or a comparable official, or in the case of an agency which does not have an Inspector General or a comparable official, the head of the agency or his designee, a written notice of the proposed contract award. The notice shall include a description of the contract and the justification for the contract.

(b) CONTRACT MODIFICATIONS.—Whenever an employee of an agency modifies a contract for advisory and assistance services and the modification of such contract increases the amount of the contract by at least $100,000, such employee shall transmit to the Inspector General of such agency or a comparable official of the agency, or in the case of an agency which does not have an Inspector General or a comparable official, the head of the agency or his designee, a written notice of the modification. The notice shall include—

(1) a description of the original contract;

(2) a description of the modification; and

(3) the justification for the modification.

SEC. 6. IDENTIFICATION OF REPORTS PREPARED BY CONTRACTORS

Each report submitted to an agency by a contractor, and each agency report which is substantially derived from or includes substantial portions of any such contractor report, shall include the following information:

(1) The name and business address of the contractor.

(2) The total amount of the contract.

(3) In any case in which a contractor uses a subcontractor to prepare any portion of the report submitted by the contractor, the name and business address of the subcontractor and the amount paid to the subcontractor for preparation of the report.

SEC. 7. EVALUATION OF CONTRACTOR PERFORMANCE

(a) EVALUATION.—Within 90 days after the completion of the performance of a contract for advisory and assistance services, the head of the agency that awarded the contract shall prepare a written evaluation of the contractor's performance. An evaluation is not required under this subsection in the case of a contract that does not exceed $25,000.

(b) CONTENT OF EVALUATION.—An evaluation of contractor performance under subsection (a) shall include the following information:

(1) A summary description of the performance of the contractor.

(2) An assessment of the performance of the contractor based on the terms and specifications of the contract performed.

(3) Any differences between the cost of the contract and the time for completion of the contract as provided in or estimated for such contract at the time of contract award and the actual cost of the contract and the actual time for completion of the contract, respectively, and a statement of the reasons for such differences.

(4) The purposes for which and the manner in which the services procured and any reports received under such contract are used by the agency.

(c) RECORD OF EVALUATION.—The head of an agency shall include each evaluation required by subsection (a) in the records maintained by the agency in connection with the contract to which the evaluation relates, and shall maintain copies of all such evaluations in one location.

(d) CONTRACTOR'S RIGHTS.—After preparing an evaluation of contractor performance under this section, the head of an agency shall promptly transmit to the contractor a copy of the evaluation together with a notice stating that the contractor may, within 10 days after receiving such copy, transmit comments to the agency concerning such evaluation. Any such comments shall be made a part of the evaluation as a supplement.

SEC. 8. BUDGET INFORMATION

(a) AGENCY SUBMISSIONS.—The head of each agency shall include with the request for regular appropriations for each fiscal year submitted to the President pursuant to section 1108 of title 31, United States Code, an itemized statement of the amounts requested by the agency for procurement of advisory and assistance services in such fiscal year. The statement shall identify such amounts according to the same subfunctional categories to be used by the President in the submission of the budget for such fiscal year pursuant to section 1105 of such title and, within each such category, shall identify such amounts according to classifications for procurement of—

(1) management and professional services;

(2) studies, analyses, and evaluations; and

(3) engineering and technical services.

(b) BUDGET SUBMISSIONS.—The budget submitted by the President to Congress for each fiscal year under section 1105 of title 31, United States Code—

(1) shall set forth separately, within each subfunctional category used in such budget, requests for new budget authority for, and estimates of outlays by, each agency for procurement of advisory and assistance services; and

(2) within each such category, shall identify such requests and estimates according to classifications for procurement of—

(A) management and professional services;

(B) studies, analyses, and evaluations; and

(C) engineering and technical services.

(c) JUSTIFICATIONS FOR REVISIONS OF BUDGET REQUESTS.—Within 60 days after the President transmits to Congress a revision of any request for new budget authority or of any estimate of outlays included in the budget for any fiscal year pursuant to subsection (b), the head of the agency affected by such revision shall prepare and transmit to Congress an analysis of such revised request or of such revised estimate, as the case may be, and a statement justifying the need for such revised request or such revised estimate.

SEC. 9. FEDERAL PROCUREMENT DATA SYSTEM

Section 1114 of title 31, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(c)(1) The head of each agency shall provide the Federal Procurement Data System timely, complete, and accurate information on (A) contracts awarded by such agency primarily for the procurement of consulting services, and (B) all procurements of consulting services under contracts awarded by such agency not primarily for the procurement of consulting services.

"(2) The information provided under paragraph (1) shall include the amounts expended for the procurement of consulting services specified separately for contracts described in clause (A) of such paragraph and for procurements described in clause (B) of such paragraph.

"(3) This subsection shall not apply to a contract for consulting services, or any data, reports, or other material pertaining to such services, if the contract—

"(A) involves sensitive foreign intelligence or foreign counterintelligence activities;

"(B) involves sensitive law enforcement investigations; or

"(C) is classified under the national security classification system.

"(d) In this section:

"(1) The term 'consulting services' includes advisory and assistance services.

"(2)(A) The term 'advisory and assistance services' means services described in subparagraph (B) that an agency acquires by contract from a nongovernmental source for the support or improvement of agency policy development, decisionmaking, management, and administration, or the support or improvement of the operation of management systems.

"(B) The services referred to in subparagraph (A)—

"(i) are management and professional services, the conduct and preparation of studies, analyses, and evaluations, and engineering and technical services; and

"(ii) are furnished in the form of information, advice, opinions, alternatives, conclusions, recommendations, training, or direct assistance.".

SEC. 10. ELIGIBILITY FOR AWARD OF CONSULTING CONTRACTS

(a) CONSULTANT REGISTRATION.—(1) A consultant shall be ineligible to be awarded a contract for the procurement of advisory and assistance services by an agency unless—

(A) such consultant has registered with the office designated by the head of such agency under subsection (i) and has complied with the other requirements of this section applicable to such consultant; and

(B) such consultant has provided a copy of the consultant's registration to the contracting officer responsible for the award of such contract.

(2) The head of an agency shall prescribe with respect to each contract to be awarded by the agency the deadline for consultants to register under this section. The deadline shall be prescribed by regulation and shall be a date on or after the date on which the consultant submits a bid or proposal for the contract and before the date on which the contract is awarded.

(b) SUBMISSION OF INFORMATION ON OFFERORS' CONSULTANTS.—(1) A person who submits a bid or proposal for a contract to be awarded by an agency shall be ineligible to be awarded such contract unless such person—

(A) submits with the bid or proposal the name and principal business address of each consultant that has furnished advice, information, direction, or assistance to such person in support of the preparation or submission of the bid or proposal; and

(B) certifies, to the best of such person's knowledge and belief, that each consultant has registered the information required in section (e).

(2) The head of an agency shall prescribe with respect to each contract to be awarded by such agency—

(A) the deadline for any person referred to in paragraph (1) to make a certification referred to in such paragraph; and

(B) the deadline for any consultant furnishing services described in such paragraph to such person to register with respect to such contract.

(3) The deadlines referred to in paragraph (2) shall be prescribed by regulation and shall be a date on or after the date on which the person submits a bid or proposal for the contract and before the date on which the contract is awarded.

(c) CONTRACTING OFFICER'S REVIEW OF REGISTERED INFORMATION.—(1) A contracting officer of an agency may not award a contract referred to in subsection (a)(1) to a consultant unless—

(A) the contracting officer has reviewed the information contained in the registration file of the consultant and all other relevant information available to the contract officer; and

(B) has determined, in accordance with regulations prescribed by the head of an agency and on the basis of the relevant information available to the contracting officer, that the consultant does not have a conflict of interest with respect to such contract that is prejudicial to the interests of the United States.

(2) A contracting officer may not award a contract referred to in subsection (b)(1) to any person who submits a bid or proposal for such contract unless the contracting officer has reviewed the information contained in the registration file of each consultant who furnishes services described in such subsection to such person in connection with the preparation of the bid or proposal and all other relevant information available to the contracting officer to determine whether there is a conflict of interest that is prejudicial to the interests of the United States.

(d) UPDATING REGISTERED INFORMATION.—A consultant or other person shall be considered to have met the registration requirements of this section with respect to a contract to be awarded by an agency or a bid or proposal for such a contract if such consultant or other person has previously registered in accordance with this section with respect to another contract awarded or to be awarded by such agency or a bid or proposal for such a contract and the consultant or other person timely registers (in accordance with regulations prescribed by the head of the agency) any changes in the information provided in connection with the previous registration that have occurred since the previous registration. The head of such agency shall determine whether a registration is timely for the purpose of this subsection.

(e) INFORMATION REQUIRED TO BE REGISTERED.—A person registering under this section with respect to a contract awarded or to be awarded by an agency shall include in such person's registration the following information:

(1) The name and principal business address of such person.

(2) A description of the nature of the services furnished by such person in the normal course of the business of such person and a description of the nature of the public, private, foreign, and domestic clients for which the person has furnished such services.

(3) A list of all clients (including agencies) to whom, within 3 years before the date of the registration, such person has furnished services directly related to the services that are required by the bid or proposal under or in connection with the contract or under or in connection with a subcontract awarded or to be awarded in connection with such contract and a description of the services furnished each such client by the person.

(4) A statement of whether such person has ever been convicted of a felony and whether, at the time of the registration, there is pending any indictment or criminal information that alleges the commission of a felony by such person.

(5) A statement of whether, at the time of the registration, such person is ineligible for any reason to be awarded a contract by the Federal Government.

(6) A certification, to the best of such person's knowledge and belief at the time of the registration, that such person is not in violation of any applicable requirement set out in sections 2397, 2397a, 2397b, and 2397c of title 10, United States Code, or any contract term required by such section 2397c.

(7) A certification, to the best of such person's knowledge and belief at the time of the registration, that such person does not have a conflict of interest or potential conflict of interest described in the person's certification.

(8) The name of each officer or employee of such person who is also an officer or employee of any other person furnishing services under or in connection with—

(A) the contract; or

(B) a subcontract or prospective subcontract awarded or to be awarded in connection with such contract, and a description of the services furnished each such other person by the employee.

(f) REGISTERED INFORMATION TO BE CONSIDERED AS "COMMERCIAL INFORMATION".—Information described in subsection (e) shall be considered commercial information for the purposes of section 552(b)(4) of title 5, United States Code.

(g) ADMINISTRATIVE SANCTIONS FOR FAILURE TO SATISFY REGISTRATION REQUIREMENTS.—Each person who knowingly fails to comply with the registration requirements of this section with respect to a contract awarded to such person by an agency (except with respect to requirements waived under subsection (h)) shall be subject to such administrative action as the head of such agency may prescribe.

(h) WAIVER AUTHORITY.—(1) The head of an agency may waive the application of subsections (a) through (c) in the case of any contract awarded or to be awarded by such agency if the head of the agency determines that such action is necessary in the interest of national security. In any case in which a waiver is made under this subsection, the information that a person is otherwise required to register under this section before award of the contract in order to be eligible for the award shall be registered with the agency within such time as the head of the agency specifies in the waiver.

(2) The head of an agency may not delegate the waiver authority under paragraph (1) to any person below the level of Assistant Secretary or the equivalent.

(i) AGENCY REPOSITORY OF REGISTERED INFORMATION.—The head of an agency shall designate a single office in the agency to be the central repository of information registered under this subsection.

(j) INAPPLICABILITY OF REGISTRATION PROVISIONS.—Subsections (a) through (c) shall not apply in the case of a contract for advisory and assistance services awarded or to be awarded by an agency if the head of such agency determines that the contract—

(1) involves—

(A) sensitive foreign intelligence or foreign counterintelligence activities;

(B) sensitive law enforcement investigations; or

(C) a special access program (within the meaning of section 119 of title 10, United States Code); and

(2) is subject to procedures prescribed by the head of such agency (other than those provided for in this section) for the identification and evaluation of any conflicts of interest that consultants may have with respect to such contract.

(k) COMPLIANCE ASSESSMENT TO BE INCLUDED IN BUDGET INFORMATION ON CONSULTING SERVICES.—The Inspector General or comparable official of each agency shall include an assessment of the compliance with the requirement of this section in each annual report required by section 1114(b) of title 31, United States Code.

(l) DEFINITIONS.—In this section, the term "consultant" means any person (including, in the case of a business organization, any affiliate of such organization) that—

(1) furnishes or offers to furnish advisory and assistance services; or

(2) pursuant to a contract, furnishes advice, information, direction, or assistance to any other person in connection with the preparation or submission of a bid or proposal for an agency contract by such other person.

SEC. 11. EXCEPTIONS

Sections 6, 7, and 8 shall not apply to a contract for advisory and assistance services, or any data, reports, or other material pertaining to such services, if the contract—

(1) involves sensitive foreign intelligence or foreign counterintelligence activities;

(2) involves sensitive law enforcement investigations; or

(3) is classified under the national security classification system.

SEC. 12. EFFECTIVE DATE

This Act and the amendments made by this Act shall take effect 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

CONSULTANT REGISTRATION AND REFORM ACT OF 1989 SUMMARY

Section 1 entitles the bill "The Consultant Registration and Reform Act of 1989."

Section 2 sets out Congressional findings regarding the government's use of consultants; the lack of compliance by the Inspectors General with current law and the need for stricter Congressional oversight in this area.

Section 3 states that it is the policy of the United States to have Federal government policy and decisions made by accountable Federal officials; that procurement of advisory and assistance services should be carried out in compliance with applicable procurement laws and regulations; and that Federal government functions should be performed in the most economical fashion while recognizing the inherently governmental nature of certain activities.

Section 4 defines the terms used in the Act.

Section 5 institutes monitoring requirements on advisory and assistance services contracts. Before the award of a contract worth more than $25,000 which is based on an unsolicited proposal, the responsible employee must transmit a written notice of the proposed contract and the justification for the contract to the Inspector General. Whenever an advisory and assistance services contract is modified by at least $100,000, the responsible employee shall transmit to the Inspector General a written notice of the modification which shall include a description of the original contract, a description of the modification and the justification for the modification.

Section 6 requires that each report submitted to an agency by a consultant and each agency report which is substantially derived from such a report include the following information: the name and business address of the contractor; the total amount of the contract; and, in a case in which a subcontractor is used to prepare a portion of the contractor's report, the name and address of the subcontractor and the amount paid to the subcontractor.

Section 7 requires an evaluation of the contractor's performance. Within 90 days after the completion of a consultant contract worth more than $25,000, the agency must prepare a written evaluation of the consultant's performance. The evaluation shall include a summary description of the contractor's performance; an assessment of the performance; a report of the difference between the actual and estimated time and cost of completion; and a description of the purposes for which the services were procured. The contractor will be given a copy of the evaluation and will have 10 days to return any comments to the agency regarding the evaluation.

Section 8 requires that both the agency and President's budget contain itemized statements regarding the amounts requested for consultant services.

Section 9 amends Section 1114, Title 31 to require agency heads to provide information regarding advisory and assistance services costs which are embedded in larger contracts.

Section 10 creates a consultant registration requirement for all consultants working for the government directly or for prime contractors who has been awarded a government contract. A consultant is required to provide the following information: name and address; a description of the services provided by the consultant; a description of the nature of the consultant's clients; a list of all clients to whom, within 3 years the consultant has provided services directly related to the contract in question; a statement as to whether the consultant has ever been conficted of a felony or whether the consultant is under indictment; a statement as to whether the consultant is currently suspended or debarred by the government; a certification that the consultant is not in violation of the revolving door statute contained in Title 10; and a certification that the consultant does not have a conflict of interest. Any consultant failing to comply with this section shall be subject to administration action as prescribed by the head of the agency.

Section 11 provides an exception for sensitive foreign intelligence or counterintelligence activities, sensitive law enforcement investigations or contracts classified under the national security classification system for sections 6, 7, and 8.

Section 12 provides for an effective date of 180 days after the date of enactment of the bill.

By Mr. HARKIN:

S. 167. A bill to amend the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 to increase the tip credit, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

FAIR LABOR STANDARDS ACT AMENDMENT TO INCREASE TIP CREDIT

● Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I am introducing today a bill to restore the tip credit to 50-percent of the minimum wage. Until 1977, the tip credit stood at 50 percent. But amendments to the Fair Labor Standards Act reduced it in two steps to 40 percent, where it stands today. My bill would return the tip credit to its original 50-percent level in two annual steps. Under my proposal, the credit would move to 45 percent in 1989, and to 50 percent in 1990.

To refresh everyone's memory, the tip credit is that part of the FLSA that allows an employer to apply a portion of an employee's tip income against the obligation to pay the minimum wage. Existing law allows the employer to take a tip credit of up to 40 percent of the minimum wage. This means that restaurant employers, for example, may pay their tipped employees $2.01 an hour in cash wages and take a tip credit of $1.34 an hour—40 percent of $3.35.

Mr. President, there are several reasons for offering my amendment. First, the tax treatment of tip income has changed significantly since we last visited this issue 12 years ago. Until enactment of the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984, tips had never been considered wages for employer payroll tax purposes. But in 1984, tips were defined as "wages" for FUTA—unemployment compensation—tax purposes, thus subjecting employers for the first time, to FUTA liability on income their employees had received not from them, but from customers.

The Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987 extended this same rationale—that tips should be considered wages for payroll purposes—to FICA—Social Security—taxes. As of January 1, 1988, employers were required to pay FICA taxes on all reported tips; before then employers paid FICA only on tips counted toward the tip credit.

As a result of these changes, the Internal Revenue Code now treats all tips as if they were wages paid by the employer, while tips are only partially counted as wages under the Fair Labor Standards Act. My bill addresses this inconsistency between the Tax Code and the FLSA. I believe that if tips are "wages" for tax purposes, they ought to be counted as "wages" for FLSA purposes.

My bill does not go so far as to call for a 100-percent tip credit, although a case could be made that all tips should count as wages under the FLSA. My bill would not reduce the cash wages of tipped employees. Actually, if the bill increasing the minimum wage rate is adopted this year—as I strongly believe and hope it will be—cash wages for tipped employees would increase under my proposal.

A second reason for raising the tip credit is that most tipped employees now have income well above the minimum wage. When waiters and waitresses may be earning $6, $8, or even $10 an hour in tips, it doesn't make sense to force their employers to pay them a higher cash wage.

Third, a 50-percent tip credit correctly recognizes that tips are the joint efforts of the employer and his tipped employees. The original amendments that brought restauranteurs under FLSA gave employers "credit" for their contribution to the production of tip income. Tips are earned on the premises of the employer, using the employer's equipment and serving food bought and prepared under his supervision. The employer determines the general atmosphere, price of meals and the quality and presentation of food-factors that contribute directly to the level of tip income received by employees.

I would like to also remind the Members of this Chamber that under my proposal, as is the case under current law, a tip credit cannot reduce an employee's wages below the minnimum wage. In other words, that tip credit can never exceed tips actually received by an employee, and no employee would ever earn less than the minimum wage.

Mr. President, the restaurant industry is an important economic force in this country. With over 8 million employees, the food service industry is the Nation's largest retail employer. Its sales total 5 percent of the GNP. Yet, it is an industry made up primarily of small businesses.

There are almost 600,000 eating establishments in the United States. But one-half of those are sole proprietors or partnerships.

The average restaurants employs fewer than 20 people and grosses $400,000 a year in sales. Eighty-three percent of all restaurants have sales under $500,000 per year. And 94 percent have sales under $1 million.

Mr. President, my bill is a small business bill. We all know the crucial role that small business plays in our economy. Millions of people owe their jobs to the economic strength and well-being of small employers, such as restauranteurs. And this bill will help keep that vital sector of our economy in good health.●

By Mr. PRESSLER:

S. 168. A bill to promote competition in the distribution and sale to consumers of satellite-distributed television programming; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

CABLE TELEVISION PROGRAMMING COMPETITION AND CONSUMER PROTECTION ACT OF 1989

● Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, I am pleased to introduce the Cable Television Programming Competition and Consumer Protection Act of 1989.

The most popular cable television programming currently is unavailable to millions of Americans, despite the fact that the technology to deliver and receive it is in place. Americans do not receive this programming because of price discrimination and exclusive distributorships. This legislation would prohibit those practices as a tool for denying programming to competing retailers.

We often hear the argument that increased competition is good because it results in a better quality product at a lower price to the consumer. The word "competition" is in the title of this bill, and, indeed, one of the purposes of this legislation is to help some of the smaller and newer competitors in this marketplace. But nobody should think that the reason for this legislation is to give a consumer in Peoria the choice of receiving a particular movie channel from three or four competing technologies. That might be nice. That might even be desirable. But that is not what I am trying to do.

What we want to accomplish is to allow the rancher from Draper, SD, who cannot get cable but owns a satellite dish, to be able to purchase the programming he wants at a reasonable price. I want to protect the small cable operators in the small towns of rural America from being priced out of the market for HBO. I want the farmer living outside of Aberdeen, SD, to be able to receive ESPN from the local wireless cable operator. These are the real problems. These people either cannot get certain cable programming at all, or it is prohibitively priced. As I said, the technology is available and in place. But access to it is denied because of the discriminatory pricing and distribution policies of many of the large national programmers.

This problem has been debated before in the Senate, most recently during the last-minute consideration of S. 889, the Satellite Television Fair Marketing Act, last year. The examples of anticompetitive behavior are too numerous to cite here. But they all stem from the nature of the industry. There is a significant horizontal concentration of power among the largest multisystem operators, with four companies controlling over 40 percent of the market. More important, there is a very significant vertical integration in the industry. Most of the premium programmers actually are owned by cable companies or conglomerates with large cable interests.

The legislation being introduced today is technology-neutral. It requires programmers to deal fairly with smaller cable operators and cable competitors, such as satellite dish distributors and wireless cable. It specifically prohibits price discrimination and exclusive distributorships, when either is intended solely for the purpose of denying competing retailers access to the kind of programming preferred by consumers.

It relies for enforcement on traditional antitrust remedies. Private parties with standing as plaintiffs would include consumers, competitors and potential competitors of retail distributors, and customers or potential customers of programmers engaging in price discrimination.

This bill would not force programmers to sell to anyone asking for their product. But any refusal to sell would have to be based on a rational, independent business decision, not because the buyer is a competitor or potential competitor of the programmer's parent cable company. Discriminatory pricing would no longer be allowed.

Big cable is powerful, but must not be allowed to continue monopolizing programming in this coutnry. Consumers are crying out for relief. It's time we listened to them.●

S. 169. A bill to amend the National Science and Technology Policy, Organization, and Priorities Act of 1976 in order to provide for improved coordination of national scientific research efforts and to provide for a national plan to improve scientific understanding of the Earth system and the effect of changes in that system on climate and human well-being; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

NATIONAL GLOBAL CHANGE RESEARCH ACT OF 1989

● Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, the long, hot summer has come and gone. Yet, our concerns and unanswered questions about the threat of global climate change remain. Are we witnessing the onset of global warming caused by the release into the atmosphere of millions of tons of carbon dioxide each year? Was this summer's drought a portent of future weather patterns? Are we committing our children to a legacy of climatic uncertainty, cycles of drought and flooding, and the continued deterioration of our oceans and atmosphere?

These concerns are not new. For decades, scientists and environmentalists have questioned the long-term impacts of fossil fuel burning, deforestation, and the use of chlorofluorocarbons [CFC's] on the global environment. What is new, is the heightened public attention to these threats and widespread recognition that they must be addressed.

That recognition has not been confined to the United States. A few months ago, the World Meteorological Organization and the U.N. Environment Program brought together delegates from 30 nations to initiate an Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change. The panel has been supported by several nations in the U.N. General Assembly and may eventually be responsible for developing an international agreement on climate.

At their first meeting in Geneva, the Panel established three working groups to address the climate problem. The first group, chaired by Great Britain, will be responsible for the assessment of available scientific information on climate change. The second group will be chaired by the Soviet Union to evaluate potential environmental and socioeconomic impacts. The United States has agreed to chair the third group, which will begin to formulate response strategies for mitigating or adapting to climate change. This comprehensive approach promises substantial multilateral progress in addressing the pervasive threat of global climate change. I am pleased to see that establishment of the Panel has enjoyed the strong support of the United States.

In addition to providing an international forum for discussing world climate issues, the Intergovernmental Panel provides an excellent approach for establishing U.S. domestic policies on climate change. The first step, both domestically and internationally, must be to assess our scientific understanding of our fragile planet and the impact of human activities upon it. The assessment also must identify priorities for scientific research and monitoring efforts which will improve that understanding and allow us to predict the consequences of our actions.

This is widely considered one of the greatest challenges ever to face the scientific community. The questions that must be addressed are fundamental and difficult because they require an understanding of the whole Earth as a system. Collaboration among scientists in fields as diverse as atmospheric chemistry, terrestial ecology, physical oceanography, and supercomputing will be essential. A high degree of international cooperation will be necessary to collect the global observations needed. Research will require the use of the most recent technology, including satellites, supercomputers, and highly advanced sensing instruments. Data management systems must be in place to process and distribute the enormous flow of information collected.

In the United States, the Federal Government has spent tens of millions of dollars in recent years studying global change. Because of the breadth of the problem and its widespread effects on our society, a number of different Federal agencies are involved in global change research. NASA, the National Science Foundation, the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, EPA, the Agriculture Department, the Department of Defense, the U.S. Geological Survey, and the Energy Department all have roles to play. As the challenges become better defined, the amount of money that Federal agencies spend on global change research will grow. It is essential that the money be spent effectively. Our national effort must be well-planned and well-coordinated.

Today I am introducing a bill to provide that planning and coordination. This legislation would amend the National Science and Technology Policy, Organization, and Priorities Act of 1976. The Science Act was passed 12 years ago because it was clear that science and technology were playing an increasingly important role in our society and that there was a need for a national science and technology policy. Since 1976, we have had to face problems like acid rain, nuclear waste disposal, depletion of the ozone layer, the decline of American competitiveness in the world marketplace, and other technological challenges. We have learned that many of these complex problems are multidisciplinary and can only be solved by a comprehensive, long-term effort involving several Federal agencies.

This bill will provide a mechanism for planning such long-term efforts. It provides authority to the Federal Coordinating Council for Science, Engineering, and Technology, also known as FCCSET, for developing long-range plans for research efforts involving more than two Federal agencies. FCCSET was established by the National Science and Technology Policy, Organization, and Priorities Act of 1976. It is located in the Executive Office of the President and consists of representatives of a dozen Federal agencies involved in scientific research, with the President's Science Adviser serving as Chairman. This bill reinforces FCCSET's existing responsibilities for coordinating the various agencies' research efforts in areas of national concern.

In addition, the legislation goes on to give FCCSET specific responsibility for coordinating the Federal research on global change. The bill would require FCCSET to develop a 10-year national global change research plan. In carrying out that responsibility, FCCSET would:

First, establish national goals and priorities for global change research, working with the National Research Council and other research groups;

Second, define the roles of each agency and department in implementing the plan by building on their existing missions and responsibilities;

Third, review each agency budget estimate in the context of national goals, using budget information provided by the agencies and by OMB; and Fourth, submit an annual report to Congress, regarding progress in implementing the national research plan.

The bill is identical in substance to legislation which I introduced in the 100th Congress, and I am pleased that a number of my colleagues have agreed to cosponsor its reintroduction today. I hope that others will join us in supporting the passage of the National Global Change Research Act.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 169

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "National Global Change Research Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. Section 102(a)(6) of the National Science and Technology Policy, Organization, and Priorities Act of 1976 (42 U.S.C. 6602(a)(6)) is amended to read as follows:

"(6) The development and implementation of long-range, interagency research plans to support policy decisions regarding identified national and international concerns, and for which a sustained and coordinated commitment to improving scientific understanding will be required.".

SEC. 3.(a) Section 401 of the National Science and Technology Policy, Organization, and Priorities Act of 1976 (42 U.S.C. 6651) is amended to read as follows:

"FUNCTIONS OF COUNCIL

SEC. 401. (a) The Federal Coordinating Council for Science, Engineering, and Technology (hereinafter referred to as the 'Council') shall consider problems and developments in the fields of science, engineeirng, and technology and related activities affecting more than one Federal agency, and shall recommend policies and other measures designed to—

"(1) provide more effective plannign and administration of Federal scientific, engineering, and technological programs;

"(2) identify research needs, including areas requiring additional emphasis;

"(3) achieve more effective utilization of the scientific, engineering, and technological resources and facilities of Federal agencies, including the elimination of unwarranted duplication; and

"(4) further international cooperation in science, engineering, and technology.

"(b) The Council may be assigned responsibility for developing long-range and coordianted plans for scientific and technical research which involve the participation of more than two Federal agencies. Such plans shall—

"(1) identify research approaches and priorities which most effectively advance scientific understanding and provide a basis for policy decisions;

"(2) provide for effective cooperation and coordination of research among Federal agencies; and

"(3) encourage domestic and, as appropriate, international cooperation among government, industry, and university scientists.

"(c) The Council shall perform such other related advisory duties as shall be assigned by the President or by the Chairman of the Council.

"(d) For the purpose of carrying out the provisiosns of this section, each Federal agency represented on the Council shall furnish necessary assistance to the Council. Such assistance may include—

"(1) detailing employees to the Council to perform such functions, consistent with the purposes of this section, as the Chairman of the Council may assign to them; and

"(2) undertaking, upon request of the Chairman, such special studies for the Council as come within the scope of authority of the Council.

"(e) For the purpose of developing interagency plans, conducting studies, and making reports as directed by the Chairman, standing committees and working groups of the Council may be established.".

(b) Section 207(a)(1) of the National Science and Technology Policy, Organization, and Priorities Act of 1976 (42 U.S.C. 6616(a)(1)) is amended by striking "established under Title IV".

SEC. 4. The National Science and Technology Policy, Organization, and Priorities Act of 1976 (42 U.S.C. 6601 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new title:

"FINDINGS AND PURPOSE

"SEC. 601. (a) Congress finds and declares the following:

"(1) Industrial, agricultural, and other human activities, coupled with an expanding world population, are contributing to processes of global change that may significantly alter our habitat within a few human generations.

"(2) Such human-induced changes may lead to significant global warming and the depletion of stratospheric ozone, and thus have the potential to alter world climate patterns, increase global sea levels, and reduce the ability of the atmosphere to screen out harmful ultraviolet radiation. Over the next century, the consequences could seriously and adversely affect world agricultural and marine production, coastal habitability, regional economic well-being, human health, and biological diversity;

"(3) Development of effective policies to mitigate and cope with human-induced global changes will rely on greatly improved scientific understanding of global environmental processes and on our ability to distinguish between the effects of human activities on one hand and the results of natural change on the other.

"(4) New developments in interdisciplinary Earth sciences, global observing systems, and computing technology make possible significant advances in the scientific understanding and prediction of these global changes and their effects.

"(5) Efforts are ongoing in several Federal agencies which could contribute to a well-defined and coordinated national program of research, monitoring, assessment, information management, and prediction.

"(6) The United States, as a world leader in Earth system science, should continue to provide leadership in developing and implementing an international global change research program.

"(b) It is the purpose of Congress in this title to provide for a national global change research plan which when implemented will assist the Nation and the world to understand, assess, predict, and respond to human-induced and natural processes of global change.

"NATIONAL GLOBAL CHANGE RESEARCH PLAN

"SEC. 602. (a)(1) The President, through the Council, shall develop a National Global Change Research Plan (hereafter in this title referred to as the 'Plan') in accordance with section 401(b) of this Act and the provisions, findings, and purpose of this title. Consistent with the responsibilities set forth under subsection (d) of this section, the Plan shall contain recommendations for a 10-year national research effort, to be submitted to Congress within one year after the date of enactment of this title and to be revised at least once every three years thereafter.

"(2) The Plan shall—

"(A) establish the goals and priorities for Federal global change research for the 10-year period beginning in the year the Plan (or revised Plan) is submitted;

"(B) set forth the role of each Federal agency and department in implementing the Plan;

"(C) describe the levels of Federal funding and specific activities, including research activities, data collection and analysis requirements, predictive modeling, participation in international research efforts, and information management, required to achieve such goals and priorities; and

"(D) consider and utilize, as appropriate, reports and studies conducted by Federal agencies and departments, the National Research Council, or other entities.

"(3) The Plan shall address, where appropriate, the relevant programs and activities of the following Federal agencies and departments:

"(A) the Department of Commerce, particularly the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration;

"(B) the National Science Foundation;

"(C) the National Aeronautics and Space Administration;

"(D) the Department of the Interior, particularly the United States Geological Survey;

"(E) the Department of Energy;

"(F) the Department of Agriculture;

"(G) the Environmental Protection Agency;

"(H) the Department of Defense, particularly the Department of the Navy; and

"(I) such other research agencies and departments as the President, or the Chairman of the Council, considers appropriate.

"(b) The Council shall—

"(1) serve as lead entity responsible for oversight of the implementation of the Plan;

"(2) coordinate the global change research activities of Federal agencies and departments and report at least annually to the President, through the Chairman of the Council, on any recommended changes in agency or departmental roles that are needed to better implement the Plan;

"(3) prior to the President's submission to Congress of the annual budget estimate, review each agency budget estimate in the context of the Plan and make the results of that review available to each agency and to the appropriate elements of the Executive Office of the President, particularly the Office of Management and Budget;

"(4) work with Federal agencies, with the National Research Council, and with academic, State, and other groups conducting research and assessments of global changes and their effects;

"(5) coordinate Federal interagency participation in international activities related to global change research and assessment; and

"(6) consult with actual and potential users of such research and assessments.

"(C) The Plan shall provide for, but not be limited to, the following research elements:

"(1) Global measurements, establishing worldwide observations necessary to understand the physical, chemical, and biological processes responsible for changes in the Earth system on all timescales.

"(2) Documentaion of global change, including the development of mechanisms for recording changes that will actually occur in the Earth system over the coming decades.

"(3) Studies of earlier changes in the Earth system, using evidence from the geological and fossil record.

"(4) Predictions, using quantitative models of the Earth system to identify and simulate global trends.

"(5) Development of an information base, the assembly of the information essential for effective decision-making to respond to the consequences of global change.

"(6) Basic research directed toward improving scientific understanding of specific aspects of the Earth system.

"(d)(1) The Plan shall take into consideration, but not be limited to, the following existing agency missions and responsibilities:

"(A) The National Science Foundation shall continue to be responsible for basic research in all areas of Earth, atmospheric, and ocean science, including the relevant biological sciences. Such basic research may include ground-based measurements for regional and global studies; polar studies; large-scale field programs; interpretation and use of space-based data; theoretical and laboratory studies; research facilities support; and development of numerical models, information and communication systems, and data bases.

"(B) The National Aeronautics and Space Administration shall have primary responsibility for Earth science research missions from space, including those of broad scientific scope, to study the Earth as an integrated whole. Associated efforts may include related ground studies; remote-sensing and advanced instrument development; and improvement of techniques for the transmission, processing, archiving, retrieval, and use of data and related models; and other reserach activities.

"(C) The National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration shall continue to be responsible for operational environmental satellite programs and reserach programs on ocean and atmospheric processes. Additional responsibilities shall include climate diagnostics and prediction; development of predictive models and techniques for detecting natural and human-made changes; acquisition, maintenance, and distribution of long-term data bases; calibration and validation of environmental observations; processing and archiving of space-based and ground-based data; and development and support of ground-based oceanic and atmospheric monitoring systems.

"(D) The United States Geological Survey shall have primary responsibility for geological studies and mapping. Additional areas of responsibility shall include paleoclimate, hydrologic cycles, geographical information systems, and management of land remote-sensing data, including acquisition, maintenance, and distribution of long-term data bases for these areas.

"(E) The Environmental Protection Agency shall have primary responsibility for research to assess and evaluate the ecological and environmental consequences of global change, including the interaction of plant and animal communities and ecosystems. Additional areas of responsibility shall include evaluations of the impact of global atmospheric change on regional air and water quality, development of emission factors, and inventories for important trace gases other than carbon dioxide.

"(F) The Department of Energy shall have primary responsibility for research on atmospheric carbon dioxide emission measurement and research to establish a comprehensive national energy policy for reducing carbon dioxide and other trace gas emissions. Associated efforts may include assessment and application of predictive models, evaluation of the climatic effects of various energy policy options, and research on industrial sources of trace gases.

"(2) The Plan shall reflect the need for collaboration among agencies with respect to—

"(A) the establishment and development of an information system for Earth system science; and

"(B) basic research into the development of new conceptual and numerical models of the Earth system.

"(e) The Chairman of the Council and the Secretary of State shall cooperate in—

"(1) providing representation at international governmental meetings and conferences on global change in which the United States participates; and

"(2) coordinating the Federal activities of the United States with the global change research and assessment programs of other nations and international agencies and organizations, including the World Meteorological Organization and the United Nations Environmental Program.

"(f) Each Federal agency and department involved in global change research shall, as part of its annual request for appropriations to the Office of Management and Budget, submit a report identifying each element of its proposed global change activities, which—

"(1) specifies whether each such element (A) contributes primarily to the implementation of the Plan or (B) contributes primarily to the achievement of other objectives but aids Plan implementation in important ways; and

"(2) states the portion of its request for appropriations that is allocated to each such element.

The Office of Management and Budget shall review each such report in light of the goals, priorities, and agency responsibilities set forth in the Plan, and shall include, in the President's annual budget estimate, a statement of the portion of each agency or department's annual budget estimate that is allocated to each element of such agency or department's global change activities. The Office of Management and Budget shall ensure that a copy of the President's annual budget estimate is transmitted to the Chairman of the Council at the same time as such budget estimate is submitted to Congress.

"RELATION TO OTHER LAWS

"SEC. 603. (a) The President, the Chairman of the Council, and the Secretary of Commerce shall ensure that relevant research activities of the National Climate Program, established by the National Climate Program Act (15 U.S.C. 2901 et seq.), are considered in developing national global change research efforts.

"(b) The President, the Chairman of the Council, and the heads of the agencies represented on the Council shall ensure that the research findings of the Council and of Federal agencies and departments are available to the Environmental Protection Agency for use in the formulation of a coordinated national policy on global climate change pursuant to section 1103 of the Global Climate Protection Act of 1987 (15 U.S.C. 2901, note).

"ANNUAL REPORT

"SEC. 604. The Chairman of the Council shall prepare and submit to the President and Congress, not later than January 31 of each year, an annual report on the activities conducted pursuant to this title during the preceding fiscal year, including—

"(1) a summary of the achievements of Federal global change research efforts during that preceding fiscal year;

"(2) an analysis of the progress made toward achieving the goals and objectives of the Plan;

"(3) a copy or summary of the Plan and any changes made in such Plan;

"(4) a summary of agency budgets for global change activities for that preceding fiscal year; and

"(5) any recommendations regarding additional action or legislation which may be required to assist in achieving the purposes of this title.".

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I am pleased to support S. 169, the National Science and Technology Policy Amendments of 1989. The problems of global warming and ozone depletion pose a major international challenge.

Last summer's devastating heatwave triggered new concern about the environment. In Missouri, the Army Corps of Engineers worked diligently to keep the Mississippi River open to traffic. The scorching heat reduced the water levels to historic lows. Missouri farmers lost crops that withered away. There simply was no water.

We cannot escape the effects of global warming. We have experienced some of the warmest weather ever in recent years. Although experts may disagree on the magnitude of the problem, I believe it is serious and must be addressed effectively. The first step is to diagnose the problem. Understanding the causes and effects of global warming will enable us to make informed decisions about possible solutions. To take action without such knowledge would not be productive.

This legislation will put the finest scientific minds to work. The bill requires the Federal Coordinating Council on Science, Engineering, and Technology [FCCSET] to develop a ten year research plan. The President's Science Adviser would chair the Council and coordinate the effort. I am confident that this research plan will be effective and will provide the knowledge we need to formulate an effective policy for addressing the detrimental effects of global warming.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to support this important legislation.●

By Mr. GRAMM:

S. 170. A bill to permit the Federal Communications Commission to utilize value based assignments in awarding licenses for the use of the electromagnetic spectrum; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

SPECTRUM ASSIGNMENT IMPROVEMENTS ACT OF 1989

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I rise today to propose legislation that will introduce fair market principles into the system whereby portions of the audio spectrum are distributed, which will give the Federal Government the opportunity to realize the full value of these assets.

This legislation will permit the Federal Communications Commission to assign six specific bands on the radio spectrum on the basis of competitive bidding. Today, the FCC does not have this option and must assign licenses either by a lengthy hearing process or through a lottery. These approaches are both time-consuming and costly to the public.

By permitting competitive bids, Congress will finally be providing the means to recapture some of the revenue loss that we have seen in the assignment of spectrum licenses in recent years. American taxpayers should be the beneficiaries of the sale of spectrum licenses, and setting the market price of that license through a competitive bidding process can assure that they are.

Most importantly, the Spectrum Assignment Improvements Act represents an opportunity for the American taxpayer to receive actual market value for the licensing of an important public resource. Revenue estimates vary, but some have placed the figure as high at $2.3 billion in fiscal year 1990 and $1.1 billion in fiscal year 1991. I urge the Senate to consider and enact this timely and responsibly crafted legislation.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the full text of the bill appear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD immediately following my remarks.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 170

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Spectrum Assignment Improvements Act of 1989".

AMENDMENT

SEC. 2. Section 309 of the Communications Act (47 U.S.C. 309) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection.

"(j) The Commission may use competitive bidding for awarding licenses or construction permits for unassigned spectrum as described in this subsection. Such value based assignments may be used when there are mutually exclusive applicants for an authorization or when the Commission determines that there will likely be mutually exclusive applicants for a frequency allotment prior to the filing of applications:

"(1)(A) If the Commission determines, prior to opening a frequency allotment for the filing of applications, that there are likely to be mutually exclusive applicants, it may require the filing of statements of intent to participate in the competitive bidding process, containing such information as it finds necessary. After conducting the bidding, the Commission shall require the winning bidder to submit an application. Upon determining that such application is acceptable for filing and that the applicant is qualified pursuant to paragraph (3), the Commission shall have authority to grant a permit or license.

"(B) If the Commission does not utilize the procedure set forth in subparagraph (A) prior to receiving applications, it may, upon receiving mutually exclusive applications, require the submission of statements of intent to participate in the competitive bidding process, containing such additional information as it finds necessary. After conducting the bidding, the Commission, after determining that the winning bidder's application is acceptable for filing and that the applicant is qualified pursuant to paragraph (3), shall have authority to grant a permit or license.

"(2)(A) All bids submitted for the assignment of a license or construction permit under the authority of this Act must contain a bid consisting of an amount to be paid in a series of four equal annual payments to begin prior to the issuance of the license or construction permit. Upon determination that the applicant is qualified to receive a license or construction permit, in accordance with paragraph (3), the applicant must make initial payment of its bid before being granted the license or construction permit.

"(B) The applicant may satisfy its financial obligation under this subsection by payment of a lump sum prior to the issuance of the license or construction permit. In calculating the amount of the lump sum, the Commission shall use the present value of such bid. The present value shall be determined by using a discount rate equal to the rate for the underpayment of income taxes, as determined by the Secretary of the Treasury pursuant to section 6621(a)(2) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.

"(3) No license or constuction permit shall be granted to an applicant selected pursuant to paragraph (1) unless the Commission determines the qualifications of such applicant pursuant to section 308(b) and section 309(a). When substantial and material questions of fact exist concerning such qualifications, the Commission shall conduct a hearing in order to make such determinations. For the purpose of making such determinations, the Commission may, by rule, and notwithstanding any other provision law—

"(A) adopt procedures for the submission of all or part of the evidence in written form;

"(B) delegate the function of presiding at the taking of written evidence to Commission employees other than administrative law judges; and

"(C) omit the determination required by section 309(a) with respect to any application other than the one selected pursuant to paragraph (1).

"(4) The Commission may use the authority in this subsection to award license or construction permits only in the 849-851, 894-896, 901-902, and 940-941 MHz frequency bands.

"(5) This authority is expressly limited to unassigned spectrum and shall not apply to any spectrum that has been allocated to any media or mass communications, nor shall it apply to public safety or amateur radio services. For the purposes of this subsection, the term 'media of mass communications' includes television, radio, cable television, multipoint distribution service, direct broadcast satellite service, and other services, the licensed facilities of which may be substantially devoted toward providing programming or other information services within the editorial control of the licensee. The term 'unassigned spectrum' means channels which are unassigned at the time of the competitive bidding process.

"(6)(A) The Commission, not later than one year after the date of the enactment of the Spectrum Assignment Improvements Act of 1989, shall, after public notice and comment, adopt rules establishing competitive bidding under this subsection in any instance in which the Commission, in its discretion, determines that such use is appropriate for the granting of any license or permit in accordance with paragraph (1).

"(B) The Commission shall have authority to amend such rules from time to time to the extent necessary to carry out the provisions of this subsection, Any substantive amendments shall be made after public notice and comment.

"(C) The Commission shall report annually to the Congress on the utilization and effectiveness of such authority.

"(D) The authority granted in this subsection shall expire five years from the date of enactment of the Sepctrum Assignment Improvements Act of 1989.

"(7) Moneys received from value based assignments conducted pursuant to this subsection shall be deposited in the general fund of the United States Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

"(8) Each participant in the competitive bidding process is subject to the schedule of charges contained in section 8 of the Communications Act of 1934.

"(9) The selection of a licensee under this subsection shall not be subject to judicial review.".

By Mr. KASTEN (for himself, Mr. BOSCHWITZ, Mr. MCCLURE, and Mr. SYMMS):

S. 171. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to provide a variable capital gains tax differential for certain capital assets, to index the basis of capital assets, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

ENTREPRENEURSHIP AND PRODUCTIVITY GROWTH ACT OF 1989

● Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, today I am introducing the Entrepreneurship and Productivity Growth Act of 1989. This bill would reduce the capital gains tax rate to encourage entrepreneurship, capital formation, productivity growth, and job creation; target the tax incentive solely to equity investments; and index capital gains to help eliminate unfair taxation on purely inflationary gains.

Congress ought to be paying a lot more attention to the things we can do to promote productivity growth. Enhancing the Nation's productivity—the output per-man hour—is the major challenge we face in the 1990's. It's the key to higher living standards, international competitiveness, job opportunities—and even deficit reduction. One of the most effective ways that Congress can boost our Nation's productivity is by reducing the tax rate on capital gains. Lower capital gains rates are the spark of business innovation, technological advancement, job creation and GNP growth.

Mr. President, the Entrepreneurship and Productivity Growth Act of 1989 contains three major elements: First, it reduces the capital gains tax rate.

Assets held for more than 12 months would be eligible under this act for a 50-percent exclusion from ordinary income tax rates. The effective top tax rate on capital gains would thus be reduced to 14 percent for assets sold after being held for 1 year or more. For taxpayers in the 15-percent income tax bracket, the capital gains tax would be reduced to 7.5 percent.

Second, it targets the tax incentive to equity investment. The capital gains differential would only apply to investment in equities—direct investments in stock and purchases of stock sold by other investors. The differential would not apply to nonequity investment like real property and collectibles.

This concept of targeting the capital gains differential to equity investments was pioneered by my good friend and colleague from Arkansas, Senator DALE BUMPERS. I have taken account of these concerns to fashion a more effective and efficient alternative to my 1987 capital gains bill, which would have cut the capital gains rate to 15 percent.

Third, it indexes capital gains for inflation. In years for which the annual inflation rate exceeds 4 percent, capital gains would be indexed by adjusting—using the GNP deflator—the basis of all assets sold or exchanged. Inflation would be measured from the time assets are purchases until the time they are sold.

These capital gains reforms would be available to both individual and corporate investors. In the case of corporate capital gains, an alternative tax of 17 percent would apply for equity investments held for more than 1 year. The minimum tax would not apply.

In seeking to limit the capital gains differential solely to corporate stock, this approach encourages business innovation, technological advancement, job creation, and GNP growth. There is no compelling economic need to encourage investment in real property and collectibles.

The advantages for economic growth of this approach are threefold. First, the lower capital gains rate will increase the availability of start-up capital for high-risk, growth-oriented small businesses. Second, a lower capital gains rate will refocus financial markets toward long-term equity investing and away from maximizing either interest income—junk bonds—or short-term gains—commodity options. Third, it would enhance the mobility—and therefore the efficiency—of capital. Capital would flow from existing investments to stock of new companies and growing businesses, resulting in higher productivity and economic growth. Finally, many of our chief trading partners realize how helpful it is to keep capital gains taxes low—most of them actually have a zero percent capital gains tax rate.

Taxing purely inflationary gains is inherently unfair. To help make sure that only the real economic gain is taxed, capital assets should be partially indexed to offset inflationary gains. It's fundamentally unjust to tax holders of capital assets—like homes, land, and family farms—on purely inflationary gains. Many liberal economists, including Joseph Pechman and Alan Blinder, support indexing of capital gains.

The indexation of capital gains for inflation above 4 percent will result in no revenue loss whatsoever—even using the Joint Committee on Taxation's static revenue-estimating methodology. This is because the Congressional Budget Office's proejected inflation rates for the next 5 years, as measured by the GNP deflator, are no higher than 4 percent.

It might be asked, What is the point of indexing above 4 percent when inflation doesn't reach that high? The answer is investment. To the extent that this provision protects investors from the value-eroding effects of high inflation in the future, they will have more incentive to save and invest in capital assets today, instead of channeling their income into consumption.

We want to start off with a 4-percent trigger to address concerns about potential static revenue loss from full indexing. Then, as the economy booms thanks to the new capital gains differential, we hope to reduce and eventualy eliminate the inflation trigger.

History and experience show that lower tax rates on capital gains will raise tax revenue for the Federal Government. I ask unanimous consent that a table of capital gains rates and their associated revenue be entered at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CAPITAL GAINS RATES AND THE ASSOCIATED REVENUE

Mr. KASTEN. There will be three distinct sources for this revenue windfall. First, because the tax cost of selling equities will be cut in half, lower capital gains rates will lead to greater capital gains realizations by stockholders. These greater realizations will in turn lead to higher receipts from the capital gains tax. Harvard professor Lawrence Lindsey estimates that a 15-percent capital gains rate would increase tax revenues by $31 billion over 3 years.

Second, a lower capital gains rate increases the value of stocks. Taxing capital gains at a high rate reduces the potential return on the investment—and this reduced future return translates into a lower price for the stock today. Conversely, a lower capital gains rate will increase stock prices, giving the Government more gains to tax.

Third, and most important, a lower capital gains rate will raise GNP. Even the Congressional Budget Office admits that "lower tax rates on gains could increase savings and capital formation and channel more resources into venture capital". What CBO failed to recognize, however, is that this increased capital formation means that the entire tax base will grow even faster—resulting in even an increase in overall revenues to the Federal Government. The Treasury Department's recent study on capital gains confirms this view. The Treasury study estimated that the combined effect of the capital gains rate reductions in 1978 and 1981 directly increased tax revenues by $4.692 billion.

Mr. President, there is a compelling economic need for the administration and Congress to take immediate action on capital gains. Since the "Black Monday" stock market crash in 1987, risky start-up companies have found it difficult to sell initial public stock offerings. According to a recent study by national accounting firm Grant Thorton, small and medium-sized companies going public lost $1.6 billion in capital when the market crashed. Many of these companies turned to alternative sources of funding such as commercial banks. But 50 percent of the respondents to the Thorton survey said they were forced to abandon expansion plans. Only 10 percent found private financing through venture capital funds and individual financiers. The 1986 Tax Reform Act's elimination of the capital gains differential has exacerbated this problem. Since the tax rate on capital gains is the same as that on ordinary income, individuals have no incentive to assume the extra risk associated with investment in growth stocks. This shortage of start-up capital today threatens to rob our economy of innovations, productivity gains and job opportunities in the future.

Mr. President, capital gains reform should be a bipartisan issue. Many of my distinguished colleagues on both sides of the aisle—including Senators

ALAN CRANSTON, RUDY BOSCHWITZ, DALE BUMPERS, DENNIS DECONCINI, BILL ARMSTRONG, and DAVID BOREN—support some type of capital gains reform to spur productivity growth. I believe that my bill addresses a number of concerns that have been raised about certain aspects of the across-the-board capital gains cut. This approach serves as a solution to the partisan impasse forming over President Bush's proposal to cut the tax rate on capital gains—and I hope this bill will help bring the issue of capital gains to the forefront of the economic debate, where it belongs.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill and a table be printed in the RECORD.

S. 171

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Entrepreneurship and Productivity Growth Act of 1989".

TITLE I—CAPITAL GAINS RATES

SEC. 101. CAPITAL GAINS EXCLUSION FOR CERTAIN STOCK.

(a) TAXPAYERS OTHER THAN CORPORATIONS.—Part I of subchapter P of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended by adding after section 1201 the following new section:

"SEC. 1202. DEDUCTION FOR CAPITAL GAIN FROM CERTAIN ASSETS.

"(a) GENERAL RULE.—If for any taxable year a taxpayer other than a corporation has a net capital gain, then there shall be allowed as a deduction from gross income an amount equal to 50 percent of qualified net capital gain.

"(b) QUALIFIED NET CAPITAL GAIN.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The term 'qualified net capital gain' means the lesser of—

"(A) the net capital gain for the taxable year determined by taking into account only gain or loss from the sale or exchange of—

"(i) stock in a corporation, or

"(ii) tangible property (or any interest therein) which is a capital asset used in the trade or business (as defined in section 1231(b)) of the taxpayer, or

"(B) the net capital gain for the taxable year.

"(2) CERTAIN PROPERTY EXCLUDED.—No gain or loss from property described in section 1022(b)(2) (relating to property which is not indexed) shall be taken into account under paragraph (1).

"(c) ESTATES AND TRUSTS.—In the case of an estate or trust, the deduction under subsection (a) shall be computed by excluding the portion (if any) of the gains for the taxable year from sales or exchanges of capital assets which, under section 652 and 662 (relating to inclusions of amounts in gross income of beneficiaries of trusts), is includible by the income beneficiaries as gain derived from the sale or exchange of capital assets."

(b) MAXIMUM RATE.—Section 1(j) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended by redesignating paragraph (2) as paragraph (3) and by inserting after paragraph (1) the following new paragraph:

"(2) SPECIAL RULE WHERE TAXPAYER HAS QUALIFIED NET CAPITAL GAIN.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—If a taxpayer has qualified net capital gain for any taxable year, then the tax imposed by this section shall not exceed the lesser of—

"(i) the amount determined under paragraph (1), or

"(ii) the sum of—

"(I) the amount determined under paragraph (1) without taking into account qualified net capital gain for purposes of subparagraphs (A) and (B) thereof, plus

"(II) 14 percent of the qualified net capital gain.

"(B) QUALIFIED NET CAPITAL GAIN.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'qualified net capital gain' has the meaning given such term by section 1202(b)."

(2) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Subparagraph (B) of section 1(j)(3) of such Code, as redesignated by paragraph (1), is amended by inserting "paragraph (2) applies for such taxable year or if" after "if".

(c) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Section 62(a) of such Code is amended by adding after paragraph (12) the following new paragraph:

"(13) LONG-TERM CAPITAL GAINS.—The deduction allowed by section 1202."

(2) Subparagraph (B) of section 170(e)(1) of such Code is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence': "In the case of property taken into account in computing qualified net capital gain under section 1202(b), the first sentence shall be applied by inserting '50 percent of' before 'the amount of gain'."

(3) Section 172(d)(2) of such Code (relating to modifications with respect to net operating loss deduction) is amended to read as follows:

"(2) CAPITAL GAINS AND LOSSES OF TAXPAYERS OTHER THAN CORPORATIONS.—In the case of a taxpayer other than a corporation—

"(A) the amount deductible on account of losses from sales or exchanges of capital assets shall not exceed the amount includible on account of gains from sales or exchanges of capital assets; and

"(B) the deduction for long-term capital gains provided by section 1202 shall not be allowed."

(4) Subparagraph (B) of section 172(d)(4) of such Code is amended by inserting ", (2)(B)," after "paragraphs (1)".

(5)(A) Section 220 of such Code (relating to cross reference) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 220. CROSS REFERENCES.

"(1) For deduction for long-term capital gains in the case of a taxpayer other than a corporation, see section 1202.

"(2) For deductions in respect of a decedent, see section 691."

(B) The table of sections for part VII of subchapter B of chapter 1 of such Code is amended by striking out "reference" in the item relating to section 220 and inserting "references".

(6) Paragraph (4) of section 642(c) of such Code is amended to read as follows:

"(4) ADJUSTMENTS.—To the extent that the amount otherwise allowable as a deduction under this subsection consists of gain from the sale or exchange of capital assets held for more than 1 year, proper adjustment shall be made for any deduction allowable to the estate or trust under section 1202 (relating to deduction for excess of capital gains over capital losses). In the case of a trust, the deduction allowed by this subsection shall be subject to section 681 (relating to unrelated business income)."

(7) Paragraph (3) of section 643(a) of such Code is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "The deduction under section 1202 (relating to deduction for excess capital gains over capital losses) shall not be taken into account."

(8) Paragraph (4) of section 691(c) of such Code is amended by striking out "1(j), 1201, and 1211" and inserting in lieu thereof "1(j), 1201, 1202, and 1211, ".

(9) The second sentence of paragraph (2) of section 871(a) of such Code is amended by inserting "such gains and losses shall be determined without regard to section 1202 (relating to deduction for capital gains) and" after "except that".

(10) Section 1402(i)(1) of such Code is amended to read as follows:

"(1) IN GENERAL.—In determining the net earnings from self-employment of any options dealer or commodities dealer—

"(A) notwithstanding subsection (a)(3)(A), there shall not be excluded any gain or loss (in the normal course of the taxpayer's activity of dealing in or trading section 1256 contracts) from section 1256 contracts or property related to such contracts, and

"(B) the deduction provided by section 1202 shall not apply."

(11) The table of sections for part I of subchapter P of chapter 1 of such Code is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 1201 the following new item:

"Sec. 1202. Deduction for capital gain from certain assets."

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to dispositions after December 31, 1988, in taxable years ending after such date.

SEC. 102. CORPORATIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 1201(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended to read as follows:

"(a) GENERAL RULE.—If for any taxable year a corporation has a net capital gain, then in lieu of the tax imposed by section 11, 511, 821 (a) or (c) and 831(a), there is hereby imposed a tax (if such tax is less than the tax imposed by such section) in an amount equal to the sum of—

"(1) a tax computed on the taxable income reduced by the net capital gain at the rates and in the manner as if this subsection had not been enacted, plus

"(2) 17 percent of the qualified net capital gain for the taxable year, plus

"(3) 34 percent of the net capital gain reduced by the amount taken into account under paragraph (2).

For purposes of this subsection, the term 'qualified capital gain' has the same meaning given such term be section 1202(b)."

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Clause (iii) of section 852(b)(3)(D) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended by inserting "(85 percent in the case of long-term capital gains taken into account under section 1201(a)(2))" after "66 percent".

(2) Section 1445(e)(2) of such Code is amended by inserting "(17 percent in the case of amounts described in section 1201(a)(2))" after "34 percent".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The amendment made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1988.

(2) TRANSITION RULE.—In the case of a taxable year beginning before January 1, 1989, and ending after December 31, 1988, section 1201(a)(2) of such Code shall apply as if it read as follows:

"(2) 17 percent of the qualified net capital gain determined by taking into account only gain or loss which is properly taken into account for the portion of the taxable year before January 1, 1989, plus".

TITLE II—INDEXING OF BASIS OF CAPITAL ASSETS

SEC. 201. INDEXING OF CERTAIN ASSETS FOR PURPOSES OF DETERMINING GAIN OR LOSS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Part II of subchapter O of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to basis rules of general application) is amended by inserting after section 1021 the following new section:

"SEC. 1022. INDEXING OF CERTAIN ASSETS FOR PURPOSES OF DETERMINING GAIN OR LOSS.

"(a) GENERAL RULE.—

"(1) INDEXED BASIS SUBSTITUTED FOR ADJUSTED BASIS.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), if an indexed asset which has been held for more than 1 year is sold or otherwise disposed of, for purposes of this title the indexed basis of the asset shall be substituted for its adjusted basis.

"(2) EXCEPTION FOR DEPRECIATION, ETC.—The deduction for depreciation, depletion, and amortization shall be determined without regard to the application of paragraph (1) to the taxpayer or any other person.

"(b) INDEXED ASSET.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this section, the term 'indexed asset' means any capital asset.

"(2) CERTAIN PROPERTY EXCLUDED.—For purposes of this section, the term 'indexed asset' does not include—

"(A) CREDITOR'S INTEREST.—Any interest in property which is in the nature of a creditor's interest.

"(B) OPTIONS.—Any option or other right to acquire an interest in property.

"(C) NET LEASE PROPERTY.—In the case of a lessor, net lease property (within the meaning of subsection (h)(1)).

"(D) CERTAIN PREFERRED STOCK.—Stock which is fixed and preferred as to dividends and does not participate in corporate growth to any significant extent.

"(E) STOCK IN CERTAIN CORPORATIONS.—Stock in—

"(i) a personal holding company (as defined in section 542), and

"(ii) a foreign corporation.

"(3) EXCEPTION FOR STOCK IN FOREIGN CORPORATION WHICH IS REGULARLY TRADED ON NATIONAL OR REGIONAL EXCHANGE.—Clause (iii) of paragraph (2)(E) shall not apply to stock in a foreign corporation the stock of which is listed on the New York Stock Exchange, the American Stock Exchange, or any domestic regional exchange for which quotations are published on a regular basis other than—

"(A) stock of a foreign investment company (within the meaning of section 1246(b)), and

"(B) stock in a foreign corporation held by a United States person who meets the requirements of section 1248(a)(2).

"(c) INDEXED BASIS.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) INDEXED BASIS.—The indexed basis for any asset is—

"(A) the adjusted basis of the asset, plus

"(B) an amount equal to the product of—

"(i) the adjusted basis of the asset, multiplied by

"(ii) the sum of the applicable inflation percentages for each of the calendar years beginning after December 31, 1988, in which the holding period of the asset occurs.

"(2) APPLICABLE INFLATION PERCENTAGE.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The applicable inflation percentage for any calendar year is the excess (if any) of—

"(i) the percentage by which—

"(I) the gross national product deflator for the last calendar quarter in such year, exceeds

"(II) the gross national product deflator for the last calendar quarter of the preceding year, over

"(ii) 4 percent.

The applicable inflation percentage for any year shall be rounded to the nearest one-tenth of 1 percent.

"(B) SPECIAL RULES FOR YEARS OF ACQUISITION AND DISPOSITION.—In the case of any calendar year in which an indexed asset was acquired or disposed of, subparagraph (A) shall be applied—

"(i) in the case of the year of acquisition, by substituting the calendar quarter in which the asset was acquired for the calendar quarter in clause (i)(II),

"(ii) in the case of the year of disposition, by substituting the calendar quarter in which the disposition occurs for the calendar quarter in clause (i)(I), and

"(iii) in the case of both such years, by substituting for '4 percent' in clause (ii) the percentage bearing the same ratio to 4 as the number of months the asset was held in the year bears to 12.

"(3) GROSS NATIONAL PRODUCT DEFLATOR.—The gross national product deflator for any calendar quarter is the implicit price deflator for the gross national product for such quarter (as shown in the first revision thereof).

"(d) SPECIAL RULES.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) TREATMENT AS SEPARATE ASSET.—In the case of any asset, the following shall be treated as a separate asset:

"(A) a substantial improvement to property,

"(B) in the case of stock of a corporation, a substantial contribution to capital, and

"(C) any other portion of an asset to the extent that separate treatment of such portion is appropriate to carry out the purposes of this section.

"(2) ASSETS WHICH ARE NOT INDEXED ASSETS THROUGHOUT HOLDING PERIOD.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The applicable inflation ratio shall be appropriately reduced for calendar months at any time during which the asset was not an indexed asset.

"(B) CERTAIN SHORT SALES.—For purposes of applying subparagraph (A), an asset shall be treated as not an indexed asset for any short sale period during which the taxpayer or the taxpayer's spouse sells short property substantially identical to the asset. For purposes of the preceding sentence, the short sale period begins on the day after the substantially identical property is sold and ends on the closing date for the sale.

"(3) TREATMENT OF CERTAIN DISTRIBUTIONS.—A distribution with respect to stock in a corporation which is not a dividend shall be treated as a disposition.

"(4) SECTION CANNOT INCREASE ORDINARY LOSS.—To the extent that (but for this paragraph) this section would create or increase a net ordinary loss to which section 1231(a)(2) applies or an ordinary loss to which any other provision of this title applies, such provision shall not apply. The taxpayer shall be treated as having a long-term capital loss in an amount equal to the amount of the ordinary loss to which the preceding sentence applies.

"(5) ACQUISITION DATE WHERE THERE HAS BEEN PRIOR APPLICATION OF SUBSECTION (a)(1) WITH RESPECT TO THE TAXPAYER.—If there has been a prior application of subsection (a)(1) to an asset while such asset was held by the taxpayer, the date of acquisition of such asset by the taxpayer shall be treated as not earlier than the date of the most recent such prior application.

"(6) COLLAPSIBLE CORPORATIONS.—The application of section 341(a) (relating to collapsible corporations) shall be determined without regard to this section.

"(e) CERTAIN CONDUIT ENTITIES.—

"(1) REGULATED INVESTMENT COMPANIES; REAL ESTATE INVESTMENT TRUSTS; COMMON TRUST FUNDS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Stock in a qualified investment entity shall be an indexed asset for any calendar month in the same ratio as the fair market value of the assets held by such entity at the close of such month which are indexed assets bears to the fair market value of all assets of such entity at the close of such month.

"(B) RATIO OF 90 PERCENT OR MORE.—If the ratio for any calendar month determined under subparagraph (A) would (but for this subparagraph) be 90 percent or more, such ratio for such month shall be 100 percent.

"(C) RATIO OF 10 PERCENT OR LESS.—If the ratio for any calendar month determined under subparagraph (A) would (but for this subparagraph) be 10 percent or less, such ratio for such month shall be zero.

"(D) VALUATION OF ASSETS IN CASE OF REAL ESTATE INVESTMENT TRUSTS.—Nothing in this paragraph shall require a real estate investment trust to value its assets more frequently than once each 36 months (except where such trust ceases to exist). The ratio under subparagraph (A) for any calendar month for which there is no valuation shall be the trustee's good faith judgment as to such valuation.

"(E) QUALIFIED INVESTMENT ENTITY.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'qualified investment entity' means—

"(i) a regulated investment company (within the meaning of section 851),

"(ii) a real estate investment trust (within the meaning of section 856), and

"(iii) a common trust fund (within the meaning of section 584).

"(2) PARTNERSHIPS.—In the case of a partnership, the adjustment made under subsection (a) at the partnership level shall be passed through to the partners.

"(3) SUBCHAPTER S CORPORATIONS.—In the case of an electing small business corporation, the adjustment under subsection (a) at the corporate level shall be passed through to the shareholders.

"(f) DISPOSITIONS BETWEEN RELATED PERSONS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—This section shall not apply to any sale or other disposition of property between related persons except to the extent that the basis of such property in the hands of the transferee is a substituted basis.

"(2) RELATED PERSONS DEFINED.—For purposes of this section, the term 'related persons' means—

"(A) persons bearing a relationship set forth in section 267(b), and

"(B) persons treated as single employer under subsection (b) or (c) of section 414.

"(g) TRANSFERS TO INCREASE INDEXING ADJUSTMENT OR DEPRECIATION ALLOWANCE.—If any person transfers cash, debt, or any other property to another person and the principal purpose of such transfer is—

"(1) to secure or increase an adjustment under subsection (a), or

"(2) to increase (by reason of an adjustment under subsection (a)) a deduction for depreciation, depletion, or amortization, the Secretary may disallow part or all of such adjustment or increase.

"(h) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) NET LEASE PROPERTY DEFINED.—The term 'net lease property' means leased real property where—

"(A) the term of the lease (taking into account options to renew) was 50 percent or more of the useful life of the property, and

"(B) for the period of the lease, the sum of the deductions with respect to such property which are allowable to the lessor solely by reason of section 162 (other than rents and reimbursed amounts with respect to such property) is 15 percent or less of the rental income produced by such property.

"(2) STOCK INCLUDES INTEREST IN COMMON TRUST FUND.—The term 'stock in a corporation' includes any interest in a common trust fund (as defined in section 584(a)).

"(i) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out the purposes of this section."

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for part II of subchapter O of such chapter 1 is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 1021 the following new item:

"Sec. 1022. Indexing of certain assets for purposes of determining gain or loss."

(c) ADJUSTMENT TO APPLY FOR PURPOSES OF DETERMINING EARNINGS AND PROFITS.—Subsection (f) of section 312 (relating to effect on earnings and profits of gain or loss and of receipt of tax-free distributions) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(3) EFFECT ON EARNINGS AND PROFITS OF INDEXED BASIS.—

For substitution of indexed basis for adjusted basis in the case of the disposition of certain assets after December 31, 1987, see section 1022(a)(1)."

(d) The amendments made by this section shall apply to dispositions after December 31, 1988, in taxable years ending after such date.●

S. 172. A bill to amend the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act to extend the date for entering into contracts under the Great Plains Conservation Program; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

DATE EXTENSION FOR SOIL CONSERVATION AND DOMESTIC ALLOTMENT ACT

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation to authorize extension of the Great Plains Conservation Program [GPCP] to September 30, 2001. Although this program does not formally expire until September 30, 1991, I feel that its value is such that early consideration of the 10-year extension is very well-deserved.

The Great Plains Conservation Program is a voluntary conservation program that provides long-term technical assistance and cost-sharing through the U.S. Department of Agriculture Soil Conservation Service [SCS]. Landowners sign 3 to 10 year conservation contracts with the SCS and agree to implement conservation methods that specifically suit the individual condition of their land. The CPCP is a highly effective, cost-efficient program because it views a farm or ranch as a unit and attacks erosion problems in totality—not in a piecemeal fashion.

The economic soundness of the GPCP is apparent in SCS statistics which show that each Federal dollar used in this program has yielded approximately $4 in increased agricultural income. Many South Dakotans firmly believe that the GPCP has been the most effective cost-share program ever administered by the Department of Agriculture to help mitigate soil and water conservation problems.

Congress authorized the first Great Plains Conservation Program in 1956, prompted by bad memories of the Dust Bowl days of the 1930's and more years of severe drought in the 1950's. Since then, reauthorizations of the program have resulted in over 60,000 CPCP contracts. Not only has serious soil erosion been abated but fish and wildlife habitats, water quality, and recreational facilities in 10 States have been significantly improved. Five hundred and nineteen counties, located from the tip of Texas to the Canadian border of North Dakota and Montana, are eligible to participate in this worthwhile program.

It is my hope that the Senate would recognize the great worth of this program and act to extend it for an additional 10 years. Especially in light of the drought of 1988 and predictions that more dry years might follow, it is only sensible to renew a conservation program that has clearly demonstrated its capacity to save the priceless resources of soil and water.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 172

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Cngress assembled,

SECTION 1. EXTENSION OF DATE FOR ENTERING GREAT PLAINS CONSERVATION CONTRACTS.

The third sentence of section 16(b)(1) of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act (16 U.S.C. 590p(b)(1)) is amended by striking out "1991" and inserting in lieu thereof "2001".

By Mr. PRESSLER:

S. 173. A bill to establish a Rural Mobility Task Force in the Urban Mass Transportation Administration; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

RURAL MOBILITY TASK FORCE

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, the Urban Mass Transportation Administration [UMTA] was created in 1964 with a threefold mission.

UMTA is charged with assisting the development and improvement of mass transportation facilities. This is to be done in cooperation with both public and private mass transportation concerns.

Second, UMTA is responsible for encouraging the development of urban mass transportation systems. This encouragement is helpful in the effort to create economic and urban development.

Finally, UMTA provides assistance to State and local governments through financing both public and private mass transportation. The level of need is considered in determining levels of assistance.

UMTA also participates in cooperative efforts with colleges and universities that research emerging trends and problems in mass transportation.

UMTA has played a vital role in improving mass transportation alternatives for major urban areas. Washington, DC's Metro system has been the recipient of UMTA assistance and today serves thousands daily. The success of the Metro system means better transportation for Washington area residents who would otherwise be stranded in ever-increasing traffic on the beltway.

Urban areas like Washington, DC need UMTA assistance, but rural regions of the country like South Dakota, equally deserving of assistance for their unique transportation problems, receive little help.

A recent study by the National Association for Transportation Alternatives [NASTA] paints an ugly picture. Though rural and small urban areas—less than 200,000 people—make up almost one-half of the American population, these areas receive less than 10 percent of UMTA Transit Assistance. Rural areas alone—under 50,000 people—make up almost 40 percent of the population but receive less than 4 percent of these funds.

On a per capita basis, the NASTA study states that residents of large urban areas receive $31.20 in Federal transit assistance. Rural area residents, on the other hand, receive $1.27.

The UMTA mass transit funds are derived from Federal taxes on motor fuels. Rural motorists pay over 40 percent of all Federal gasoline taxes but benefit from less than 4 percent of the mass transit account funds.

Yes; the transportation needs in urban and rural areas are as different as night and day. But many of the people who need mass transportation for basic mobility reside in rural areas. They are called transportation disadvantaged and they are often poor, elderly, and disabled. Over 40 percent of these needy people live in rural areas.

The legislation I am introducing today takes a step toward better understanding of these inequities. My bill establishes a Rural Mobility Task Force within UMTA. This task force would be comprised of UMTA's Deputy Administrator and Associate Administrators, and a representative from the Office of the General Counsel of UMTA.

My legislation institutionalizes a practice that is already carried on informally at UMTA. The task force would be responsible for coordinating UMTA programs affecting rural America, considering program impacts on nonurbanized areas, and providing a clearinghouse for information on rural transportation activities.

These responsibilities would be carried out through quarterly meetings of the task force. The most useful product of this effort would be an annual report to Congress from UMTA comparing funding levels and other assistance to rural areas with urbanized areas.

The Rural Mobility Task Force eventually could be a major voice for areas which may not be high in population but have a strong need. These people deserve equal access to affordable transportation alternatives. Mobility should be enjoyed by everyone, regardless of geographic location.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 173

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 18 of the Urban Mass Transportation Act of 1964 is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(i) RURAL MOBILITY TASK FORCE.—

"(1) ESTABLISHMENT.—There is established within the Urban Mass Transportation Administration a Rural Mobility Task Force. The Task Force shall be chaired by the Deputy Administrator and shall include representatives from the office of each Associate Administrator of the Administration and from the office of the General Counsel of the Administration.

"(2) RESPONSIBILITIES.—The Rural Mobility Task Force shall assist the Secretary in carrying out this section and the other provisions of this Act in nonurbanized areas. Specifically, the Task Force shall—

"(A) assure coordination of all activities under this Act that have an impact on rural and specialized transportation,

"(B) assure consideration of the unique needs and special requirements of operators in nonurbanized areas in the development of Administration policies, and

"(C) provide a single clearinghouse for information on rural program activities under this Act for the public and for Administration officials.

"(3) ROUNDTABLES.—The Rural Mobility Task Force shall hold quarterly roundtables and invite the participation of rural and specialized transportation operators for the purpose of advising the Task Force on training and technical assistance needs and priorities, research needs and priorities, coordination issues, and other program management problems or issues.

"(4) REPORT.—The Secretary shall transmit an annual report to the Congress containing data comparing the level of funding and other assistance (including allocations for research, training, technical assistance, and safety programs, as well as capital and operating funds) that is available to rural and specialized transportation operations with the level of funding and other assistance that is available to urbanized areas under each major program carried out under this Act.".

By Mr. BUMPERS (for himself, Mr. INOUYE and Mr. CONRAD):

S. 174. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to provide a mechanism for taxpayers to designate any portion of any overpayment of income tax, and to contribute other amounts, for payment to the National Organ Transplant Trust Fund, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

COOPERATIVE ORGAN TRANSPLANT CONTRIBUTIONS ACT OF 1989

● Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I am introducing legislation today that taps the generosity of Americans who are willing to help patients in need of organ transplant surgery. The bill I am introducing would allow Americans to contribute to the Organ Transplant Trust Fund, which would be used to finance organ transplants for needy patients. I have championed this legislation in past sessions of Congress, and I am still convinced it represents a responsible way to help citizens who need transplants but can't afford them.

On September 20, 1988, Senator Baucus chaired a hearing of the Subcommittee to consider this bill. At that hearing an impressive group of transplant surgeons, including Dr. Thomas E. Starzl of the University of Pittsburgh and Dr. Goran Klintmalm of Baylor University Medical Center, and the wife of a transplant recipient testified eloquently about the need for new sources of funding for transplants. The record of that hearing provides a strong argument for the tax checkoff I propose, and I believe it will be of great benefit in my efforts to get this measure enacted in the 101st Congress.

Mrs. Sherry Clifton, whose husband Hardie had a heart transplant in September 1984, described at that hearing her tireless efforts to raise funds for her husband's transplants. Mrs. Clifton worked tirelessly to guarantee that her husband would get his organ transplant, and she was finally successful. Some transplant candidates are not fortunate enough to have an advocate like Mrs. Clifton and die before they even get on a waiting list at a transplant center. Mrs. Clifton's testimony about the need for an organ transplant fund was moving:

I just did not want to believe that my beloved country was going to allow my husband to die because "there were no funds available" to save his life. All during my ordeal, I was praying that no one else's loved one would have to go through what I had to go through.

And as Dr. Starzl testified,

Part of the spirit of this bill . . . is that it gives a very powerful signal that, as far as the Government is concerned, . . . we do recognize that there is a moral imperative to treat all of our patients and not to exclude that 60 million people who do not have means of payment for this technology.

It is time that we take action to see that families and patients don't have to go through what Hardie and Sherry Clifton went through. It is time we quit ignoring the plight of our fellow citizens who desperately need help in financing organ transplants. After my bill is enacted, a citizen need never again feel helpless when he hears about a patient who cannot finance a transplant.

My bill would set up a checkoff on the 1040 personal income tax form, whereby individuals could donate part or all of their tax refunds, or make other contributions, to a trust fund for organ transplant assistance. Individuals would be making donations out of their own pockets; they would not be diminishing Federal revenues. The trust fund would return to each State the funds contributed by its citizens. Each State would be permitted to run its assistance program for transplant patients according to its own regulations and would have flexibility in determining eligibility for these funds. States could not use these funds as their match for medicaid. The funds are intended to supplement, not supplant, state medicaid efforts.

I know that some have misgivings about the use of checkoffs on the Federal income tax form. I believe these misgivings are of little significance, however, compared to the need that the checkoff would address. I would prefer that Congress establish an assistance program for transplant patients and fund it with Federal revenues or on a Federal State matching basis. But that simply isn't going to happen in this age of staggering budget deficits. I believe this mechanism for channeling contributions from American citizens is a realistic way to help needy transplant candidates.

Organ transplant procedures are simply miraculous, and we can be proud that American physicians and scientists have been pioneers in developing life-saving transplant procedures for livers, hearts, and kidneys—as well as other organs and tissues. Each day these operations save the lives of dozens who would otherwise die.

There are two big conditions that must be met before organ transplant surgery can go forward: A suitable organ donor must be found and resources must be available to pay for the procedure. Organ availability is still a formidable problem when an individual needs transplantation surgery, and transplant patients sometimes die while waiting for a suitable organ. Fortunately, we are making some progress in developing a system to obtain and distribute organs for transplantation. Congress has helped by enacting legislation requiring hospitals to request that families of deceased patients donate the organs of their loved ones. This law and the hard work of many people in organ procurement agencies are having a positive effect on the supply of organs. We must continue Federal efforts to coordinate and improve organ procurement if the supply of organs is to meet demand.

If an organ is available, the patient still has to solve the problem of how to pay for his transplant. A transplant candidate must prove he has the resources to finance his transplant before he can even be put on an institution's waiting list for surgery. That is easy enough if a patient has good health insurance but is a nightmare for those with inadequate or no health insurance. Costs for organ transplants vary, but a liver transplant can cost as much as $265,000; a heart transplant, $125,000; and bone marrow transplant, $95,000. And transplant patients require expensive immunosuppressive drugs the rest of their lives.

The financing of transplants is a crazy quilt of insurance coverage. Medicare finances as many as 90 percent of the kidney transplants in this country through the end stage renal disease program and also covers heart transplants in approved transplant centers. Medicare also covers liver transplants in those under age 18, which effectively means that Medicare does not cover liver transplants. Medicaid coverage for transplantation varies greatly from State to State. Most States provide coverage for some transplants, but some States provide no coverage and others are eliminating the coverage they previously had. As a matter of fact, Medicaid coverage changes in one state or another very often.

Finally, private insurance coverage varies from carrier to carrier. In some cases, private insurance coverage is adequate for the procedure and all follow-up care. In other cases, coverage is adequate for the transplant procedure but nonexistent for the immunosuppressive drugs a patient needs.

So the patients who need help financing transplants are either among the 37 million who lack health insurance coverage, whose health insurance policies have inadequate coverage for transplants, who are unfortunate enough to live in a State with limited Medicaid coverage, or who fall through the cracks in other ways.

Those unfortunate patients must go begging for the money to stay alive, or to keep their children alive. They must appeal to their neighbors, their churches, to the media, and to public officials for help in raising the funds to pay for their operations. Communities have often responded in multiple and creative ways to raise money—proof that Americans stand ready to help those who need transplants.

But a patient's family should not have to hustle dollars for a heart or liver transplant. And fundraising attempts, even if acceptable, don't always work. It's much easier to raise money if the patient is a young and photogenic child, and much harder if the patient is not. Patients and their families find themselves in the unenviable position of running bake sales to live because they do not enjoy public or private health insurance coverage for transplants.

Former HEW Secretary Joseph Califano, commenting recently on the high cost of medical and the spiraling health care inflation rate, said, "By the year 2000 the only person in the United States who can afford to get sick will be Donald Trump." A transplant candidate who has little or no insurance, or whose insurance will not pay for transplant, certainly might wish he had Donald Trump's millions.

I have been asked why I single out organ transplantation for coverage over other basic health services. It is simply because transplants are usually a matter of life or death, and their financing should be treated as a matter of life and death. I also believe that organ transplants will increasingly be seen by health insurers as cost-effective treatment for many patients. Until that time, however, it is important that all possible sources of funding for transplants be tapped.

The Organ Transplant Contributions Act is not a total solution, but it is a viable, voluntary approach that will offer hope to many individuals who would otherwise die for lack of an organ transplant. I urge my colleagues to join me in cosponsoring this important legislation.

I ask unanimous consent that a brief section-by-section analysis and the complete text of the bill be printed after my statement.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BRIEF SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS OF SENATOR BUMPERS' COOPERATIVE ORGAN TRANSPLANT CONTRIBUTIONS ACT

Section 1. This act my be cited as the "Cooperative Organ Transplant Contributions Act of 1989."

Section 2(a). Congressional findings that many organ transplant candidates are in need of assistance to pay for transplants.

2(b). Statement of the purpose of the act, which is to establish a National Organ Transplant Fund whose funds will be distributed to states in order to assist needy organ transplant candidates.

Section 3(a). Taxpayers may designate any portion of any tax overpayment or any cash contribution to be paid to the National Transplant Trust Fund.

(b). The Internal Revenue Code is amended to account for the establishment of the National Organ Transplant Trust Fund.

(c). This act applies to taxable years ending after the date of enactment.

Section 4(a). A National Organ Transplant Trust Fund will be established in the Treasury of the United States and shall receive all amounts contributed by individual taxpayers. Funds in the Trust Fund shall be available for payment to the chief health officer of each state and to pay administrative expenses of modifying the individual income tax return forms and carrying out the operation of the Trust Fund.

Section 5(a). Each state shall establish an Organ Transplant Program in order to receive payments from the National Organ Transplant Trust Fund.

(b). States must use the funds to pay the costs of organ transplantation procedures and immunosuppressive drugs for eligible individuals. States may use not more than 5% of the funds to publicize the availability of the trust fund and to solicit contributions.

(c). States will receive an amount proportionate to the contributions of their citizens to the Trust Fund. The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall certify a State as eligible for payments.

(d). The States shall determine the eligibility of individuals and shall also detemine the medical expenses eligible for coverage.

(e). A state may not use money from the National Organ Transplant Fund to supplant funds normally made available by the State for organ transplantation assistance.

(f). A State may not use the money from the Trust Fund to satisfy a requirement for nonfederal contributions for participation in a program established under any other provision of law.

(g). Each state shall annually submit reports about its Organ Transplant Program to the Secretary of Health and Human Services.

(h). Definitions of "organ," "transplant procedure," and "State."

Section 6. Makes clear that this Act does not create any private right to sue by or on behalf of any eligible individual, and does not create an entitlement on behalf of any individual.

S. 174

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Cooperative Organ Transplant Contributions Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. STATEMENT OF CONGRESSIONAL FINDINGS AND INTENT.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds that—

(1) there exists an urgent national health problem in the area of human organ transplantation, and that organ transplant procedures and immunosuppressive therapy can mean the difference between life and death for some patients;

(2) advances in medical science have made organ transplantation an accepted medical treatment in an increasing number of cases, but that the costs associated with such treatment remain beyond the reach of many Americans;

(3) needy patients should neither be allowed to die or forced into poverty due to lack of adequate funds to pay for an organ transplant, and that the Federal Government should assist those citizens who are in need of organ transplant surgery and immunosuppressive therapy;

(4) as of this year, all persons in the United States are asked to join the national pool of organ donors and therefore should have an equal opportunity to benefit from expanded availability of organs for transplantation;

(5) certain organ transplant procedures are becoming commonly accepted forms of treatment, but that other procedures remain experimental and that further research in these and other methods should be encouraged with a view towards expanding the horizons of medical knowledge and improving the quality of health care; and

(6) a number of States have established programs to assist citizens in obtaining needed transplant procedures, and that a number of charitable organizations are available to assist such persons, but there remains a substantial unmet need in this area.

(b) CONGRESSIONAL INTENT.—It is the intent of Congress that—

(1) it is necessary, as a result of the findings in subsection (a), to establish a National Organ Transplant Trust Fund in the Treasury of the United States which shall dispense money to the States to assist those Americans who are in need of transplant surgery and immunosuppressive therapy and who have insufficient means of paying for such treatment;

(2) the Secretary of the Treasury shall transfer money from the National Organ Transplant Trust Fund to the chief health officer of a State for the assistance program described in paragraph (1) after the Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services has certified that the State is carrying out the program in accordance with the law and has fully accounted for the funds provided for the previous year;

(3) the National Organ Transplant Trust Fund be funded solely by voluntary contributions under the system established by this Act; and

(4) each State be allowed, within the general guidelines provided herein, to develop its own specific regulations to govern the operation of this assistance program.

SEC. 3. DESIGNATION OF OVERPAYMENTS AND CONTRIBUTIONS FOR NATIONAL ORGAN TRANSPLANT TRUST FUND.

(a) GENERAL.—Subchapter A of chapter 61 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to returns and records) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new part:

"PART IX—DESIGNATION OF OVERPAYMENTS AND CONTRIBUTIONS FOR NATIONAL ORGAN TRANSPLANT TRUST FUND

"SEC. 6097. AMOUNTS FOR NATIONAL ORGAN TRANSPLANT TRUST FUND.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—With respect to each taxpayer's return for the taxable year of the tax imposed by chapter 1, such taxpayer may designate that—

"(1) any portion of any overpayment of such tax for such taxable year, and

"(2) any cash contribution that the taxpayer includes with such return, be paid over to the National Organ Transplant Trust Fund.

"(b) JOINT RETURNS.—In the case of a joint return showing an overpayment, each spouse may designate any portion of such overpayment under subsection (a)(1).

"(c) MANNER AND TIME OF DESIGNATION.—A designation under subsection (a) may be made with respect to any taxable year only at the time of filing the return of the tax imposed by chapter 1 for such taxable year. Such designation shall be made on the first page of the return and shall be irrevocable.

"(d) OVERPAYMENTS TREATED AS REFUNDED.—For purposes of this title, any overpayment of tax designated under subsection (a) shall be treated as being refunded to the taxpayer as of the last date prescribed for filing the retun of tax imposed by chapter 1 (determined without regard to extensions) or, if later, the date the return is filed.".

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of parts for subchapter A of chapter 61 of such Code is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"PART IX—DESIGNATION OF OVERPAYMENTS AND CONTRIBUTIONS FOR NATIONAL ORGAN TRANSPLANT TRUST FUND.".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years ending after the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 4. ESTABLISHMENT OF NATIONAL ORGAN TRANSPLANT TRUST FUND.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subchapter A of chapter 98 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to trust fund code) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 9511. NATIONAL ORGAN TRANSPLANT TRUST FUND.

"(a) CREATION OF TRUST FUND.—There is established in the Treasury of the United States a trust fund to be known as the 'National Organ Transplant Trust Fund' consisting of such amounts as may be appropriated or credited to the National Organ Transplant Trust Fund as provided in this section or section 9602(b).

"(b) TRANSFER TO NATIONAL ORGAN TRANSPLANT TRUST FUND OF AMOUNTS DESIGNATED.—There is hereby appropriated to the National Organ Transplant Trust Fund amounts equivalent to the amounts designated under section 6097 and received in the Treasury, and any other cash contributions made by any person to such fund.

"(c) EXPENDITURES FROM TRUST FUND.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall pay, from the National Organ Transplant Funds to the chief health officer of a State for use in assisting eligible individuals with organ transplants, the amounts determined under section 5 of the Organ Transplant Contributions Act of 1988.

"(2) ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSES.—Amounts in the National Organ Transplant Trust Fund shall be available to pay the administrative expenses of the Department of the Treasury directly allocable to—

"(A) modifying the individual income tax return forms to carry out section 6097,

"(B) carrying out this chapter with respect to such Fund, and

"(C) processing amounts received under section 6097 and transferring such amounts to such Fund.".

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENTS.—The table of sections for such subchapter A is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"Sec. 9511. National Organ Transplant Trust Fund.".

SEC. 5. ORGAN TRANSPLANTATION PAYMENTS PROGRAM.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF PROGRAM.—Each State shall establish an Organ Transplantation Program to receive payments from the National Organ Transplant Trust Fund and to provide financial assistance to eligible individuals.

(b) USE OF PAYMENTS.—Payments to each State under subsection (2) shall be available—

(1) to pay the costs of the program established under subsection (a), including the costs of organ transplantation procedures and immunosuppressive drugs for eligible individuals; and

(2) to pay the costs incurred by the State's chief health officer to publicize the availability of the Trust Fund and to solicit contributions to the Trust Fund, except that payments under this subparagraph for any fiscal year shall not exceed 5 percent of the total payments received by the State from the Trust Fund for such fiscal year.

(c) PAYMENT OF FUNDS FROM TRUST FUND TO STATES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Subject to paragraph (2), not later than September 1 of each year, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to each State from the Trust Fund an amount equal to the amount of funds received in the form of cash contributions, or contributed by residents of the State to the Trust Fund pursuant to section 6097 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, less a proportionate share of the costs incurred by the Secretary in administering the Fund.

(2) CERTIFICATION.—

(A) ELIGIBILITY.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall certifty a State as eligible for payments under this section if the Secretary determines that the State is carrying out its program in accordance with this Act and has fully accounted for the money provided for the previous year.

(B) REPORT.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall report to the Secretary of the Treasury the name of each State that had been certified under subparagraph (A).

(C) PREREQUISITE.—The Secretary of Treasury shall distribute money to a State only if the Secretary receives a certification of the State under subparagraph (A).

(d) PAYMENT OF FUNDS FROM STATES TO INDIVIDUALS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The chief health officer of a State shall place the funds received under subsection (c) into a separate interest-bearing account and may dispense such funds only to individuals who meet the criteria prescribed in paragraph (2).

(2) ELIGIBILITY.—To be eligible to receive funds under paragraph (1), an individual must—

(A) have a medical condition for which an organ transplant procedure is reasonably medically necessary;

(B) have no sufficient source of payment for the organ transplant, including sources of payment such as Medicaid, Medicare, and any insurance coverage applicable to such individuals; and

(C) meet other requirements such as those concerning State residency and income level that the State or its chief health officer may impose in regulations.

(3) EXPENSES COVERED.—The chief health officer of each State shall prescribe by regulation the medical expenses that may be elibible for coverage, the maximum expense, and the terms and conditions under which payment will be made to eligible individuals.

(e) ADDITIONAL FUNDING.—A State may not use money from the National Organ Transplant Fund to supplant funds normally made available by the State for organ transplantation assistance.

(f) STATE USE OF FUNDS RECEIVED FROM THE NATIONAL ORGAN TRANSPLANT TRUST FUND.—A State may not use money from the National Organ Transplant Trust Fund to satisfy a requirement for nonfederal contributions for participation in a program established under any other provision of law.

(g) Each State shall annually submit to the Secretary of Health and Human Services such reports concerning its Organ Transplant Program as the Secretary shall require.

(h) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section:

(1) The term "organ" means the eye, kidney, liver, pancreas, heart, lung, bone marrow, or any other organ or tissue included by the chief health officer of a State by regulation.

(2) The term "transplant procedure" means the surgical procedures necessary to accomplish the organ transplant, as well as appropriate preoperative and postoperative treatments, including immunosuppressive drugs, approved under the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. 301 et seq).

(3) The term "State" shall be construed to include the District of Columbia, where such construction is necessary to carry out provisions of this Act.

SEC. 6. RIGHTS TO SUE OR BENEFIT ENTITLEMENT NOT CREATED BY ACT.

This Act shall not be construed to create any private right to sue by or on behalf of any eligible individual, and shall not be construed to create an entitlement on behalf of any individual.●

By Mr. HEINZ:

S. 176. A bill to amend the Foreign Agents Registration Act of 1938 to strengthen the registration and enforcement requirements of that act; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

STRENGTHENING THE FOREIGN AGENTS REGISTRATION ACT OF 1938

● Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, the debate we have had over the past 2 years on the Omnibus Trade Act raised an unexpected issue that many might find somewhat amusing, but which, on reflection, also should cause us a great deal of concern.

I am referring to the large amount of foreign lobbying on the bill, most notable with respect to the so-called Toshiba provisions. These sections of the bill, in case there is anyone left in the Senate who has not been paying attention the past year, create a strong program of prospective sanctions for foreign companies that violate Cocom export control rules and divert critical technology to the Soviet Union.

It is fair to say this part of the bill stemmed directly from the case that became public in 1987 of just such a diversion. It involved Toshiba Machine Corp. and Kongsberg Trading Co. selling advanced milling machinery to the Soviet Union which has significantly enhanced that nation's ability to manufacture quiet submarines.

The foreign lobbying, however, concentrated not on the prospective sanction regime but on the retroactive sanctions on Toshiba Machine, Kongsberg Trading, and their parent corporations that the bill also imposed. These sanctions, which were substantially narrowed by the conferees, have stirred up a lot of people, both here and abroad for reasons of both high policy and narrow self interest. One indicator of that is the amount of foreign money spent trying to limit the penalties.

When I first heard in the summer of 1987 that Toshiba Corp. had paid the law firm of Mudge, Rose, Guthrie, Alexander & Ferdon $1.3 million to represent it for 6 months in 1987, my reaction was at that rate Toshiba's legal fees may end up the biggest sanction they have to endure. It appears now that that figure was only small change. In its February, 1988, filing, Mudge Rose reported an additional $4.2 million from Toshiba for the next 6-month period, which, along with approximately $1.7 million for the February-August 1988 period, makes a grand total of $7.2 million for 18 months of work on a number of issues.

And that's not all. Kelly, Drye & Warren, which represents Tokyo Electric, a Toshiba subsidiary, reported nearly $57,000 for the 6 months ending November 23, 1987, and an additional $106,000 for the following 12 months. Dickstein, Shapiro, & Moran reported $111,000 through December 7, 1987—an appropriate day to report—and an additional $41,000 for the next 6 months. This is not a complete list by any means, and the process of compiling it has made evident some major flaws in the statute that requires the reporting, the Foreign Agents Registration Act.

That act was written in the 1930's primarily to deal with propaganda spread by Nazi agents operating in the United States. Its purpose was to help make the public aware of the source and financial backing behind information being given to the Government, Congress and the public in order to influence their opinions.

Since that time, the political environment has changed—obviously—and the kinds of issues where foreign persons want to influence American opinion have changed. I would like to think that our political process and our media, perhaps aided by technological advances in communications and dissemination of information, have become more sophisticated over the years and can more easily recognize political propaganda when they see it.

The challenges we face now are primarily economic. Our open markets and open investment policy, as well as the huge trade deficit we have been running, have produced a huge increase in the foreign stake in our economy in the form of sales and profits dependent on imports into the United States and in the form of investment in our country. The actions our Government takes with respect to trade and economic regulation are of tremendous importance to foreign interests who maintain an active presence here.

Two articles that appeared last year, one in Business Week and one by Pat Choate in the Washington Post, spell out these developments in much greater detail, particularly with respect to Japan. I ask that the two articles be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

One of the phenomena I noticed during debate over the trade bill is the growing blurring of the line between us and them as U.S. companies are increasingly owned by foreign corporations, and U.S. corporations increasingly recalculate their public policy positions based on their assessment of their interests overseas.

Some farmers and agriculture industries, for example, have regularly opposed any U.S. retaliatory action abroad, regardless of its justification or merit, because of concerns that the foreign response might be counter-retaliation against U.S. agriculture exports. The effect of that position is to inhibit our Government in the legitimate use of its leverage and to make us hostage to other nations' threats; neither of which contributes to increasing market discipline and GATT discipline in the trading system.

As a further example, I would note in passing that the figures I mentioned above as reported lobbying expenditures do not include expenditures by American companies who have business relationships with Toshiba or Kongsberg, perceived those relationships as being threatened, and lobbied accordingly. Including those expenditures would probably more than double the amount.

In any event, Mr. President, all these trends suggest a variation on the well-known quotation from Pogo, "We have met the enemy, and he is us." Now it appears we have met the enemy, and he sounds like one of us, but we have no idea who he really is.

And that is where the Foreign Agents Registration Act comes in. It is supposed to tell us who is us and who is them, not because one is worse than the other, but simply so the Government and the public can tell the difference and judge accordingly.

Foreign interests in this country do many good things. They have kept companies and jobs in existence that would otherwise have disappeared. They have brought technological improvements and capital infusions that have helped restore numerous industries to competitiveness. The Foreign Agents Registration Act has neither the intent nor the effect of discouraging those efforts. Rather it seeks simply to identify them.

The act is handicapped in that effort, however, by its failure to keep up with modern trends and economic complexities. In particular, I have identified four areas where improvements in the act would both improve compliance with the reporting requirements and make the reporting more accurate and reflective of current realities. Those improvements are embodied in legislation I am introducing today.

First. Controlled subsidiaries: We should expand the requirement to file beyond agents of a foreign principal. The act defines foreign principal as including:

(1) A government of a foreign country and a foreign political party;

(2) A person outside of the United States, unless it is established that such person is an individual and a citizen of and domiciled within the United States, or that such person is not an individual and is organized under or created by the laws of the United States or of any State or other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States and has its principal place of business within the United States; and

(3) A partnership, association, corporation, organization, or other combination of persons organized under the laws of or having its principal place of business in a foreign country.

This definition appears to exclude agents of entities controlled by foreign principals that are organized, incorporated, created, et cetera under the laws of the United States. This in turn relates to the question of what constitutes foreign control of an entity.

In discussions with the Justice Department and various private parties who operate under this statute, it appears that this is a murky area of the law. A number of agents of U.S. foreign-controlled entities do file and in fact are advised by the Justice Department that they are required to file. Others do not; some on their own initiative, others based on Justice Department advice.

It appears that Justice advice is based roughly on whether or not the U.S. entity is real and functioning as opposed to existing primarily or exclusively to represent the foreign entity. I understand Toyota U.S.A., for example, has been advised it does not have to file because it has substantial offices and employees in the United States, is engaged in real activities here, and arguably represents itself and its own interests more than those of its Japanese parent. This kind of test does not appear in the law or in regulations, and there does not appear to be a single firm set of criteria that are uniformly and universally applied.

Further, since the Justice Department has limited resources in this area, it generally focuses its enforcement of the act on responses to complaints it receives, a limitation which makes an ambiguous definition like this one effectively self-enforcing.

In my judgment, this is a standard that is too lax and which has the effect of exempting from the reach of the act many companies which are effectively controlled by and represent the interests of foreign corporations. Moreover, since this is essentially a reporting requirement, if we err, it ought to be on the side of more complete coverage.

That can best be accomplished by more clearly defining the term control to both eliminate the ambiguity of the current standard and to broaden the reach of the law. The bill I am introducing today does that by defining over 50 percent foreign ownership of a U.S. entity as control; between 20 percent and 50 percent as control subject to rebuttal evidence; and less than 20 percent as presumptively not controlling. In considering the middle category, the Justice Department would likely employ some of the criteria they presently use, if an alleged foreign principal chose to contest the classification. This represents a minor change from S. 2866 introduced last year, which placed joint ventures where each party owns 50 percent in the first category. This year's bill places such cases in the second category.

Second. Lawyers' exemption: Presently, the act exempts lawyers from the reporting requirements in certain circumstances:

Any person qualified to practice law, insofar as he engages or agrees to engage in the legal representation of a disclosed foreign principal before any court of law or any agency of the Government of the United States: Provided, That for the purposes of this subsection legal representation does not include attempts to influence or persuade agency personnel or officials other than in the course of established agency proceedings, whether formal or informal.

What has evolved over the last 40 years, Mr. President, is that, particularly in the trade area, much of the work of representation is carried on in the context of formal proceedings such as antidumping or countervailing duty investigations, section 301, 201, or 337 cases, and other procedures which are formalized in the trade laws. To exclude this kind of activity from reporting is a loophole of some significance, and in some cases is so broad as to swallow the rule.

The original exemption probably had judicial proceedings in mind, where the parties' counsel is a matter of public record, but that would not, in any event, include any disclosure of the sums being expended on behalf of the foreign principal, as registration under the Foreign Agents Registration Act would. In any event, the wording of exemption implies a construction far broader than simply judicial proceedings.

Third. Standardized filing dates: The act presently requires an agent to file when he takes on the foreign client and begins performing reportable actions, and then requires him to file at regular 6-month intervals dating from the original filing. This leads to a different filing date for virtually every agent, with the result that the compilation of data has become very difficult. No matter when ones examines the filings, there are always additional ones due imminently; and thus any data developed is immediately out of date. My bill retains the conditions for an initial filing but then requires everyone to fit into a January 30 and July 30 filing framework, thus maintaining the twice-a-year format but standardizing it to permit more timely and thorough review of the data. This also differs from last year's bill in that it provides a 30-day period to file rather than a 15-day period. This is consistent with current law and more accurately reflects the time actually needed to file a complete report.

Fourth. Penalties and enforcement: While the act contains criminal penalties for wilful violations, they are rarely used, in large part because intent is difficult to prove and the penalties, which include imprisonment, are severe. Adding a schedule of civil fines provides a more reasonable option that should encourage compliance. It would also help compliance with the act to give the Justice Department authority to summon individuals to appear, testify or produce records, common authority for agencies charged with enforcing laws that have a substantial disclosure component. Both of these proposals are discussed in a General Accounting Office study of the act that was completed in 1980. Unfortunately, no remedial action was taken at that time, but I believe the recommendations are as relevant now as they were then, and much more important. Mr. President, I ask that the text of that report also be printed in the RECORD following my remarks.

I do not expect that either of these latter provisions would be frequently used. I do think, however, that we need to do more to convince the business community that this is an important statute taken seriously by Congress and the Government—one which we intend to be enforced. Giving the Justice Department this additional authority should help in that regard.

Mr. President, I suspect that the changes in our economy that I mentioned earlier mean, among other things, that we are heading into a period of greater friction with those of our trading partners seeking to maintain a high level of activity in this country. I do not object to that higher level of activity, and I have not generally been sympathetic to efforts to regulate it for its own sake. Disclosure, however, is another matter.

While I do not object to companies and their agents acting in their own self interest and enriching our lawyers, consultants and public relations experts in the process, I do have some concerns that the public interest may be less extensively represented.

That was clearly the case in the fight over Toshiba sanctions. Estimates of the cost to the United States of repairing the damage caused by that diversion range from $8 billion to over $100 billion. While the truth is no doubt somewhere in between, it is certain that the cost is many times greater than all the fees being collected on this issue, and that it is the American taxpayers who will bear that burden for a long period of time. The public interest demands a strong program of sanctions to make sure this does not happen again, but that interest was over-matched by a collection of private interests, both foreign and domestic, who were determined that their short term business interests not be inconvenienced.

At one level, the message of the Toshiba sanctions fight is that up to a point, crime does pay. It pays U.S. lobbyists, and it pays the violators who made about $40 million of total illegal sales and probably spent less than $9 million to get away with it—so far. When all is said and done, I hope the sanctions will more than offset the profits and thereby send an important signal to future diverters. The lawyers and lobbyists, as always, will come away unscathed and with their pockets bulging.

The bill I am introducing today will not empty those pockets, but it will help us count how much is in them and what nation's currency they contain. By doing so, we will bring transparency to the governing and legislative processes, and we will be performing the important service of helping the Government, the Congress and the public determine who is us and who is them, a critical first step in determining whether or not Pogo was right.

Mr. president, I ask that the text of the bill also be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 176

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) section 1(c) of the Foreign Agents Registration Act of 1938 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "For purposes of clause (1), a foreign principal shall be considered to control a person in major part if the foreign principal holds more than 50 percent equitable ownership in such person or, subject to rebuttal evidence, if the foreign principal holds at least 20 percent but not more than 50 percent equitable ownership in such person.".

(b) Section 2(b) of such Act is amended in the first sentence by striking out ", within thirty days" and all that follows through "preceding six months' period" and inserting in lieu thereof "on January 31 and July 31 of each year file with the Attorney General a supplement thereto under oath, on a form prescribed by the Attorney General, which shall set forth regarding the six-month periods ending the previous December 31, and June 30, respectively, or, if a lesser period, the period since the initial filing,.".

(c) Subsection (g) of section 3 of such Act is repealed.

(d) Section 8 of such Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(i)(1) Any person who is determined, after notice and opportunity for an administrative hearing—

"(A) to have failed to file a registration statement under section 2(a) or a supplement thereto under section 2(b),

"(B) to have omitted a material fact required to be stated therein, or

"(C) to have made a false statement with respect to such a material fact, shall be required to pay a civil penalty in an amount not less than $2,000 or more than $5,000 for each violation committed. In determining the amount of the penalty, the Attorney General shall give due consideration to the nature and duration of the violation.

"(2)(A) In conducting investigations and hearings under paragraph (1), administrative law judges may, if necessary, compel by subpoena the attendance of witnesses and the production of evidence at any designated place or hearing.

"(B) In case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpoena lawfully issued under this paragraph and, upon application by the Attorney General, an appropriate district court of the United States may issue an order requiring compliance with such subpoena and any failure to obey such order may be punished by such court as contempt thereof.".●

S. 177. A bill entitled the Cable Compulsory License Non-Discrimination Act of 1989; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CABLE COMPULSORY LICENSE NON-DISCRIMINATION ACT OF 1989

● Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, together with my distinguished colleagues from the Judiciary Committee, Senator METZENBAM and Senator SIMON, along with Senator PRESSLER, I am introducing the Cable Compulsory License Non-Discrimination Act of 1989.

By introducing this legislation, I intend to reestablish a more reasonable and balanced relationship between local television broadcasters and cable operators. My objective is to insure that cable subscribers are not denied convenient access to local TV stations in their communities. The legislation would amend Section 111 of the Copyright Act to condition the availability of cable television's compulsory license by a reasonable local station carriage requirement. Additionally, the legislation proposes a halt to the practice of some cable systems whereby some local stations are moved from long held cable channels and assigned different and undesirable channel numbers. This practice, known as channel shifting, is damaging to Independent and public stations and gives an unfair advantage to the network stations which maintain their prime dial positions.

This legislation is necessary because the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit has twice struck down the FCC's must-carry rules. These rules, the most recent of which reflected an industrywide compromise, provided that cable operators may not discriminate in the carriage of local stations by carrying some and not others when certain minimum conditions were met. I am confident that virtually every Member of Congress supports the idea of must-carry, and I urge my colleagues to join with Senators METZENBAUM, SIMON, and myself in implementing these basic rules of fair play in a constitutionally sound manner.

In 1976, Congress enacted the compulsory license which grants to a cable operator the right to take the signal of an television station and resell that signal to cable subscribers. For local TV stations the cable operator pays nothing for this compulsory license; for distant signals there is a fee set by the Copyright Royalty Tribunal paid into a general fund and is then distributed to the copyright owners.

At the time Congress enacted the compulsory license, no thought was given to the idea of must-carry because the cable industry was in its infancy and struggling to gain a foothold in the market. Today, however, 50 percent of American homes receive cable, and the question of whether or not a particular local broadcast station is carried by the local cable system may be a matter of economic life and death. It is imperative that Congress address this issue to ensure that equity and balance are restored both to the law and to the overall economic relationship between the two industries.

This legislation is not punitive toward the cable industry nor is it in any respect anticable. In fact, the cable industry as represented by its national organization, the National Cable Television Association, has been extremely cooperative on the question of must-carry. NCTA was part of the interindustry compromise on must-carry which was embodied in the most recent FCC rules on the subject that were, unfortunately, struck down by the courts. Currently negotiations are taking place between NCTA and the National Association of Broadcasters in an effort to reach a compromise on must-carry that will satisfy both cable operators and local stations. I hope they successfully reach a compromise which renders this legislation unnecessary, however, until this occurs I must continue to urge the adoption of this Act.

In order to ensure the constitutional soundness of the must-carry rules, our legislation makes them part of the congressionally created compulsory license. The compulsory license would no longer be automatically available to cable operators. To qualify for the compulsory license, cable operators would have to comply with the must-carry rules which the NCTA had agreed to and which were adopted by the FCC in 1987. Cable systems could choose not to comply with the rules, thus remaining free from any must-carry obligations. The operator could then negotiate individually with the local stations for the right to retransmit their signals. Inasmuch as a majority of program services already carried on cable involve a negotiated copyright license and the fact that distant signal compulsory license is unaffected by this legislation, this would be a realistic option.

Our legislation contains two provisions in addition to the FCC must-carry rules incorporated by reference. First, we deal with channel shifting by cable operators, a problem that has resulted from the court's initial elimination of must-carry in 1985. Under the legislation, cable operators would have to carry local stations on specified channel numbers acceptable to the station. For older stations, this would mean using the broadcast number or the cable number in use before the elimination of must-carry. For newer stations, the parties would have to reach a mutually acceptable number. In all instances, however, the must-carry local stations would have to be placed on the cable line-up in such a manner as to ensure that all televisions hooked up to the cable system could receive them.

The second addition to the 1987 FCC must carry regulations made by this legislation involves the creation of what might be termed a "may carry" area to the benefit of viewers, broadcasters, and cable operators. Currently in the definition of local and distant signals, some stations that are clearly local to a community fall within the "distant" category. This means that the cable operator must pay a fee to carry those signals, usually a sufficient disincentive not to do so. The legislation eliminates these anomalies without adding any new burden on the cable operators. It provides that no station would be deemed "distant" for any cable system located in the station's television market or within the 50-mile must-carry zone. However, this new "may carry" provision only gives the cable operator the option of carrying the signal without payment of any fee; it does not add any new stations to the must-carry obligation.

It might be possible to draft constitutionally sound must-carry rules in some other manner, although the FCC has twice failed. This approach is both novel and constitutional because it links must-carry to the compulsory license. Since the compulsory license is a congressionally enacted system, Congress has the authority to set prerequisites for participation in that system. Since Congress enacted the compulsory license to facilitate the carriage of broadcast television signals on cable systems, it is perfectly proper for Congress to enact requirements for such carriage.

I believe that the legislation embodies in its scope and its approach an appropriate response to the problems associated not only with must-carry but with a constitutionally sound vehicle. We look forward during the hearing process to working with all the affected groups, including cable operators, public television and foreign language stations so that we might improve the legislation by fine tuning each provision to insure that it strikes the proper balance between the legitimate interest of all parties.

I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 177

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Cable Compulsory License Non-Discrimination Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. AMENDMENTS.

(2) COMPLIANCE WITH MUST-CARRY RULES REQUIRED FOR COMPULSORY LICENSE PRIVILEGES WITH RESPECT TO LOCAL BROADCASTS.—Section 111(c) of title 17, United States Code is amendment in clause (1) by striking out "where the carriage of the signals" and all that follows through the end of such clause and inserting the following: "where—

"(A)(i) such secondary transmission takes place entirely within the local service area of such primary transmitter; (ii) the carriage of the signals is permissible under the rules, regulations, or authorizations of such Commission; and (iii) the cable system complies with section 640 of the Communications Act of 1934; or

"(B)(i) such secondary transmission takes place in whole or in part beyond the local service area of such primary transmitter; and (ii) the carriage of the signals is permissible under the rules, regulations, or authorizations of the Federal Communications Commission."

(b) FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION CERTIFICATION OF CARRIAGE.—Title VI of the Communications Act of 1934 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"COMPLIANCE WITH MUST-CARRY REQUIREMENTS

"SEC. 640. (a) A cable system complies with the requirements of this section if Federal Communications Commission certifies that the cable system——

"(1) carries, as part of the basic tier of cable service regularly provided to all subscribers at the minimum charge and to each television receiver on which subscribers receive cable service, in full and in their entirety, the signals of television broadcast stations in accordance with sections 76.5 and 76.51 through 76.62 of title 47 of the Code of Federal Regulations as in effect on December 10, 1987; and

"(2) carries each such station on the cable channel on which it was carried on July 19, 1985, or on the channel number assigned to such station by the Commission, at the election of the television broadcast station, or on such other channel as may be acceptable to the television broadcast station.

"(b) The requirements of this section shall not be subject to an expiration date.".

(c) DEFINITION OF LOCAL SERVICE AREA.—Section 111(f) of title 17, United States Code, is amended by striking out the fourth paragraph (containing the definition of local service area of a primary transmitter) and inserting the following:

"The 'local service area of a primary transmitter,' in the case of a television broadcast station, comprises: (1) the area in which such station is entitled to insist upon its signal being retransmitted by a cable system pursuant to the rules, regulations, and authorizations of the Federal Communications Commission in effect on April 15, 1976, or (2) the area extending 50 air miles from the reference point (as defined in 76.53 of title 47 Code of Federal Regulations) of the station's community of license, if the cable system's principal headend is located within such area, or (3) the area of dominant-influence in which the station is located, as demarcated in the ARB Television Market Analysis for the most recent year (or, if the ARB Television Market Analysis ceased to be published, such equivalent area as shall be determined by the Register of Copyrights); or in the case of a television broadcast station licensed by an appropriate governmental authority of Canada or Mexico, the area in which it would be entitled to insist upon its signal being retransmitted if it were a television broadcast station subject to such rules, regulations, and authorizations. The 'local service area of a primary transmitter', in the case of a radio broadcast station comprises the primary service area of such station, pursuant to the rules and regulations of the Federal Communications Commission.".

SEC. 3. EFFECTIVE DATE.

The amendments made by this Act shall be effective on the date of the enactment of this Act.●

By Mr. HEINZ:

S. 182. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to provide for the indexing of certain assets; to the Committee on Finance.

INDEXING OF CERTAIN ASPECTS OF INTERNAL REVENUE CODE

● Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, one of the greatest flaws in our tax system today is that we discourage longer term investments by taxing inflation.

Under the U.S. Tax Code, we legitimately tax real gains on the sale of capital assets but we also tax the false gains caused by inflation.

Nearly every economist agrees that people should not pay capital gains taxes on that portion of profits that simply arises from inflation. The bill I am introducing today would correct this injustice, by providing for the indexing of certain capital assets, including principal residences.

Mr. President, let me elaborate on the reasons for this bill. Many so-called capital gains are overtaxed because they are illusory. If an asset's worth grows only because of inflation, the owner of the property really doesn't gain anything. Only real gains, that is, gains in excess of inflation, should be taxed. The indexing bill I am introducing today will protect long-term investors from confiscatory taxation.

Today there is no incentive in the Tax Code for investors to hold their investments. Instead, investors are taxed the same if they hold the property 6 months or 6 years. We are in fact encouraging the short term view of take the money and run. This is a dangerous practice. Instead we should be encouraging people to invest for their and America's future, not to speculate on today's races or hot tips.

My bill provides for indexing of certain property that has been held for a year. Property which qualifies for indexing includes stock in a corporation, tangible property which is a capital asset held for trade or business, and principal residences.

Indexing is used for purposes of determing gain or loss on the sale of property. The deduction for depreciation, depletion, and amortization shall be made without regards to the indexing provision. The inflation adjustment factor would be based on the gross national product deflator.

My bill would not alter the basic realization and nonrecognition rules of current law. A taxpayer would take inflation adjusted gains and losses into account only when realized upon a sale, exchange or other disposition of property. Nonrecognition provisions of current law, which require realized gains or losses to be deferred, would be retained. In particular, homeowners would be permitted, subject to existing rules, to roll over gain on the sale of a principal residence, if a new principal residence is acquired within 2 years of sale of the prior principal residence.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to co-sponsor this legislation. It is time that we changed the Tax Code to reflect the fact that we are taxing inflation, and not real gain. I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the bill be included in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill is ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 182

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. INDEXING OF CERTAIN ASSETS FOR PURPOSES OF DETERMINING GAIN OR LOSS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Part II of subchapter O of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to basis rules of general application) is amended by inserting after section 1021 the following new section:

"SEC. 1022. INDEXING OF CERTAIN ASSETS FOR PURPOSES OF DETERMINING GAIN OR LOSS.

"(a) GENERAL RULE.—

"(1) INDEXED BASIS SUBSTITUTED FOR ADJUSTED BASIS.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), if an indexed asset which has been held for more than 1 year is sold or otherwise disposed of, for purposes of this title the indexed basis of the asset shall be substituted for its adjusted basis.

"(2) EXCEPTION FOR DEPRECIATION, ETC.—The deduction for depreciation, depletion, and amortization shall be determined without regard to the application of paragraph (1) to the taxpayer or any other person.

"(b) INDEXED ASSET.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this section, the term 'indexed asset' means—

"(A) stock in a corporation,

"(B) tangible property (or any interest therein) which is a capital asset used in a trade or business (as defined in section 1231(b)), or

"(C) property which is the principal residence (within the meaning of section 1034) of the taxpayer.

"(2) CERTAIN PROPERTY EXCLUDED.—For purposes of this section, the term 'indexed asset' does not include—

"(A) CREDITOR'S INTEREST.—Any interest in property which is in the nature of a creditor's interest.

"(B) OPTIONS.—Any option or other right to acquire an interest in property.

"(C) NET LEASE PROPERTY.—In the case of a lessor, net lease property (within the meaning of subsection (h)(1)).

"(D) CERTAIN PREFERRED STOCK.—Stock which is fixed and preferred as to dividends and does not participate in corporate growth to any significant extent.

"(E) STOCK IN CERTAIN CORPORATIONS.—Stock in—

"(i) an S corporation (within the meaning of section 1361),

"(ii) a personal holding company (as defined in section 542), and

"(iii) a foreign corporation.

"(3) EXCEPTION FOR STOCK IN FOREIGN CORPORATION WHICH IS REGULARLY TRADED ON NATIONAL OR REGIONAL EXCHANGE.—Clause (iii) of paragraph (2)(E) shall not apply to stock in a foreign corporation the stock of which is listed on the New York Stock Exchange, the American Stock Exchange, or any domestic regional exchange for which quotations are published on a regular basis other than—

"(A) stock of a foreign investment company (within the meaning of section 1246(b)), and

"(B) stock in a foreign corporation held by a United States person who meets the requirements of section 1248(a)(2).

"(c) INDEXED BASIS.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) INDEXED BASIS.—The indexed basis for any asset is—

"(A) the adjusted basis of the asset, multiplied by

"(B) the applicable inflation ratio.

"(2) APPLICABLE INFLATION RATIO.—The applicable inflation ratio for any asset is the percentage arrived at by dividing—

"(A) the gross national product deflator for the calendar quarter in which the disposition takes place, by

"(B) the gross national product deflator for the calendar quarter in which the asset was acquired by the taxpayer (or, if later, the calendar quarter ending December 31, 1988).

The applicable inflation ratio shall not be taken into account unless it is greater than 1. The applicable inflation ratio for any asset shall be rounded to the nearest one-tenth of 1 percent.

"(3) GROSS NATIONAL PRODUCT DEFLATOR.—The gross national product deflator for any calendar quarter is the implicit price deflator for the gross national product for such quarter (as shown in the first revision thereof).

"(d) SPECIAL RULES.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) TREATMENT AS SEPARATE ASSET.—In the case of any asset, the following shall be treated as a separate asset:

"(A) a substantial improvement to property,

"(B) in the case of stock of a corporation, a substantial contribution to capital, and

"(C) any other portion of an asset to the extent that separate treatment of such portion is appropriate to carry out the purposes of this section.

"(2) ASSETS WHICH ARE NOT INDEXED ASSETS THROUGHOUT HOLDING PERIOD.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The applicable inflation ratio shall be appropriately reduced for calendar months at any time during which the asset was not an indexed asset.

"(B) CERTAIN SHORT SALES.—For purposes of applying subparagraph (A), an asset shall be treated as not an indexed asset for any short sale period during which the taxpayer or the taxpayer's spouse sells short property substantially identical to the asset. For purposes of the preceding sentence, the short sale period begins on the day after the substantially identical property is sold and ends on the closing date for the sale.

"(3) TREATMENT OF CERTAIN DISTRIBUTIONS.—A distribution with respect to stock in a corporation which is not a dividend shall be treated as a disposition.

"(4) SECTION CANNOT INCREASE ORDINARY LOSS.—To the extent that (but for this paragraph) this section would create or increase a net ordinary loss to which section 1231(a)(2) applies or an ordinary loss to which any other provision of this title applies, such provision shall not apply. The taxpayer shall be treated as having a long-term capital loss in an amount equal to the amount of the ordinary loss to which the preceding sentence applies.

"(5) ACQUISITION DATE WHERE THERE HAS BEEN PRIOR APPLICATION OF SUBSECTION (a)(1) WITH RESPECT TO THE TAXPAYER.—If there has been a prior application of subsection (a)(1) to an asset while such asset was held by the taxpayer, the date of acquisition of such asset by the taxpayer shall be treated as not earlier than the date of the most recent such prior application.

"(6) COLLAPSIBLE CORPORATIONS.—The application of section 341(a) (relating to collapsible corporations) shall be determined without regard to this section.

"(e) CERTAIN CONDUIT ENTITIES.—

"(1) REGULATED INVESTMENT COMPANIES; REAL ESTATE INVESTMENT TRUSTS; COMMON TRUST FUNDS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Stock in a qualified investment entity shall be an indexed asset for any calendar month in the same ratio as the fair market value of the assets held by such entity at the close of such month which are indexed assets bears to the fair market value of all assets of such entity at the close of such month.

"(B) RATIO OF 90 PERCENT OR MORE.—If the ratio for any calendar month determined under subparagraph (A) would (but for this subparagraph) be 90 percent or more, such ratio for such month shall be 100 percent.

"(C) RATIO OF 10 PERCENT OR LESS.—If the ratio for any calendar month determined under subparagraph (A) would (but for this subparagraph) be 10 percent or less, such ratio for such month shall be zero.

"(D) VALUATION OF ASSETS IN CASE OF REAL ESTATE INVESTMENT TRUSTS.—Nothing in this paragraph shall require a real estate investment trust to value its assets more frequently than once each 36 months (except where such trust ceases to exist). The ratio under subparagraph (A) for any calendar month for which there is no valuation shall be the trustee's good faith judgment as to such valuation.

"(E) QUALIFIED INVESTMENT ENTITY.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'qualified investment entity' means—

"(i) a regulated investment company (within the meaning of section 851),

"(ii) a real estate investment trust (within the meaning of section 856), and

"(iii) a common trust fund (within the meaning of section 584).

"(2) PARTNERSHIPS.—In the case of a partnership, the adjustment made under subsection (a) at the partnership level shall be passed through to the partners.

"(3) SUBCHAPTER S CORPORATIONS.—In the case of an electing small business corporation, the adjustment under subsection (a) at the corporate level shall be passed through to the shareholders.

"(f) DISPOSITIONS BETWEEN RELATED PERSONS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—This section shall not apply to any sale or other disposition of property between related persons except to the extent that the basis of such property in the hands of the transferee is a substituted basis.

"(2) RELATED PERSONS DEFINED.—For purposes of this section, the term 'related persons' means—

"(A) persons bearing a relationship set forth in section 267(b), and

"(B) persons treated as single employer under subsection (b) or (c) of section 414.

"(g) TRANSFERS TO INCREASE INDEXING ADJUSTMENT OR DEPRECIATION ALLOWANCE.—If any person transfers cash, debt, or any other property to another person and the principal purpose of such transfer is—

"(1) to secure or increase an adjustment under subsection (a), or

"(2) to increase (by reason of an adjustment under subsection (a)) a deduction for depreciation, depletion, or amortization, the Secretary may disallow part or all of such adjustment or increase.

"(h) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) NET LEASE PROPERTY DEFINED.—The term 'net lease property' means leased real property where—

"(A) the term of the lease (taking into account options to renew) was 50 percent or more of the useful life of the property, and

"(B) for the period of the lease, the sum of the deductions with respect to such property which are allowable to the lessor solely by reason of section 162 (other than rents and reimbursed amounts with respect to such property) is 15 percent or less of the rental income produced by such property.

"(2) STOCK INCLUDES INTEREST IN COMMON TRUST FUND.—The term 'stock in a corporation' includes any interest in a common trust fund (as defined in section 584(a)).

"(i) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out the purposes of this section."

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for part II of subchapter O of such chapter 1 is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 1021 the following new item:

"Sec. 1022. Indexing of certain assets for purposes of determining gain or loss."

(c) ADJUSTMENT TO APPLY FOR PURPOSES OF DETERMINING EARNINGS AND PROFITS.—Subsection (f) of section 312 (relating to effect on earnings and profits of gain or loss and of receipt of tax-free distributions) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(3) EFFECT ON EARNINGS AND PROFITS OF INDEXED BASIS.—

For substitution of indexed basis for adjusted basis in the case of the disposition of certain assets after date of enactment see section 1022(a)(1)."

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to dispositions after date of enactment, in taxable years ending after such date.●

By Mr. HELMS:

S. 183. A bill to facilitate the compensation of American victims of terrorist acts committed by the Palestine Liberation Organization or any of its factions; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

COMPENSATION FOR AMERICAN VICTIMS OF PLO TERRORISM ACT

● Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, on December 14, 1988, Secretary of State George Shultz agreed to accept at face value Yasser Arafat's statement that the PLO has recognized Israel's right to exist, renounced terrorism and accepted U.N. Resolutions 242 and 338. While well intentioned, I fear the Secretary's decision risks reversing gains made by the Reagan administration in the war against terrorism and threatens the cause of peace in the Middle East.

Mr. President, I retain grave doubts about the wisdom of negotiating with the PLO. Yasser Arafat has specifically targeted Americans in terrorist attacks, provide active support to radical anti-American regimes in Cuba, Nicaragua, and North Korea, as well as to other terrorists such as the FMLN in El Salvador, and has totally failed to live up to past pledges to refrain from terrorism. Arafat is a big part of the problem in the Middle East, not part of the solution.

Completely missing fom the entire debate over negotiations with Arafat has been a discussion of America's interest—and the fact that the primary mission of the State Department is to promote the interest of America, and Americans abroad.

Mr. President, when Secretary Shultz made his decision to negotiate with the PLO, I instructed my staff to determine just how many Americans have lost their lives to PLO terrorism. From press and other reports, they compiled a list of 40 Americans killed and 59 Americans otherwise victimized by PLO and its factions. The PLO has never agreed to compensate these Americans, let alone apologize.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that this compilation of Americans either killed, wounded, raped, or held hostage by the PLO, be printed in the RECORD at the end of my remarks.

Mr. President, in spite of these murderous acts—the State Department has begun negotiations with PLO. The cost of these negotiations to the PLO has been only to make a pronouncement prepared by the State Department. And within days, top PLO operatives rushed to issue contradictory statements.

The cost to the United States, Mr. President, has been to demonstrate that terrorism—sustained campaigns of violence against innocent men, women and children—does pay.

Mr. President, I recall a proposal made by Senator Talmadge to establish an American desk at the Department of State. If there were such a desk, I'm sure its officer would have asked the same question as did I when the decision to negotiate with the PLO was made: What about the American victims of PLO terrorism—shouldn't they be our top priority? Mr. President, they should.

Mr. President, since we are now holding formal talks with the PLO, I am introducing a bill which will require that compensation of American victims by the PLO will be placed at the top of the State Department's agenda.

This seems to be the least we can do for our fellow Americans.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of this bill and the list of victims be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 183

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of the Representatives of United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Compensation for American Victims of PLO Terrorism Act."

SEC. 2. REPORT.

No later than July 1, 1989, the President shall submit to Congress a report on PLO terrorism against Americans to include—

(1) a list of all American citizens killed, wounded, raped, physically or mentally tortured, held hostage, or otherwise victimized by terrorist acts committed by the Palestine Liberation Organization or any of its factions since 1964; and

(2) an account of each terrorist act resulting in the victimization of Americans listed under paragraph (1) to include the time, place, and a specific and detailed chronology of events of each such act.

SEC. 3. COMPENSATION.

Section 530 of the Foreign Operations, Export Financing, and Related Programs

Appropriations Act, 1988, as contained in Public Law 100-202, is amended by adding before the period, the following: "; Provided, That any such negotiations or recognition of the PLO shall terminate on January 1, 1990 unless and until the President certifies that the Palestine Liberation Organization has provided to the United States an acceptable plan to provide appropriate compensation to all American victims of terrorism carried out by the Palestine Liberation Organization or any of its factions.".

By Mr. D'AMATO:

S. 184. A bill to amend title II of the Social Security Act to protect the benefit levels of individuals becoming eligible for benefits in or after 1979 by eliminating the disparity (resulting from changes made in 1977 in the benefit computation formula) between those levels and the benefit levels of persons who became eligible before 1979; to the Committee on Finance.

NOTCH AFFECT REFORM

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today in an attempt to rectify an enormous injustice in our Social Security Program. I appeal to my colleagues' sense of fairness and compassion to undo a serious inequity in payments to a select group of our senior citizens.

In the 100th Congress, I introduced S. 225, a bill designed to provide equitable Social Security payments for those individuals born between 1917 and 1921. To my dismay, the promise of security to our Nation's senior citizens did not receive the priority attention it deserved. The needs of our parents and grandparents did not, cannot, and will not fade silently away. Thus, I am again introducing legislation that will give hope to those members of our society born in the "notch" years.

The notch was an ill-conceived solution to what was an already poorly designed Social Security formula. In 1973, the board of trustees of the Social Security trust funds revealed that recent computations of forthcoming benefits were grossly incorrect. In the simplest of terms, future adjustments for benefits had been doubled indexed for inflation. This double indexing was largely responsible for a 1977 projection of a long-range deficit equal to approximately 40 percent of the projected cost of the program. Obviously, something had to be done. The result, however, was cruel and unfair.

In 1977, Social Security legislation was passed that would deny future security to thousands of senior citizens. After realizing that the previously incorrect formula would both bankrupt the system and pay disproportionately high benefits to some recipients, there was a tremendous movement backward. A new formula was calculated for the payment of benefits to individuals becoming eligible after 1978. Less than 2 full years after this change there was a further downward adjustment of benefits. This was not a great deal of time for those who were about to retire to change plans. The effect was devastating.

When the dust had settled, it was clear that if you reached 62 years of age after January 1, 1979, your hopes of a secure retirement had been dashed. Although attempts were made to lessen the impact for those immediately facing retirement—those born between 1917 and 1921—the ball had already started to roll downhill. If you were born January 1, 1917, and your neighbor was born December 31, 1916, you could be certain that even if all other factors were the same, you would receive lower benefits based on your date of birth alone.

This arbitrary inequity sealed the fate of many unsuspecting senior citizens who would now spend their so-called years of leisure short of good housing, proper medical attention, and even decent meals. A society certainly falters when, for the sole purpose of balancing budgets, it neglects the needs of those who have given of themselves in times of war and times of peace. This type of action is not the mark of a great nation.

As great a damage as has been done, however, it is not too late to rectify this situation and to send the message that we still care. My legislation would compensate for some of this lost income by incorporating 3 more years of employment after age 62 for computation in Social Security benefits. This would be made available for those who reached 62 in 1979 or later. It also would establish an income ceiling of $29,700 for those 3 years after eligibility starts, and allow for a lump-sum retroactive payment for those who have forgone their rightful benefits since 1979. The $29,700 income ceiling allows for a justifiable benefit increase now. Moreover, since this figure remains constant, it prevents mammoth escalations in the future with ample time for these future retirees to plan for their retirement years.

Every day we delay in our efforts to correct the notch we risk missing the chance to return these benefits to those who deserve them. Will this Government abandon those who fought so hard to survive the Great Depression and to save our country in World War II? Does a free and strong nation respond to its elderly with inequitable rewards? I urge may colleagues to join me in this struggle, and I ask unanimous consent that my bill be printed in the RECORD in its entirety at the conclusion of my remarks.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 184

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) section 215(a)(4) of the Social Security Act is amended—

(1) by striking out "who had wages or self-employment income credited for one or more years prior to 1979" in subparagraph (B) and inserting in lieu thereof "who has 27 or more quarters of coverage based on wages and self-employment income credited for years prior to 1979".

(2) by striking out "prior to 1984" in clause (i) of subparagraph (B) and inserting in lieu thereof "after December 1978";

(3) by inserting "as in effect in December 1984" after "section 215(d)" in clause (ii) of subparagraph (B); and

(4) by striking out the last sentence.

(b) The first sentence of section 215(a)(5) of such Act is amended—

(1) by striking out "(other than an individual described in paragraph (4)(B))";

(2) by striking out "except that," and inserting in lieu thereof "except that (A)"; and

(3) by inserting before the period at the end thereof the following: ", and (B) in the case of an individual described in paragraph (4)(B), such individual's average monthly wage shall be computed as provided by subsection (b)(4)".

SEC. 2. The first sentence of section 215(b)(4) of the Social Security Act is amended by striking out "except that" and all that follows and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "except that—

"(A) paragraph (2)(A) (as then in effect) shall be deemed to provide that the number of an individual's 'benefit computation years' may not exceed 25;

"(B) paragraph (2)(C) (as then in effect) shall be deemed to provide that an individual's 'computation base years' may include only calendar years in the period after 1950 (or 1936 if applicable) and prior to 1979, plus the 3 calendar years after 1978 for which the total of such individual's wages and self-employment income is the largest; and

"(C) the 'contribution and benefit base' (under section 230) with respect to remuneration paid in (and taxable years beginning in) any calendar year after 1981 shall be deemed to be $29,700.".

SEC. 3. Section 215(f)(7) of the Social Security Act is amended by striking out "For purposes of recomputing a primary insurance amount determined under subsection (a) or (d) (as so in effect) in the case of an individual to whom those subsections apply by reason of subsection (a)(4)(B)" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "For purposes of recomputing a primary insurance amount determined under subsection (a) (as so in effect) in the case of an individual to whom that subsection applies by reason of subsection (a)(4)(B)(i) as in effect after December 1978, the average monthly wage shall be determined as provided by subsection (b)(4). For purposes of recomputing a primary insurance amount determined under subsection (d) (as so in effect) in the case of an individual to whom that subsection applies by reason of subsection (a)(4)(B)(ii)".

SEC. 4. Section 215(i)(4) of the Social Security Act is amended by striking out "(but the application" and all that follows down through "paragraph (4) of that subsection)".

SEC. 5. (a) Section 215(a)(7)(A) of the Social Security Act is amended by inserting "or (by reason of paragraph (4)(B)(i)) under section 215(a) as in effect in December 1978" after "under paragraph (1) of this subsection" in the matter preceding clause (i).

(b)(1) Section 215(a)(7)(B)(i) of such Act is amended by striking out the first sentence and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "In applying subparagraph (A) in the determination of an individual's primary insurance amount, there shall first be computed (I) in the case of an individual whose primary insurance amount would be computed under paragraph (1) of this subsection, an amount which is equal to the individual's primary insurance amount under that paragraph, reduced by substituting (for purposes of this computation) the applicable percent specified in clause (ii) of this subparagraph for the percentage of the individual's average indexed monthly earnings established by subparagraph (A)(i) of paragraph (1), or (II) in the case of an individual whose primary insurance amount would be computed under section 215(a) as in effect in December 1978 by reason of paragraph (4)(B)(i) of this subsection, an amount which is equal to the individual's primary insurance amount under that section, reduced by a percentage equivalent to the percentage reduction which (as determined under regulations prescribed by the Secretary) would occur under subclause (I) if such primary insurance amount were a primary insurance amount under paragraph (1) of this subsection.".

(2) The second sentence of section 215(a)(7)(B)(i) of such Act is amended by inserting "or (by reason of paragraph (4)(B)(i)) under section 215(a) as in effect in December 1978" after "under paragraph (1) of this subsection".

(3) The third sentence of section 215(a)(7)(B)(i) of such Act is amended by inserting ", or (by reason of paragraph (4)(B)(i)) under section 215(a) as in effect in December 1978," after "under paragraph (1) of this subsection".

SEC. 6. (a) The amendments made by this Act shall be effective as though they had been included or reflected in section 201 of the Social Security Amendments of 1977.

(b) In any case where an individual is entitled on the date of the enactment of this Act to old-age insurance benefits under title II of the Social Security Act which were computed—

(1) under section 215 of that Act as in effect (by reason of the Social Security Amendments of 1977) after December 1978, or

(2) under section 215 of that Act as in effect prior to January 1979 by reason of subsection (a)(4)(B) of such section (as amended by the Social Security Amendments of 1977), the Secretary of Health and Human Services (notwithstanding section 215(f)(1) of the Social Security Act) shall recompute such individual's primary insurance amount so as to take into account the amendments made by this Act, and shall pay to such individual in a lump sum any additional amount to which such individual is entitled (for the period beginning with the first month for which such individual was entitled to such benefits and ending with the month preceding the first month with respect to which such recomputation is effective) by reason of such amendments. No recomputation of an individual's primary insurance amount under the preceding sentence shall have the effect of reducing or otherwise affecting any monthly insurance benefit which is payable under title II of the Social Security Act to any other person on the basis of such individual's wages and self-employment income for any month before January 1985.●

By Mr. DIXON:

S. 185. A bill to amend title 18 of the United States Code to punish as a Federal criminal offense the crimes of international parental child abduction; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

INTERNATIONAL PARENTAL CHILD ABDUCTION AS A FEDERAL CRIMINAL OFFENSE

● Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I rise to introduce legislation designed to fill the vacuum in current Federal law which allows the unabated international parental abduction of more than 400 children each year. The victims are children from every State of this country, who have been kidnaped and are being held hostage in countries around the world. International parental child abduction is a crime, and it should be recognized as such. This bill makes it a Federal felony.

The magnitude of this problem is shocking. The State Department has recorded over 2,700 of these cases since 1975, but many experts believe this number is low. We simply do not know how many cases have not been reported. Some people believe the total is closer to 10,000. The rate at which this crime is increasing is disturbing. Since May 1983, the number of cases known to the State Department has jumped 84 percent. In my home State of Illinois alone, the number shot up 60 percent in 1987. Ten more cases were documented in Illinois in 1988. There were nearly 400 new cases nationwide last year.

Who is hurt by international abduction? First, the child. Child psychologists from the Illinois State Police assert that the trauma associated with an abduction of this kind, and the subsequent deprivation of one parent's love, is one of the most horrendous forms of child abuse. After they are kidnaped, the children are frequently told that their other parent has abandoned them, hates them, and never wants to see them again.

Second, the left-behind parent suffers as well. They are left with an empty life, deprived of the children they loved and that gave them reason to live. Certainly, this experience is one of the most tragic any parent can suffer.

Yet, while the majority of the States recognize this crime as a felonious offense, the Federal Government still does not. The absence of Federal legislation denies the victim parent Federal assistance and allows the abductor to escape Federal prosecution.

There are at least four reasons this legislation is so urgently needed. First, it will provide a necessary deterrent to parents contemplating an abduction. Currently, the abducting parent can flee to safe havens around the world knowing that the U.S. Government will not pursue them. While this law will obviously not prevent every abduction, each abduction deterred is extremely significant for both the young child and their American parent.

Second, without Federal criminal charges, extradition of these abductors is not possible. This legislation will enable the United States to extradite parental child abductors in many cases where extradition treaties currently exist.

Third, the criminalization of international parental child abduction will strengthen the hand of the State Department when negotiating for the return of these children. This legislation will put an important new tool into the hands of State Department officials. If this bill passes, a U.S. Ambassador will be armed with a Federal warrant when asking a foreign government to intervene and assist in the return of an American child. This will greatly strengthen our negotiating position.

Finally, by passing this measure, we will send a strong message to the international community that the United States views international parental child abduction as a serious crime, and will not tolerate the kidnaping of its young citizens.

Let me offer some background on where we have come on this issue.

In 1987, I met with Joan Clark, the Assistant Secretary of State for Consular Affairs, to impress upon her my deep concerns about the lack of assistance this Government provided parents whose children had been abducted. At that time the State Department had been little more than a legal referral service. They only conducted a "whereabouts and welfare search," and provided a list of attorneys working in the country to which the children were taken. That is all they did. They were simply a source of information. Nothing was done to help the custodial parent bring their child home.

Mr. President, the problem of international parental child abduction was such a low priority at the State Department there was not one person in any U.S. Embassy, anywhere in the world, specifically assigned the job of trying to resolve these cases and recover these young American citizens. Furthermore, the State Department did not even have a central desk in Washington to assist in handling these cases. Instead, victim parents faced an endless line of new faces. Again and again they had to fully explain their problem and ask for help getting their children. Almost every time they heard the same answer, "There is nothing we can do."

Mr. President, through my office I heard the same story from hundreds of frustrated and distraught parents. "There is nothing we can do" is just not good enough, not from a country as great, and with as much influence in the world, as our own. So I met with Assistant Secretary Clark to see what could be done.

Since then, the State Department has implemented a number of significant improvements in the way it handles international parental child abduction cases. First, the Department established a unit within the Consular Affairs Office to coordinate and direct action on these cases. Nereida Vasquez and Consuela Pachon staff the unit and are to be commended for the work they have done since the unit was established. Second, the Department assigned one person in each U.S. mission around the world to be responsible for actively working on behalf of American parents to get these children back. At last the State Department has introduced some accountability into the system. There is someone in Washington, and someone in each country of the world, that is responsible. Someone that you can call, or I can call, or any constituent can call to ask how a particular case is progressing. If nothing is happening, someone must now say why.

Further, Ms. Clark has written every U.S. Ambassador to emphasize the importance of international abduction cases. The Ambassadors have been instructed to use every avenue, including legal and diplomatic, to pursue the return of these children. Finally, each post has received a list of the cases in that country.

Mr. President, I am pleased that the State Department has made these important changes, and I credit Assistant Secretary Clark for personally directing this restructuring. However, the proof is in the pudding. These structural changes underscore a commitment within the Department to aggressively pursue these cases. I hope each person charged with that responsibility will do so with all the resourcefulness and vigor they possess. I will continue to watch carefully, and hopefully.

The State Department cannot do this job alone. Congress must do its part as well.

Last year, Congress passed implementing legislation for the Hague Convention on International Parental Child Abduction. I am proud to have been the leader in the effort to pass that legislation. As a signator to the convention, the United States joins other ratifying nations in the effort to return abducted children to the parent who has legal custody. In effect, the countries who have signed the convention will recognize each others custody decrees, thereby facilitating the return of abducted children.

The Hague convention is a great tool for positive resolution of these cases, but most countries are not signatories to the convention which means other means of resolving these cases must be pursued. My Federal felony bill is such a means.

Mr. President, every month, 30 to 40 more young Americans are kidnaped and held hostage in countries around the world. In 1987, the Senate responded to this tragic problem by passing, without opposition, language identical to this bill as an amendment to the Foreign Relations Authorization Act. Unfortunately, this measure was dropped in conference. Our colleagues on the House Judiciary Committee insisted on holding hearings before agreeing to this legislation, and I respect their desire to carefully examine such a significant change in the law. Now, I urge both the House and the Senate to act swiftly to honor the commitments made at that time to consider this legislation expeditiously. It is time for Congress to act. Each week, eight more children are abducted. How many of those could be prevented by this bill?

Let me just take a moment to call your attention to one of the grim realities of this problem. Three years ago to the day, a constituent of mine, Patricia Roush, saw her two daughters, Alia and Aisha, off for an overnight stay with their father, a Saudi national, who at that time was legally divorced from Pat, but had gained limited visitation rights. Pat had legal custody of the children. That cold January night was the last time Pat Roush saw her children. Her ex-husband stole the children out of the country on a plane to Saudi Arabia. He had obtained passports for the children from the Saudi Government. Pat Roush's case is heartbreaking.

She has not seen her children since January 25, 1986. In 3 years, she has talked to her children just once. After 3 years, she still does not know where her children live, if they attend school, what they are told about their mother, of if she will ever see them again.

Hers, Mr. President, is one of thousands of cases that are continuous nightmares for such parents, and enduring tragedies for the abducted children.

Just as Pat never gives up hope that she will get her children back, where they rightfully belong, so must we, as a government, never cease fighting for the return of abducted children. I urge my colleagues to join me in this fight for the children of Pat Roush, and the children of American custodial parents across the country. They are counting on us.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 185

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. OFFENSE.

(a) Chapter 55 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"§ 1204. International Parental Child Abduction

"(a) For purposes of this section—

"(1) the term 'child' means a person under the age of 18 at the time the offense occurred;

"(2) the term 'detains' means taking or retaining physical custody of a child, whether or not the child resists or objects; and

"(3) the term 'lawful custodian' means—

"(A) a person or persons granted legal custody of a child or entitled to physical possessions of a child pursuant to a court order; or

"(B) the mother of the child when the parents have not been married, the father's paternity has not been established by a court of law, and no other person has been granted custody of the child by a court of law.

"(b) Whoever—

"(1) intentionally removes a child from, or conceals or detains a child outside the jurisdiction of the United States without the consent of the person who has been granted sole or joint custody, care, or possession of the child;

"(2) intentionally removes a child from the jurisdiction of the United States in violation of a valid court order which prohibits the removal of the child from a local jurisdiction, State or the United States;

"(3) intentionally removes a child from, or conceals or detains a child outside the jurisdiction of the United States without the consent of the mother or lawful custodian of the child if the person is a putative father who has not established paternity of the child;

"(4) being a parent of a child born out of wedlock if the paternity of the father has been established by a court of law but there has been no order of custody, removes a child from, or conceals or detains a child outside the jurisdiction of the United States without the consent of the child's other parent;

"(5) intentionally removes a child from, or conceals or detains a child outside the jurisdiction of the United States after filing a petition or being served with process in an action affecting marriage or paternity but prior to the issuance of a temporary or final order determining custody;

"(6) being a parent of the child, and if the parents of such child are or have been married and there has been no court order of custody, conceals the child for 30 days outside the jurisdiction of the United States, and fails to make reasonable attempts within the 30-day period to notify the other parent to the whereabouts of the child or to arrange reasonable visitation or contact with the child;

"(7) being a parent of the child, and where the parents of the child are or have been married and there has been no court order of custody, conceals or detains a child outside of the jurisdiction of the United States when the child was taken with physical force or the threat of physical force;

"(8) at the expiration of visitation rights outside of the jurisdiction of the United States, intentionally fails or refuses to return or impedes the return of the child to the jurisdiction of the United States;

"(9) conceals, detains, or removes the child outside the jurisdiction of the United States for payment or promise of payment at the instruction of a person who has not been granted custody of the child by a court of law;

"(10) being a parent of the child, instructs another person to conceal, detain or remove a child when that act when committed by the parent would be a violation of this Act; or

"(11) aids or abets any person violating paragraphs (1) through (10), shall be guilty of child abduction and shall be fined in accordance with this title or imprisoned not more than 3 years, or both.

"(c) It shall be an affirmative defense under this section that—

"(1) the defendant acted within the provisions of a valid court order granting the defendant legal custody or visitation rights and that order was in effect at the time of the offense;

"(2) no court within the United States could exercise jurisdiction to determine custody of the child pursuant to the provisions of the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act;

"(3) the defendant has physical custody of the child pursuant to a court order granting legal custody or visitation rights and failed to return the child as a result of circumstances beyond the defendant's control, and the defendant notified or made a reasonable attempt to notify the other parent or lawful custodian of the child of such circumstances within 24 hours after the visitation period had expired and returned the child as soon as possible; or

"(4) the defendant was fleeing an incidence or pattern of domestic violence.

"(d) If, upon sentencing, the court finds evidence of any of the following aggravating factors:

"(1) that the defendant abused or neglected the child during the concealment, detention, or removal of the child or placed or caused the child to be placed in the care of another person who abused or neglected the child;

"(2) that the defendant inflicted or threatened to inflict physical harm on a parent or lawful custodian of the child or on the child with intent to cause such parent or lawful custodian to discontinue criminal prosecution of the defendant under this section;

"(3) that the defendant demanded payment in exchange for return of the child or demanded that the defendant be relieved of the financial or legal obligation to support the child in exchange for return of the child;

"(4) that the defendant has previously been convicted of a State or Federal child abduction offense; or

"(5) that the defendant committed the abduction while armed with a deadly weapon or the taking of the child resulted in serious bodily injury to another, the sentence imposed by the court in accordance with this title shall be more severe than in the absence of such factors.

"(e) There is criminal jurisdiction over conduct prohibited by this Act if the court has jurisdiction to determine custody of the child subject to the prohibited conduct pursuant to the provisions of the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act.".

(b) The table of sections for chapter 55 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"1204. International parental child abduction".

SEC. 2. EFFECT OF PRIOR REMOVAL.

If a child was removed from the jurisdiction of the United States prior to the date of enactment of this Act, charges under section 1204 of title 18, United States Code, as added by this Act, may be approved only in cases involving the concealing or detaining of the child in violation of a court order that existed at the time of the child's removal from the jurisdiction of the United States.

SEC. 3. EFFECTIVE DATE.

This Act and the amendments made by this Act shall take effect 90 days from the date of enactment of this Act.●

By Mr. DIXON (for himself and Mr. LEVIN):

S. 186. A bill to correct imbalances in certain States in the Federal tax to Federal benefit ratio reallocating the distribution of Federal spending, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Government Affairs.

STATE MINIMUM RETURN ACT OF 1989

● Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I rise today to reintroduce the State Minimum Return Act along with my colleagues Senators GRASSLEY, LEVIN, and RIEGLE. This act will correct imbalances in the amount of Federal spending that certain States receive in return for the tax dollar they send to Washington.

Although this bill contains complex language and provisions, I want to assure my colleagues and the taxpayers of the United States, at the outset, that the bill does not require any increases in spending. Rather, the bill reallocates funds among States within existing spending limits, so as not to increase the deficit.

This bill addresses a very important issue which has caused real hardship in my State of Illinois, and in many other States, principally in the Midwest and Northeast. In 1987, for example, Illinois received only 70 cents in Federal spending for each tax dollar it sent to the Federal Government. For the past 30 years, this ratio has been well below $1. The unfortunate truth is that Illinois and other disadvantaged States are sending billions of dollars to Washington every year that they never see again.

Many of these disadvantaged States were among those that suffered most during the recession of 1982. They are the States whose economies are growing more slowly than the national average. They can ill afford the ongoing drain of billions of dollars to Washington.

Federal fiscal policy must be changed. It should not be designed to make a bad situation worse. Rather, it should lend a hand to States whose economies have needed the most help in the recent past.

The bill I am introducing will adjust Federal spending in the categories of Government contracts and grant programs. Contracts and grants accounted for $275 billion of the Federal budget in fiscal 1984, and are the chief sources of imbalances among States. These spending categories help stimulate economic growth, creating jobs and spurring private investment. Grants and contracts cause a ripple effect in the economy of a community. The award of a Government contract not only creates jobs in the company in which the work is performed. It also increases business and creates jobs in local companies supplying goods to the contractor.

Grant programs that will be eligible for this 10 percent adjustment include those administered by the Departments of Interior, Transportation, Agriculture—except farm income supports—the Environmental Protection Agency, Housing and Urban Development, and the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers. These are the grants that create jobs and economic growth in States and communities.

For grant programs that require an income test to determine eligibility for assistance, such as Aid to Families With Dependent Children, this bill will require an increase of 1 percent per year in the share of each eligible State. This increase will ease the fiscal burdens on the State governments of eligible States, which share the cost of these programs; let me add that the bill requires that benefit levels for needy individuals in all States may not be reduced as a result of a shift in the Federal share of these program funds among States.

Disadvantaged States will also receive additional moneys in the area of Federal contracts. With respect to competitive procurements and noncompetitive procurements, the head of each Federal Agency will be required to award a contract to a firm that will do the work in a disadvantaged State if it submits a bid that is lower or equivalent to a bid from a firm that would do the work elsewhere. This means that if a metal cabinet for a Government office or a rubber fuel line for an Air Force plane can be made in illinois more cheaply, or at the same price, than it can be made in a State that gets more than its fair share of spending from the Federal Government, that cabinet or fuel line is going to be made in Illinois by workers and businesses in Illinois.

What is being suggested here is a reallocation of Federal moneys among the States, rather than the creation of a new Government spending program. In addition, in order not to penalize the needy and other citizens who currently receive direct Government benefits in all States, the bill will not affect payments to individuals by the Federal Government. Such programs as Social Security, Food Stamps, Supplemental Security Income, Pell grants, lower income housing assistance, veterans assistance, black lung disability, guaranteed student loan interest subsidies, retirement payments for railroad workers, and Federal workers' compensation, retirement and disability, and employee life and health insurance will not be affected by the bill.

The State Minimum Return Act is an attempt to develop the comprehensive approach we need to end what amounts to a multibillion dollar penalty being paid each year by Illinois and many other States. By any measure, there is every reason that these States should be getting back their fair share of the Federal budget.

I urge my colleagues to join me in this effort to help these disadvantaged States get back a fair share of their tax dollars.

I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 186

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "State Minimum Return Act of 1989".

STATEMENT OF POLICY

SEC. 2. It is the purpose of this Act to provide, within existing budgetary limits, authority to reallocate the distribution of certain Federal spending to various States in order to ensure by the end of fiscal year 1994 that each State receive in each fiscal year an amount of Federal expenditures equal to a minimum of 90 percent of the Federal tax burden attributable to such State for such fiscal year.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 3. As used in this Act—

(1) The term "Director" means the Director of the Office of Management and Budget.

(2) The term "Federal agency" means any agency defined in section 551(1) of title 5, United States Code.

(3) The term "State" means each of the several States and the District of Columbia.

(4) The term "historic share" means the average percentage share of Federal expenditures received by any State during the most recent three fiscal years.

(5) The term "Federal expenditures" means all outlays by the Federal Government as defined in section 3(1) of the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974 (2 U.S.C. 622(1)).

(6) The term "Federal tax revenues" means all revenues collected pursuant to the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.

(7) The term "need-based program" means any program which results in direct payment to individuals and which involves an income test to help determine the eligibility of an individual for assistance under such program.

DESIGNATION OF ELIGIBLE STATES

SEC. 4. (a) Any State shall be eligible for a positive reallocation of Federal expenditures described in section 5 and received by such State under section 7(a), if such State, for any fiscal year, has a Federal expenditure to Federal tax ratio which is less than 90 percent.

(b) Any State shall be eligible for a positive reallocation of Federal expenditures described in section 5 and received by such State under paragraph (1) of section 7(a), if such State, for any fiscal year, has a Federal expenditure to Federal tax ratio which is less than 100 percent but greater than or equal to 90 percent.

(c) During each fiscal year, the Director after consultation with the Secretary of the Treasury and the Director of the Census Bureau, shall determine the eligibility of any State under this section using the most recent fiscal year data and estimated data available concerning Federal tax revenues and Federal expenditures attributable to such State. The Secretary of the Treasury shall determine the attribution of Federal tax revenues to each State after consultation with the Comptroller General of the United States.

(d) For purposes of determining the eligibility of any State under subsection (c), any water or power program in which the Federal Government, through Government corporations, provides water or power to any State at less than market price shall be taken into account in computing such State's Federal expenditure to Federal tax ratio by characterizing as an imputed Federal expenditure the difference between the market price and the program's actual price of providing such water or power to such State.

DESIGNATION OF REALLOCABLE FEDERAL EXPENDITURES

SEC. 5. All Federal expenditures in any fiscal year shall be subject to reallocation to ensure the objective described in section 2 with respect to eligible States designated under section 4, except for such expenditures with respect to the following:

(1) Water and power programs which are described in section 4(d).

(2) Compensation and allowances of officers and employees of the Federal Government.

(3) Maintenance of Federal Government buildings and installations.

(4) Offsetting receipts.

(5) Programs for which the Federal Government assumes the total cost and in which a direct payment is made to a recipient other than a governmental unit. Such programs include:

(A) Social Security, including disability, retirement, survivors insurance, unemployment compensation, and Medicare, including hospital and supplementary medical insurance;

(B) Supplemental Security Income;

(C) Food Stamps;

(D) Black Lung Disability;

(E) National Guaranteed Student Loan interest subsidies;

(F) Pell grants;

(G) lower income housing assistance;

(H) social insurance payments for railroad workers;

(I) railroad retirement;

(J) excess earned income tax credits;

(K) veterans assistance, including pensions, service connected disability, nonservice connected disability, educational assistance, dependency payments, and pensions for spouses and surviving dependents;

(L) Federal workers' compensation;

(M) Federal retirement and disability;

(N) Federal employee life and health insurance; and

(O) farm income support programs.

REALLOCATION AUTHORITY

SEC. 6. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, during any fiscal year the head of each Federal agency shall, after consultation with the Director, make such reallocations of expenditures described in section 5 to eligible States designated under section 4 as are necessary to ensure the objective described in section 2.

(b) Notwithstanding any other provision of law and to the extent necessary in the administration of this Act, the head of each Federal agency shall waive any administrative provision with respect to allocation, allotments, reservations, priorities, or planning and application requirements (other than audit requirements) for the expenditures reallocated under this Act.

(c) The head of each Federal agency having responsibilities under this Act is authorized and directed to cooperate with the Director in the administration of the provisions of this Act.

REALLOCATION MECHANISMS

SEC. 7. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, for purposes of this Act, during any fiscal year reallocations of expenditures required by section 6 shall be accomplished in the following manner:

(1)(A) With respect to procurement contracts, and beginning in fiscal year 1992 subcontracts in excess of $25,000, the head of each Federal agency shall—

(i) identify qualified firms in eligible States designated under section 4 and disseminate any information to such firms necessary to increase participation by such firms in the bidding for such contracts and subcontracts,

(ii) in order to ensure the objective described in section 2, increase the national share of such contracts and subcontracts for each eligible State designated under section 4(a) by 10 percent each fiscal year, and

(iii) thirty days after the end of each fiscal year, report to the Director regarding progress made during such fiscal year to increase the share of such contracts and subcontracts for such eligible States, including the percentage increase achieved under clause (ii) and if the goal described in clause (ii) is not attained, the reasons therefor.

Within ninety days after the end of each fiscal year, the Director shall review, evaluate, and report to the Congress as to the progress made during such fiscal year to increase the share of procurement contracts and subcontracts the preponderance of the value of which has been performed in such eligible States.

(B) With respect to each fiscal year, if any Federal agency does not attain the goal described in subparagraph (A)(ii), then during the subsequent fiscal year such agency shall report to the Director prior to the awarding of any contract or subcontract described in subparagraph (A) to any firm in an ineligible State the reasons such contract or subcontract was not awarded to any firm in an eligible State.

(C) In the case of any competitive procurement contract or subcontract, the head of the contracting Federal agency shall award such contract or subcontract to the lowest bid from a qualified firm that will perform the preponderance of the value of the work in an eligible State designated under section 4 if the bid for such contract or subcontract is lower or equivalent to any bid from any qualified firm that will perform the preponderance of the value of the work in an ineligible State.

(D) In the case of any noncompetitive procurement contract or subcontract, the head of each Federal agency shall identify and award such contract or subcontract to a qualified firm that will perform the preponderance of the value of the work in an eligible State designated under section 4 and that complete such contract or subcontract at a lower or equivalent price as any qualified firm that will perform the preponderance of the value of the work in an ineligible State.

(E) For purposes of this paragraph, in the case of any procurement contract or subcontract, any firm shall be qualified if—

(i) such firm has met the elements of responsibility provided for in section 8(b)(7) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 637(b)(7)) as determined by the head of the contracting Federal agency to be necessary to complete the contract or subcontract in a timely and satisfactory manner, and

(ii) with respect to any prequalification requirement, such firm has been notified in writing of all standards which a prospective contractor must satisfy in order to become qualified, and upon request, is provided a prompt opportunity to demonstrate the ability of such firm to meet such specified standards.

(F) In order to reallocate expenditures with respect to subcontracts as required by subparagraph (A), each Federal agency shall collect necessary data to identify such subcontracts beginning in fiscal year 1991.

(2)(A) With respect to need-based programs, any eligible State designated under section 4(a) shall receive 101 percent of such State's historic share with respect to such programs.

(B) With respect to all other expenditures described in section 5, including all grants administered by the Department of Transportation, the Department of the Interior, the Department of Agriculture, the Environmental Protection Agency, and the United States Army Corps of Engineers, and funds provided under general revenue sharing, any eligible State designated under section 4(a) shall receive 110 percent of such State's historic share with respect to such expenditures.

(b)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), no reallocation shall be made under this section with respect to expenditures for any program to any State in any fiscal year which results in a reduction of 10 percent or more of the amount of such expenditures to such State.

(2) No reallocation shall be made under subsection (a)(2)(A) with respect to expenditures for any need-based program to any State in any fiscal year which results in a reduction of 1 percent or more of the amount of expenditures to such State for any such program.

(c) No reallocation shall be made under the provisions of this Act which will result in any Federal expenditure to Federal tax ratio of any State being reduced below 90 percent.

(d) With respect to any need-based program eligible for reallocation under subsection (a)(2)(A), notwithstanding any reallocation of such program funds that may be mandated under this section, no State or eligible governmental unit may reduce program benefits to the ultimate beneficiaries of such program or change such program's eligibility requirements because of such reallocation of funds.

AMENDMENTS

SEC. 8. No provision of law shall explicitly or implicitly amend the provisions of this Act unless such provision specifically refers to this Act.

EXTENSION OF CONSOLIDATED FEDERAL FUNDS REPORT

SEC. 9. Subsection (a) of section 6202 of title 31, United States Code, is amended by striking out "and 1990" and inserting in lieu thereof "1990, 1991, 1992, 1993, and 1994".

STUDY

SEC. 10. (a) The Secretary of the Treasury or a delegate of the Secretary shall conduct a study on the impact of Federal spending, tax policy, and fiscal policy on State economies and the economic growth rate of States and regions of the United States.

(b) The report of the study required by subsection (a) shall be submitted to Congress not later than December 31, 1989.

EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 11. The provisions of this Act shall take effect for fiscal years beginning after the date of the enactment of this Act.●

By Mr. HEINZ:

S. 187. A bill to amend the Social Security Act to provide for the improvement of child care, to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to improve the child care tax credit, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

PARTNERSHIPS IN CHILD CARE ACT

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, we are a Nation revolutionized by the emergence of the working woman and the two-worker family. The traditional "Leave It to Beaver" household of the 1950's, where dad works and mom stays home with the kids, applies to approximately 1 in 10 families today. What once was a given—the family as child caregiver—now is an exception. Child care ranks with rent, food, and utilities as an unavoidable cost of living for the vast majority of American families.

Last fall we left off debate on how best to help meet these changing family needs with several proposals before us. Among the legislative solutions was one introduced by my colleague from Oregon, Senator PACKWOOD. I look forward to working with him on this issue in the Finance Committee again in this Congress. Toward that end, Mr. President, I rise today with what I believe is a reasonable compromise to the dilemma of day care costs—the Partnerships in Child Care Act of 1989.

The Partnerships Act is consistent with the established principle of job-related tax breaks for working parents. Congress has acknowledged the now ordinary need for child care as a potentially extraordinary job-related expense. The Child and Dependent Care Tax Credit and the Social Services Grant Program—Title XX—of the Social Security Act currently channel financial relief to millions of working parents. But to extend this principle of child care support to its logical conclusion, we need to widen the pool and increase the flow to help millions more. Two undisputed trends fuel this need.

First, the reality of the 1980's is the working mother. Six in ten women with young children work outside their homes today, compared to 1 in 10 in 1950. Many of these women head single-parent households, with average incomes just over $10,000. Studies show most mothers who seek employment do so out of sheer economic necessity—to make ends meet for their families.

Second, child care is expensive. With average annual per child costs topping $3,000, it is easy to understand how options become limited and sacrifices made. A constitutent from Harrisburg summarized the problem when she wrote,

> For most families, finding affordable, quality day care is difficult, if not impossible. Out of desperation, too many parents are forced to leave their children in situations they realize are far less than satisfactory.

The Partnerships in Child Care Act builds on existing programs and further clarifies the Federal Government's proper role as a facilitator of affordable, quality day care for America's working parents.

In my own State of Pennsylvania, there are several million working families who need access to quality day care. The Partnerships in Child Care Act will guarantee that more of those working parents will receive the help they need. And while it acknowledges a Federal role in setting standards for quality, the act gives parents the freedom they deserve in choosing day care for their children.

The Partnerships Act does not give up on the American working family, Mr. President, but shores it up. It recognizes that a pluralistic society needs pluralistic child care settings.

Mr. President, last fall I was able to visit six centers in my State. At an employer-based center in downtown Pittsburg, offering both full day and after school care—in a nondenominational preschool facility in suburban Reading—I saw the benefits of a flexible, community oriented policy of shared responsibility. The Partnerships Act would help each of these centers and hundreds more like them throughout America. The act represents an investment in this Nation's most precious resource—our children—and a commitment to their safe and productive future.

Mr. President, I believe the Partnership Act addresses the major flaws in both the ABC bill introduced by my colleague from Connecticut, Senator DODD, and the family tax credit proposals which spread resources too thin.

Senator DODD's proposal essentially federalizes child care by funneling dollars to a prescribed range of institutional settings. These settings are defined by a bureaucracy's assumption of what constitutes appropriate care.

Family tax credits have merit as a Federal policy to help low-income families with children. But this tax credit for homemakers does not target those facing the real crisis: Families paying the additional costs of child care outside the home.

Mr. President, to briefly highlight the major provisions of the Partnerships Act, it first addresses the issue of day care costs by increasing the child and dependent care tax credit from 30 to 40 percent for low-income families and the credit will be made refundable. A refundable credit is paid even when there is no tax liability, as would be the case for many working poor families. Costs up to $4,800 for two or more children could be counted toward the credit.

Under this proposal, parents may elect to receive the refundable credit throughout the year to meet the costs of care each month. The IRS will be required to notify workers of this option. Current law will be retained for families with incomes above $32,000 per year.

An additional $300 million each year in title XX funds will be targeted for use in recruiting and training day care workers, establishing informational and referral networks, promoting public/private partnerships, and establishing loan programs to help child care providers meet State quality standards.

The act addresses the issue of access through as many as 10 HHS demonstration programs to create a continuum of services for infancy through adolescence.

Mr. President, it is not enough to target resources at child care. We should examine the quality of care provided, as well.

For this reason, the Partnerships Act creates a coordinator of child care within HHS, to collect and publish State child care standards and implement a national child care data collection system.

In addition, the Secretary will establish a National Commission on Child Care to conduct a nationwide quality assessment of day care and make recommendations for model child care standards. The Commission will further report on the impact of these model standards on the costs and availability of day care and seek out a strategy for recruiting, training, and retaining quality child care personnel.

A third critical task for the Commission will be a report on alternatives for Federal, State, and local governments and the private sector to expand day care initiatives in the workplace. Addressing the needs of children and families makes good business sense, yet only 3,000 U.S. employers provide some child care support for their employees—less than one-half of 1 percent of our Nation's 6 million employers.

Mr. President, overall, this bill is a modest investment in a sound Federal partnership with the American family and the American business community. The estimated $2.4 billion price tag would help upward of 7 million additional families. The ABC bill, in contrast, would help less than 1 million additional children for the same cost. The Partnerships Act is an investment in this Nation's most precious resource—our children—and a commitment to their safe and productive future.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a summary of the Partnerships in Child Care Act and the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the materal was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SUMMARY—PARTNERSHIPS IN CHILD CARE ACT

AFFORDABLE CHILD CARE FOR WORKING FAMILIES

To expand federal assistance to working families and preserve a families freedom of choice the Partnerships Act would:

Make the Child and Dependent Care Tax Credit refundable for families with no tax liability under $32,000 in adjusted gross income. Seventy-five percent of the Credit would be refunded. Families could elect to receive the credit in each paycheck through advance payments, or "negative withholding". The IRS is instructed to notify filers of this option.

Increase the maximum Credit from 30 to 40 percent for families with incomes of $12,000 AGI and below. The Credit would be reduced, on a sliding scale basis, to a minimum of 20 percent for families with incomes $32,000 AGI and above. Currently the 20 percent credit applies to incomes above $28,000 AGI. (The credit would be reduced 2 percent for each $2,000 of AGI above $12,000.)

The new maximum credit at the 40 percent rate would be $960 for one child and $1,920 for two or more children. Seventy-five percent, or a maximum of $1,440 could be received in cash.

The Partnerships Act would help 7 million families with the costs of day care at a cost of $2.1 billion at full implementation.

PARTNERSHIPS TO EXPAND AND IMPROVE CHILD CARE SERVICES

To build a strong federal partnership with all levels of government and the private sector to expand and improve child care the Partnerships Act would:

Establish the Child Care Grant Program to set-aside $300 million each year in new matching funds through Title XX of the Social Security Act. States would have the flexibility to form innovative programs to: train day care workers; create resource and referral agencies; grant loans to day care providers to improve facilities; and other alternatives; encourage employer sponsored programs;

Grants could be made to schools, community based organiztions, groups of private employers, hospitals, local governments and other entities to expand day care options to all families;

Appoint a Child Care Coordinator in the Department of Health and Human Services;

Produce a report to Congress by a National Commission on Child Care making recommendations on three critical matters—Model Child Care Standards; Training, Recruitment, and Retaining Day Care Workers; and the Role of the private sector;

Encourage cooperation and leadership among Federal agencies on worker policy.

S. 187

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Partnerships in Child Care Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSE.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds that—

(1) dramatic changes in the American workforce have profoundly affected children and families;

(2) women have entered the workforce because of economic necessity, and now provide the sole support or critical economic support for a great number of families;

(3) over one-half of all women in the labor force have children under the age of 6, and nearly two-thirds of women with children under the age of 14 work either full or part-time;

(4) American families require a range of child care options to meet individual needs, and the availability of such child care options often falls short of such need;

(5) low salaries paid to child care workers contribute to high staff turnover, limit the availability of day care providers, and affect the quality of care; and

(6) although there is great concern among parents and within Congress about the quality of care provided through various day care arrangements, there is no national system for monitoring the quality of day care provided, and there is no Federal informational base on which to build such a system.

(b) PURPOSE.—It is the purpose of this Act to—

(1) enhance the availability and accessibility of child day care;

(2) assist American families in meeting the high costs of child day care; and

(3) assess and improve the quality of day care in the United States.

SEC. 3. CHILD CARE GRANT PROGRAM.

Title XX of the Social Security Act is amended—

(1) by inserting before the heading of section 2001 (42 U.S.C. 1397) the following:

"Subtitle A—Social Services Grant Program";

(2) in sections 2001 and 2002 (42 U.S.C. 1397 and 1397a), by striking out "title" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "subtitle";

(3) in section 2004 (42 U.S.C. 1397c), by inserting "or 2014" after "section 2002";

(4) by adding at the end thereof the following new subtitle:

"Subtitle B—Child Care Grant Program

"SEC. 2011. DEFINITIONS.

"As used in this subtitle:

"(1) ELIGIBLE CHILD CARE PROVIDER.—The term "eligible child care provider" means a center-based child care provider, a group home child care provider, a family child care provider, or other provider of child care services for compensation that—

"(A) is licensed or regulated under State law;

"(B) satisfies—

"(i) the Federal requirements, except as provided in subparagraph (C); and

"(ii) the State and local requirements; applicable to the child care services it provides; and

"(C) complies with any standards that are applicable to the child care services it provides.

"(2) FAMILY CHILD CARE PROVIDER.—The term "family child care provider" means 1 individual who provides child care services for fewer than 24 hours per day, as the sole caregiver, and in the private residence of such individual.

"(3) GROUP CHILD CARE PROVIDER.—The term "group child care provider" means 2 or more individuals who jointly provide child care services for fewer than 24 hours per day and in a private residence.

"(4) LEAD AGENCY.—The term "lead agency" means the agency designated under section 2014(a).

"(5) PARENT.—The term "parent" includes a legal guardian or other person standing in loco parentis.

"(6) POVERTY LINE.—The term "poverty line" has the meaning given such term in section 673(2) of the Community Services Block Grant Act (42 U.S.C. 9902(2)) and includes any revision required by such section.

"(7) SECRETARY.—The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Health and Human Services unless the context specifies otherwise.

"(8) SLIDING FEE SCALE.—The term "sliding fee scale" means a system of cost sharing between the State and a family based on income and size of the family with the very low income families having to pay no cost.

"(9) STATE.—The term "State" means any of the several States, the District of Columbia, the Virgin Islands of the United States, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, American Samoa, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, the Marshall Islands, the Federated States of Micronesia, or Palau.

"SEC. 2012. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

"To carry out this subtitle, there are authorized to be appropriated $300,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1990 through 1992.

"SEC. 2013. ALLOTMENTS.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall allot to each State an amount equal to the sum of the amount that bears the same ratio to the amount appropriated under section 2012 as the number of children under the age of 15 residing with families residing in the State bears to the total number of children below the age of 15 residing with families in all States.

"(b) DATA AND INFORMATION.—The Secretary shall obtain from each appropriate Federal agency, the most recent data and information necessary to determine the allotments provided for in subsection (a).

"(c) REALLOTMENTS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Any portion of the allotment under subsection (a) made to a State that is not used in the period for which the allotment is made available, shall be reallotted by the Secretary to other States in proportion to the original allotments to the other States.

"(2) LIMITATIONS.—

"(A) REDUCTION.—The amount of any reallotment to which a State is entitled to under paragraph (1) shall be reduced to the extent that it exceeds the amount that the Secretary estimates will be used in the State.

"(B) REALLOTMENTS.—The amount of such reduction shall be similarly reallotted among States for which no reduction in an allotment or reallotment is required by this subsection.

"(3) AMOUNTS REALLOTTED.—For purposes of any other section of this subtitle, any amount reallotted to a State under this subsection shall be deemed to be part of the allotment made under subsection (a) to the State.

"SEC. 2014. LEAD AGENCY.

"(a) DESIGNATION.—The chief executive officer of a State desiring to participate in the program authorized by this subtitle shall designate, in an application submitted to the Secretary under section 2015(a), an appropriate State agency that meets the requirements of subsection (b) to act as the lead agency.

"(b) REQUIREMENTS.—

"(1) ADMINISTRATION OF FUNDS.—The lead agency shall have the capacity to administer the funds provided under this subtitle to support programs and services authorized under this subtitle.

"(2) COORDINATION.—The lead agency shall have the capacity to coordinate the services for which assistance is provided under this subtitle with the services of other State and local agencies involved in providing services to children.

"(3) ESTABLISHMENT OF POLICIES.—The lead agency shall have the authority to establish policies and procedures for developing and implementing interagency agreements with other agencies of the State to carry out the purposes of this subtitle.

"SEC. 2015. APPLICATION.

"(a) APPLICATION.—To be eligible to receive assistance under this subtitle, a State shall submit an application to the Secretary that complies with the requirements of subsection (b).

"(b) REQUIREMENTS.—The application submitted under subsection (a) shall—

"(1) identify the lead agency designated in accordance with section 2014(a);

"(2) describe the activities that the State will carry out with funds received under this subtitle;

"(3) provide assurances that the State will offer technical assistance to eligible child care providers;

"(4) provide assurances that funds provided under this subtitle will be used to supplement, not supplant resources applied to child care activities by the State during fiscal year 1989;

"(5) provide assurances that the State will not expend more than 10 percent of its allocation under this subtitle each year for administrative expenses;

"(6) establish procedures that the State will use to enable eligible child care providers to submit applications to the State for assistance under this subtitle, including appropriate procedures to assure the State agency will not disapprove an application without providing the provider with notice and an opportunity for a hearing;

"(7) provide assurances that the State will adopt standards of accreditation or licensing for family-based and group child care, and methods of inspection and certification based on such standards;

"(8) provide assurances that the State will establish procedures to ensure that the purposes of this subtitle are carried out within the State and to ensure that all eligible child care providers are registered or licensed in conformance with State and local regulatory standards;

"(9) provide assurances that the lead agency will coordinate the use of funds provided under this subtitle with other Federal or State child care and preschool programs operated within the State, including the program authorized under the Head Start Act (42 U.S.C. 9831 et seq.), the programs authorized under section 619 and part H of the Education of the Handicapped Act (20 U.S.C. 1419 and 1471 et seq.), and the programs authorized under chapter 1 of title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 2701 et seq.);

"(10) provide for the establishment of fiscal control and accountability procedures as may be necessary to—

"(A) insure a proper accounting of Federal funds received by the State under this subtitle; and

"(B) ensure the proper verification of reports submitted by the State under paragraph (13);

"(11) provide assurances that the State will report annually to the Secretary on the number, type, and distribution of services and programs made available with funds provided under this subtitle;

"(12) provide assurances that the State will give priority to programs that serve low-income areas; and

"(13) provide any additional assurances that the Secretary may require.

"SEC. 2016. USE OF ALLOTMENTS.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—States receiving an allotment under this subtitle shall use the funds received under such allotment to carry out programs and activities, directly or through grants or contracts with public or private entities, that will result in the creation of new child care services programs and the expansion and improvement of existing child care services, including programs addressing high priority areas, as described in subsection (b).

"(b) SPECIFIC USES.—Amounts expended under subsection (a) may be used to promote public partnerships with private entities for the purpose of enabling such entities to provide child care services, including the establishment of—

"(1) programs for the recruitment and training of day care workers;

"(2) after-school programs for the children of working parents;

"(3) day care services for infants and handicapped and special needs children;

"(4) grant and loan programs to enable child care providers to meet licensing standards prescribed by the State;

"(5) programs that involve the use of older Americans as child care workers;

"(6) programs serving low-income areas;

"(7) child care informational, resource, and referral; and

"(8) other programs that are consistent with the purpose of this subtitle.

"(c) ELIGIBLE ENTITIES.—Entities eligible to receive assistance under this section shall include—

"(1) units of local governments;

"(2) local educational agencies;

"(3) nonprofit organizations under subsections (c) and (d) of section 501 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986;

"(4) professional or employee associations;

"(5) consortia's of small businesses;

"(6) institutions of higher education;

"(7) hospitals or health care facilities;

"(8) family care providers;

"(9) community based organizations; and

"(10) any other entities that the State determines appropriate.

"(d) PLANNING AND IMPLEMENTATION.—States receiving funds under this subtitle shall, to the extent practicable, involve child care providers, parents, experts in the field of child development, and members of the child advocacy community in the planning and implementation of programs receiving funds under this subtitle.

"SEC. 2017. PAYMENTS.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—

"(1) AMOUNT OF PAYMENT.—Each State that—

"(A) has an application approved by the Secretary under section 2015; and

"(B) demonstrates to the satisfaction of the Secretary that it will provide from non-Federal sources the State share of the aggregate amount to be expended by the State for the fiscal year for which it requests a grant; shall receive a payment under this section for such fiscal year in an amount (not to exceed its allotment under section 2013 for such fiscal year) equal to the Federal share of the aggregate amount to be expended by the State.

"(2) FEDERAL SHARE.—Except as provided in subparagraph (B), the Federal share for each fiscal year shall be 75 percent.

"(3) STATE SHARE.—The State share equals 100 percent minus the Federal share.

"(4) LIMITATION.—A State may not require any private provider of child care services that receives or seeks funds made available under this subtitle to contribute in cash or in kind to the State contribution required by this subsection.

"(b) METHOD OF PAYMENT.—The Secretary may make payments to a State, in cash or in-kind, in installments, and in advance or by way of reimbursement, with necessary adjustments on account of overpayments or underpayments, as the Secretary may determine.

"(c) SPENDING OF FUNDS BY STATE.—Payments to a State from the allotment under section 2013 for any fiscal year may be expended by the State in that fiscal year or in the succeeding fiscal year."

SEC. 4. MODIFICATIONS OF CHILD CARE TAX CREDIT.

(a) INCREASE IN CREDIT.—Paragraph (2) of section 21(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (defining applicable percentage) is amended to read as follows:

"(2) APPLICABLE PERCENTAGE DEFINED.—For purposes of paragraph (1), the term 'applicable percentage' means 40 percent reduced (but not below 20 percent) by 2 percentage points for each $2,000 (or fraction thereof) by which the taxpayer's adjusted gross income for the taxable year exceeds $12,000."

(b) PORTION OF CREDIT MADE REFUNDABLE.—Section 21 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to credit for household and dependent care services necessary for gainful employment) is amended by redesignating subsection (f) as subsection (g) and by inserting after subsection (e) the following new subsection:

"(f) PORTION OF CREDIT TO BE REFUNDABLE.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this chapter, in the case of an applicable taxpayer, 75 percent of the amount of the credit allowable under this section for the taxable year shall be treated as a credit allowable under subpart C of this part (relating to refundable credits) for such taxable year.

"(2) APPLICABLE TAXPAYER.—For purposes of paragraph (1), the term 'applicable taxpayer' means a taxpayer with an adjusted gross income for the taxable year not greater than $32,000.

"(3) CREDIT TO BE REFUNDABLE IN ADVANCE.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Advance payments of the credit made refundable under paragraph (1) shall be made in the same manner as under section 3507.

"(B) SPECIAL RULES.— For purposes of section 3507—

"(i) if any portion of the credit allowable under this section is treated as a refundable credit by reason of this subsection, the taxpayer shall certify on the eligibility certificate that the taxpayer is so eligible for such credit, the amount of estimated employment-related expenses, and the amount of estimated tax liability, and

"(ii) the advanced amount with respect to such portion of the credit allowable under this subsection for any payroll period shall be equal to—

"(I) the estimated amount of the credit which is refundable under this subsection (based on the estimated amounts under clause (i)) for the calendar year in which such payroll period occurs, divided by

"(II) the number of payroll periods in such calendar year."

(c) STATE AND LOCAL REQUIREMENTS MUST BE MET.—Paragraph (2) of section 21(b) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended by striking out subparagraphs (C) and (D) and inserting in lieu thereof:

"(C) STATE AND LOCAL REQUIREMENTS.—Employment-related expenses described in subparagraph (A) which are incurred for services provided outside the taxpayer's household shall be taken into account only if the provider of the services complies with all applicable laws and regulations of a State or local government."

(d) NO CREDIT FOR CERTAIN SUBSIDIZED EXPENSES.—Section 21(b)(2) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, as amended by subsection (c), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(D) EXCEPTION FOR CERTAIN SUBSIDIZED EXPENSES.—Employment-related expenses described in subparagraph (A) shall not be taken into account if such expenses (or services to which such expenses relate) are paid, reimbursed, or subsidized by the Federal Government."

(e) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1989.

SEC. 5. FEDERAL COORDINATION OF CHILD CARE.

(a) COORDINATOR OF CHILD CARE.—There is hereby established in the Department of Health and Human Services the position of Coordinator of Child Care (hereinafter in this section referred to as the "Coordinator"). The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall appoint an individual to serve as the Coordinator at the pleasure of the Secretary.

(b) DUTIES.—The Coordinator shall—

(1) coordinate all activities of the Department by Health and Human Services relating to child care, and coordinate such activities with similar activities of other Federal entities;

(2) collect and publish State child care standards, including periodic modifications to such standards;

(3) evaluate activities carried out with funds provided under this Act, or an amendment made by this Act;

(4) act as a national resource for the provision of public information on child care;

(5) design and implement a national child care date collection system that shall collect and disseminate materials that relate to—

(A) various State child care programs implemented with funds provided under this Act, or an amendment made by this Act;

(B) the quality and safety of the programs referred to in subparagraph (A);

(C) State child care standards; and

(D) any other areas that the Secretary considers important; and

(6) have the authority to conduct studies on special issues of concern in the area of child care, including the training and education of child care providers, the requirements and limitations of various child care arrangements, and any other issues that the Coordinator considers important; and

(7) provide technical assistance to assist States to carry out this Act, and the amendments made by this Act.

(c) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out this section.

SEC. 6. NATIONAL COMMISSION ON CHILD CARE.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—To improve the quality of child care services, the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall establish, not later than 90 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, a National Commission on Child Care (hereinafter in this section referred to as the "Commission"), the members of which shall be appointed from among representatives of—

(A) persons who carry out different types of child care programs;

(B) child care and early childhood development specialists;

(C) early childhood education specialists;

(D) individuals who have expertise in pediatric health care and related fields;

(E) organizations representing child care employees;

(F) religious institutions;

(G) individuals who have experience in the regulation of child care services;

(H) the business community;

(I) State and local governments; and

(J) parents involved in community child care programs.

(2) APPOINTMENT OF MEMBERS.—The Commission shall be composed of 15 members of which—

(A) 5 members shall be appointed by the President;

(B) 2 members shall be appointed by the majority leader of the Senate;

(C) 2 members shall be appointed by the minority leader of the Senate;

(D) 2 members shall be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives;

(E) 2 members shall be appointed by the minority leader of the House of Representatives; and

(F) 2 members shall be appointed by the Chairman of the National Governor's Association.

(3) CHAIRMAN.—The Commission shall appoint a chairman from among the members of the Commission.

(4) VACANCIES.—A vacancy occurring on the Commission shall be filled in the same manner as that in which the original appointment was made.

(b) PERSONNEL, REIMBURSEMENT, AND OVERSIGHT.—

(1) PERSONNEL.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall make available to the Commission office facilities, personnel who are familiar with child development and with developing and implementing regulatory requirements, technical assistance, and funds as are necessary to enable the Commission to carry out its functions effectively.

(2) REIMBURSEMENT.—

(A) COMPENSATION.—Members of the Commission who are not regular full-time employees of the United States Government shall, while attending meetings and conferences of the Commission or otherwise engaged in the business of the Commission (including travel time), be entitled to receive compensation at a rate fixed by the Secretary of Health and Human Services, but not exceeding the rate specified at the time of such service under GS-18 of the General Schedule established under section 5332 of title 5, United States Code.

(B) EXPENSES.—While away from their homes or regular places of business on the business of the Commission, such members may be allowed travel expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence, as authorized by section 5703 of title 5, United States Code, for persons employed intermittently in the Government service.

(3) OVERSIGHT.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall ensure that the Commission is established and operated in accordance with the Federal Advisory Committee Act (5 U.S.C. App.).

(c) FUNCTIONS.—The Committee shall—

(1) conduct a national assessment of the quality of day care provided in a range of settings including day care centers and family day care homes; and

(2) not later than 3 years after that date of enactment of this Act, prepare and submit, after a review by the Secretary of Health and Human Services, to the appropriate Committees of Congress, a report containing the information described in subsection (d).

(d) CONTENTS OF REPORT.—

(1) MODEL CHILD CARE STANDARDS.—The report submitted under subsection (c)(2) shall include specific recommendations on the establishment of model child care standards that shall include—

(A) recommendations on—

(i) the proper group size and ages of children in group child care settings;

(ii) the maximum appropriate staff-child ratios in group child care settings;

(iii) the appropriate qualifications and amounts of training needed by child care personnel, including requirements for meeting the continuing educational needs of child care providers;

(iv) the necessary health and safety requirements for children and personnel in child care setting; and

(v) parental involvement in programs funded and assisted under this Act; and

(B) an assessment of the impact that such model standards will have on the costs and availability of day care to families.

(2) RECRUITMENT, RETENTION, AND TRAINING STRATEGY.—The report submitted under subsection (c)(2) shall include a strategy for the recruitment, retention, and training of qualified child care personnel, and shall include appropriate studies of salaries and qualifications among such workers.

(3) EXPANDING AVAILABILITY.—The report submitted under subsection (c)(2) shall include recommendations for expanding child care availability through the private sector, including the establishment of public and private partnerships, and examples of various innovative local and State programs that have been successful in increasing the availability and affordability of child care to working parents.

SEC. 7. CONTINUOUS CARE DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall establish a program under which the Secretary shall enter into agreements with not less than 5, and not more than 10 States, in order to establish models for a continuum of child care services for children of ages of infancy through adolescence.

(b) APPLICATION.—States desiring to receive assistance under this section shall submit an application to the Secretary of Health and Human Services in such form, and containing such information as the Secretary shall require.

(c) PRIORITY.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall give priority to State applications that contain child care proposals that utilize and coordinate existing State resources and facilities through public partnerships with the private sector and the business community.

(d) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATION.—There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section, $25,000,000 in each of the fiscal years 1990 through 1991.

(e) REPORT.—Not later than December 31, 1993, the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall prepare and submit, to the appropriate Committees of Congress, a report describing the results of the programs and activities conducted under this section by the States.

SEC. 8. STUDIES AND REPORTS.

(a) NATIONAL INVENTORY OF CHILD CARE SERVICES STUDY.—Not later than 18 months after the date of enactment of this Act, the Coordinator of Child Care appointed under section 4 shall prepare and submit, to the appropriate Committees of Congress, a report that contains the results of a study conducted by the Secretary of Health and Human Services of the availability, accessibility, and quality of child care services available to American families, and shall include an inventory of State child care standards.

(b) FEDERAL POLICY STUDY.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services, in cooperation with the Secretary of Labor, shall review Federal policies regarding leave, alternative work schedules, and other programs and policies that assist working parents, and prepare and submit, to the appropriate Committees of Congress and the President, a report on the results of such study.

SEC. 9. SENSE OF THE SENATE REGARDING CHILD CARE MODELS.

It is the sense of the Senate that—

(1) Federal, State, and local governments, as employers of a substantial portion of the population of the United States, should serve as models for private businesses in providing child care benefits to employees; and

(2) State and local governments should review their child care policies regarding leave, alternative work schedules, and other programs and policies that assist working parents.

By Mr. SYMMS:

S. 188. A bill to amend title XVIII of the Social Security Act to eliminate mandated caps on physicians fees; to the Committee on Finance.

ELIMINATING MANDATED CAPS ON PHYSICIANS FEES

● Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I am introducing legislation today that will remove mandated caps on physician's fees under Medicare.

Currently, Medicare sets the rate at which all participating physicians must charge their patients for different procedures. Medicare then reimburses the doctors for 80 percent of this charge. Depending on the type of service, geographical location, and other factors, these physicians have different expenses and the reimbursement is insufficient. In view of this, many doctors have decided against participation.

The removal of such caps will help ensure access to care for Medicare patients while continuing to allow physicians to reduce their fees as necessary to accommodate the financial circumstances of elderly patients. This will also assist in removing unnecessary Government intervention in the health care profession.

Many physicians are not adequately reimbursed by Medicare for their services, and therefore do not participate in the Medicare Program. This creates a hardship for those individuals living in areas where there are only a few doctors. A simple checkup often requires traveling unreasonable distances because the physician nearest to their home is not a Medicare participant.

The legislation I am introducing today will eliminate these mandatory fee caps and allow physicians to use their own discretion, depending on the circumstances of their area. This will enable more physicians to participate in the Medicare Program, as well as allow Medicare patients more options in seeking affordable health care.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD following my remarks.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 188

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. ELIMINATION OF LIMITATIONS ON PHYSICIAN CHARGES.

(a) ELIMINATION OF REASONABLE CHARGE LIMIT FOR PARTICIPATING PHYSICIANS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 1842(b)(3)(B)(ii) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395u(b)(3)(B)(ii) is amended by striking "(I) the reasonable charge is the full charge for the service and (II)".

(2) TERMINATION OF PARTICIPATION AGREEMENTS.—Section 1842(h)(1) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395u(h)(1)) is amended by inserting "and ending before 1990" after "1984".

(b) ELIMINATION OF ACTUAL CHARGE LIMITS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 1842 of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395u) is amended—

(A) by repealing subsections (j)(1), (l), and (m), and

(B) by striking paragraph (4) of subsection (j).

(2) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(A) Section 1842(b)(3)(G) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395u(b)(3)(G)) is amended by inserting "ending before 1989" after "each year".

(B) Section 1842(b)(11) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395u(b)(11)) is amended by striking subparagraph (C).

(c) DETERMINATION OF REASONABLE CHARGE FOR PAYMENT TO PHYSICIANS.—Section 1842(b)(4) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395u(b)(4)) is amended by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

"(G) Notwithstanding any other provision of this part, in determining the reasonable charge under paragraph (3) for physicians' services furnished on or after January 1, 1990, the Secretary shall determine such charge without regard to whether the physician was a participating or nonparticipating physician in any previous year.".

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall become effective with physician's services delivered on or after January 1, 1990.●

By Mr. MATSUNAGA (for himself and Mr. INOUYE):

S. 189. A bill to amend title 38, United States Code, to authorize the Secretary of Veterans' Affairs to provide funeral transportation, remains transportation, and living expenses benefits to deceased medal of honor recipients and their families; to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

FUNERAL AND REMAINS TRANSPORTATION AND LIVING EXPENSE BENEFITS ACT OF 1989

● Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. President, for myself and Senator INOUYE, I am today introducing legislation to provide certain mortuary benefits for Congressional Medal of Honor recipients and their families. Specifically, my bill will authorize the Secretary of Veterans' Affairs to provide funeral transportation expenses and certain survivors' expenses in connection with the recovery, care, and disposition of the remains of deceased Medal of Honor winners.

Under a law enacted by the 93d Congress, similar mortuary benefits were provided to the families of another group of highly deserving veterans—prisoners of war who died in captivity during the Vietnam war. It is clear that the Nation should recognize similarly the unsurpassed courage of those who have won our highest award for bravery in combat.

Because of the nature of their heroic actions, the number of Congressional Medal of Honor winners is necessarily quite small. At last count, there were only 227 living Medal of Honor recipients, including two from the first world war, two from between World War I and II, 113 from World War II, 30 from Korea, and 80 from Vietnam. I ask unanimous consent that a list of these individuals, published by the Congressional Medal of Honor Society, be printed in the RECORD following my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. President, the estimated total cost of extending special mortuary benefits to all of them is less than $1.5 million. Assuming a normal attrition rate, we can expect annual outlays to be a fraction of that amount.

But, Mr. President, the point here is not one of dollars, but of recognition. Congressional Medal of Honor winners stand apart from the rest of us by the selfless acts of courage they performed under the most stressful conditions known to man. To correct an egregious oversight, to ensure that Medal of Honor recipients are buried with full and appropriate honors and attended by their loved ones, I call upon the members of this Chamber to support this bill.

S. 189

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Funeral and Remains Transportation and Living Expense Benefits Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

The Congress makes the following findings:

(1) The United States owes special gratitude to members or former members of the Armed Forces of the United States who, because of their gallantry and selfless devotion to duty, have been awarded a Medal of Honor.

(2) The Funeral Transportation and Living Expense Benefits Act of 1974 (Public Law 93-257; 88 Stat. 53) authorized the Secretary of Defense to pay funeral transportation expenses and certain survivors' expenses in connection with the recovery, care, and disposition of the remains of any deceased member of the Armed Forces who died while classified as a prisoner of war or as missing in action during the Vietnam conflict.

(3) The United States owes no lesser expression of respect, honor, or solicitude to the memory of those members or former members of the Armed Forces who have been awarded a Medal of Honor.

SEC. 3. PAYMENT OF CERTAIN EXPENSES RELATING TO THE RECOVERY, CARE, AND DISPOSITION OF THE REMAINS OF VETERANS AWARDED A MEDAL OF HONOR.

(a) AUTHORITY TO PAY CERTAIN EXPENSES.—Chapter 23 of title 38, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"§ 909. Veterans awarded medal of honor

"(a) The Secretary may provide for the recovery, care, and disposition of the remains of any veteran who was awarded a medal of honor under the provisions of section 3741, 6241, or 8741 of title 10, or any prior provision of law.

"(b) In connection with the recovery, care, and disposition of the remains of any veteran referred to in subsection (a), the Secretary may pay the necessary expenses for the following:

"(1) Recovery and identification of the remains.

"(2) Notification of the next of kin or other appropriate person that the remains have been recovered.

"(3) Preparation of the remains for burial, including cremation if requested by the person designated by the Secretary to direct disposition of the remains.

"(4) Furnishing of a uniform or other clothing.

"(5) Furnishing of a casket or urn, or both, with outside box.

"(6) Hearse service.

"(7) Funeral director's services.

"(8) Transportation of the remains.

"(9) Roundtrip transportation between the places of residence and the place of the veteran's burial for the following persons:

"(A) The widow, children, stepchildren, mother, father, stepfather, and stepmother of the veteran.

"(B) If none of the persons referred to in subparagraph (A) of this paragraph desire such transportation, the brothers, sisters, halfbrothers, halfsisters, adoptive brothers, and adoptive sisters of the veteran.

"(10) Travel and subsistence, to the extent prescribed by the Secretary, for person's transported under clause (9).

"(11) Interment of the remains.

"(12) Presentation of a United States flag to the person designated by the Secretary to direct disposition of the remains.

"(13) Presentation of a United States flag (equal in size to the flag presented at the expense of the United States under paragraph (12) of this subsection) to the following person or persons if such person or persons are not presented a flag at the expense of the United States under such paragraph and are not presented a flag under section 901 of this title:

"(A) The natural parent or parents of the veteran.

"(B) The stepparent or stepparents of the veteran.

"(C) The parent or parents of the veteran by adoption.

"(D) A person who for a period of not less than one year before the veteran's death was in loco parentis to veteran.

A preference under this paragraph shall be given to the person or persons who exercised a parental relationship at or closest to the date of the veteran's death.

"(c) If any person pays any expense that the Secretary is authorized to pay under this section, the Secretary shall reimburse such person or the person's representative in an amount not greater than that normally incurred by the Secretary in furnishing the supply or service concerned. If reimbursement by the United States is also authorized under any other provision of law, the person may elect reimbursement under such other provision instead of reimbursement under this section.

"(d) For the purpose of this section, only the following persons may be designated to direct the disposition of the remains of a veteran referred to in subsection (a) of this section:

"(1) The veteran's surviving spouse.

"(2) Blood relatives of the veteran.

"(3) Adoptive relatives of the veteran.

"(4) If no person referred to in paragraphs (1)–(3) of this subsection can be found, a person in loco parentis to the veteran.".

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by adding at the end the following new item:

"909. Veterans awarded medal of honor.".●

By Mr. MATSUNAGA (for himself, Mr. BURDICK, and Mr. HEFLIN):

S. 191. A bill to amend section 3104 of title 38, United States Code, to permit service-connected disabled veterans who are retired members of the Armed Forces to receive compensation concurrently with retired pay without reduction in the amount of the compensation and retired pay; to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

By Mr. MATSUNAGA (for himself, Mr. BURDICK, Mr. HEFLIN, and Mr. MOYNIHAN):

S. 191. A bill to amend section 3104 of title 38, United States Code, to permit service-connected disabled veterans who are retired members of the Armed Forces to receive compensation concurrently with retired pay after a reduction in either the amount of compensation or retired pay; to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

PROHIBITING VETERANS FROM RECEIVING BOTH RETIREMENT AND VETERANS DISABILITY COMPENSATION

● Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. President, I am today introducing two bills that would modify a 97-year old law prohibiting career disabled veterans from receiving both retirement pay and veterans disability compensation. Because of an outdated, unjust 19th century statute, hundreds of thousands of disabled career soldiers must offset their hard-earned retirement pay by an amount equal to any veterans disability compensation they elect to receive. The first bill, cosponsored by Senators BURDICK and HEFLIN, would entirely eliminate the offset. The second measure, cosponsored by Senators BURDICK, HEFLIN, and MOYNIHAN, would make the size of the offset contingent on a veteran's rated level of disability.

As my colleagues may be aware, an obscure 1891 law requires a career soldier who is disabled during service to offset his retirement pay with any Veterans' Administration [VA] disability compensation he receives. Because the career soldier receives no separate payment for his service-connected disabilities, this law has the effect of requiring career military retirees to fund their own benefits—a situation that has no parallel. This is in contrast to a non-career soldier, who is allowed to collect VA disability compensation as well as any retirement annuity he may collect from civil service or private sector employment. In fact, no other Federal annuitant is subject to the offset imposed on career disabled veterans.

Aside from this inequity, it is clear that disabled military retirees are the victims of the Federal Government's inability to make a proper distinction between military retirement annuities and disability compensation. Retirement pay reflects the Nation's recognition that a soldier has devoted 20 or more of his most productive years to military service. Because military life is often characterized by personal hardship and danger, the promise of an adequate, if not munificent, pension is often a prime consideration in a soldier's decision to enter and remain in the Armed Forces. The attraction of retirement pay is thus a powerful tool for the uniformed services to use in attracting and retaining quality personnel, particularly during this era of the All-Volunteer Force.

In contrast, veterans disability compensation is awarded for pain, suffering, and loss of future earning capacity incurred in the line of duty. As such, it is an expression of our gratitude to those who sacrificed health of mind and body in defense of the Republic. Therefore, because retirement pay and disability compensation serve two entirely separate purposes, receipt of one should not be conditioned on receipt of the other.

Mr. President, the first bill I am offering is identical to legislation that Congressman MIKE BILIRAKIS and I introduced in the last Congress. The House measure, H.R. 303, was cosponsored by 246 members of the other body; my bill, S. 2120, although it was introduced late in the second session of the 100th Congress, eventually garnered the cosponsorship of 11 Senators. If enacted, this measure will entirely do away with the offset. The estimated pricetag of the legislation is relatively high, but the gain to our sense of justice would be immeasurable.

The second bill that I am introducing is an altogether new initiative. Last year, many of my colleagues expressed support for the rationale behind S. 2120, the legislation to eliminate the offset entirely, but declined to cosponsor the measure because of overriding concerns about the Federal deficit. While I believe that careful prioritizing of the fiscal agenda would mitigate the bill's budgetary impact, I am sensitive to their concerns. Therefore, I am offering a second bill which simply requires that the size of the offset be inversely related to the level of disability. For example, a retired career soldier whose disability is rated by the VA at 90 percent would be required to forego only 10 percent of his military retirement; conversely, a 30 percent disabled career soldier would be required to give up 70 percent of his military pension income in order to be eligible for disability compensation. The Congressional Budget Office, using highly conservative assumptions, estimates the cost of the legislation to be about a fifth of the cost of the legislation to eliminate the offset entirely.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to support both or either of these bills. While my choice would be for the total elimination of the offset, I recognize that a temporary, less costly action may be preferable to some of us at this time of fiscal austerity. Either bill offers a fair alternative to the present, untenable situation. I call on the Members of this Chamber to provide legislative relief to the more than 400,000 retired disabled career soldiers who have been deprived of full compensation for services rendered and sacrifices made in behalf of the Nation's security.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the texts of the bills be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the text of the bills were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 190

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. CONCURRENT PAYMENT OF RETIRED PAY AND COMPENSATION.

(a) CONCURRENT PAYMENT AUTHORIZED.—Section 3104(a) of title 38, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1), by inserting "as provided in paragraph (3) and" after "Except"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(3)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (C) of this paragraph, a person may be paid emergency officer's, regular, or reserve retirement pay concurrently with the payment of compensation for any service-connected disability.

"(B) In the case of a person permitted to be paid retirement pay concurrently with the payment of compensation under subparagraph (A) of this paragraph—

"(i) the amount of the retirement pay may not be reduced on the basis of such person's receipt of the compensation; and

"(ii) the amount of the compensation may not be reduced on the basis of such person's receipt of the retirement pay.

"(C) Retirement pay and compensation may not be paid to person concurrently if payment of the retirement pay and payment of the compensation are each based upon the same disability.".

(b) TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS.—(1) Section 3104 of such title is further amended by striking out the section heading and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"§ 3104. Limitation on duplication of payments".

(2) The table of sections at the beginning of chapter 53 of such title is amended by striking out the item relating to section 3104 and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"3104. Limitation on duplication of payments.".

SEC. 2. EFFECTIVE DATE AND PROHIBITION OF RETROACTIVE BENEFITS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The amendments made by this Act shall take effect on the first day of the second calendar month following the date of the enactment of this Act.

(b) RETROACTIVE BENEFITS.—No benefits shall be paid to any person by virtue of this Act for any period before the effective date of this Act.

S. 191

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. CONCURRENT PAYMENT OF RETIRED PAY AND COMPENSATION.

(a) LIMITATION ON DUPLICATION OF BENEFITS.—Section 3104(a) of title 38, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1), by inserting "as provided in paragraph (3) and" after "Except"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(3)(A) Subject to subparagraph (B) of this paragraph, a person may be paid emergency officers', regular, or reserve retirement pay concurrently with the payment of compensation for any service-connected disability, except that no amount of retirement pay and compensation may be paid to a person concurrently if the payment is based upon the same disability.

"(B) In the case of a person receiving disability compensation, the amount of emergency officers', regular, or reserve retirement pay or, at the election of such person, the amount of compensation shall be reduced by the reduction percentage.

"(C) For the purpose of subparagraph (B) of this paragraph, the term 'reduction percentage', with respect to a person, means the percent equal to the excess, if any, of 100 percent over the percent of such person's disability, as rated by the Secretary.".

(b) TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS.—(1) Section 3104 of such title is further amended by striking out the section heading and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"§ 3104. Limitation on duplication of payments".

(2) The table of sections at the beginning of chapter 53 of such title is amended by striking out the item relating to section 3104 and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"3104. Limitation on duplication of payments.".

SEC. 2. EFFECTIVE DATE AND PROHIBITION ON RETROACTIVE BENEFITS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The amendments made by this Act shall take effect on the first day of the second calendar month following the date of the enactment of this Act.

(b) RETROACTIVE BENEFITS.—No benefits shall be paid to any person by virtue of this Act for any period before the effective date of this Act.●

S. 192. A bill to require the Secretary of Veterans' Affairs to provide for the conduct of a comprehensive study of the psychological problems of native Americans who are Vietnam veterans; to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

PSYCHOLOGICAL STUDY OF AMERICAN VIETNAM VETERANS

● Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. President, for myself and Senators CRANSTON and INOUYE, I am today introducing a bill which would require the Veterans' Administration [VA]—or the Department of Veterans' Affairs as it will soon be designated—to conduct a comprehensive study of the prevalence and effect of posttraumatic stress disorder [PTSD] and other psychological problems suffered by Vietnam veterans of Asian, Pacific Islander, native American, and Native Alaskan descent. This study would parallel and supplement the national Vietnam veterans readjustment [NVVR] study of PTSD an other postwar psychological problems required by section 102(a)(1) of Public Law 98-160, the "Veterans' Health Care Amendments of 1983."

My distinguished colleagues are aware that the section 102 study was completed late last year. According to VA officials, the study is "the most rigorous and comprehensive study to date" on PTSD and other psychological problems suffered by Vietnam veterans. The 4-year study involved more than 3,000 fact-to-face interviews with Vietnam theater veterans as well as their Vietnam era and nonveteran or civilian counterparts. Its findings shed new light on our understanding of the effect of the Vietnam experience on our soldiers. For example, the study discovered that over 15 percent of male Vietnam theater veterans currently have PTSD, and that an additional 11 percent have partial PTSD. Further, the report indicated that a shocking 30 percent have had PTSD at some point in their lives, and over half have had at least one psychiatric disorder at some point in their lives, especially alcohol abuse or dependence. The study also discovered that substantial portions of Vietnam veterans with readjustment problems have never used the VA or any other source for their mental health problems.

The framers of the NVVR study took care to ensure that women, blacks, and Hispanics were included in disproportionate numbers in order that large enough groups of veterans might be obtained to derive meaningful conclusions about the psychological requirements of these particular subgroups. Thus, much is now known about the incidence of PTSD among these large minorities. For instance, the study revealed that PTSD prevalence for the 7,200 Vietnam theater women veterans is approximately 8.5 percent, about half of the male rate. On the other hand, it was shown that PTSD is more prevalent among Hispanic and black veterans by a considerable amount. For Hispanic veterans of Vietnam, the current prevalence rate is 27.9 percent, and for black veterans 20.6 percent—far higher than the 13.7 percent for white/other veterans.

It is an unfortunate fact, however, that no one thought to ensure that Asians, Pacific Islanders, native Americans, and Native Alaskans also would be oversampled in order that meaningful statements might be made about their problems and needs—despite evidence from the NVVR study demonstrating that PTSD among certain ethnic groups is much higher than among whites.

In my own State of Hawaii, the needs and problems of Asian-Americans and Pacific Islander-Americans, who constitute 60 percent of the States population, are of immediate consequence. It is a worrisome fact, for example that veterans of Asian and Pacific Islander ancestry are significantly underrepresented among those presenting themselves for treatment at VA facilities in comparison to veterans of other ethnic groups. Preliminary research indicates that veterans from these particular groups may have wartime experiences and reactions that are qualitatively different from those of white or black Vietnam veterans. If this is borne out by the proposed study, an entirely different outreach and treatment regime may have to be developed to meet their needs. It is considered likely that native Americans and native Alaskans also had qualitatively different experiences of the Vietnam war that warrant scientific examination; it is distressing that we simply do not have the broad-based scientific data to know for certain. The purpose of this legislation is to ensure that we have the proper data to justify whether, in fact, these neglected minority groups have special psychological needs that require unique approaches to treatment.

Mr. President, this bill is based on legislation I introduced in the 100th Congress which was approved by the Senate Veterans' Affairs Committee and expanded to include native American and native Alaskan Vietnam veterans. Without dissent, the committee agreed to include the substance of my legislation in S. 2011, the Veterans' Benefits and Programs Improvement Act of 1988. Unfortunately, section 603, as it was designated, for reasons unrelated to the merits of the provision, was left out of the final House-Senate compromise on the omnibus legislation. The legislation I am introducing today is based on section 603, and the improvements made to my original bill by the Senate Veterans' Affairs Committee.

Mr. President, support for this small bill will improve our understanding and treatment of thousands of Vietnam veterans whose special psychological problems are overlooked or simply misunderstood because they happen to belong to a racial or ethnic minority. I hope that the distinguished Members of this body will support this bill, for by doing so they will reaffirm the Nation's commitment to all of its citizens, not merely to those who happen to belong to majority populations.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the text of the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 192

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. STUDY OF PSYCHOLOGICAL PROBLEMS AMONG ASIAN-AMERICAN, AMERICAN-INDIAN, NATIVE-HAWAIIAN, OTHER NATIVE-AMERICAN PACIFIC ISLANDER (INCLUDING AMERICAN SAMOAN NATIVE), AND ALASKA NATIVE VIETNAM VETERANS.

(a) STUDY REQUIREMENT.—The Secretary of Veterans Affairs shall provide for the conduct of a comprehensive study of the following matters:

(1) The prevalence and incidence of the following psychological problems in the populations of Asian-American, American-Indian, Native-Hawaiian, other Native-Amerinan Pacific Islander (including American Samoan Native), and Alaska Native Vietnam veterans:

(A) Post-traumatic stress disorder.

(B) Other psychological problems experienced by such veterans in readjusting to civilian life.

(2) The effects of such disorder and such problems on such veterans.

The Secretary shall provide for particular attention to be devoted in the conduct of the study to veterans who have service-connected disabilities and to women veterans.

(b) REPORT.—Not later than October 1, 1991, the Secretary shall submit to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and House of Representatives a report containing the results of the study required by subsection (a).

(c) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

(1) The terms "veteran", "service-connected", and "Vietnam veteran" shall have the same meanings given such terms in section 102(c) of the Veterans' Health Care Amendments of 1983 (Public Law 98-160; 38 U.S.C. 612A note).

(2) The term "Alaska Native" has the meaning given the term "Native" in section 3(b) of the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act (43 U.S.C. 1602(b)).

(2) The term "Native Hawaiian" has the meaning given that term in section 813(3) of the Native American Programs Act of 1974 (42 U.S.C. 2992c(3)).

By Mr. MATSUNAGA (for himself and Mr. INOUYE):

S. 193. A bill to amend title 37, United States Code, to treat service of members of the uniformed services of the United States at a permanent duty station in Alaska and Hawaii as overseas service for the purpose of determining the eligibility of such members to receive certain educational travel and transportation benefits for their dependent children; to the Committee on Armed Services.

SERVICE IN HAWAII AND ALASKA TO BE TREATED AS OVERSEAS SERVICE

● Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. President, for myself and Senator INOUYE, I am today introducing legislation that would extend the Funded Student Travel Program to Hawaii and Alaska.

As my colleagues know, the Fiscal Year 1984 Defense Authorization Act (P.L. 98-94) authorized annual funded round-trip travel for a dependent student of service members assigned overseas. Unfortunately, although travel to the continental United States is often as much of a financial hardship for families living in Hawaii and Alaska as it is for those residing overseas, they are not entitled to similar travel benefits.

Mr. President, this unfair exclusion adversely affects service families in Hawaii and Alaska. In order to see their children who attend mainland colleagues and unversities during Christmas and summer breaks, these families are often forced to pay for prohibitively expensive round-trip airfares to these distant localities. Of course, parents have another option—they can have their children transferred to local unversities and colleges—but the cost of transferring, in terms of lost credits, interrupted study, and loss of scholarships or financial aid, is high.

Those who do choose to matriculate their children at local educational institutions find that the selection may be limited in their particular areas of interest. This is not a criticism of higher education in Hawaii or Alaska—let me be very clear about this—but rather recognition of a simple fact. Hawaii and Alaska are small States whose colleges and universities, while enjoying national reputations cannot and should not fulfill every potential need. If this were so, the high standards they currently enjoy in many disciplines would probably drop. This is why families in Iowa send students to Illinois, those in Massachusetts to Virginia, and those in California to Oregon. Diversity in higher education is one of the Nation's greater strengths; unfortunately, current law prevents the children of many military families stationed in Hawaii and Alaska from taking advantage of the plethora of great educational facilities located around the country.

Mr. President, we owe it to the men and women of the armed services and their families to make the military profession as profamily as we are able. It is incumbent upon us to ensure that they and their children are afforded the same opportunities for family unity and educational growth as the civilians who they protect. In short, we are obliged to give the members of the armed forces as close to a normal family life as possible. By extending the student travel program to military personnel in Hawaii and Alaska, we make membership in the All-Volunteer Force that much more attractive and professional.

Mr. President, the cost of this legislation is small. A survey conducted in January 1987 by the Western Army Command indicated that only 700 personnel of all services would take advantage of a Hawaii/Alaska travel provision at a cost of only $452,000 a year. It is my understanding that the Department of Defense would support passage of this legislation. I urge my colleagues to support this bill.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the text of the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 193

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SERVICE IN HAWAII AND ALASKA TO BE TREATED AS OVERSEAS SERVICE

Section 430 of title 37, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in subsection (a), by inserting "or in Alaska or Hawaii" before the comma at the end of clause (1); and

(2) in subsection (b)—

(A) by striking out "(b) A" and inserting in lieu thereof "(b)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), a";

(B) by designating the third sentence as paragraph (2) and by striking out "However, the" in such sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "The"; and

(C) by adding at the end the following:

"(B) The transportation authorized by this section may not be paid a member assigned to a permanent duty station in Alaska or Hawaii for a child attending a school in the State of such permanent duty station.".

SEC. 2. EFFECTIVE DATE

The amendments made by section 1 shall take effect on the date of the enactment of this Act and shall apply with respect to travel and transportation commenced on or after such date.●

S. 194. A bill to upgrade the ground segment of the Search and Rescue Satellite Aided Tracking system, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

SARSAT UPGRADE

● Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. President, for myself, Mr. INOUYE, Mr. STEVENS, Mr. MURKOWSKI, and Mr. BINGAMAN I am introducing legislation today that authorizes the establishment of five new ground stations for the Search and Rescue Satellite Aided Tracking [SARSAT] system. My bill also authorizes sufficient funding for the operation and maintenance of the system.

Mr. President, many may not be aware of the existence of the small but important SARSAT program. The program was created as an experiment in the mid-1970's to see if emergency radio beacons used by aviators and mariners in distress situations could be detected by satellites. Up until that time, distress beacons were detected only by overflying aircraft and fixed radio stations; consequently, most of the signals went undetected resulting in many unnecessary deaths. With the introduction of polar orbiting satellites which view the entire Earth twice each day, the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) undertook an experiment to determine the feasibility of emergency beacon detection from space. Joined by Canada, France, and the Soviet Union, NASA developed the program which is today known in full as COSPAS-SARSAT.

The first satellite was launched by the USSR in June 1982, followed soon after by a U.S. launch in March 1983. Because of its immediate success, the SARSAT program was soon declared quasi-operational and a memorandum of understanding [MOU] was signed in 1984 by the four partners. This MOU was recently superseded by a 15-year International COSPAS-SARSAT Program Agreement, signed last summer on July 1, 1988. Currently, two Soviet and two American satellites service the program. To date, the SARSAT program has been credited with saving 1,200 lives, half of them American.

Unfortunately, the United States has not been able to fulfill completely its commitments under the 1988 agreement. Vast areas of the Pacific, Atlantic, and Caribbean for which we have responsibility remain without coverage. Although we have the ability to detect most distress signals with satellites in our zones of responsibility, many of these signals go unreported simply because we lack the ground stations for receiving the signals the satellites pick up and relay. This untenable situation exists because the U.S. currently possesses only three ground stations, or local user terminals [LUT's]. These particular stations, because they were first established on an experimental basis, are inefficient to operate and, more important, are poorly located. As a result, large "holes" in coverage exist.

In practical terms, what this means is that the Coast Guard or other agencies involved in search and rescue operations are not able to pinpoint the location of sailors or pilots who happen upon misfortune to be in these large blind spots. Indeed, the Coast Guard would have no idea that an emergency situation existed unless it was reported by other means. Without a beacon alert, the Coast Guard has to search for the vessel or aircraft over a wide geographic area, an operation typically requiring 75 hours of search time and the involvement of many costly resources. Search and rescue aircraft alone cost $2,000 an hour to operate. In 1987, in the Southwest Atlantic area, over 16 percent of Coast Guard search and rescue cases took place in the areas uncovered by SARSAT ground stations. In the Northwest Pacific area, 10 percent of the Coast Guard's search time was used on operations undertaken in areas without LUT coverage, even though less than 2 percent of their cases were involved.

Mr. President, the establishment of five new ground stations would cost only $5 million. This is a small financial outlay when one considers the number of lives an updated SARSAT system would save. Also, it is my guess that the ground stations would pay for themselves in a matter of months, if not weeks, from the savings associated with more efficient use of limited resources. Some searches have cost hundreds of thousands, even millions of dollars—expenditures that could have been avoided if an efficient SARSAT system had been in place.

In addition, one must ask whether the cost to commercial and private boaters and pilots to install new SARSAT-compatible beacons are worth the expense if they are only effective in limited geographic areas. At present, there are about 80,000 121.5 Megahertz [MHz] Emergency Position-indicating Radio Beacons [EPIRB's] in operation. Because these are early-generation beacons, many are being updated at considerable cost to be satellite-compatible. Moreover, as a result of recent laws passed by Congress, about 45,000 commercial fishing and towing vessels operating more than 3 nautical miles offshore will be required to install more advanced 406 MHz EPIRB's at an average of $1,000 apiece. This number does not include the thousands of beacons that are likely to be installed on a voluntary basis on private pleasure craft. Nor does it include the beacons that are installed on aircraft, or on foreign vessels and planes. Can we justify the millions of dollars spent on these satellite beacons if a significant possibility exists that they will be broadcasting not to potential rescuers, but to the cold ether?

Mr. President, besides the human and financial benefits associated with SARSAT, I should point out that the program is an example of the kind of international undertaking that generates unambiguous, international goodwill. Last year we were treated to the spectacle of Soviets and Americans working together to save two trapped whales. How much more gratifying would be the sight of Soviets and Americans using the SARSAT program to save the lives of humans in distress.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to support this important legislation.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the text of the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 194

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SEARCH AND RESCUE

SECTION 1. The Secretary of Transportation shall take such action as may be necessary to upgrade the ground segment of the Search and Rescue Satellite Aided Tracking system (hereinafter referred to as "SARSAT").

(b) In carrying out this Act, the Secretary of Transportation shall establish not less than 56 SARSAT ground stations for the purpose of providing adequate coverage of the United States area of search and rescue for which it has responsibility under the program known as "COSPASSARSAT". In establishing such stations, the Secretary, after consultation with the satellite search and rescue offices of the United States Coast Guard, National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, United States Air Force, National Aeronautics and Space Administration, and the SARSAT Program Steering Group, shall locate the stations in the most optimum sites to assure complete coverage of the search and rescue areas for which the United States is responsible.

ADMINISTRATION

SEC. 2. The Secretary of Commerce, acting through the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, shall administer the SARSAT ground stations. Such administration shall be carried out in consultation with the Secretary of Transportation and the Secretary of Defense.

AUTHORIZATIONS

SEC. 3. (a) For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the first section of this Act, there is authorized to be appropriated $5,300,000. Moneys appropriated pursuant to this subsection shall remain available until expended.

(b) For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of section 2 of the Act for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990, and each fiscal year thereafter, there is authorized to be appropriated $2,300,000.●

By Mr. PELL (for himself, Mr. HELMS, Mr. KERRY, Mr. MCCAIN, Mr. GORE, Mr. SIMON, Mr. BOSCHWITZ, Mr. DODD, Mrs. KASSEBAUM, Mr. BURDICK, Mr. HUMPHREY, Mr. SANFORD, Mr. BIDEN, Mr. COHEN, Mr. HARKIN, Mr. DOLE, Mr. STEVENS, Mr. MURKOWSKI, and Mr. LUGAR):

S. 195. A bill entitled the "Chemical and Biological Weapons Control Act of 1989"; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

CHEMICAL AND BIOLOGICAL WEAPONS CONTROL ACT OF 1989

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, today, I am introducing for myself and 18 colleagues the Chemical Weapons Control Act of 1989. This comprehensive legislative initiative would place the United States assuredly in the forefront of nations desiring to stop the spread of chemical and biological weapons and to establish strong penalties for the illegal use of such weapons by any nation.

I am joined in this legislative initiative by the Senators from North Carolina [Mr. HELMS], Massachusetts [Mr. KERRY], Arizona [Mr. MCCAIN], Tennessee [Mr. GORE], Illinois [Mr. SIMON], Minnesota [Mr. BOSCHWITZ], Connecticut [Mr. DODD], Kansas [Mrs. KASSEBAUM], North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK], New Hampshire [Mr. HUMPHREY], North Carolina [Mr. SANFORD], Delaware [Mr. BIDEN], Maine [Mr. COHEN], Iowa [Mr. HARKIN], Kansas [Mr. DOLE], Alaska [Mr. STEVENS and Mr. MURKOWSKI], and Indiana [Mr. LUGAR].

These are the key purposes of the legislation:

To mandate U.S. sanctions against nations that use chemical or biological weapons in violation of international law;

To encourage international sanctions against such nations;

To require semiannual Presidential reports on efforts by Iran, Iraq, Libya, and Syria and other developing nations to acquire the materials and technology to produce and deliver chemical and biological weapons;

To urge cooperation with other supplier nations to devise effective controls on the transfer of materials, equipment, and technology applicable to chemical or biological weapons production;

To promote agreements banning the transfer of missiles suitable for armament with chemical or biological warheads;

To encourage an early agreement banning the production and stockpiling of lethal and incapacitating chemical or biological weapons; and

To seek effective international means of monitoring and reporting regularly on commerce in equipment, materials, and technology applicable to the attainment of a chemical or biological weapons capability.

Mr. President, it is clear that, in order to deal effectively with the chemical and biological weapons problem, every effort must be made to stop the flow of equipment, materials, and technology applicable to the attainment of a chemical and biological weapons capability to nations that may seek such arsenals. This legislation strongly encourages Presidential leadership in bringing about much more extensive cooperation with suppliers, in achieving agreements to prevent the transfer of missiles suitable for carrying chemical or biological warheads, and in seeking the early conclusion of an agreement instituting a chemical weapons ban. In addition, the President is urged to work closely with the United Nations on the development of sanctions against use of chemical or biological weapons and to seek the creation of effective monitoring and reporting means.

The bill would place the United States firmly in the lead of nations which will not tolerate the use of illegal chemical and biological weapons. This is completely consistent with our own position, adhered to for decades, under which we have foresworn the first use of chemical and biological weapons. Should any nation illegally use chemical or biological weapons, these sanctions would apply:

First, the U.S. Government shall not sell the sanctioned country any item on the U.S. Munitions List;

Second, licenses shall not be issued for the export to the sanctioned country of any item on the U.S. Munitions List;

Third, the authorities of section 6 of the Export Administration Act of 1979 shall be used to prohibit the export to the sanctioned country of any goods or technology on the control list established pursuant to section 5(c)(1) of that act;

Fourth, the United States shall oppose any loan or financial or technical assistance to the sanctioned country by international financial institutions in accordance with section 701 of the International Financial Institutions Act;

Fifth, the United States shall not provide any military or economic assistance (except for urgent humanitarian assistance) to the sanctioned country;

Sixth, the United States shall not import any good, commodity, or service from the sanctioned country;

Seventh, the United States shall not provide the sanctioned country any credit or credit guarantees through the Export-Import Bank of the United States;

Eighth, regulations shall be issued to prohibit any United States bank from making any loan or providing any credit to the sanctioned country; and Ninth, landing rights in the United States shall be denied to any airline owned by the government of the sanctioned country.

The bill would allow the President to waive some or all of the sanctions, if he determines such a step is in the national interest and so reports to Congress. This waiver would be allowed for a period of up to 9 months, in order to afford the Congress and the executive branch the opportunity to determine together how best to proceed in dealing with a nation which has illegally used chemical or biological weapons. The bill also specifies the conditions under which sanctions may be removed.

Mr. President, two distinguished colleagues, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HELMS] and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. DOLE] are also introducing legislation today which take different approaches to the chemical weapons problems. Whereas the legislation I am introducing would apply sanctions in instances of illegal use, their legislation would apply sanctions when companies transfer items applicable to the attainment of a chemical weapons capability, I have discussed our approaches with Senator HELMS, and I am pleased to be an original cosponsor of his proposal, as well as that of Senator DOLE. I do so without reaching any final judgment on the particular merits of their legislation, but with the view that these legislative initiatives represent serious efforts to address the problem. I expect that these proposals will be thoroughly explored and assessed in the course of hearings by the Committee on Foreign Relations beginning early next month.

Mr. President, the recent Paris Conference on the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons moved to focus attention on the dire threat posed by chemical and biological weapons. On the basis of a report yesterday to the Committee on Foreign Relations by the Honorable William F. Burns, Director of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, I am encouraged that worldwide interest and concern is at a very high level. With strong, effective United States leadership, I believe that the expressed desires of the conference to achieve a ban on chemical weapons can be brought to an early fruition.

Groundwork for a new agreement was laid in earlier international accords. The 1925 Geneva Protocol, which was ratified by the United States in 1975, bans the use in war of chemical and biological weapons, but not production or stockpiling. The 1972 Biological Weapons Convention, ratified by the United States in 1975, bans the development, production, stockpiling, acquisition, transfer, or possession of biological agents or toxins, as well as weapons and means of delivery.

The treaty being negotiated in Geneva at the Conference on Disarmament would apply the same restrictions as in the Biological Weapons Convention to chemical weapons.

Substantial progress has been made on a number of key issues, and there is agreement in principle on the basic approach a ban would take. Beyond the basic ban, all chemical weapons production facilities and stockpiles would be declared and then destroyed within 10 years. There would be international on-site inspection teams within 6 months of entry into force. Relevant chemical industries would be monitored, and challenge inspections would be provided for.

Mr. President, who among us could read of the use of chemical weapons in the Iran-Iraq war or see the horrifying photographs of the victims of Iraq's use of poisonous gas against its Kurdish minority without a sense of terrible, frustrating loss? Iraq and Iran are not alone among nations able to deliver these death-dealing weapons. Libya, with the help of avaricious firms in other nations, is developing a chemical weapons capability. In all, it is estimated, perhaps 20 nations are seeking a chemical weapons capability.

When gas was used upon the trenches of World War I, the nations of the world were wise enough to say, "Never again." Despite those post-war efforts, poison gas has been used again and again, especially in the past several years.

We must put a stop to this dreadful business. It is clearly in our national interest, as it is in the interest of simple humanity. As leaders of this Nation, we must put the United States in the lead of nations willing to address the chemical and biological weapons problem frontally, and to press on until we have banished chemical and biological weapons from the face of the Earth.●

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, during the past year the dangers of the proliferation of chemical weapons have been brought home repeatedly to the world community by Iraq's senseless chemical attack on its own Kurdish minority and by the discovery of the imminent acquisition of the capability to produce chemical weapons by Libya's unstable dictator, Qadhafi.

In spite of the tremendous dangers of nuclear weaponry, so far we avoided a conflict waged by nuclear weapons through responsible behavior by nuclear powers and probably also by sheer luck. This is not the case with chemical weapons. Beyond the confirmed atrocity committed by Iraq, in recent years there were charges of chemical weapons use in Yemen, Afghanistan, Laos, Cambodia, Angola, Chad and Iran. The fact that not all of these charges were reliably confirmed is not one that can give us much solace.

Indeed, with some cynicism, chemical weapons are referred to as "the poor man's nuclear bomb." The capability to produce them is relatively easy to acquire and conceal, they are cheap, and chemical weapon stockpiles can be hidden. Their use, especially en masse, can compare to the devastation of a small nuclear charge, but even their actual use can sometimes be covered up and denied.

It is clear, Mr. President, that to stop the proliferation of chemical weapons, to penalize their use, and ultimately to destroy existing stockpiles is in our national interest, in the interest of the whole mankind and must be a prominent objective of our foreign policy. I should add that the same attitude should guide use with respect to biological weapons and agents. Their prospective production, stockpile, and use raises exactly the same problems as those of chemical weapons.

It is also clear, that this problem cannot be solved by domestic U.S. legislation, it will require international cooperation and negotiation and an all-out effort by the major powers of the world, especially the advanced industrial powers. The United States, however, rightly regarding herself as a leader of the international community, can start such a process by domestic legislation, to prepare the ground for the necessary international efforts.

Today I join with my colleagues in introducing two such legislative efforts to curb and preferably to eliminate this scourge over the future of mankind. I am an original sponsor of the bill being introduced by the distinguished chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, Senator PELL, the "Chemical and Biological Weapons Control Act of 1989." His bill seeks to penalize the actual use of chemical and biological weapons by denying the governments guilty of such use U.S. military sales, U.S. military and economic assistance, imposing an import ban on them, denying landing rights to their airlines, and seeking to deny them any loans or financial assistance over which the United States has control.

I am also pleased to be a principal sponsor of the "Chemical and Biological Weapons Control Act" introduced by the distinguished Republican leader, Senator DOLE. This bill uses the tool of export controls to prevent the export of materials, equipment, and know-how which would contribute to the proliferation of chemical and biological weapons capability. It would also penalize foreign companies by excluding them from the U.S. market in case they contribute to such proliferation.

These two bills are complementary, not competing, and attack two different facets of the problem. I found it important to be a part of both efforts as I am a member of both committees that have jurisdiction in this area. In the Foreign Relations Committee, as well as in the Banking Committee I will work diligently for the speedy approval of these important bills. In closing, I call my colleagues' attention to these bills and ask for their support.

By Mr. BURDICK (for himself, Mr DURENBERGER, and Mr. MOYNIHAN):

S. 196. A bill to control emissions of air pollutants from municipal waste incineration units, to provide for the safe disposal of ash produced by such units and for other purposes; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

MUNICIPAL WASTE COMBUSTION CONTROL ACT OF 1989

● Mr. BURDICK. Mr. President, together with my colleagues Mr. DURENBERGER from Minnesota, and Mr. MOYNIHAN of New York, I introduce today a bill to regulate the air emissions and the ash from municipal solid waste incinerators.

Recent technological advances have made municipal waste incinerators a valid and vital component of this Nation's solid waste management. At the present time there are approximately 115 municipal waste incinerators in operation, and hundreds more are in planning or construction phases. As with every other method for waste reduction or disposal, we must take care to ensure that incineration is an environmentally sound waste management alternative, and that it will not add to existing or future pollution of our ambient air or ground water.

Each person in the United States produces about 1 ton of solid waste every year. The Environmental Protection Agency estimates this figure could increase to a national total of 290 million tons within the next 11 years by the turn of the century. Landfills have been the most popular method of solid waste disposal, and more than 90 percent of the solid waste is currently landfilled. But landfills often leak, and they are rapidly being filled to capacity. Geographic and health reasons, as well as active citizen concern, are making it increasingly difficult to find appropriate sites and to permit new landfill facilities.

Solid waste incineration has become an attractive waste management option because it can reduce the volume of waste to be landfilled by 60-70 percent. Incineration can extend the useful life of existing landfills and reduce the need for additional new landfill space. While recent EPA estimates suggest that only 4 percent of the Nation's solid waste is currently being incinerated, it is estimated that the number of operational incinerators will double or triple within the next decade.

Municipal waste incinerators are an important piece of waste management, but unless we enact legislation to establish a regulatory program for incinerators to ensure that air emissions from incinerators are not toxic, and that the noncombustibles and particulates recovered in incinerator ash are treated or properly disposed of, we will be trading one pollution problem for another.

It is the responsibility of Congress and the new administration to respond to the growing public concern over the Nation's garbage crisis and develop a regulatory program to ensure that incinerators pose no threat to human health or the environment. If we want incineration to be a viable piece of solid waste management, we cannot afford to let these citizen concerns go unmet. When communities choose municipal waste incineration, it must be with the public's confidence that Federal legislation and regulation ensure it is a safe waste disposal option.

Thanks to the dedicated efforts of Senator DURENBERGER and others the bill we offer today will establish the needed regulatory program to make municipal waste incineration an environmentally sound part of our Nation's waste management. Senator DURENBERGER has done much to focus the attention of our committee and the Senate on this vitally important problem. His efforts are in large measure reflected in the bill we introduce today. A similar version of this bill was considered by the Senate Committee on Environment and Public Works during the 100th Congress, and was reported out of committee as part of S. 1894, the Clean Air Standards Attainment Act in November 1987. As chairman of the Environment and Public Works Committee, it is my hope that we can complete work on badly needed amendments to the Clean Air Act during this Congress.

This legislation is being introduced today as a "stand-alone" bill because the issue is of some degree of urgency with hundreds of new incineration units being planned or under construction. This legislation is in many ways a consensus bill. During the last Congress Senator DURENBERGER and I worked long and hard with representatives of local governments, the waste management industry environmental groups and interested citizens to reach general agreement regarding a regulatory structure for municipal waste incinerators. The Municipal Waste Combustion Control Act of 1989 is a product of those efforts. While some may disagree with specific provisions, no one can claim they were excluded from the process.

The legislation would amend both the Clean Air Act to cover regulation of incinerator emissions into the ambient air, and the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act to regulate the transportation, handling, storage, management, reuse, recycling, and disposal of incinerator ash.

Air pollutants of concern emitted by municipal waste incineration units include dioxin, lead and other heavy metals, sulfur dioxide, acid gases, carbon monoxide, and particulate matter. The legislation would direct the Administrator of EPA to promulgate standards within 18 months to control emissions of these and other air pollutants from new incineration units. The standards are to be based on best available control technologies and practices. Similar standards would be promulgated for existing incineration units, and existing units would have up to 6 years to come into compliance.

It would be both impractical and irresponsible to consider regulations for air emissions from incineration units without simultaneously regulating incinerator ash. This is true because the best available control technology, such as scrubbers, filters, and baghouses, which prevent pollutants from being emitted into the ambient air, trap the pollutants which then become part of the incinerator fly ash. Recent EPA tests have shown that fly ash often has hazardous characteristics. In addition to fly ash, incinerators produce bottom ash which consists of metals and other noncombustibles.

This bill would establish a special category for handling, treatment, storage, management, and disposal of incinerator ash (including fly ash, bottom ash, or combined bottom ash and fly ash) under subtitile D of the Solid Waste Disposal Act [RCRA]. The Administrator of EPA is directed to develop interim regulations to require disposal of incinerator ash in landfills with at least one liner, leachate collection, and a ground water monitoring system until such time as, but not later thatn 48 months from enactment, double-lined landfills or single-lined monofills, also with leachate collection and ground water monitoring systems, are available for the disposal of ash from municipal solid waste incineration units.

During the past months our Nation has been confronted with the unseemly aspects of the growing garbage crisis—garbage washing up on ocean beaches, a garbage barge sailing the Caribbean for weeks in search of a disposal facility. Given the ever-escalating garbage crisis communities in this country face, and the growing public concern and outcry over existing waste practices, it is my hope that this bill will be placed on the Senate Calendar for early consideration in the 101st Congress.

I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD in its entirety.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 196

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Municipal Waste Combustion Control Act of 1989".

AIR EMISSIONS

SEC. 2. (a) Part A of Title I of the Clean Air Act is amended by adding the following new section:

"MUNICIPAL WASTE COMBUSTION

"SEC. 129. (a)(1)(A) Not later than eighteen months after the date of enactment of this section, the Administrator shall promulgate standards of performance to control emissions of air pollutants into the ambient air from each—

"(i) new or modified municipal waste incineration unit; and

"(ii) municipal waste incineration unit which begins operation after July 1, 1989 except units which are substantially completed before such date.

"(B) The standards promulgated under this subsection shall reflect the greatest degree of emission limitation achievable through application of the best available control technologies and practices which the Administrator determines at the time of promulgation (or revision, in the case of a revision of a standard)—

"(i) has been achieved in practice by a municipal waste incineration unit, excluding periods of malfunction or misoperation, or

"(ii) is contained in a State or local regulation or any permit for municipal waste incineration units, and will be implemented at such units, whichever is more stringent, unless the Administrator determines that such degree of emission limitation will not be achievable by units to which the standards apply or was adopted for reasons that are unique to the unit or jurisdiction in which the unit is located and are not applicable to other units or jurisdictions. In determining the emissions limitation to be required under this subsection, the Administrator shall take into account the performance of all units which achieve, in whole or in part, emissions limitations more stringent than current standards and may subsequently exclude units from consideration only to the extent provided in this subparagraph. In establishing standards under this section the Administrator may distinguish between types and classes of municipal waste incineration units based on combustion technology or pollution control systems.

"(C) In no event shall the standards promulgated under this subsection permit such municipal waste incineration units to emit any pollutant in excess of the amount allowable under any applicable new source standards of performance.

"(D) Standards under this subsection shall be based on methods and technologies for removal or destruction of pollutants before, during, or after combustion, and shall incorporate siting requirements that minimize, on a site specific basis, to the maximum extent practicable, any potential risk to human health or the environment. The following practices and control technologies, used individually, in combination with one another, or in combination with other available practices or control technologies not identified in this paragraph, shall be deemed available for purposes of this paragraph: electrostatic precipitators, fabric filtration, flue gas scrubbers, spray dry scrubbers, negative air flow, and good combustion practices, including availability of auxiliary fuel to maintain specific temperatures.

"(E) In adopting standards of performance, the Administrator may take into consideration other technologies and practices that, either by themselves or in combination with other technologies or practices, may achieve a greater degree of emission reduction for the pollutants specified in paragraph (2)(A), including the use of selective or non-selective catalytic reduction, wet flue gas denitrification, selective non-catalytic reduction, wet scrubbing, or catalytic oxidation. The Administrator may require new facilities to be constructed according to designs which allow for addition of selective catalytic reduction, and other technologies, as they become available, except that selective catalytic reduction may not be required by the Administrator at municipal waste incineration units which have installed flue gas treatment for control of emissions of oxides of nitrogen prior to the date of enactment of this section.

"(2)(A) The standards promulgated under this subsection shall specify numerical emission limitations for the following substances or mixtures: particulate matter (total and fine), opacity, sulfur dioxide, hydrogen chloride, oxides of nitrogen, carbon monoxide, lead, cadmium, mercury, halogenated organic compounds, dioxins, and dibenzofurans. In establishing such standards of performance under this subsection, the Administrator shall take into account the use of numerical standards or other methods to reduce the presence in air emissions or ash from a municipal waste incineration unit of each of the following additional substances: volatile organic compounds, beryllium, hydrogen fluoride, antimony, arsenic, barium, chromium, cobalt, copper, nickel, selenium, zinc, polychlorinated biphenyls, chlorobenzenes, chlorophenols, and polynuclear aromatic hydrocarbons.

"(B) In no event shall any such standard allow—

"(i) an outlet gas carbon monoxide concentration greater than 50 parts per million corrected to 7 percent oxygen on a 4-hour average except that the Administrator is authorized to establish a standard for refuse-derived fuel units allowing carbon monoxide concentrations not to exceed 100 parts per million corrected to 7 percent oxygen on a 4-hour average provided that such units commencing construction or modification after the date of enactment of this section control emissions with dry scrubbers and fabric filtration;

"(ii) an outlet gas particulate concentration greater than 0.015 grains per dry standard cubic foot corrected to 7 percent oxygen;

"(iii) an outlet gas concentration of sulfur dioxide greater than 40 parts per million corrected to 7 percent oxygen on an 8-hour average, unless uncontrolled emissions of sulfur dioxide are reduced by not less than 70 percent;

"(iv) an outlet gas concentration of hydrogen chloride greater than 30 parts per million corrected to 7 percent oxygen on an 8-hour average, unless uncontrolled hydrogen chloride emissions are reduced by not less than 90 percent; or

"(v) a retention temperature and time of less than 1800 degrees Fahrenheit or less than 1 second at fully mixed height (or the equivalent), except that the Administrator may establish standards for combustion parameters (including temperature) other than those stated in this paragraph for units employing atmospheric-fluidized bed boilers for the control of oxides of nitrogen, provided that such standards achieve a combustion efficiency equivalent to that required of other units.

"(3) Standards promulgated under this subsection shall be effective no later than six months after the date of promulgation. To the extent that installation of an acid gas scrubber at a municipal waste incineration unit is required to comply with a standard or standards under this subsection, such standard shall be effective for units at which a scrubber is to be installed not later than twenty-four months after the date of promulgation. Not later than five years following the initial promulgation of such standards and at five-year intervals thereafter, the Administrator shall review and, in accordance with this subsection, revise such standards. Such revised standards shall be effective as of the date of six months after the date of promulgation with respect to facilities which begin construction or modification on or after the date on which such standards are first proposed.

"(4) After the effective date of any standard promulgated under this section, it shall be unlawful for any owner or operator of any municipal waste incineration unit to operate such unit in violation of such standard applicable to such unit.

"(5) When promulgating standards (or revised standards) under this subsection the Administrator shall consider the applicability of such standards (as the result of subsection (k)(2)(B)) to municipal waste incineration units already in operation and shall publish with such standards a schedule for compliance for each such unit providing adequate time for retrofit of necessary pollution control equipment, but in no event longer than four years after the date such standards are promulgated.

"(b)(1) In addition to any other applicable requirements, after the date twenty-four months after the enactment of this section, no permit may be issued under a State program approved under part C or part D of this Act for any new or modified municipal waste incineration unit unless (A) the applicant has fully complied with the application requirements for the permit (pursuant to 40 CFR 52.21) and any applicable State requirements before such date, or (B) each of the jurisdictions served by the municipal waste incineration unit (as designated by the State in accordance with section 4006 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act) has prepared, after notice and opportunity for public comment and public hearing, and submitted to the appropriate State official an enforceable solid waste management plan, in accordance with sections 4003 and 4011 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act.

"(2)(A) Beginning twenty-four months after the date of enactment of this section, no permit may be issued under this Act to a municipal waste incineration unit unless an ash management plan has been submitted for the ash from such unit. The application for each permit to be issued to a new or modified municipal waste incineration unit or renewal or issuance of a permit for an existing unit, shall include a reasonable demonstration of adequate capacity to treat, manage, or dispose of the ash produced by the unit for a period of not less than five years in compliance with the requirements of section 4011 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act. Demonstrations required by this paragraph shall be updated every five years as required by subsection (f).

"(B) The Administrator may promulgate regulations or issue guidelines for the implementation of this paragraph which shall provide that, to the extent practicable, demonstrations are based on the characteristics of ash from the municipal waste incineration unit as determined by testing methods prescribed pursuant to section 4011 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act. The initial demonstration required for new or modified municipal waste incineration units under this paragraph shall be based on the characteristics of the ash from units of comparable design (including pollution control equipment and ash treatment systems) combusting similar waste streams.

"(C) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act or the Solid Waste Disposal Act, no person may operate a municipal waste incineration unit unless adequate capacity is available to treat, manage or dispose of the ash produced by the unit in compliance with section 4011 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act.

"(c) If the Administrator fails to promulgate standards under subsection (a) of this section, beginning eighteen months after the date of enactment of this section and extending until such time as standards are promulgated no permit may be granted to the owner or operator of any municipal waste incineration unit which begins operation after July 1, 1989 and which is required to obtain a permit under a State program approved under part C or part D of this Act unless such permit requires compliance with emission standards that comply with subsection (a)(2)(B). Compliance with standards promulgated under subsection (a) shall be required six months after the date such standards are promulgated for all municipal waste incineration units subject to the provisions of this subsection, unless a unit is required to install an acid gas scrubber to comply with a standards in which case the standard shall be effective for such unit no later than twenty-four months after promulgation.

"(d) Not later than eighteen months after the enactment of this section, the Administrator shall promulgate regulations and standards of performance to control emissions of air pollutants into the ambient air from each municipal waste incineration unit which is in operation or which is substantially completed prior to January 1, 1989. Such standards of performance shall be established on the basis of the degree of emission limitation achievable through application of available control technologies and practices as determined under subsection (a)(1), and shall specify emission limitations for the substances required under subsection (a)(2). In establishing standards under this subsection the Administrator may distinguish between types and classes of municipal waste incineration units based on combustion technology or pollution control systems. In no event shall any such standard allow—

"(1) an outlet gas carbon monoxide concentration greater than 100 parts per million corrected to 7 percent oxygen on a 8-hour average except that the Administrator is authorized to establish a standard for units allowing carbon monoxide concentrations not to exceed 200 parts per million corrected to 7 percent oxygen on a 8-hour average provided that such units control emissions with acid gas scrubbers and fabric filtration;

"(2) an outlet gas particulate concentration greater than 0.020 grains per dry standard cubic foot corrected to 7 percent oxygen;

"(3) an outlet gas concentration of sulfur dioxide greater than 60 parts per million corrected to 7 percent oxygen on an 8-hour average, unless uncontrolled emissions of sulfur dioxide are reduced by 70 percent;

"(4) an outlet gas concentration of hydrogen chloride of 45 parts per million corrected to 7 percent oxygen on an 8-hour average, unless uncontrolled emissions of hydrogen chloride are reduced by 90 percent; or

"(5) a retention temperature and time of less than 1800 degrees Fahrenheit or less than 1 second at fully mixed height (or the equivalent).

The Administrator shall promulgate a schedule for compliance with these standards. In no event shall such schedule provide for compliance with such standards later than the date six years after the enactment of this section, except that facilities which will be required to meet standards established under subsection (a) (as a result of subsection (k)(2)(B)) within three additional years of such date may be allowed a variance from the compliance schedule of this section during such three-year (or shorter) period provided that the owner or operator of any unit seeking a variance certifies that compliance with standards established under subsection (a) will be achieved on and after the date applicable under subsection (a).

"(e)(1) The Administrator shall promulgate regulations requiring the owner or operator of each municipal waste incineration unit—

"(A) to monitor emissions from the unit at the point at which such emissions are emitted into the ambient air (or within the stack, combustion chamber or pollution control equipment, as appropriate) and at such other points as necessary to protect human health and the environment;

"(B) to monitor such other parameters relating to the operation of the unit and its pollution control technology as the Administrator determines are appropriate; and

(C) to report the results of such monitoring. Such regulations shall contain provisions regarding the frequency of monitoring, test methods and procedures validated on municipal incineration units, and the form and frequency of reports containing the results of monitoring and shall require that any monitoring reports or test results indicating exceedance of standards under this section shall be reported separately and in a manner that facilitates review for purposes of enforcement actions. Such regulations shall require that copies of the results of such monitoring be maintained on file at the facility concerned and that copies shall be made available for inspection and copying by interested members of the public during business hours.

"(2) The Administrator shall promulgate the regulations required under this subsection within eighteen months after the enactment of this section. Such regulations may be revised from time to time in accordance with paragraph (1). Except as provided in paragraph (3), the requirements of this subsection shall take effect—

"(A) upon commencement of operation of any new or modified unit' and

"(B) Twenty-four months after the enactment of this part in the case of any existing municipal waste incineration unit.

"(3)(A) The regulations promulgated under this subsection shall, at a minimum, require continuous monitoring for the following: opacity, hydrogen chloride (if such monitoring device or method is available), sulfur dioxide, oxides of nitrogen, carbon monoxide, carbon dioxide, oxygen, stack temperature, furnace temperature (or secondary combustion zone temperature, as appropriate) and stack gas temperature at the inlet to the particulate control device.

"(B) For all emissions subject to standards under this section that are not subject to continuous monitoring under subparagraph (A), the regulations promulgated under this subsection shall require periodic monitoring of such emissions at each municipal waste incineration unit not less frequently than—

"(i) every six months, or

"(ii) six months after commencement of operations, and every eighteen months thereafter if the owner or operator of such unit demonstrates that such unit has complied with all applicable emissions standards as of the commencement of operations and during the previous periods of monitoring and maintains standards during each interval between monitoring.

Regulations promulgated under this section shall provide for prompt monitoring of emissions and parameters which are not monitored continuously whenever there is a violation of a related emission standard or parameter which is continuously monitored.

"(C) The initial monitoring under this subsection shall commence at the later of the following—

"(i) The date six months after the promulgation of regulations under this subsection; or

"(ii) the commencement of operation of the unit concerned.

"(4) Notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph (3), regulations promulgated under this subsection and applicable to municipal waste incineration units which are not major emitting facilities as defined in part C may provide for monitoring with other than EPA-certifiable monitoring methods and shall at a minimum require continuous monitoring of: oxygen, opacity; furnace temperature (or secondary combustion zone temperature, as appropriate); carbon monoxide; pH; and such other parameters as the Administrator shall require.

"(5)(A) The regulations required by this subsection may require the owner or operator of each municipal waste incineration unit to establish and operate, or to pay the costs of establishing and operating, a program to detect impacts of the unit, or any associated releases, on the environment or human health. Such program shall require periodic testing for and public reporting of the presence of waste constituents or contaminants (or indicators thereof) at statistically significant levels.

"(B) In any case in which exposure to municipal waste incineration unit emissions or ash may pose a potential risk to human health, the Administrator or the State may request the Administrator of the Agency for Toxic Substances and Disease Registry to conduct a health assessment in connection with the unit and such other health studies or surveillance as may be warranted, as authorized under section 104(i) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act of 1980. Such studies may include programs to detect changes in the body burden of various pollutants including but not limited to lead, mercury, cadmium, halogenated hydrocarbons, and dioxins in any area affected by incineration unit emissions or ash.

"(f) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, each permit for a municipal waste incineration unit issued under this Act may be issued for a period of up to twenty years and shall be reviewed every five years after date of issuance or reissuance. Each permit shall continue in effect after the date of issuance until the date of termination, unless the Administrator or State determines—

"(1) that the unit is not in compliance with all standards and conditions contained in the permit;

"(2) that compliance with additional conditions will impose minimal costs on the owner or operator of the unit and such conditions will reduce air emissions below levels specified in the permit, or

"(3) capacity to treat or dispose of the ash from such unit in compliance with section 4011 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act for a five-year period after such determination has not been demonstrated.

Such determination shall be made at regular intervals during the term of the permit, such intervals not to exceed five years, and only after public comment and public hearing. For purposes of this subsection, the term "minimal costs" shall not exceed five percent of the actual capital costs of the unit. No permit for a municipal waste incineration unit may be issued under this Act by an agency, instrumentality or person (other than a Governor) that is also responsible, in whole or part, for the design and construction or operation of the unit. Notwithstanding any other provision of this subsection, the Administrator or State may require the owner or operator of any unit to comply with emissions limitations or implement any other measures, if the Administrator or State determines that emissions in the absence of such limitations or measures may reasonably be anticipated to endanger public health or the environment.

"(g)(1) Nothing in this section shall diminish or otherwise affect any authority to establish and enforce standards under section 111 or 112 or under any other authority of law for emissions from municipal waste incineration units of any air pollutant not referred to in subsection (a). With respect to emissions from municipal waste incineration units of any air pollutant referred to in subsection (a)—

"(A) nothing in this section shall diminish the authority of the Administrator to promulgate more stringent standards under section 112 or any other provision of this Act;

"(B) nothing in this section shall diminish the authority of the Administrator or a State to establish any other requirements under any other authority of law, including the authority to establish for any such air pollutant a national ambient air quality standard;

"(C) no requirement of an applicable implementation plan under section 165 (relating to construction of facilities in regions identified pursuant to section 107(d)(1) (D) or (E)) or under section 172(b)(6) (relating to permits for construction and operation in nonattainment areas) may be used to weaken the standards in effect under this section; and

"(D) nothing in this section shall be interpreted, construed or applied to limit the authority of the Administrator to impose more stringent requirements for the incineration of hospital or other infectious wastes under this Act or other authority including subtitle C of the Solid Waste Disposal Act (42 U.S.C. 6921, et seq.).

"(2) Nothing in this Act shall be construed, interpreted, or applied to preempt, supplant, or displace other State or Federal law, whether statutory or common.

"(h) Any State may submit to the Administrator a proposed State program for implementation and concurrent enforcement of the requirements of this section. After ninety days after submission to the Administrator, the State shall be treated as authorized to enforce the requirements of this section in such State unless the Administrator determines that the State program does not provide enforcement equivalent to Federal enforcement under this Act. Whenever the Administrator determines that a State is not enforcing the requirements of this section in a manner equivalent to Federal enforcement, the Administrator shall withdraw the authorization for such State. Each State program approved under this subsection shall, at a minimum, include permitting requirements for each new and existing municipal waste incineration unit located in the State. Any permit issued by a State may be reviewed and withdrawn by the Administrator on the Administrator's own motion or upon a showing by any person that the conditions contained in such permit are not in compliance with the requirements of this Act.

"(i) Nothing in this section shall preclude or deny the right of any State or political subdivision thereof to adopt or enforce any regulation, requirement, or standard relating to municipal waste incineration units that is more stringent than a regulation, requirement, or standard in effect under this section or under any other provision of this Act.

"(j) For purposes of sections 111(e), 113, 114, 116, 120, 304, and 307 each standard and other requirement promulgated under this section shall be treated in the same manner as a standard of performance under section 111 which is an emission limitation and each requirement of a State plan authorized under this section shall be treated as a requirement of an applicable implementation plan. Any civil penalties imposed by a court against a unit of local government under this Act for violations of this section shall be paid into a trust fund or comparable mechanism established by a court or the State and shall be applied in support of public programs or activities, as authorized by the court (or a fund administrator appointed by the court), that serve to enhance the protection of human health and the environment of the residents of such unit of local government but shall not be used to come into compliance with requirements established under this section or section 4011 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act.

"(k) As used in this section—

"(1) The term 'municipal waste incineration unit' means a distinct operating unit of any facility which combusts any solid waste material from commercial or industrial establishments or the general public (including single and multiple residences, hotels, and motels). Such term does not include incinerators or other units required to have a permit under section 3005 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act. The Administrator may promulgate standards for hospital incineration units (or other units operated principally to handle infectious wastes) under other provisions of this Act or section 3005 of the Solid Waste Disposl Act in lieu of standards under this section, provided that such standards are no less stringent than the standards under this section which are applicable to muncipal waste incineration units of a comparable class or type. Until such regulations are promulgated, hospital incinertion units (or other units operated principally to handle infectious wastes) shall be subject to the requirements of this section.

"(2) The term 'new municipal waste incineration unit' means a municipal waste incineration unit—

"(A) the construction or modification of which is commenced after the Administrator proposes requirements under this section establishing emissions standards or other requirements which would be applicable to such unit, or

"(B) effective January 1, 1992, which had commenced operation twenty years or more previously.

"(3) The term "substantially completed unit" means a unit not in operation before July 1, 1989 for which the addition of required pollution control equipment will cost more than twice what such equipment would have cost had it been constructed as part of the permitted design or for which 90 percent of all construction has been completed before such date.

"(4) The term 'modified municipal waste incineration unit' means a municipal waste incineration unit at which modifications have occurred after the effective date of a standard under subsection (a) or (d) if (A) the cumulative cost of the modifications, over the life of the unit, exceed 50 per centum of the original cost of construction and installation of the unit (not including the cost of any land purchased in connection with such construction or installation), or (B) the modification is a physical change in or change in the method of operation of the unit which increases the amount of any air pollutant emitted by the unit for which standards have been established under this section.

"(5) The term 'existing municipal waste incineration unit' means a municipal waste unit which is not a new or modified municipal waste incineration unit.

"(1)(1) Not later than eighteen months after the enactment of this section, the Administrator shall publish guidelines identifying items or materials that should be removed from municipal waste prior to incineration, either through separation by the generator of such waste or a central facility from the general waste stream or through limitations on the composition (including inks and pigments) of products or on the disposal of such items or materials in municipal waste.

"(2) Regulations under this section shall require the operator of any municipal waste incineration unit to establish contractual requirements or other appropriate notification and inspection procedures sufficient to assure that the unit does not receive any waste required to be placed in a facility permitted under section 3005 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act.

"(m) If the Administrator finds that there is a reasonable basis to conclude that any product or article distributed in commerce presents, or may (to a reasonable degree of certainty) present, a threat to human health or the environment as the result of incineration of such product or article at municipal waste incineration units which are in compliance with standards promulgated under this section or as the result of the handling or disposal of ash from such units, the Administrator shall by rule apply one or more of the following requirements to the composition of such product or article, its distribution in commerce or methods of disposal as may be necessary to protect human health and the environment—

"(1) requirements prohibiting or limiting the manufacture, processing or distribution in commerce of such product or article;

"(2) requirements with respect to the concentration of any substances in the composition of the product or article including a prohibition on the presence of such substances in the product, article or its residue;

"(3) requirements for the marketing or labeling of such product or article including instructions for the proper disposal of such product or article or its residues;

"(4) requirements for recovering or recycling such products or articles including the imposition of reimbursable fees on the sale of such product or article;

"(5) requirements that solid waste management plans for areas served by municipal waste incineration units as required by subsection (b) of this section provide for the separation, recovery or recycling of such products or articles or residues to prevent, to the maximum extent practicable, any threat to human health or the environment which may result from the incineration of such products, articles or their residues or the handling or disposal of ash from units which have incinerated such products, articles or their residues; or

"(6) requirements for the disposal of such product or article or its residues.

The Administrator shall make a determination under this section with respect to lead, cadmium and other metals in plastics, inks, paints and other products not later than twenty-four months after the date of enactment of this Act.

"(n) Not later than eighteen months after the enactment of this section, the Administrator shall develop and promote a model State program for the training and certification of municipal waste incinerator operators. The program shall include a requirement that all operators achieve a passing grade on an examination on (and participate in continuing education to stay informed about) current technology for the control of pollution from municipal waste incineration units. The Administrator may authorize any State to implement a State program for the training and certification of municipal waste incinerator operators if the State has adopted a program which is at least as stringent as the model program developed by the Administrator. Beginning on the date thirty months after the date of enactment of this section it shall be unlawful to operate a municipal waste incineration unit unless each person with control over processes affecting emissions from such unit has satisfactorily completed a training and certification program meeting the requirements established by the Administrator under this subsection.

(b) Section 169(1) of the Clean Air Act is amended by striking "two hundred and" after "municipal incinerators capable of charging more than".

(c) Section 113 of the Clean Air Act is amended by adding ", 133" after "112(c)" wherever it occurs.

ASH MANAGEMENT AND DISPOSAL

SEC. 3. (a) Subtitle D of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding the following new section:

"MUNICIPAL WASTE COMBUSTION ASH

"SEC. 4011.(a)(1) Not later than eighteen months after the date of enactment of this section, the Administrator shall promulgate regulations for the management, handling, storage, treatment, transportation, reuse, recycling, and disposal of ash from municipal waste incineration units, as may be necessary to protect human health and the environment. Notwithstanding other provisions of this Act, the management, handling, storage, treatment, transportation, reuse, recycling, and disposal of ash from municipal waste incineration units shall be subject to this section and subtitle and not subject to the provisions of subtitle C except that the Administrator may issue regulations under subtitle C in lieu of regulations under this section applicable to ash from units operated primarily to incinerate hospital or other infectious wastes. Until such time as regulations are promulgated for such units, ash from units operated primarily to incinerate hospital or other infectious wastes shall be subject to the requirements of this section. The provisions of section 3007 and 3008 shall apply to ash from municipal waste incineration units and the requirements of this section to the same extent that such sections apply to hazardous wastes and the requirements of subtitle C.

"(2) For the purposes of this section, the term—

"(A) 'municipal waste incineration unit' shall have the meaning given in section 131(k)(1) of the Clean Air Act; and

"(B) 'treatment' means any method, technique, or process designed to change the physical, chemical, or biological character or composition of any ash so as to remove or permanently fix in place any constituent of the ash which, in the event of mismanagement during transportation, storage, reuse or disposal, would pose a threat to human health or the environment and includes testing of such ash to assure that criteria promulgated under subsection (e) are satisfied.

"(3) Regulations promulgated under this section may establish requirements that apply to fly ash separately, to bottom ash separately, or to the combination of fly ash and bottom ash.

"(b)(1) Regulations promulgated under subsection (a) for the disposal of ash from municipal waste incineration units in landfills shall require—

"(A) the installation of two or more composite liners and a leachate collection system above and between such liners, in accordance with paragraph (2); and

"(B) groundwater monitoring.

"(2) The requirement of paragraph (1)(A) may be satisfied by the installation of liners designed, operated, and constructed of materials to prevent the migration of any constituent into such liners during the period such facility remains in operation (including any post-closure monitoring period). For the purposes of this section the term 'composite liner' means a liner which consists of a flexible membrane liner and at least a 3-foot thick layer of recompacted clay or other natural material with a hydraulic conductivity of no more than 1×10^{-7} centimeter per second. The provisions of this paragraph apply prior to and after the promulgation of regulations under paragraph (1).

"(3)(A) Notwithstanding the requirement of paragraph (1)(A), regulations promulgated under subsection (a) may provide for the placement of ash from municipal waste incineration units in a monofill (containing only ash from such units) with a composite liner designed, operated and constructed of materials to prevent the migration of any constituent into and through such liner during the period the monofill remains in operation (including any post-closure monitoring period), ground water monitoring and leachate collection.

"(B) If fly ash is to be disposed in a monofill containing solely or substantially fly ash, such ash shall be treated pursuant to treatment standards established under this section before disposal or such monofill shall be constructed with an additional liner and a leachate detection and collection system between the liners.

"(C) Requirements under this paragraph are minimum requirements and the Administrator shall promulgate more stringent requirements applicable where necessary to assure that releases from a monofill will not contaminate ground water or surface water or otherwise pose a threat of adverse effects on human health or the environment.

"(4) The design requirements of paragraphs (1) and (3) shall not apply if the owner or operator of a solid waste management unit utilizing an alternative design demonstrates to the State, and the State finds, that the alternative design and operating practices will prevent the migration of any hazardous constituent into the ground water or surface water at least as effectively as the design requirements of paragraph (1) or (3) of this subsection. The State shall not solely or substantially rely upon location characteristics to make any determination under this paragraph. The Administrator may review, on appeal by any person or on the Administrator's own motion, and reverse any determination made by a State under this subsection. The Administrator shall make a decision on any appeal within one hundred and eighty days.

"(5) Liner requirements imposed under paragraph (2) or (3) of this subsection or subsection (c) shall include provisions for quality control and quality assurance with respect to the design and installation of the liners.

"(6) Nothing in this section shall be interpreted, construed or applied to require the routine testing of ash which is disposed in a landfill or monofill meeting the requirements of this subsection.

"(c) Regulations promulgated under subsection (a) may allow disposal of ash from municipal waste incineration units in sanitary landfills with at a minimum one liner, leachate collection and groud water monitoring and otherwise meeting the requirements of revised criteria promulgated under section 4010(c), if (1) such ash is routinely tested and does not fail any criteria under subsection (e); and (2) any fly ash so disposed (including any fly ash combined with bottom ash) has undergone treatment (as defined in subsection (a)) in accordance with regulations for treatment promulgated under this section and such treated fly ash is separately tested and does not fail any criteria established under subsection (e). For the purposes of this section, the mixing of fly ash and bottom ash, or the mixing of such ash with other solid waste, without the introduction of chemical stabilization agents, does not constitute treatment. Ash may not be disposed of in units that are created as a result of vertical expansion of an existing waste disposal facility unless the owner or operator of such facility demonstrates, and the State finds, that there will be no settling (that would impair the integrity of any required liner) of the waste upon which the proposed unit is to be built.

"(d)(1) The regulations under this section shall include such requirements applicable to the reuse and recycling of the ash from municipal waste incineration units, including criteria and routine testing procedures, as may be necessary to protect human health and the environment. In developing such regulations, the Administrator shall consider, to the extent feasible and appropriate, all potential pathways of human and environmental exposure, including both short-term and long-term, to hazardous constituents of such ash from such recycling and reuse. The pathways to be considered shall include, but not be limited to, inhalation, ingestion as a consequence of incorporation of the ash or any hazardous constituents into the food chain, ingestion of potable water or aquatic organisms contaminated by surface runoff, leaching or percolation of such ash or its hazardous constituents into ground water or surface water, ingestion or inhalation of soil particles contaminated with such ash, and dermal contact with such ash. At a minimum the Administrator shall consider with respect to such recycling and reuse, appropriate methods to determine leaching, total chemical analysis, respirability, and toxicity.

"(2) Such regulations shall require treatment of ash from municipal waste incineration units before any such ash is recycled or reused to protect human health and the environment. Such regulations shall specify those levels or methods of treatment that, taking into account the potential pathways of exposure identified in paragraph (1)—

"(A) substantially reduce the likelihood of migration of ash or its hazardous constituents so that short-term and long-term threats to human health and the environment are minimized;

"(B) satisfy any criteria and routine testing procedures included in the regulations under paragraph (1); and

"(C) assure that the recycling or reuse of such ash is protective of human health and the environment.

"(3) If the Administrator fails to promulgate regulations under this subsection, no person may reuse or recycle ash from a municipal waste incineration unit after the date thirty-six months after the date of enactment of this section unless such ash is treated and leachate from an extraction procedure toxicity test applied to such ash does not exceed standards established pursuant to section 1412 of the Safe Drinking Water Act for any pollutant or contaminant.

"(e)(1) For the purposes of developing regulations for the management, handling, storage, treatment, transportation, reuse, recycling, and disposal of ash from municipal waste incineration units under this section, the Administrator shall promulgate criteria and testing procedures for identifying the characteristics of ash from municipal waste incineration units that may pose a hazard to human health or the environment. In considering potential hazards to human health and the environment, the Administrator shall consider, to the extent appropriate and feasible, all potential pathways of human or environmental exposure to constituents of such ash, including, but not limited to, inhalation, ingestion as a consequence of incorporation of the ash or any constituent into the food chain, ingestion of potable water or aquatic organisms contaminated by surface runoff, leaching or percolation of such ash or its constituents into ground water or surface water, ingestion or inhalation of soil particles contaminated with such ash, and dermal contact with such ash (including, for all such pathways, situations of disposal or reuse). At a minimum, the Administrator shall consider appropriate methods to determine leaching, total chemical analysis, respirability, and toxicity. The criteria and accompanying testing procedures promulgated by the Administrator under this subsection shall reflect the heterogeneous characteristics of municipal solid waste and municipal incinerator ash, including seasonal variations in the constituents of such solid waste and ash. Leaching procedures established under this subsection shall include testing under acidic and native conditions. Test leachate from any ash containing a substance in concentrations exceeding the maximum contaminant level for such substance established pursuant to section 1412 of the Safe Drinking Water Act by a factor of one hundred or more shall, unless the Administrator establishes a more stringent requirement, constitute a failure of the test required by this section.

"(2) The Administrator shall require the owner or operator of any municipal waste incineration unit or any facility handling, transporting, storing, treating, reusing, recycling, or disposing pursuant to subsection (c) or (d) of ash from such unit to test such ash in accordance with the criteria and testing procedures promulgated under this subsection. If fly ash and bottom ash are combined, such combined ash must also be tested in accordance with such criteria and testing procedures, including, as the Administrator determines necessary, the separate testing of bottom ash and fly ash.

"(3) Any ash which fails in any characteristic under the criteria and testing procedures promulgated by the Administrator under this subsection shall be disposed of in a facility in compliance with subsection (b)(1) or (3), or shall be treated (as defined in subsection (a)) in accordance with regulations promulgated under subsection (a) and shall be demonstrated to satisfy all applicable criteria promulgated under this subsection before disposal (pursuant to subsection (c)) or reuse (pursuant to subsection (d)).

"(4) The Administrator shall seek to validate the criteria and testing procedures established pursuant to this subsection by conducting a program of continuing analysis of leachate produced at facilities disposing or reusing ash from municipal waste incineration units.

"(f)(1) Beginning 30 months after the date of enactment of this section any facility receiving ash from municipal waste incineration units from the purpose of treatment, storage, reuse, recycling, or disposal shall be subject to a permit program or other system or prior approval and conditions comparable to those required by section 4005(c).

"(2) Before the issuance of a permit or other prior approval to any person with respect to any facility for treatment, storage, reuse, recycling or disposal of incinerator ash, the Administrator or the State shall provide for public notice and the opportunity for an informal public hearing, in accordance with the provisions of section 7004(b)(2) of this Act.

"(g)(1) Whenever on the basis of any information the Administrator determines that there is or has been a release of any hazardous constituent from a facility regulated under this section, the Administrator may issue an order requiring corrective action or such other response measure as the Administrator deems necessary to protect human health or the environment or the Administrator may commence a civil action in the United States district court in the district in which the facility is located for appropriate relief, including a temporary or permanent injunction.

"(2) Any order issued under this subsection may include a suspension or revocation of authorization to operate, shall state with reasonable specificity the nature of the required corrective action or other response measure, and shall specify a time for compliance. If any person named in an order fails to comply with the order, the Administrator may assess, and such person shall be liable to the United States for, a civil penalty in an amount not to exceed $25,000 for each day of noncompliance with the order.

"(3) Regulations promulgated under subsection (a) shall require corrective action for all releases of hazardous constituents from any solid waste management unit at a facility seeking a permit under this section, regardless of the time at which waste was placed in such unit. Permits issued under this section shall contain schedules of compliance for such corrective action and assurances of financial responsibility for completing such corrective action.

"(h) Regulations promulgated under subsection (a) shall establish requirements for the proper closure of facilities treating, storing, or disposing of ash from municipal waste incineration units, for the post-closure monitoring and care of such facilities for a period of not less than thirty years, and for assurances of financial responsibility for closure, post-closure care and corrective action.

"(i)(1) Beginning eighteen months after the date of enactment of this section, any State may submit to the Administrator a proposed program for implementation and concurrent enforcement of the requirements of this section which may be considered and approved by the Administrator in accordance with the procedures established in section 4007. State programs approved under this subsection shall contain provisions assuring that each facility receiving ash from a municipal incineration unit obtains a permit or other form of prior approval as provided in subsection (f). Whenever the Administrator determines that a State is not enforcing the requirements of this section in a manner equivalent to Federal enforcement, the Administrator shall withdraw the authorization of such State program under this subsection.

"(2) Nothing in this section shall prohibit any State or political subdivision thereof from imposing any requirement with respect to the management, handling, storage, treatment, transportation, reuse, recycling or disposal of ash from municipal waste incineration units which is more stringent than any requirement established under this section.

"(j)(1) To the extent that a solid waste management plan is required under section 113(b) of the Clean Air Act and effective twenty-four months after the date of enactment of this section, each jurisdiction served by a municipal incineration unit applying for a permit under a State program approved pursuant to part C or part D of the Clean Air Act shall prepare, after notice and opportunity for public comment, and submit an enforceable solid waste management plan which is based on an analysis of all solid waste handling alternatives and which, to the maximum extent practicable, (A) minimizes the threat to human health and the environment from solid waste, (B) achieves the conservation of material resources and protection of human health and the environment through solid waste reduction, source separation or control, and recycling of not less than 25 per centum of the waste stream by weight as expeditiously as practicable, but in no event later than three years after the adoption of such plan, unless the State finds that such per centum is not economically achievable and establishes an alternative per centum consistent with the provisions of this subsection.

"(2) For purposes of this section the term 'enforceable solid waste management plan' means a plan adopted by the State or a local government containing provisions with the force and effect of law or to which the appropriate unit of government is contractually committed, which require, to the extent practicable—

"(A) the elimination or reduction of specific wastes or waste constituents (including limitations on the composition of locally produced products, such as products using inks or pigments or prohibitions on disposal of certain items in municipal waste) from municipal waste prior to land disposal or incineration, to (i) reduce the risk to human health or the environment posed by any such waste or constituent or its byproducts (whether combustion or otherwise) when present in land disposal, incineration emissions, or incinerator ask, or (ii) facilitate the utilization of safer treatment, storage or disposal alternatives;

"(B) the separation of wastes at their source or prior to incineration or land disposal to allow the separate treatment and disposal of such wastes, including lead-acid automobile batteries, cathode ray tubes and other concentrated or specialized sources of pollutants including lead, cadmium, chlorine, mercury, fluorine, dioxins and furans and substances containing them; and

"(C) the return to, and acceptance by, retail merchants or their agents, for purposes of pickup and delivery, of waste items the treatment, storage or disposal of which can be more effectively or safely effected through such means.

"(3) A solid waste management plan required by this section and section 133(b) of the Clean Air Act shall be prepared by the agency designated by applicable State laws as responsible for the solid waste management planning for the jurisdiction or jurisdictions served or to be served by the municipal waste incineration unit or, in the absence of such designation, by such jurisdiction of jurisdictions. The agency designated in an enforceable solid waste management plan as the agency responsible for carrying out the plan, or in the absence of such designation, the jurisdiction or jurisdictions shall carry out the plan in accordance with its terms at all times that such plan is in effect.

"(4) Solid waste management plans developed pursuant to the requirements of this subsection shall be reviewed and promptly approved or disapproved by the State official with responsibility for administering solid waste management programs. In the event that jurisdictions located in more than one State are served by a municipal waste incineration unit, the Governors of such States may delegate authority to review and approve solid waste management plans as required under this subsection to an interstate planning or regional solid waste entity with the capability to assess and oversee the implementation of such plans.

"(5) After approval by the appropriate State official of solid waste management plans for all jurisdictions served or to be served by a municipal waste incineration unit as provided in paragraph (4), an application for a permit under a State program approved pursuant to part C or part D of the Clean Air Act for a new or modified municipal waste incineration unit shall not be delayed or denied by a court or any other agency or person having jurisdiction on the basis of the alleged inadequacy of the enforceable solid waste management plan in effect for the jurisdiction or jurisdictions served or to be served by such unit, or the alleged or proven failure of the responsible agencies to carry out the plan. Such a permit issued while an enforceable solid waste management plan is in effect shall not be suspended, modified or revoked on the basis that, after the permit is issued, the plan is alleged or proven to be inadequate or the agencies responsible to carry out the plan are alleged or proven to have failed to do so. No permit for a municipal waste incineration unit authorized for issuance under the Clean Air Act may be denied, delayed or withdrawn by a court solely on the basis of the inadequacy of a plan or the implementation of a plan required by this subsection after such plan has been approved by the appropriate State official. Nothing in this paragraph shall be interpreted to preclude the imposition of penalties or the commencement of a suit under section 7002 or enforcement provisions of a State program approved under subsection (i) against a local jurisdiction for any failure to adopt or carry out a solid waste management plan in accordance with this section.

"(6) Any civil penalties imposed by a court against a local unit of government for a violation of this section (including any violation of section 4005(a)) shall be paid into a trust fund or comparable mechanism established by the court or the State and shall be applied in support of public programs or activities, as authorized by the court (or fund administrator appointed by the court), that serve to enhance the protection of human health and the environment of the residents of such local unit of government except that such funds may not be used to come into compliance with the requirements of this section or section 133 of the Clear Air Act.

"(7) Not later than twelve months after the date of enactment of this section, the Administrator shall publish guidance which would be useful to States, solid waste planning authorities and jurisdictions served or to be served by municipal waste incineration units in the development and implementation of solid waste management plans as required by this subsection.

"(k)(1) Export of ash from a municipal waste incineration unit to locations outside of the United States shall be unlawful except as provided in an international agreement between the United States and the country receiving the ash. Any such international agreement shall include at a minimun—

"(A) a provision for obtaining the consent of the receiving country prior to shipment of the ash;

"(B) a provision that requires tracking of the ash shipment from the site of generation to the receiving country;

"(C) a provision for cooperation betweeen the United States and the receiving country on compliance and enforcement of the agreement.

"(2) No person shall export ash from a municipal waste incineration unit to locations outside of the United States without a permit or other prior approval from the Administrator to do so. Permits granted for export under this section shall have a term not to exceed five years, shall be accompanied by fees sufficient to offset the cost experienced by the Administrator in monitoring compliance with the conditions of the permit and shall contain such other requirements as the Administrator may deem appropriate.

"(l)(1) Regulations promulgated under this section shall be effective upon promulgation, except that requirements promulgated pursuant to subsection (b) or (c) with respect to the disposal of ash from municipal waste incineration units shall be effective on and after the date forty-eight months after the date of enactment of this section.

"(2) Beginning eighteen months after the date of enactment of this section and until the effective date of disposal requirements promulgated pursuant to subsection (b) or (c), ash from municipal waste incineration units shall not be disposed in landfills unless such landfills have, at a minimum, one liner, leachate collection and ground water monitoring and otherwise meet the criteria for sanitary landfills issued under this subtitle.

"(3) Notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph (2), the Administrator or a State may grant on a case-by-case basis a variance from the requirement that ash from each municipal waste incineration unit be disposed in a facility with a liner, leachate collection and ground water monitoring beginnign eighteen months after enactment of this section, on a showing by the owner or operator of any such unit that sufficient capacity to dispose of ash in compliance with such requirements is not available for the unit taking cost into consideration. No variance granted under this paragraph shall extend for a period longer than thirty months after the date of enactment of this section.

"(4) Notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph (1), the Administrator or a State may grant on a case-by-case basis a variance from the requirement that ash from municipal waste incineration units be disposed only in landfills meeting the requirements of subsections (b) or (c) beginning forty-eight months after the date of enactment of this section, on a showing by the owner or operator of any such unit that good faith efforts were made to satisfy such requirement but the unit will fail to do so for reasons not in control of the owner or operator of such unit. No variance granted under this paragraph shall extend for a period longer than seventy-two months after the date of enactment of this section.

"(5) If the Administrator fails to promulgate regulations under subsection (a) for the disposal of ash from municipal incineration units, no person may dispose of ash in a landfill after forty-eight months after the date of enactment of this section unless such landfill satisfies the requirements of subsections (b)(1) or (b)(3).

"(m)(1) Beginning on the effective date of any regulation or requirement under this section if shall be unlawful to manage, handle, store, treat, transport, reuse, recycle, or dispose of ash from a municipal waste incineration unit otherwise than in accordance with such regulation or requirement or a State program approved pursuant to subsection (i).

"(2) Prior to and after the effective date of regulations under this section, the Administrator may use the authorities of section 3008 to enforce the requirements of this section. In the case of a violation in a State which is authorized to implement and enforce a program under subsection (i), the Administrator shall give notice to the State in which a violation has occurred prior to issuing an order or commencing civil action under section 3008.".

(b) The table of contents for subtitle D of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding the following new item at the end thereof:

"Sec. 4011. Municipal waste combustion ash.".

(c) Subsection (i) of section 3001 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is repealed.

CONSULTATION

SEC. 4. Notwithstanding the provisions of the Federal Advisory Committee Act, prior to promulgation of any regulations, requirements, or guidelines pursuant to this section, the Administrator shall consult with elected officials of State and local governments, or their representatives or representatives of their organizations which may develop plans, administer programs, issue permits, promulgate regulations or take corrective action under this section to receive their advice and recommendations on such regulations, requirements and guidelines.●

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I am pleased to join with my distinguished colleagues the chairman of the Committee on Environment and Public Works, Mr. BURDICK, and the senior Senator from New York, Mr. MOYNIHAN, to introduce the Municipal Waste Combustion Control Act of 1989. This bill reflects a great deal of work by our chairman and by other members of our Environment Committee.

The environmental problems associated with municipal waste combustion first came to the attention of the Senate in the fall of 1987 when Senator BURDICK introduced an amendment to the comprehensive clean air reauthorization bill which the committee was then considering. Since that time there have been dozens of meetings and countless hours spent in the effort to perfect this legislation.

The approach that was taken at the direction of our chairman, a completely open discussion involving all parties with an interest, has served us well. This bill is an excellent product. We are no longer at the beginning of discussion and debate. We are very near consensus on these questions, I believe, and have only reached that point as the result of the willingness of Mr. BURDICK and his excellent staff to engage the issues and respond in good faith to concerns which were expressed.

I would be remiss, Mr. President, if I did not mention the role that our House colleagues played in preparing this bill. Much of it is owed to their efforts. Congressman FLORIO took the lead on the municipal waste combustion in that body. Congressman LUKEN and members of this subcommittee working with EPA also played a major role in shaping the ash disposal provisions in this bill. We commend all of our colleagues in the House which have taken part in the legislative effort on these questions.

As we introduce this bill today, I would share with our colleagues in the Senate some observations on the perspective which the Environment Committee brought to the process. I have organized these observations as six propositions which served as a foundation for this bill.

First, the Nation is experiencing a solid waste disposal crisis. If not in every community, a substantial number of our towns, cities and counties are struggling with the problems of waste disposal and facing hurdles never before seen. The crisis is principally a landfill capacity crisis. It is reflected in the cost of new landfill capacity and the distance that solid waste is now hauled to reach an operating dump. It is driven by an increasing concern for the environmental risks associated with landfills and the local opposition to siting new—even if more safely designed—landfill units.

The crisis is causing a revolution in the way we handle our solid waste. One part of that revolution is the commitment to garbage incineration and resource recovery. The other part is a new effort to make recycling, composting, and waste reduction work for whole communities.

A second proposition is a theme the committee heard again and again in our hearings on the solid waste disposal crisis which were chaired by Senator BAUCUS during the 100th Congress. There is a four-part heirarchy for managing solid waste. It begins with waste reduction. Waste that is not generated at all is the best kind of waste. It goes on to recycling and treatment, which includes incineration and resource recovery, as the second and third parts. And the heirarchy concludes with disposal of residual materials in a secure landfill. This legislation recognizes that heirarchy and recognizes that municipal waste combustion is not just a free-standing source of air pollution, but part of the solution to another pressing environmental problem—our land disposal crisis.

The third proposition recognizes the commitment that has already been made by cities and counties across the country to respond to the crisis. A report by the Environmental Protection Agency issued in 1987 indicates that 110 municipal waste combustion units were already operating; 210 more were in the planning, permitting, or construction phases. Those facilities involve a commitment of nearly $17 billion by local government to the incinerator option.

In my home State of Minnesota, nearly one-half of the municipal solid waste stream is signed up for a garbage burner. If all of the planned facilities are completed we will have 14 units in Minnesota including one which will be the largest capital project ever undertaken by our largest county. So it's a substantial commitment and one the Congress must respect and understand as it prepares to legislate in this area. Local government already has a substantial financial commitment at risk.

The fourth proposition is that Federal air emissions and ash disposal standards for municipal waste combustion units are necessary. Generally, the massburn and RDF units that are being built are major sources of air pollution subject to permits by State or local air pollution control agencies. But the permitting requirement only applies to the so-called criteria pollutants like carbon monoxide, particulates, nitrogen oxides, and sulfur dioxide. There are currently no Federal guidelines for the toxic pollutants—that is, heavy metals and unburned organics—which are certainly the more important air pollution problem associated with waste combustion.

And Federal law is confused on the subject of ash. Is it a hazardous waste or not? Under the current policy—a policy which is not enforced because of the uncertain character of the existing ash testing protocol—ash from an incinerator may be hazardous on one day and safe on the next. That uncertainty needs to be fixed legislatively.

EPA has made progress in addressing the air emissions issue. In 1987 it announced that two control technologies—acid gas scrubbers and particulate controls—would be a minimum requirement in State permits for new facilities which are major sources of criteria pollutants. And in 1991 the Agency will promulgate a new source performance standard for municipal incinerators which may include standards defining good combustion.

Although the EPA action is to be commended, it is unfortunately too slow to deal with the air pollution questions raised by the large generation of new units. By the time the new source performance standards are issued, most of the 210 units in the construction pipeline will be beyond the regualtory reach of the Clean Air Act and could only be dealt with on a retrofit basis. As a fifth proposition, we believe it is essential that the Congress state as clearly and quickly as possible the standards which we expect these units to meet. Finding a national consensus on these questions in legislation this year will avoid unnecessary expense and further confusion as the result of regulatory schedule which will produce results too late.

As a sixth and final proposition, we determined that technology-based standards may be the best foundation for air emissions regulations. Technology-based standards are an alternative to the health-based regulations which are more typical under other sections of the Clean Air Act. For instance, section 112 of the law requires EPA to regulate toxic air pollutants to "provide an ample margin of safety to protect public health." In the 18-year history of the Clean Air Act, EPA has listed only eight pollutants for regulation under section 112. By way of comparison, in that same period a handful of States with active air toxics programs have set standards for 708 toxic air pollutants.

There are a large number of air toxic emitted by municipal waste combustion units. They include metals, like lead and cadmium; acid gases, like hydrochloric acid and sulfuric acid; and organics with special concern for dioxins and furans, but including perhaps hundreds of other substances. Setting a health-based standard for each of these pollutants taken one at a time would doubtless take EPA years and years. We can't afford to wait.

Fortunately, it appears that a strategy combining three basic technologies, acid gas scrubbers, good combustion—that is, adequate temperature, time and turbulence—and particulate emissions control can do an effective job in removing the whole range of pollutants of concern. This technology is available; It's affordable; and it's effective in reducing risks to human health and the environment. The fundamental purpose of the air emissions provisions in the legislation we introduce today is to assure that these control technologies will be applied at all facilities—new and existing—and will be operated near their maximum control efficiency.

This bill includes five major provisions. First, it requires that EPA set emissions standards for a series of pollutants based on the level of control that can be achieved by best available technology and declares that three technologies which I have already mentioned—acid gas scrubbers, particulate control and good combustion practices—are available, that is proven in practice, and must be assumed in standard setting.

Second, the bill incorporates a series of emissions limits and other indicators which define the efficient operation of the pollution control system. These parameters include limits for carbon monoxide, particulates, sulfur dioxide, hydrogen chloride, and combustion temperature. These numerical standards are intended to press the management and operation of each facility to assure that the pollution control measures installed are operated to achieve the maximum benefit economically affordable.

Third, this bill includes a requirement that areas served by waste combustion units develop solid waste management plans that maximize source reduction, source separation and recycling. The plan must also include a demonstration that adequate disposal capacity is available for ash which is produced by any operating unit.

Fourth, the bill contains a series of monitoring requirements; monitoring for some parameters is to to be conducted continuously—again, as indicators of effective pollution control—and for some only periodically.

Finally, the ash disposal provisions in the bill allow three options for the facility operator. First, ash may be disposed in a facility with two liners, leachate collection and ground water monitoring. This is similar to the disposal regime for hazardous waste under subtitle C of the Solid Waste Disposal Act. Second, ash may be monofilled in a facility with a single liner, leachate collection and ground water monitoring. And as a third option, ash which is both treated and which passes a test to detect toxic leachate may be disposed in a sanitary landfill meeting all other criteria under the Solid Waste Disposal Act

There are many other important provisions in this legislation which I would encourage my colleagues to review and consider. Municipal waste combustion is a rapidly growing industry and element in the budgets of city and county governments across the Nation. These facilities have great promise as one part of the response to the solid waste disposal crisis. But they also present substantial environmental challenges. We are prepared to address these issues.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise today as an original cosponsor of the Municipal Waste Combustion Control Act of 1989. This bill will require the Environmental Protection Agency to set strict standards for the operation of municipal solid waste incinerators. It is clearly possible to control the toxic emissions from these plants—not easy perhaps, but nowhere near impossible—and we must make every effort to ensure that this happens. The EPA has not been doing an adequate job to date, and legislation is needed.

The particulars of the bill I am cosponsoring today are somewhat new to the Senate. Previous versions of this legislation have been seen before, as part of legislation reported by the Committee on Environment and Public Works in 1987 to amend and reauthorize the Federal Clean Air Act and also in the form of a bill I introduced in the 100th Congress, the Safe Incinerator Act of 1988 (S. 2458). I am ranking majority member of that committee, and was a vocal supporter of adding these incinerator provisions to the clean air bill in committee on October 22, 1987. However, for reasons unrelated to these incinerator provisions, consideration of the clean air bill could not be orchestrated before the close of the 100th Congress.

The Environmental Protection Agency tells us there are 111 municipal waste incinerators operating in the United States, capable of processing about 45,000 tons of waste per day. Many would say this has been mostly for the good, and to a certain point, this is true. However, many of these plants were build without much in the way of pollution control equipment, and are emitting unacceptable levels of dioxins, heavy metals, acid gases, and suchlike to the atmosphere. This pollution must be controlled.

But the volume of garbage incinerated today is small when compared to what will be happening in just a few years. Incineration is becoming a popular alternative in many areas suffering from rapidly dwindling landfill capacity. The EPA estimates that in as little as 12 years, the amount of solid waste we incinerate could be five times what it is today. By just 1993. 115 plants are scheduled for start-up across the country, and many of these are in New York—for New York City and Long Island alone, 13 are being planned. Why?

Many small municipalities, and most of our major cities, are facing the imminent closure of most of their landfill capacity in the very near term. The predicament of New York State if perhaps worse than that of any other area. Of the approximately 280 major landfills now operating in the State, all but 76 will be full by the year 1996—by 2006, all but 13. The search for alternative methods of disposal is becoming frantic, and many are looking to incineration. However, in this context, it is inaccurate to call incineration a method of disposal. It is, more precisely, a method of volume reduction. And if properly done, of energy extraction. But what incineration does not do is dispose of one's garbage. As incinerator is a complicated device that can turn 100 truckloads of garbage into exhaust gases, electricity, and somewhere between 10 and 30 truckloads of ash.

Such an equation outlines the two principles environmental problems with incinerators, which are what it puts into the air, and what it puts back on land in the form of ash. This bill deals with both of these issues, and will help these plants become part of the solution to the garbage crisis and not just another part of the problem.

Air pollutants can be controlled through a variety of technologies and operating procedures, many of which are spelled out in the bill. In general, these substances fall into two categories: substances found in the material to be incinerated, such as lead and other heavy metals, and chemicals created during the combustion process—the worst of which are the dioxins, among the most poisonous substances known to man. The first we need to trap before they leave the stack, and the second we must prevent from forming.

The other major threat of incinertion is perhaps less obvious, but is no less serious. It is disposal of the sometimes toxic ash that is the inevitable byproduct of the combustion process. It is curious, but certainly logical, that better control of air pollution at these plants can lead to greater complications for ash disposal. For example, heavy metals in trash entering the combustor, such as cadmium and nickel, are not destroyed by the combustion process. By necessity they must end up either in the air or in the ash, and so a well run air pollution system gives you ash of greater toxicity. This bill sets a host of standards to determine how and where incinerator ash can be landfilled, based largely on its measured toxicity.

Mr. President, we simply must take action. Now. These problems need to be addressed, and there is little time to spare. In a few short years, the number of these facilities will have doubled, and we will suddenly be looking at this problem from the wrong end. The question then will not be one of how to proceed, but rather, what to do about mistakes already made—how should we have proceeded? Hardly a way to govern.

I applaud the efforts of my colleagues and gladly lend my support to this legislation, in hope that the Senate will act on it as soon as possible.

By Mr. SASSER (for himself, Mr. HEINZ, Mr. CHAFEE, Mr. GRAHAM, Mr. PRYOR, Mr. WIRTH, Mr. PELL, Mr. KERRY, Mr. INOUYE, Mr. BINGAMAN, Mr. REID, Mr. SANFORD, Mr. GORE, and Mr. BUMPERS):

S. 197. A bill to authorize the insurance of certain mortgages for first-time homebuyers, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

HOMEOWNERSHIP ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1989

● Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I rise today with my colleague on the Housing Subcommittee, Senator HEINZ of Pennsylvania, to introduce major housing legislation. Our Homeownership Assistance Act of 1989 will greatly expand the opportunities of young Americans to own their own homes.

We are introducting it as part of the Housing Subcommittee's effort to comprehensively reform the Nation's housing laws.

Mr. President, this is not a new initiative. Indeed, Senator HEINZ and I introduced this bill last year and it made significant progress. I am pleased that most of its provisions have been included in the working draft for the omnibus bill being considered by the Subcommittee on Housing.

Mr. President, the Nation is facing a housing crisis that is worsening every day. Homeownership—a fundamental American ideal—is a dream that is fading fast for millions of young families.

Young people that are unable to buy homes are remaining renters. This bids up the price of rental housing. In turn, higher rents are having a devastating impact on poor families, and exacerbating the homeless problem.

The legislation that my colleague and I are introducing is directed straight at the problem of declining homeownership. In the 1980s, for the first time in history, homeownership has decreased. In particular, homeownership for persons between the ages of 25 and 30 has dropped 20 percent.

The decline means that 2 million fewer families own homes today that would have had the prior rate been sustained.

Importantly, Mr. President, the Homeownership Assistance Act will provide millions of Americans new opportunities to buy homes without increasing Federal spending.

We propose an expansion of several existing credit programs of the Federal Housing Administration [FHA]—a proven program, with a proven track record. Over the last 50 years FHA has helped millions and millions of families buy homes. And at the same time it has made money for the Federal Government.

Mr. President, this expansion of FHA is fully consistent with the recommendations of the blue ribbon national housing task force. This recent exhaustive study was headed by two extremely distinguished gentlemen—Jim Rouse of the Enterprise Foundation and David Maxwell of the Federal National Mortgage Association.

The task force thoroughly researched the capability of the FHA to embark on the course we propose today. It found that the FHA could and should initiate these new programs.

Mr. President, there is increasing evidence that the greatest impediment to owning a new home is accumulating the downpayment. Many young families are paying too large a portion of their income in rent—often over 50 percent.

Under these circumstances, it is nearly impossible to save the necessary downpayment. But the high rent being paid does indicate an ability to support mortgage payments.

Thus, the Homeownership Assistance Act initiates, among other things, a new lower downpayment FHA program. FHA will be able to insure 97 percent of the first $50,000 of a home's value, and 95 percent of the balance. This compares to 97 percent of the first $25,000, and 95 percent of the balance, under existing law.

For first-time homebuyers the bill permits FHA to insure 97 percent of the entire home valuation amount—an even lower downpayment.

Assuming an $80,000 home, this would mean a downpayment of $24,000 for first-time buyers, or an $1,100—30 percent—reduction from current law. For all others, it would mean a downpayment of $3,000, or a $500—15 percent—reduction from current law.

In addition to lowering downpayments, the Homeownership Assistance Act will make significant changes to the FHA Adjustable Rate Mortgage [ARM] Program. Under existing law, FHA is limited to offering an ARM that can adjust by 1 percent per year. Under this bill, FHA will offer an ARM that adjusts by 2 percent per year.

A 2-percent ARM will mean much lower interest rates than under a 1-percent ARM, or a standard fixed rate mortgage. Therefore, monthly payments for homebuyers will be less burdensome. Moreover, the bill removes the ceiling on the number of ARMS that FHA can insure in any year.

Another important provision is the elimination of the mortgage cap in high cost areas. Currently, FHA can insure a mortgage of no more than $101,250. This means that in 57 metropolitan areas in 15 States FHA is incapable of insuring a mortgage on anything near the average priced house. This bill will give all homebuyers everywhere the opportunity to purchase a home that is 95 percent of the median sales price in the area.

Moreover, the bill would establish two innovative demonstration programs. These carefully monitored experimental programs would attempt to assist low income and other first-time buyers in new ways.

Lastly, I have included in the legislation a section on manufactured housing. Mr. President, manufactured homes offer a low cost yet safe and sound housing alternative to young potential homebuyers. This is particularly true in rural areas.

This provision would instruct the Secretary of HUD to modify by regulation FHA's Manufactured Housing Program so that its provisions are generally consistent with those offered homebuyers under the traditional FHA Program. This is my own initiative. I haven't had a chance to discuss it yet with my distinguished colleagues; but I will, and I will work hard for its incorporation into the OMNIBUS housing bill soon to be considered by the Subcommittee on Housing.

Mr. President, Senator HEINZ and I are looking forward to working with our colleagues on the Housing Subcommittee toward the enactment of this extremely important bill.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that statements by Senators HEINZ, PRYOR, and GRAHAM as well as a copy of the bill and a section-by-section summary be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks. Thank you. I yield the floor.

There being no objection, the materials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 197

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE; FINDINGS.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the "Homeownership Assistance Act of 1989".

(b) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) since 1980, the rate of homeownership in America has declined, after rising steadily for 35 years, and the greatest decline has been among young Americans, 25 to 34 years old;

(2) homeownership among 25- to 29-year-olds has dropped from a peak of 44 percent in 1979 to 36.9 percent in the third quarter of 1987, while homeownership has dipped from 62.4 percent (in 1976) to 54.5 percent for 30- to 34-year olds;

(3) homeownership has long been considered the bedrock of American society and is credited with building stable neighborhoods, providing a better environment to raise children, as well as being the primary means for most people to accumulate wealth;

(4) the declining rate of homeownership among young adults could portend serious socioeconomic problems for the United States in the years ahead;

(5) there is increasing evidence that the greatest obstacle facing young potential homebuyers is not meeting monthly payments, but accumulating the necessary downpayment, and yet there is currently no effective program to provide downpayment assistance; and

(6) a homeownership program should not draw on limited Federal revenues, but rather should utilize the existing proven Federal housing-credit infrastructure thereby maximizing efficiencies, and preserving Federal funds for the needs of low-income renters and the homeless.

SEC. 2. INSURANCE FOR FIRST-TIME HOMEBUYERS.

Section 203(b)(2) of the National Housing Act (12 U.S.C. 1709(b)(2)) is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"In addition, the Secretary is authorized to insure a mortgage which involves a principal obligation (including such initial service charges, appraisal, inspection, and other fees as the Secretary shall approve) in an amount equal to 97 percent of the appraised value of the property as of the date the mortgage is accepted for insurance (subject to the applicable maximum dollar amount limitation), if the mortgagor is a first-time homebuyer (as that term is defined in section 2(a)), the mortgagor receives financial counseling, as defined by the Secretary, and if the property to be acquired with a mortgage insured under this section is a principal residence for such first-time homebuyer.".

SEC. 3. REDUCTION OF DOWNPAYMENT.

Section 203(b)(2) of the National Housing Act (12 U.S.C. 1709(b)(2)) is amended by striking "$25,000" the first and second place it appears and inserting "$50,000".

SEC. 4. HIGH COST AREAS.

Section 203(b)(2) of the National Housing Act is amended by striking "the lesser of (A) 150 per centum of the dollar amount so specified, or (B)".

SEC. 5. ADJUSTABLE RATE MORTGAGES.

Section 251 of the National Housing Act (12 U.S.C. 1715z-16) is amended—

(1) by striking "1 percent" and inserting "2 percent" in subsection (a)(2), and

(2) by striking subsection (c).

SEC. 6. DEFINITION OF FIRST-TIME HOMEBUYERS.

Section 2(a) of the National Housing Act (12 U.S.C. 1703(a)) is amended—

(1) by striking "and" at the end of paragraph (2),

(2) by striking the period at the end of paragraph (3) and inserting a semicolon and "and", and

(3) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(4) the term 'first-time homebuyer' means an individual who or whose spouse has had no present ownership in a principal residence during the 18-month period ending on the date of purchase of the principal residence.".

SEC. 7. DOWNPAYMENT MORTGAGES.

(a) DOWNPAYMENTS.—Section 2(a) of the National Housing Act (12 U.S.C. 1703(a)) is amended by inserting after the first paragraph the following new paragraph:

"In addition, the Secretary is authorized, upon such terms and conditions as he may prescribe and without regard to any other provision of this section, to insure, on a demonstration basis, loans made for the purpose of financing the downpayment of a principal residence (including a manufactured home) of a first-time homebuyer where the purchase is financed or assisted by tax-exempt financing or another government program for first-time homebuyers, and the mortgagor receives financial counseling, as defined by the Secretary.".

(b) LIMITATION ON AMOUNT OF DOWNPAYMENT LOANS.—Section 2(b)(1) of the National Housing Act (12 U.S.C. 1703(b)(1)) is amended—

(1) by striking "and" at the end of subparagraph (F),

(2) by striking the period at the end of subparagraph (G), and inserting a semicolon and "and", and

(3) by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

"(H) $7,500 if made for the purpose of financing the downpayment on a principal residence.".

(c) TERM TO MATURITY.—Section 2(b)(3) of the National Housing Act (12 U.S.C. 1703(b)(3)) is amended—

(1) by striking "and" at the end of subparagraph (G),

(2) by striking the period at the end of subparagraph (H) and inserting a semicolon and "and", and

(3) by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

"(I) ten years and thirty-two days if made for the purpose of financing the downpayment of a principal residence of a first-time homebuyer.".

SEC. 8. SECONDARY MARKET FOR DOWNPAYMENT MORTGAGE LOANS.

Section 302(b)(1) of the Federal National Mortgage Association Charter Act (12 U.S.C. 1717(b)(1)) is amended by inserting before the penultimate sentence the following new sentence: "In addition, the Association may purchase a loan insured under section 2 of the National Housing Act with respect to a downpayment for a first-time homebuyer if the principal obligation thereof does not exceed the limitations applicable under section 2(b)(1)(H) of such Act.".

SEC. 9. ACCUMULATING DOWNPAYMENT MORTGAGE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 203 of the National Housing Act is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(s) The Secretary may insure under this subsection, on a demonstration basis, a mortgage which meets the requirements of subsection (b), except that—

"(1) the mortgage obligation may be 100 per centum of the sum of appraised value (or purchase price, if less) of the property, and the mortgagor's closing costs (as defined by the Secretary);

"(2) the difference between the amount of the mortgage determined under paragraph (1) and the amount which would be determined under subsection (b) shall be fully amortized and repaid (with interest) during the 3-year period following execution of the mortgage, and such repayment shall be in addition to the payment required under section 203(b)(3); and

"(3) the mortgagor shall be a first-time homebuyer within the meaning of section 2(a)(4) and shall receive financial counseling.".

SEC. 10. ADMINISTRATIVE OFFSET DEBT COLLECTION WITH RESPECT TO DOWNPAYMENT MORTGAGES FOR FIRST-TIME HOMEBUYERS.

Section 2653(c) of the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984 (26 U.S.C. 6402 note) is amended by adding at the end the following new sentence: "The January 10, 1994 date shall not apply with respect to past due amounts relating to loans made or insured for the purpose of financing downpayments of first-time homebuyers under section 2 or section 203(s) of the National Housing Act.".

SEC. 11. MANUFACTURED HOUSING.

The Secretary may, by regulation, extend the programs authorized by this Act with respect to section 203 of the National Housing Act to loans, advances of credit, or purchases of obligations representing loans and advances of credit, eligible for insurance under title I of the National Housing Act, for the purpose of financing the purchase of a manufactured home used by the owner as a principal residence or a lot on which to place such home.

SEC. 12. REPORT AND EVALUATION BY SECRETARY.

Not later than one year after the date of enactment of this Act and annually thereafter, the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development shall submit to Congress an evaluation of the programs authorized by the amendments made by this Act. Such evaluation shall include—

(1) a profile of the first-time homebuyers for whom financing has been provided under the amendments made by this Act, including the income level of such homebuyers, the price of homes, and the regional distribution,

(2) a description of the programs, including any special problems encountered, and

(3) any recommendations the Secretary may deem appropriate regarding continuation or modification of the programs authorized by this Act.

THE HOMEOWNERSHIP ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1988

I—LOWER DOWNPAYMENT FINANCING

1. The FHA would be authorized to create a new mortgage insurance program specifically for first-time homebuyers. Under the new program, mortgages could be insured with loan to value ratios of up to 97% (3.0% down). Assuming an $80,000 house, this is a 30% drop in the downpayment required.

2. In general, FHA would be permitted to insure loans of up to 97% of the first $50,000 of a home's value and 95% of the value in excess of $50,000, versus 97% for the first $25,000 of loan amount, and 95% for the balance, under existing law. Assuming an $80,000 house, this is a 15% drop in the downpayment required.

II—AMENDMENTS TO EXISTING FHA PROGRAMS

1. Adjustable Rate Mortgage (ARMs):

a. FHA would be authorized to insure ARMs under which interest rates may rise 2 percentage points a year, provided that over the life of a loan, the total increase may not exceed 5 percentage points. Under existing law, FHA can only insure ARMs whose rates rise no more than 1 percentage point per year. Under current market conditions, a 2 percent ARM could achieve an initial interest rate of 1 percentage or more below the 1 percent ARM, and three percentage points below a standard fixed rate mortgage. Thus, a 2 percent ARM would be of great assistance to homebuyers in decreasing mortgage costs in the early years of the mortgage, and in enabling buyers to qualify for the loan.

b. The statutory limit on the aggregate number of ARM loans that FHA may insure in a year would be eliminated. This would give FHA purchasers the same freedom in selecting mortgage forms as conventional home buyers.

2. Elimination of the Mortgage Limit Cap in High Cost Areas: The present law mortgage limit cap for high cost areas would be eliminated. In 57 metropolitan areas in 15 states, the FHA program has been rendered largely or partially inoperable because of the mortgage limit cap. Under the legislation, FHA mortgage limits would be established at 95% of the median home sales price in the country or the local MSA whichever is higher.

III—DEMONSTRATION PROGRAMS

FHA would be authorized to begin two innovative downpayment financing programs on a demonstration basis under the Section 203(b) program.

1. Accumulating Downpayment Mortgages: FHA would be authorized to insure a loan for a qualified first-time homebuyer to finance the entire purchase price and closing costs on a home. However, the standard FHA downpayment would still be required and would be repaid within three years with interest by requiring an additional payment along with the regular monthly mortgage payment over the three year period. Thus, under the program a homebuyer would have equity in his home within a relatively short period of time. Moreover, the mortgage would be underwritten, and the buyer qualified, at a higher initial combined monthly payment level, thereby reducing risk.

2. Downpayment Second Mortgages: To assist lower income first-time homebuyers receiving tax-exempt or other governmental financing (such as under the Housing Opportunity Program recommended by the National Housing Task Force), FHA would be permitted to insure second mortgages to finance part or all of downpayments, and the Government National Mortgage Association (GNMA) would be given authority to create a secondary market for both FHA and privately-insured second (downpayment) mortgages. In no case could the second mortgage be in excess of $7,500. It would amortize quickly over either a 5 or 10 year period thereby reducing risk.

Under both demonstration programs, there will be a requirement that homebuyers participate in financial counseling and the IRS will be empowered to confiscate tax refunds of homebuyers that are in default, further reducing risk.

IV. MANUFACTURED HOUSING

Recognizing that manufactured homes offer a relatively low cost yet safe and sound housing alternative for young, potential homebuyers, the bill contains a provision permitting the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, by regulation, to accord the same treatment to manufactured homebuyers under the FHA Title I Manufactured Home Loan Program as would be provided under the Section 203(b) as a result of the amendments contained in this bill.●

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I rise in support of the Homeownership Assistance Act, and praise my distinguished colleagues, Senators SASSER and HEINZ, who have brought this important legislation to assist first-time homeowners before us.

The shortage of affordable housing in Florida is a rapidly growing problem. In fact, if we do not take immediate action to solve this many-sided issue, we will soon be in a crisis situation. At a rate four times that of the Nation as a whole, population growth in Florida has a serious impact on housing, affecting both availability and affordability.

As rents continue to rise, moderate income first-time homebuyers find it increasingly difficult to save for the downpayment that enables the jump from tenant to homeowner. Studies by the Florida Housing Finance Agency and the Florida Affordable Housing Commission have shown that it is not the monthly mortgage payments that keep first-time buyers out of the market—it is the additional cash requirements involved in buying a house, the down payment, insurance premium, and other closing costs. Additionally, although interest rates have declined, the benefits of these lower rates are mitigated by stricter underwriting standards and rising costs of private mortgage insurance.

The Florida Affordable Housing Commission also found that housing costs have risen at a higher rate than real income. Their final report, published in December 1987 found that:

In effect, five years ago a typical first-time homebuyer with an annual income of $20,000 could afford a $44,000 mortgage (13 percent mortgage rate.) Using today's insurance underwriting guidelines, and a 10 percent mortgage rate, that same family could still only afford a $44,000 mortgage, with a likely downpayment of 10 percent, as opposed to a 5 percent downpayment.

In Florida, as well as other high-growth States, we also see other significant cost factors contributing to rising housing costs. Factors such as the rising costs of land, construction and financing, the sharp drop in Federal funding for rental housing, and added land use restrictions coupled with phenomenal growth all combine to provide substantial financial discouragement to the first-time homebuyer. The thwarted homebuyer ends up staying in a rental unit, thus precluding the turn over of that rental unit to another Floridian seeking housing, and we see the affordable housing shortage exacerbated further yet.

I think this bill represents an important first step in addressing these problems. Through making the Federal Housing Administration programs more accessible and usable to the first-time homebuyer, particularly in addressing the down payment issues we will help remove the major obstacles for first-time buyers in Florida. This initiative is consistent with the recommendations from the Rouse-Maxwell task force outlined in the final report, "A Decent Place to Live," and with other recommendations from the final report of the Florida Affordable Commission. For Florida, and the Nation, affordable housing is not a luxury, it is essential to the health of an expanding economy, the cycle of the housing market and to the dream of homeownership for millions of Americans.

I look forward to working with my Senate colleagues in this important endeavor.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, owning a home is part of the American dream. But for too many families, the dream has been deferred. They cannot afford even the foundation, let alone the house.

The National Housing Task Force's report has reminded us that we have a housing crisis in this country.

Today, I join Senator SASSER and others in introducing legislation that takes the first step in addressing that crisis. Our bill will make it easier for moderate-income Americans to buy a home. Because after increasing steadily since the Second World War, the percentage of Americans owning their own home has declined since 1980.

Hardest hit by this trend have been young, moderate-income families. For those in the 25 to 29 age range, the rate of homeownership has dropped 16 percent since 1979. For families with children, the rate has dropped more than 9 percent since 1980.

These are our Nation's first time homebuyers—between the ages of 25 and 29, families with children. To reverse the precipitous decline, the Sasser-Heinz bill aims directly at and helps large numbers of first-time homebuyers.

If you're a first-time homebuyer, chances are you will have to borrow with FHA insurance. Although the FHA insures only one-seventh of all mortgages issued each year, it insures 44 percent of mortgages taken out by first-time homebuyers. It is the insurance of first resort for first-time homebuyers.

The Sasser-Heinz bill does two important things for first-time homebuyers. First, it will reduce the required downpayment.

Why do Senator SASSER and I believe this is so important? The median income for a family of four in this country is $27,000, before taxes. Taxes take a very large chunk of that sum. If both parents are working, in addition to their food costs, utility bills, and other living expenses, they will need to pay for child care. Families with two children pay an average of $6,000 a year for child care. And in an increasing number of young families, both parents work. After they pay all those bills, let alone set aside anything for retirement or for their children's college educations, there is virtually nothing left to put aside for the downpayment on their first home.

So it is little wonder that young families with children are simply finding it impossible—unaffordable—to buy their own homes. Here is an example from my home State of Pennsylvania, where the average price of a house is $88,000: A Pennsylvania family buys their first home at the average price of $88,000. With an FHA-insured loan under the Sasser-Heinz bill, they will have to put down one-third less than they do today—that is $1,260 less, the difference between $3,900 and $2,640. And for a moderate-income family with children, that pays for child care plus all those other expenses, that savings can mean the difference between buying their first home and staying on the rent treadmill.

Second, the bill will also remove the 30-percent limit on the number of adjustable rate mortgages the FHA is permitted to insure. ARMs have proven to be an effective tool in lowering debt service costs that raise monthly payments for homebuyers. In 1988, 58 percent of all mortgages issued by conventional lenders were ARMs—almost double the percentage the FHA currently is allowed to insure.

The legislation will encourage homeownership at no cost to the Federal Government, as FHA premiums generate far more revenue for the U.S. Treasury than the fund incurs expenses.

The bill not only makes adjustments in the existing FHA program, but in developing two demonstration projects, prepares the way for the future. If we just make improvements for this year or next year, that will help. But we need to recognize that the cost of housing remains a tremendous stumbling block for our first time homeowners, and we need to look for and find better ways to address that in the future as well.

I urge my colleagues to support our legislation, which will help bring the costs of owning a home within reach of those families who need it most, young, moderate-income working families, so that they, too, can enjoy the American dream.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, since 1980, there has been a 20-percent decrease in home ownership among persons between 25 and 34 years of age. Many young potential first-time home buyers can afford a mortgage, and indeed may be paying monthly rent at a level similar to a mortgage payment, but cannot put together the necessary down payment.

Home ownership is a part of the American dream, and I believe strongly that this dream should be within the reach of every American. In keeping with this belief, I am pleased to be an original cosponsor of the Homeownership Assistance Act, a bill that amends the National Housing Act to create a special mortgage insurance program for first-time home buyers.

The bill would empower the Federal Housing Authority to insure home mortgages with downpayments significantly below what is now required by law. The FHA's ability to insure adjustable rate mortgages would also be expanded so that first-time home buyers could enjoy lower monthly payments in the first years of the mortgage. Other provisions would set up demonstration programs and help low income home buyers and home buyers in high cost areas.

Mr. President, the housing problem in this country has many facets, and I intend to be actively involved in all housing issues including the need for low income housing and shelter for the homeless. But we are quickly becoming a Nation of renters, and I believe that this is also a serious housing problem. I feel strongly that the Homeownership Assistance Act addresses the problem in a practical manner, and I am pleased to be associated with it.

By Mr. HATCH:

S. 198. A bill to amend title 17, United States Code, the Copyright Act to protect certain computer programs; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

COMPUTER SOFTWARE RENTAL AMENDMENTS ACT OF 1989

● Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the Computer Software Rental Amendment Act of 1989.

A copyright has been defined as "a legal monopoly, of limited scope and duration, under whose terms authors are permitted to control the exploitation of their creations." Under the Constitution, Congress is empowered to create this monopoly and to set the parameters of its exlcusivity. In determining where the proper limitations should be drawn Congress must carefully weigh the copyright owner's rights against the progress of science and the useful arts.

In the past, Congress has created general, and in some cases specific, limitations on exclusivity which promote a balance between these policy interests. In fact, the operation of these limitations on exclusivity has, in some part, contributed to the rise in U.S. technology.

As that technology changes, and as society changes, there is a need to maintain flexibility in our copyright laws. I believe this flexibility is essential to ensure a constant balance between an author's exclusive rights and the constitutional interest in promoting societal needs. This bill is necessary to restore that balance.

In 1984, it became apparent that the nearly universal access to the technology necessary to produce cheap, high-quality copies of phonorecords was threatening to spawn a new business of renting sound recordings for the primary purpose of copying original works without compensation to the copyright owner. Congress responded to this threat to the copyright law by enacting the Record Rental Amendments of 1984.

Because Congress acted before the rental of records became a widespread business practice, the U.S. record industry was able to continue in its position of world leadership. The industry reinvested substantial sums in a new generation of sound recordings—compact discs—without fear of losing the market to unauthorized copying. The interests of the creative community, the American public, and the U.S. economy all were advanced by Congress' decision to act before reliance on the previous inadequate law produced an economic dislocation which would have been very difficult to eliminate. At the end of the 100th Congress, we extended for another 8 years this proscription against phonorecord rentals for profitmaking purposes.

The computer software industry, a dynamic and blossoming source of growth for our Nation's economy, was only in its infancy when the record rental amendments were being considered by Congress in 1984. Yet today, only 5 years later, this industry is confronted by a nearly identical situation. Rarely does history repeat itself so quickly.

The rationale underlying the 1984 Record Rental Amendments was that the primary purpose of rental of sound recordings would be to displace sales of authorized copies of copyrighted works. This rationale applies with equal force to the computer software business and the threat of software rental.

In the recording industry, a typical compact disc sells for $16.95 and costs hundreds of thousands of dollars in developmental costs to bring to the marketplace. A typical mass market computer software package costs several hundred dollars at retail and requires millions of dollars to develop. The potential for lost sales and the subsequent collapse of software companies if their products can be rented and copied at a mere fraction of retail cost is a serious problem that must be addressed. This practice, if it is allowed to continue, will be devastating, and one of the brightest stars of the modern U.S. economy will be extinguished in its infancy.

As in the case of sound recordings, the overwhelming rationale for renting a computer program is to make an unauthorized copy. Computer software cannot be enjoyed for an evening's entertainment and then returned. To have meaning to a user, the software packages require mastery of complex user manuals, often running hundreds of pages in length. Even after a user has mastered the use of a program, it has little value until he or she adds his or her own data base to the program. The functions of learning how to use a program and utilizing it in connection with one's own data base cannot be accomplished in the few hours or days available under a rental arrangement without copying the program and displacing a legitimate sale of the program.

For example, in his statement before the Patents, Copyrights and Trademarks Subcommittee, last August, Dr. Alan C. Ashton, president of the WordPerfect Crop., reported that one WordPerfect program, which retails at $495, has been available through a rental outlet for only $35. The most obvious rationale for such a practice is to facilitate the unauthorized copying of this program.

Of course, there may be situations in which the owner of copyrighted software may wish to authorize a vendor to make the software available to a potential purchaser in order that the product might be examined prior to making a purchasing decision. Nothing in this legislation prohibits such arrangements. In fact, nothing in the legislation prevents any copyright owner from waiving any or all of the exclusive rights granted under this legislation. Thus, as is currently the case with the exclusive rights granted in section 106 of the Copyright Act, nothing prevents a creator form dedicating his or her work to public domain at any time.

Just as in the case of the record industry in 1984, there is now in existence the embryo of a business of rental of software for the purpose of copying. Unless Congress acts quickly, the embryonic rental industry could soon grow out of control, becoming a cancer which would kill off the legitimate software development industry by which it was created. This is particularly true in view of the fact that technological methods of limiting unauthorized copying, commonly called copy protection, are proving impractical in an industry in which there is often a need for legitimate use of backup copies by purchasers of authorized copies of computer programs.

The potential loss to the U.S. economy should rental of software become widespread can be seen clearly when one looks to the losses suffered by U.S. software developers by virtue of their inability to restrict commercial copying of their products in many foreign markets. The Office of the U.S. Trade Representative has estimated losses to U.S. software developers due to inadequate copyright protection to be approximately $4.1 billion a year.

The bill which I am introducing today provides software protection by amending section 109(b) of title 17 of the United States Code, the Copyright Act. Paragraphs 1 and 3 of that section are amended to include the owners of copyright in a computer program. Thus, unless authorized by the copyright owner, no person in possession of a particular copy of a computer program may, for the purposes of direct or indirect commercial advantage, dispose of, or authorize the disposal of, the possession of that computer program by rental, lease, or lending, or by any other act or practice in the nature of a rental, lease, or lending. Any person who so distributes a copy of a computer program in violation of this restriction is subject to the remedies provided in the Copyright Act. For purposes of the act, computer program is defined to include any tape, disk, or other medium embodying such a program.

I would also note for my colleagues that this bill differs from the version I introduced last year in only one respect. This version does not include licensees as those who may authorize the rental of a program for commercial advantage. This change, made at the request of several colleagues and analysts in the industry, has been made to avoid the confusion that might result if a rental store owner were deemed to be a licensee, thereby voiding the purpose of the bill. Other than that change, the bill remains the same.

Mr. President, in 1984, and again in 1988, Congress determined that the sound recording industry was deserving of the protections that were provided in the 1984 act. The threat of unlimited rental of computer software poses just as grave a threat to the computer software industry today. I would urge my colleagues to carefully consider this measure and support this bill. I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be placed in the RECORD immediately following my remarks.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 198

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Computer Software Rental Admendments Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. Section 109(b) of title 17, United States Code, is amended by—

(1) amending paragraph (1) to read as follows:

"(b)(1) Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (a), unless authorized by the owners of copyright in the sound recording or the owner of copyright in a computer program (including any tape, disk, or other medium embodying such program), and in the case of a sound recording in the musical works embodied therein, neither the owner of a particular phonorecord nor any person in possession of a particular copy of a computer program (including any tape, disk, or other medium embodying such program), may, for the purposes of direct or indirect commercial advantage, dispose of, or authorize the disposal of, the possession of that phonorecord or computer program (including any tape, disk, or other medium embodying such program) by rental, lease, or lending, or by any other act or practice in the nature of rental, lease, or lending. Nothing in the preceding sentence shall apply to the rental, lease, or lending of a phonorecord for nonprofit purposes by a nonprofit library or nonprofit educational institution."; and

(2) amending paragraph (3) to read as follows:

"(3) Any person who distributes a phonorecord or a copy of a computer program (including any tape, disk, or other medium embodying such program) in violation of clause (1) is an infringer of copyright under section 501 of this title and is subject to the remedies set forth in sections 502, 503, 504, 505, and 509. Such violation shall not be a criminal offense under section 506 or cause such person to be subject to the criminal penalties set forth in section 2319 of title 18.".●

By Mr. RIEGLE (for himself and Mr. CRANSTON):

S. 200. A bill to amend the Social Security Act to provide for improved procedures with respect to disability determinations and continuing disability reviews and to modify the program for providing rehabilitation services to individuals determined under such act to be under a disability, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

SOCIAL SECURITY DISABILITY BENEFICIARY REHABILITATION ACT

Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, today I am again reintroducing legislation—first introduced in the 98th Congress and again in the 99th Congress and 100th Congress to reform the Social Security Disability Insurance [SSDI] Program. This legislation is almost identical to S. 1721 which I introduced on October 1, 1985, together with my colleague from California [Mr. CRANSTON]. That legislation was an improved version of S. 2369, which I introduced on February 29, 1984, during the 98th Congress. Unfortunately, S. 1721 did not receive any action during the 99th Congress.

During a period extending over a year and a half, my staff and I worked with representatives from a coalition of national organizations representing disabled persons in an effort to improve the first version of this legislation. Working closely with members of my staff, and after months of meetings and review, this coalition has played a vital part in helping to design significant and needed improvement in the SSDI Program. The groups that were part of this coalition that helped design and endorse this approach are as follows:

American Psychological Association.
American Rehabilitation Counseling Association.
American Association for Counseling and Development.
American Mental Health Counselors Association.
Association for Retarded Citizens—U.S.
Epilepsy Foundation of America.
International Association of Psychosocial Rehabilitation Services.
National Alliance for the Mentally Ill.
National Association of Private Residential Facilities for the Mentally Retarded.
National Association of Social Workers.
National Association of State Mental Retardation Program Directors.
National Association of Rehabilitation Facilities.
National Council of Community Mental Health Centers.
National Easter Seal Society.
National Mental Health Association.
National Rehabilitation Counseling Association.
United Cerebral Palsy Association, Inc.

The legislation we are introducing today is designed to improve the Social Security Disability Insurance determination process in a way that better meets the needs of disabled persons while saving Federal dollars. Rarely do we have the opportunity to improve the working of a Federal program, better meet the needs of its beneficiaries, and save Federal funds. I believe the legislation we are introducing today accomplishes all of those objectives.

RETIREMENT VERSUS DISABILITY

The origins of the Social Security Disability Program demonstrate that the program was not designed to meet the unique needs of disabled persons. The legislative history shows that the first benefits for disabled persons—enacted in 1954 in Public Law 761, 83d Congress—were not disability benefits.

Rather, provisions were enacted to protect retirement benefits for totally disabled persons who were forced to leave the work force prematurely. This was the so-called disability freeze provision.

To overcome the opposition to creating a new program specifically for disabled persons, the proponents of disability insurance initially presented their proposal as a modification of the retirement program in the form of a reduction in the retirement age of disabled persons. In fact, the first cash benefits for disabled persons—enacted in 1955 in Public Law 880, 84th Congress—was part of a package to reduce the age that individuals become eligible for retirement benefits; disabled persons at age 50 and women at age 62.

In 1960—enacted as Public Law 83-778—the age limitation for cash disability benefits was eliminated. Nevertheless, the underlying basis of the program, that is, a cash benefit program providing for the early retirement of disabled persons, has never been modified. Although over the years amendments were added to the Social Security Act attempting to reorient the early retirement basis of the SSDI Program, the underlying philosophical basis remains unchanged.

CURRENT SITUATION

Mr. President, it is unfortunate that the SSDI Program is seen by many as an early retirement program for people too disabled to continue working. In June 1980, Congress enacted Public Law 96-265 which included a provision, section 221(i), requiring the ongoing review of disability beneficiaries, the CDI's. In part, many of the difficulties that resulted from the CDI's stem from the incompatibility of an ongoing review and the underlying early retirement orientation of the SSDI Program.

Mr. President, because the modern SSDI Program has evolved from an early retirement program for disabled workers, the concept and application of the CDI's is incompatible with the underlying originating principles of the program. Most individuals perceive retirement as a permanent condition not subject to external review. Before the statutory enactment of the CDI's Social Security reviewed only those disabled beneficiaries to whom they told upon initial allowance that a reexamination would be scheduled. Those were mostly individuals who had conditions that were likely to improve.

For the vast majority of beneficiaries, a review of their disability status was not envisioned. Before enactment of the CDI provisions, beneficiaries not scheduled or diaried for review were treated in the same manner as retired beneficiaries. The only procedural check utilized to determine the continued eligibility for benefits was the voluntary self-reporting on the part of the beneficiaries. Again, for the nondiaried SSDI beneficiaries, both within the mind of the beneficiary and within the minds of the administrators of the program, entitlement was seen as lasting until death or until the beneficiary voluntarily reported a change in his or her condition, such as returning to work.

Mr. President, the political pressures that necessitated the early retirement orientation of the SSDI Program have passed, and I believe it is time to reshape the program to provide benefits for disabled persons, as opposed to early retirees. This objective can be most easily accomplished by modifying the underlying orientation away from early retirement toward benefits and services for disabled persons. This can be done largely by modifying the determination process and without expanding the universe of individuals eligible for cash benefits.

In addition, a program truly geared to the needs of disabled persons, providing them with rehabilitation services—in addition to cash benefits—will result in many disabled beneficiaries leaving the disability rolls. The result should be the savings of significant funds while directly meeting the needs of disabled persons.

A reoriented program should be designed along similar lines for disabled recipients of SSI benefits, and the bill I am introducing today accomplishes both of these objectives.

PROVISIONS OF S. 200

Mr. President, as I have mentioned, the objective of this legislation is to redirect the SSDI Program away from the retirement model and toward a program specifically designed to meet the needs of disabled workers. In doing this, we will more adequately address the needs of newly disabled Americans and reduce cash outlays, thereby helping to secure the financial integrity of the Disability Insurance Trust Fund.

The bill I am proposing does not entail a radical reworking of the existing program because Congress has in fact been moving in this direction through piecemeal reforms over the last three decades. I am simply proposing to integrate many of the previous reforms—which were just tacked on to existing procedures—into a unified system by altering the methods used for evaluating eligibility for benefits.

Under the current system, an individual applying for disability benefits is only evaluated from the narrow perspective of establishing the existence of a medical disability. An applicant has an incentive to heighten the severity of the disabling conditions while the administrators have an incentive to minimize existing maladies. Under current practice, a very complex determination is made with regard to the severity and duration of the disabling condition, and then a decision is made regarding whether a benefit is either awarded or denied. At no point in the process is the Social Security Administration providing—nor is it expected to provide—assistance to these disability applicants beyond, of course, the cash benefit for those who are eligible.

Mr. President, the provisions of S. 200 would alter the incentives contained in the current program by integrating a vocational rehabilitation evaluation into the initial and ongoing determination process. Even though such a determination is currently required under section 222 of the Social Security Act, it is ignored in practice. Since the Beneficiary Rehabilitation Program [BRP] was essentially repealed in 1981, the State disability examiners have no incentives for evaluating the rehabilitation potential of SSDI applicants.

Hence, all of the cost savings which the Social Security Administration has determined result from beneficiary rehabilitation are lost under the present evaluation procedures. It was in 1981 that the Social Security Administration found that savings to the Disability Insurance Trust Fund ranged between $1.39 and $2.72 for every $1 spent on vocational rehabilitation services for DI beneficiaries. Social Security Bulletin, February 1981/Vol. 44, No. 2, pp. 1-8.

The legislation I am proposing today does not resurrect the Beneficiary Rehabilitation Program, which was cost effective in spite of the lack of precision the program had in providing rehabilitation funds for beneficiaries most likely to benefit from such services. What I'm proposing in this legislation is to require an initial evaluation of rehabilitation potential along with the medical determination of a disability.

Prospect beneficiaries would be divided into the following groups based upon the extent and duration of their disabling condition:

First, those with long-term or permanent disabilities—that is, those not subject to the mandatory CDI review under 221(i); or

Second, those with disabilities that are anticipated to last more than 12 months, but where it is reasonable to anticipate improvement or change in the disabling condition at some point after the 12-month period—that is, those subject to the mandatory CDI review under 221(i); or

Third, to those individuals under a disability albeit not sufficiently severe nor anticipated to last more than 12 months that is, those individuals who would be denied cash benefits under the law.

This is similar to the procedure used under current law and is basically the method used for determining for cash benefits. However, during the same period of evaluation for cash benefits, the prospective beneficiary would be assessed for rehabilitation potential, and one of the three following determinations would be made:

First, the prospective beneficiary cannot benefit from rehabilitation services; or

Second, rehabilitation services would be of benefit to the prospective beneficiary, albeit it is extremely unlikely to result in an effort to return to work and eventually in the cessation of cash disability benefits; or

Third, there is the possibility that rehabilitation services will result in an effort to return to work and thereby in the eventual cessation of cash benefits.

Mr. President, under S. 200 all individuals would be required to go through both the disability determination and rehabilitation evaluation before they would be notified of the results of either exam. The universe of individuals who would be eligible for cash benefits would include only those individuals who would be eligible under current law.

The major difference with the current program is that for the first time there would be a workable requirement that applicants be evaluated for rehabilitation potential and, where appropriate, referred to rehabilitation provides. Those for whom it was determined that rehabilitation would provide some benefit but not lead to an attempt to return to work would be directed to the State agency or Rehabilitation Services.

For those individuals the State would provide—as required under current law—services with funds available through the State Grant Program—the section 101 program of the Rehabilitation Act. For those individuals where there is a possibility that rehabilitation services will result in successful return to work effort and therefore in the eventual cessation of benefits, Social Security will refer that individual to a rehabilitation provider, whether public or private, who can best meet the rehabilitation needs of the SSDI beneficiary.

Because a judgment has been made that these individuals have the best chance of returning to work and dropping off of the disability rolls, the cost of rehabilitating these individuals would be financed out of the Social Security Disability Trust Fund. Under this program and with the careful selection of rehabiliation candidates—as previous experience has demonstrated—the trust funds should experience a net surplus of dollars.

Mr. President, it is important to note that the scope of rehabilitation services envisioned under this legislation follows section 103 of the Rehabilitation Act, and is extremely broad. Therefore, this legislation envisions Social Security providing a wide range of rehabilitation services for individuals where the possibility of a return to work effort exists. For example, section 103(a)(4) of the Rehabilitation Act includes within the scope of rehabilitation services, among other items:

Physical and mental restorative services, including, but not limited to, (A) corrective surgery or therapeutic treatment necessary to correct or substantially modify a physical or mental condition which is stable or slowly progressive and constitues a substantial handicap to employment * * *.

Therefore, it would be possible, under this bill, for the Social Security Administration to provide certain health services not ordinarily provided for under the Medicare or Medicaid Programs, assuming that such services would result in the removal of barriers to employment.

All of the cash beneficiaries in receipt of rehabilitation benefits would be exempt from the current CDI reviews and would be monitored by SSA through rehabilitation reports that all providers of rehabilitation services would be required by statute to provide. These reports would be required at a minimum of once every 3 years for all beneficiaries who were not permanently disabled. The rehabilitation report would include an assessment of the beneficiaries' progress in the rehabilitation program including any improvement that might affect the disability status of the beneficiary, including, but not limit to a return to work effort.

The Social Security Administration would evaluate the rehabilitation report to determine whether a review of the disability status of the beneficiary would be appropriate. All of the beneficiaries not in a rehabilitation program are reviewed within the same intervals as under current law and regulations.

In an effort to remain consistent with the SSI Program, and since similar principles apply to SSI disabled recipients, who in many cases are also in need of rehabilitation services, the bill we are introducing today also extends the modifications in the eligibility determination process to the SSI Program.

Mr. President, what I am proposing today represents a significant improvement in the Social Security Disability Program with only relatively minor modifications in the current program. S. 200 takes the final step in completing a series of reforms which Congress initiated soon after the enactment of the original program. With the modifications I am proposing today, we can, for the first time, say we have a national disability program that is designed to address the unique needs of disabled Americans.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous concent that the full text of S. 200 be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 200

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Social Security Disability Beneficiary Rehabilitation Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. (a)(1) Section 221(a)(1) of the Social Security Act is amended—

(A) by striking out "and of" and inserting in lieu thereof ", the disability category that best describes the condition of such individual, and";

(B) by striking out "(A)" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "(i)";

(C) by striking out "(B)" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "(ii)";

(D) by inserting "(A)" after the paragraph designation; and

(E) by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraphs:

"(B) In making a determination with respect to whether an individual is under a disability (as defined in section 223(d)), the State agency making such determination or the Secretary, as the case may be, shall at the same time determine which of the following disability categories best describes the condition of such individual at the time such determination is made:

"(i) The individual is under a disability (as defined in section 223(d)) that is permanent and can not benefit from vocational rehabilitation services (as described in section 103 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 (29 U.S.C. 723)) or from comprehensive services for independent living (as described in title VII of such Act (29 U.S.C. 796 et seq.)).

"(ii) The individual is under a disability that is permanent, is unlikely to engage in substantial gainful activity (in the case of an individual making application for benefits under section 202(d) or 223) or any gainful activity (in the case of an individual making application for benefits under subsection (e) or (f) of section 202) in the future, but can benefit from vocational rehabilitation services or comprehensive services for independent living.

"(iii) The individual is under a disability that is permanent, can benefit from vocational rehabilitation services, and, if provided with such services, would possibly engage in substantial gainful activity or any gainful activity, as the case may be, as the result of having been provided with such services.

"(iv) The individual is under a disability that is not permanent and can not benefit from vocational rehabilitation services.

"(v) The individual is under a disability that is not permanent, is unlikely to engage in substantial gainful activity or any gainful activity, as the case may be, in the future, but can benefit from vocational rehabilitation services or comprehensive services for independent living.

"(vi) The individual is under a disability that is not permanent, can benefit from vocational rehabilitation services, and, if provided with such services, would possibly engage in substantial gainful activity or any gainful activity, as the case may be, as the result of having been provided with such services.

"(vii) The individual is under a medically determinable physical or mental impairment that is not a disability (as defined in section 223(d)), and could possibly benefit from vocational rehabilitation services provided under title I of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 (29 U.S.C. 720 et seq.).

"(viii) The individual is under a medically determinable physical or mental impairment that is not a disability, and could not benefit from vocational rehabilitation services.

"(ix) The individual is not under a disability or any other medically determinable physical or mental impairment.

Determinations under this subparagraph shall be made in accordance with standards promulgated by the Secretary in consultation with the Commissioner of the Rehabilitation Services Administration of the Department of Education.

"(C) Notice to an individual of a decision by the Secretary with respect to whether an individual is under a disability (as defined in section 223(d)) shall include, in addition to the matters required to be included in the notice of such decision under section 205(b)(1)—

"(i) an explanation, in understandable language, of the reasons why the State agency or the Secretary, as the case may be, has determined that a particular disability category set forth in subparagraph (B) best describes the condition of such individual; and

"(ii) in the case of an individual with respect to whom it is determined that vocational rehabilitation services or comprehensive services for independent living would be beneficial—

"(I) a statement that such individual is eligible for such services;

"(II) a brief explanation of the disability review provisions of subsection (i) and the application of such provisions to such individual; and

"(III) information with respect to how to apply for such services.

"(D) The Secretary shall take such steps as may be necessary to ensure that—

"(i) all determinations required by this paragraph are made in a timely manner, and

"(ii) the payment of benefits to disabled individuals under this title is not delayed by reason of such determinations.".

(2) Section 221(c)(1) of such Act is amended by inserting ", that a different disability category set forth in subsection (a)(1)(B) best describes the condition of such individual," after "(as so defined)".

(3) Section 221(d) of such Act is amended by striking out "subsection (a)," and inserting in lieu thereof "subsection (a) (including a determination of the disability category set forth in subsection (a)(1)(B) that best describes the condition of an individual), or under subsection".

(4) Section 221(g) of such Act is amended by striking out "(a) shall" and inserting in lieu thereof "(a) (including determinations with respect to which of the disability categories set forth in paragraph (1)(B) of such subsection best describes the condition of an individual) shall".

(b) Section 221(i) of such Act is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1)—

(A) by inserting "and such individual is not eligible for or is not (for any reason) receiving vocational rehabilitation services or comprehensive services for independent living provided in accordance with section 222," after "disability,"; and

(B) by striking out all beginning with "years" through "administration of this title." and inserting in lieu thereof "years in the case of an individual determined under subsection (a)(1)(B) to be under a disability that is not permanent, and at least once every 7 years in the case of an individual determined under such subsection to be under a disability that is permanent."; and

(2) by striking out paragraphs (2) and (3) and inserting in lieu thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(2) In any case in which an individual is or has been determined to be under a disability and such individual is receiving vocational rehabilitation services or comprehensive services for independent living provided in accordance with section 222, the case shall be reviewed by the applicable State agency or the Secretary (as may be appropriate), for purposes of continuing eligibility, whenever such agency or the Secretary concludes, on the basis of a report made in accordance with section 222(b)(2) that such a review is warranted.

"(3) Reviews of cases under paragraphs (1) and (2) shall be in addition to, and shall not be considered as a substitute for, any other reviews that are required or provided for under or in the administration of this title.".

(c)(1) Subsections (a) and (b) of section 222(a) of such Act are amended to read as follows:

"REFERRAL FOR SERVICES

"(a)(1) Except in the case of an individual referred to a facility pursuant to paragraph (2), the State agency making determinations of whether an individual is under a disability (as defined in section 223(d)) or the Secretary, as the case may be, shall promptly refer any individual determined to fall within a disability category set forth in clause (ii), (iii), (v), (vi), or (vii) of section 221(a)(1)(B), to (A) the State agency or agencies administering or supervising the administration of the State plan approved under title I of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 (29 U.S.C. 720 et seq.) for necessary vocational rehabilitation services, or (B) the State unit (if any) designated under section 705 of such Act (29 U.S.C. 796d) to administer a State plan approved under title VII of such Act (29 U.S.C. 796 et seq.) for such services, as may be appropriate.

"(2)(A) If an individual is determined in accordance with paragraph (1) of section 221(a) to be under a disability and to fall within a disability category set forth in clause (iii) or (vi) of subparagraph (B) of such paragraph, the State agency or the Secretary, as the case may be, may refer such individual directly to a facility that has been certified by the Secretary as qualified to be a provider of vocational rehabilitation services and shall make payments directly to such facility for vocational rehabilitation services furnished to such individual.".

"(B)(i) Any individual who—

"(I) is referred under this paragraph to a provider of vocational rehabilitation services, and

"(II) is dissatisfied for any reason with the services of the provider, may request that the State agency or the Secretary, as the case may be, refer him or her to another provider of such services.

"(ii) The State agency or the Secretary, as the case may be, shall promptly make a determination with respect to such request and notify the individual of the determination. If the request is denied, the notice required by this clause shall contain a statement, in understandable language, of the reason or reasons for the denial of the request.

"(iii) Any individual making a request under this subparagraph shall be entitled to a hearing on the determination made under clause (ii) with respect to the request to the same extent as provided in section 205(b) for decisions of the Secretary, and to judicial review of the final decision made after the hearing, as is provided in section 205(g).

"ELIGIBILITY FOR SERVICES; REPORTING BY REHABILITATION FACILITIES, INDEPENDENT LIVING FACILITIES, AND CERTIFIED PROVIDERS

"(b)(1) An individual determined in accordance with paragraph (1) of section 221(a) to be under a disability or other medically determinable physical or mental impairment and to fall within a disability category set forth in clause (iii), (vi), or (vii) of subparagraph (B) of such paragraph (other than an individual referred to (and receiving vocational rehabilitation services from) a provider in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (2) of subsection (a) of this section) shall be eligible for vocational rehabilitation services provided under title I of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 (29 U.S.C. 720 et seq.).

"(2) An individual determined in accordance with paragraph (1) of section 221(a) to be under a disability and to fall within a disability category described in clause (ii) or (v) of subparagraph (B) of such paragraph shall be eligible for vocational rehabilitation services provided under title I of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 (29 U.S.C. 720 et seq.) or comprehensive services for independent living provided under title VII of such Act (29 U.S.C. 796 et seq.).

"(3)(A) A facility that—

"(i) is a rehabilitation facility and provides vocational rehabilitation services to an individual described in paragraph (1) or (2) of this subsection (other than an individual determined in accordance with paragraph (1) of section 221(a) to fall within the disability category set forth in subparagraph (B) (vii) of such paragraph) under a State plan approved under title I of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, or

"(ii) provides comprehensive services for independent living to an individual described in paragraph (2) of this subsection under a State plan approved under title VII of such Act (29 U.S.C. 796 et seq.), shall report promptly to the agency of such State that determines whether an individual is under a disability (as defined in section 223(d)) or the Secretary, as the case may be—

"(I) the termination of the provision of such services to such individual (and the reason or reasons for such termination); and

"(II) any significant change in the impairment of such individual and any change in the employment status of such individual that might warrant a review with respect to the disability of such individual in accordance with section 221(i).

"(B) A rehabilitation facility that provides vocational rehabilitation services under a plan approved under title I of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 to an individual determined in accordance with paragraph (1) of section 221(a) to be under a disability and to fall within the disability category set forth in clause (v) or (vi) of subparagraph (B) of such paragraph shall, in addition to submitting any reports required under subparagraph (A) with respect to such individual, submit a report once every 3 years that evaluates—

"(i) the progress of such individual toward the achievement of the goals established with respect to such individual and included in the individualized written plan of vocational rehabilitation developed for such individual pursuant to paragraph (1) of subsection (e);

"(ii) the likelihood that such individual will engage in substantial gainful activity or any gainful activity, as the case may be, in the future as the result of such services; and

"(iii) any other matters that are relevant to determination or redetermination of the disability status of such individual.

"(C) Failure by a facility described in subparagraph (A) (i) or (ii) to report a change in the condition of an individual described in paragraph (1) or (2) (other than an individual determined to fall within the disability category set forth in clause (vii) of section 221(a)(1)(B)), that such facility knows or has reason to know would result in a determination that such individual is no longer under a disability, shall be a misdemeanor and, upon conviction thereof, shall be punishable by a fine of up to $10,000.

"(D) Any provision of this paragraph that is applicable to a rehabilitation facility shall also apply to a provider of vocational rehabilitation services to which individuals are referred in accordance with paragraph (2) of subsection (a).".

(2) Section 222 of such Act is further amended by striking out subsection (d) and inserting in lieu thereof the following new subsections:

"COSTS OF SERVICES FROM TRUST FUNDS

"(d)(1) For purposes of making vocational rehabilitation services and comprehensive services for independent living more readily available to disabled individuals who are—

"(A) entitled to disability insurance benefits under section 223,

"(B) entitled to child's insurance benefits under section 202(d) after having attained age 18 (and are under a disability),

"(C) entitled to widow's insurance benefits under section 202(e) prior to attaining age 60, or

"(D) entitled to widower's insurance benefits under section 202(f) prior to attaining age 60, to the end that savings will accrue to the Trust Funds as a result of rehabilitating such individuals, the Managing Trustee shall transfer funds from the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Insurance Trust Fund and the Federal Disability Insurance Trust Fund in the manner prescribed in paragraphs (2) and (3).

"(2) The Managing Trustee shall, from time to time during each fiscal year, transfer from the Trust Funds such sums as may be necessary to enable the Secretary to make payments to State agencies administering or supervising the administration of a State plan approved under title I of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 (29 U.S.C. 720 et seq.) and to facilities certified under subsection (a)(2) as providers of vocational rehabilitation services for the reasonable and necessary costs of furnishing vocational rehabilitation services to individuals determined to be under a disability in accordance with paragraph (1) of section 221(a) and to fall within a disability category set forth in clause (iii) or (vi) of subparagraph (B) of such paragraph (including services during the waiting periods of such individuals). Payments made under this paragraph shall be made in advance and shall be subject to adjustment on account of underpayments and overpayments.

"(3) The Managing Trustee shall transfer from such Trust Funds each fiscal year such sums as may be necessary to enable the Secretary to reimburse State agencies administering or supervising the administration of a State plan approved under title I of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 and State units designated under section 705 of such Act (29 U.S.C. 796d) to administer plans approved under title VII of such Act for the reasonable and necessary costs of furnishing vocational rehabilitation services or comprehensive services for independent living (including services furnished during waiting periods) under such a plan to individuals determined to be under a disability in accordance with paragraph (1) of section 221(a) of this Act, to fall within a disability category described in clause (ii) or (v) of subparagraph (B) of such paragraph, and to have engaged in substantial gainful activity or any gainful activity, as the case may be, for a continuous period of nine months as a result of such services. The determination that such services contributed to the return of an individual to substantial gainful activity, or any gainful activity, as the case may be, and the determination of the costs to be reimbursed under this paragraph, shall be made by the Commissioner of Social Security in accordance with criteria formulated by the Commissioner. Payments made under this paragraph shall be subject to adjustment on account of underpayments and overpayments.

"(4) Money paid from the Trust Funds under this subsection for the reimbursement of the costs of providing services to individuals who are entitled to benefits under section 223 (including services during the waiting periods of such individuals), or who are entitled to benefits under section 202(d) on the basis of the wages and self-employment income of such individuals, shall be charged to the Federal Disability Insurance Trust Fund, and all other money paid from the Trust Funds under this subsection shall be charged to the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Insurance Trust Fund. The Secretary shall determine according to such methods and procedures as the Secretary may deem appropriate—

"(A) the total amount to be transferred for the cost of services under this subsection, and

"(B) subject to the provisions of the preceding sentence, the amount that should be charged to each of the Trust Funds.

"INDIVIDUALIZED WRITTEN PLANS OF VOCATIONAL REHABILITATION; STANDARDS FOR PROVIDERS

"(e)(1)(A) A facility that provides vocational rehabilitation services or comprehensive services for independent living to an individual eligible under this section for such services shall do so in accordance with an individualized written plan of vocational rehabilitation for such individual.

"(B) Notwithstanding section 102 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 (29 U.S.C. 722), the individualized written plan of vocational rehabilitation required by subparagraph (A) shall be developed, implemented, and reviewed in a manner that is, to the greatest extent practicable and consistent with the provisions of this title, the same as the manner in which plans required by section 1507 of title 38, United States Code, are developed, implemented, and reviewed.

"(2)(A) A facility that provides vocational rehabilitation services or comprehensive services for independent living to an individual eligible under this section for such services shall meet such standards as the Secretary may by regulation prescribe.

"(B) In promulgating regulations under subparagraph (A), the Secretary shall consult with the Commissioner of the Rehabilitation Services Administration of the Department of Education and, to the greatest extent practicable and consistent with the purposes of this section, shall incorporate the standards applicable to facilities and providers of such services under titles I and VII of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 on the day before the date of the enactment of this subsection.

"DEFINITIONS

"(f)(1) For purposes of this section—

"(A) except as provided in paragraph (2), the term 'rehabilitation facility' shall have the meaning given to such term in section 7(11) of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 (29 U.S.C. 706(11));

"(B) the term 'vocational rehabilitation services' shall have the meaning given to such term in section 103 of such Act (29 U.S.C. 723); and

"(C) the term 'comprehensive services for independent living' shall have the meaning given to such term in title VII of such Act (29 U.S.C. 796 et seq.).

"(2) Vocational rehabilitation services and comprehensive services for independent living provided pursuant to this section may be limited in type, scope, or amount in accordance with regulations promulgated by the Secretary in order to ensure that such services are consistent with the purposes of subsection (d).".

(d)(1) Section 222(c)(4)(A) of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"(A) the ninth month in which the individual renders services (whether or not such nine months are consecutive) of any fifteen-month period beginning on or after the first day of such period of trial work; or".

(2) Section 222(c) of such Act is amended—

(A) by striking out "(3) and (4)" in paragraph (1) and inserting in lieu thereof "(3), (4), and (6)"; and

(B) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(6) In the case of an individual determined in accordance with paragraph (1) of section 221(a) to be under a disability (as defined in section 223(d)) and to fall within a disability category set forth in clause (iii) or (vi) of subparagraph (B) of such paragraph, subparagraph (A) of paragraph (4) of this subsection shall be applied—

"(A) by substituting 'twelfth' for 'ninth'; and

"(B) by substituting 'twelve' for 'nine'.".

(e) Section 223(d)(4) of such Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "In determining whether earnings derived from services performed by an individual demonstrate the individual's ability to engage in substantial gainful activity, earnings derived from transitional work, supported work, and services performed in a sheltered workshop shall not be taken into account unless such earnings equal or exceed an amount equal to twice the amount of earnings that (but for this sentence) would result in a determination that such individual is able to engage in substantial gainful activity.".

(f)(1) This section and the amendments made by this section shall become effective on the day that is 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(2)(A) The amendments made by subsection (a) of this section shall apply to any determination made under subsection (a), (b), or (g) of section 221 of the Social Security Act (including a determination made for purposes of a continuing eligibility review required by subsection (i) of such section) on or after the date on which such amendments become effective.

(B) The amendments made by subsections (b), (c), and (d) of this section shall apply to any individual with respect to whom a determination is made under subsection (a), (c), or (g) of section 221 of the Social Security Act on or after the date on which such amendments become effective.

(3)(A) Subsections (c) and (d) of section 222 of the Social Security Act, as in effect on the day before the date on which the amendments made by this section become effective, shall continue to apply to any individual—

(i) who on such day is entitled to benefits under subsection (d), (e), or (f) of section 202 of such Act by reason of disability or to disability insurance benefits under section 223 of such Act, and

(ii) with respect to whom a determination has not been made under subsection (a), (c), or (g) of section 221 of such Act (as amended by subsection (a) of this section) after such day.

(B)(i) Any individual described in subparagraph (A) who desires to have his or her case reviewed in accordance with the procedures established by the amendments made by subsection (a) of this section may request that a determination be made under the applicable subsection of section 221 of the Social Security Act (as so amended).

(ii) The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall take such steps as may be necessary to ensure that (I) any individual described in subparagraph (A) is informed of the right of such individual to request a review under clause (i) and (II) a prompt determination is made with respect to any individual requesting such a review.

(4) The amendments made by subsection (e) shall apply with respect to months beginning on or after the date on which this section becomes effective.

SEC. 3. (a)(1) Section 1614 of the Social Security Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(g)(1) In making a determination under paragraph (2) or (3) of subsection (a) with respect to whether an individual is a blind or disabled individual, the State agency making such determination or the Secretary, as the case may be, shall at the same time determine which of the following disability categories best describes the condition of such individual at the time such determination is made:

"(A) The individual is a blind or disabled individual whose impairment is permanent and who can not benefit from vocational rehabilitation services (as described in section 103 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 (29 U.S.C. 723)) or from comprehensive services for independent living (as described in title VII of such Act (29 U.S.C. 796 et seq.)).

"(B) The individual is a blind or disabled individual whose impairment is permanent, who is unlikely to engage in substantial gainful activity in the future, but who can benefit from vocational rehabilitation services or comprehensive services for independent living.

"(C) The individual is a blind or disabled individual whose impairment is permanent, who can benefit from vocational rehabilitation services, and who, if provided with such services, would possibly engage in substantial gainful activity as the result of having been provided with such services.

"(D) The individual is a blind or disabled individual whose impairment is not permanent and who can not benefit from vocational rehabilitation services.

"(E) The individual is a blind or disabled individual whose impairment is not permanent, who is unlikely to engage in substantial gainful activity in the future as the result of such services, but who can benefit from vocational rehabilitation services or comprehensive services for independent living.

"(F) The individual is a blind or disabled individual whose impairment is not permanent, who can benefit from vocational rehabilitation services, and who, if provided with such services, would possibly engage in substantial gainful activity as the result of having been provided with such services.

"(G) The individual is not a blind or disabled individual but is under a medically determinable physical or mental impairment, and could possibly benefit from vocational rehabilitation services provided under title I of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 (29 U.S.C. 720 et seq.).

"(H) The individual is under a medically determinable physical or mental impairment, but is not a blind or disabled individual and could not benefit from vocational rehabilitation services.

"(I) The individual is not a blind or disabled individual and is not under any other medically determinable physical or mental impairment.

Determinations under this paragraph shall be made in accordance with standards promulgated by the Secretary in consultation with the Commissioner of the Rehabilitation Services Administration of the Department of Education.

"(2) Notice to an individual of a decision under paragraph (2) or (3) of subsection (a) with respect to whether such individual is a blind or disabled individual shall include, in addition to the matters required to be included in the notice of such decision under section 1631(c)(1)—

"(A) an explanation, in understandable language, of the reasons why the State agency or the Secretary, as the case may be, has determined that a particular disability category set forth in paragraph (1) best describes the condition of such individual; and

"(B) in the case of an individual with respect to whom it is determined that vocational rehabilitation services or comprehensive services for independent living would be beneficial—

"(i) a statement that such individual is eligible for such services; and

"(ii) information with respect to how to apply for such services.

"(3) The Secretary shall take such steps as may be necessary to ensure that—

"(A) all determinations under this subsection and paragraphs (2) and (3) of subsection (a) are made in a timely manner, and

"(B) the payment of benefits to blind and disabled individuals under this title is not delayed by reason of such determinations.".

(2) Section 1631(c)(1) of such Act is amended—

(A) by inserting after the second sentence the following: "Each decision by the Secretary with respect to whether an individual is disabled for purposes of receiving benefits under this title shall also contain a statement, in understandable language, of the reasons the individual has been determined to fall within a particular disability category set forth in section 1614(g)(1)."; and

(B) by striking out "or the amount of such individual's benefits" and inserting in lieu thereof "the amount of such individual's benefits, or the disability category set forth in section 1614(g)(1) that best describes the condition of such individual".

(b) Section 1615 of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"SERVICES FOR BLIND AND DISABLED INDIVIDUALS

"SEC. 1615. (a)(1) Except in the case of an individual referred to a facility pursuant to paragraph (2), the State agency making determinations under paragraphs (2) and (3) of section 1614(a) with respect to whether an individual is a blind or disabled individual or the Secretary, as the case may be, shall promptly refer any individual determined to fall within a disability category set forth in subparagraph (B), (C), (E), (F), or (G) of section 1614(g)(1) to (A) the State agency or agencies administering or supervising the administration of the State plan approved under title I of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 (29 U.S.C. 720 et seq.) for necessary vocational rehabilitation services, or (B) the State unit (if any) designated under section 705 of such Act (29 U.S.C. 796d) to administer a State plan approved under title VII of such Act (29 U.S.C. 796 et seq.) for such services, as may be appropriate.

"(2)(A) If an individual is determined in accordance with paragraph (2) or (3) of subsection (a) of section 1614 to be a blind or disabled individual and to fall within a disability category described in subparagraph (C) or (F) of subsection (g)(1) of such section, the State agency or the Secretary, as the case may be, may refer such individual directly to a facility that has been certified by the Secretary as qualified to be a provider of vocational rehabilitation services and shall make payments directly to such facility for vocational rehabilitation services furnished to such individual.

"(B)(i) Any individual who—

"(I) is referred under this paragraph to a provider of vocational rehabilitation services, and

"(II) is dissatisfied for any reason with the services of the provider, may request that the State agency or the Secretary, as the case may be, refer him or her to another provider of such services.

"(ii) The State agency or the Secretary, as the case may be, shall promptly make a determination with respect to such request and notify the individual of the determination. If the request is denied, the notice required by this clause shall contain a statement, in understandable language, of the reason or reasons for the denial of the request.

"(iii) Any individual making a request under this subparagraph shall be entitled to a hearing on the determination made under clause (ii) with respect to the request to the same extent as provided in section 205(b) for decisions of the Secretary, and to judicial review of the final decision made after the hearing, as is provided in section 205(g).

"(b)(1) An individual determined in accordance with paragraph (2) or (3) of subsection (a) of section 1614 to be a blind or disabled individual or to have some other medically determinable physical or mental impairment, and to fall within a disability category described in subparagraph (C), (F), or (H) of subsection (g)(1) of such section (other than an individual receiving vocational rehabilitation services in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (2) of subsection (a) of this section) shall be eligible for vocational rehabilitation services provided under title 1 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 (29 U.S.C. 720 et seq.).

"(2) An individual determined in accordance with paragraph (2) or (3) of subsection (a) of section 1614 to be a blind or disabled individual and to fall within a disability category set forth in subparagraph (B) or (E) of subsection (g)(1) of such section shall be eligible for vocational rehabilitation services provided under title I of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 (29 U.S.C. 720 et seq.) or comprehensive services for independent living provided under title VII of such Act (29 U.S.C. 796 et seq.).

"(3)(A) A facility that—

"(i) is a rehabilitation facility and provides vocational rehabilitation services to an individual described in paragraph (1) or (2) of this subsection (other than an individual determined to fall within the disability category described in section 1614(g)(1)(G)), under a State plan approved under title I of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, or

"(ii) provides comprehensive services for independent living to an individual described in paragraph (2) of this subsection under a State plan approved under title VII of such Act (29 U.S.C. 796 et seq.), shall report promptly to the agency of such State that determines whether an individual is a blind or disabled individual or to the Secretary, as the case may be—

"(I) the termination of the provision of such services to such individual (and the reason or reasons for such termination); and

"(II) the return to work of such individual.

"(B) Any provision of this paragraph that is applicable to a rehabilitation facility shall also apply to a provider of vocational rehabilitation services to which individuals are referred in accordance with paragraph (2) of subsection (a).

"(c)(1) The Secretary is authorized to make payments to State agencies administering or supervising the administration of a State plan approved under title I of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 (29 U.S.C. 720 et seq.) and to facilities certified under subsection (a)(2) as providers of vocational rehabilitation services for the reasonable and necessary costs of furnishing vocational rehabilitation services to individuals determined to be blind or disabled individuals under paragraph (2) or (3) of subsection (a) of section 1614 and to fall within a disability category set forth in subparagraph (C) or (F) of subsection (g)(1) of such section (including services during the waiting periods of such individuals). Payments made under this paragraph shall be made in advance and shall be subject to adjustment on account of underpayments and overpayments.

"(2) The Secretary is authorized to reimburse State agencies administering or supervising the administration of a State plan approved under title I of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 and State units designated under section 705 of such Act (29 U.S.C. 796d) to administer plans approved under title VII of such Act for the reasonable and necessary costs of furnishing vocational rehabilitation services or comprehensive services for independent living (including services furnished during waiting periods) under such a plan to individuals determined to be blind or disabled individuals under paragraph (2) or (3) of subsection (a) of section 1614, to fall within a disability category described in subparagraph (B) or (E) of subsection (g)(1) of such section, and to have engaged in substantial gainful activity for a continuous period of nine months as a result of such services. The determination that such services contributed to the return of an individual to substantial gainful activity, and the determination of the costs to be reimbursed under this paragraph shall be made by the Commissioner of Social Security in accordance with criteria determined by the Commissioner in the same manner as under section 222(d)(3). Payments made under this section shall be subject to adjustment on account of underpayments and overpayments.

"(d)(1)(A) A facility that provides vocational rehabilitation services or comprehensive services for independent living to an individual eligible under this section for such services shall do so in accordance with an individualized written plan of vocational rehabilitation for such individual.

"(B) Notwithstanding section 102 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 (29 U.S.C. 722), the individualized written plan of vocational rehabilitation required by subparagraph (A) shall be developed, implemented, and reviewed in a manner that is, to the greatest extent practicable and consistent with the provisions of this title, the same as the manner in which plans required by section 1507 of title 38, United States Code, are developed, implemented, and reviewed.

"(2)(A) A facility that provides vocational rehabilitation services or comprehensive services for independent living to an individual eligible under this section for such services shall meet such standards as the Secretary may by regulation prescribe.

"(B) In promulgating regulations under subparagraph (A), the Secretary shall consult with the Commissioner of the Rehabilitation Services Administration of the Department of Education and, to the greatest extent practicable and consistent with the purposes of this section, shall incorporate the standards applicable to facilities and providers of such services under titles I and VII of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 on the day before the date of the enactment of this subsection.

"(e)(1) For purposes of this section—

"(A) except as provided in paragraph (2), the term 'rehabilitation facility' shall have the meaning given to such term in section 7(11) of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 (29 U.S.C. 706(11));

"(B) the term 'vocational rehabilitation services' shall have the meaning given to such term in section 103 of such Act (29 U.S.C. 723); and

"(C) the term 'comprehensive services for independent living' shall have the meaning given to such term in title VII of such Act (29 U.S.C. 796 et seq.).

"(2) Vocational rehabilitation services and comprehensive services for independent living provided pursuant to this section may be limited by the Secretary to the same extent as services of such type are limited under section 222(f)(2).".

(c) Section 1614(a)(3)(D) of such Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "In determining whether earnings derived from services performed by an individual demonstrate the individual's ability to engage in substantial gainful activity, earnings derived from transitional work, supported work, and services performed in a sheltered workshop shall not be taken into account unless such earnings equal or exceed an amount equal to twice the amount of earnings that (but for this sentence) would result in a determination that such individual is able to engage in substantial gainful activity.".

(d)(1) This section and the amendments made by this section shall become effective on the day that is 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(2)(A) The amendments made by subsection (a) of this section shall apply to any determination made under paragraph (2) or (3) of subsection (a) of section 1614 of the Social Security Act and any determination made for purposes of a continuing eligibility review required by section 416.989 of title 20, Code of Federal Regulations, on or after the date on which such amendments become effective.

(B) The amendments made by subsection (b) of this section shall apply to any individual with respect to whom a determination is made under paragraph (2) or (3) of subsection (a) of section 1614 of the Social Security Act or pursuant to section 416.989 of title 20, Code of Federal Regulations, on or after the date on which such amendments become effective.

(3)(A) Section 1615 of the Social Security Act, as in effect on the day before the date on which the amendments made by this section become effective, shall continue to apply to any individual—

(i) who on such day is entitled to benefits under section 1611(a) of such Act by reason of blindness or disability, and

(ii) with respect to whom a determination has not yet been made pursuant to section 416.989 of title 20, Code of Federal Regulations, after such day.

(B)(i) Any individual described in subparagraph (A) who desires to have his or her case reviewed in accordance with the procedures established by the amendments made by subsection (a) of this section may request that a determination be made pursuant to section 416.989 of title 20, Code of Federal Regulations.

(ii) The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall take such steps as may be necessary to ensure that (I) any individual described in subparagraph (A) is informed of the right of such individual to request a review under clause (i) and (II) a prompt determination is made with respect to any individual requesting such a review.

(4) The amendments made by subsection (c) shall apply with respect to months beginning on or after the date on which this section becomes effective.

By Mr. GORE (for himself, Mr. BOSCHWITZ, Mr. LIEBERMAN, Mr. HOLLINGS, Mr. WIRTH, Mr. SIMON, Mr. KERRY, Mr. REID, Mr. BRYAN, and Mr. SASSER):

S. 201. A bill to respond to the global environmental degradation brought on by human activities by reversing the trends that are presently altering or destroying vast portions of the biosphere, and to ensure that U.S. policies provide for the protection of the world environment from future degradation, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

WORLD ENVIRONMENTAL POLICY ACT

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, on this first working day on the 101st Congress I am introducing the World Environment Policy Act of 1989 with provisions to establish a Council on World Environmental Policy to take the place of the present Council on Environmental Quality, and to focus on developing policy responses to problems related to the greenhouse effect, the destruction of the ozone layer, the loss of biodiversity, and other degradations of our world environment. The bill includes provisions to stem growing CO_2 levels in the atmosphere, including measures aimed at the vehicle mileage standards which are dealt with by the Senate Commerce Committee, measures to ban the production of chlorofluorocarbons which are primarily responsible for destruction of the stratosphere ozone layer, as well as for causing almost 20 percent of the greenhouse effect, measures to reduce the emissions of methane, the fastest growing single source of the greenhouse effect, measures to reduce the emissions of trace gases which also contribute to this problem, a title dealing with reforestation—and I listened to the Senator from Nevada earlier in his very eloquent remarks on the subject—a comprehensive measure in another title to promote recycling and to actually ban after 5 years any packing materials put into commerce that can neither be recycled nor absorbed by the environment—that is, be biodegradable.

Also, another title promotes and protects biodiversity—we are seeing the largest loss of species that the world has experienced, scientists tell us, in at least 65 million years. Measures are also included to deal with the population crisis in the world, and to promote international cooperation and coordination in addressing environmental problems.

Mr. President, as we set the agenda this winter and sort out our priorities for the 101st Congress, as we look ahead, I am reminded of some of the scenes that are all to familiar from our recent past—of last summer's drought and heat, for example; of the signs warning bathers away from polluted beaches; of needles washing up with the waves; of streams destroyed by hazardous wastes; of recordbreaking air pollution levels that left our cities covered in a brown—and dangerous—haze.

This summer's news was heavy with our pollution problems, thought-provoking stories that put familiar problems in a far more urgent context. The greenhouse effect became the subject of everyday conversations. The hole in the Earth's protective ozone shield became a well-known fact. All the while, there remained in the background the steady ticking of an overpopulation bomb.

Eight years ago, I chaired the first congressional hearings on this issue, and in a long series of hearings since, I have watched it become by far the most serious environmental problem we have ever faced.

Now, Mr. President, as we look to the future, we must make the memories of last summer a call to action. We must make these issues our highest priorities and reserve for them not only a place on our agenda but a spot at the top of our agenda here on this first day of the new Congress.

These challenges are not ours alone—though they present us with real-life problems we and our families face daily, though they pose real-life threats to our future and our children's future. These are problems we must face not only as parents and as neighbors who share communities, but also as Americans who are neighbors to those in all nations with whom we share a global environment.

During this congressional recess, I had the opportunity to visit some of the front lines of our world's environmental conflicts: The icy wilderness of Antarctica on a trip that was led by Senator HOLLINGS, the Senator from South Carolina, who chairs the Senate Commerce Committee; and then to the rain forests of Brazil, on a trip that was led by the Senator from Colorado, Senator WIRTH—a trip which Senator HEINZ, from Pennsylvania, and Senator SHELBY, from Alabama, also helped to lead. In Antarctica, there are the earliest and most dramatic signs of the destruction of the ozone shield, as well as evidence of global warming. In Brazil, tropical rain forests are scientific and economic treasures in the process of being looted—destroyed and burned at the rate of a football field's worth every second, 24 hours a day.

During the recess, I also had the honor of participating in a unique environmental conference initiated and organized by Time magazine at the National Center for Atmospheric Research in Colorado. There, journalists and elected officials and environmental experts from around the world gathered for an extraordinary and productive exchange of ideas and concerns about the state of our world environment.

These problems must be faced by every nation around the world. We are all responsible for the future, for the quality of life we will enjoy—or endure—in every country, in every State, in every neighborhood. That is why, Mr. President, today I am introducing the World Environment Policy Act of 1989.

We need an international alliance for environmental progress to take its place alongside other alliances that exist in the name of security, as traditionally defined, recognizing that the threats we face transcend national boundaries and ideologies. We can no longer afford to shift the burden onto others or pretend we can meet the challenge by ourselves. This bill sets ambitious new targets for a cleaner, safer world. There proposals have a dual purpose, to protect our environment and to employ economic common sense in that task.

Briefly, Mr. President, I hope this bill will help us develop national and international policy responses to world environmental problems. It will provide meaningful controls on the chemicals and gases destroying the ozone shield. It will present a comprehensive plan to promote recycling and dramatically reduce the wastes now crowding and closing landfills in every State in our Nation. And, it will provide new, innovative efforts to promote reforestation, preserve the biological diversity of our world, and confront the very real problems of overpopulation.

Many of my colleagues here in the Senate and others in the House have contributed greatly to the debate on these issues. I applaud their commitment and am grateful for their expertise and insight. I have joined with them in their efforts and will continue to support their work. The chairman of the Commerce Committee, Senator HOLLINGS, who has agreed to cosponsor this bill, I am told, is going to, on this very day, reintroduce legislation that deals primarily with specific items on the research agenda that will assist our Nation's efforts to reduce the remaining areas of uncertainty where the world's environmental crisis is concerned.

My colleague from Colorado, Senator WIRTH, who is also a cosponsor, plans soon to reintroduce legislation that he had in the 100th Congress which deals with this issue. Indeed, in the legislation I am introducing today, I have not included items related to alternative energy research and development in order not to overlap those portions of that legislation.

I wish to acknowledge a debt to our former Senate colleague, Senator Stafford, who was a pioneer in these efforts. I was one of the four original cosponsors of his groundbreaking legislation last Congress on several of these issues and I wish to acknowledge my debt to him.

I also especially want to acknowledge Senator BOSCHWITZ, Senator LIEBERMAN, Senator SASSER, Senator SIMON, Senator KERRY, Senator REID, and Senator BRYAN, who have joined Senator HOLLINGS and Senator WIRTH as original cosponsors of this bill. Their interest and expertise has been critical to the development of this legislation.

Many of our other colleagues—Senator BAUCUS, who has been a leader in this area; Senator MITCHELL in his former capacity; Senator LAUTENBERG, Senator KASTEN, Senator BIDEN, Senator BUMPER, Senator CHAFEE, Senator HEINZ, and others—have all been very active on these issues. I look forward to working with them on these subjects.

Several of our colleagues in the other body—Congressman HOCHBRUECKNER, Congressman SCHEUER, Congressman BROWN, and Congresswoman SCHNEIDER, and others—have contributed greatly to the efforts that are underway to deal with these crises.

This bill is intended to complement the work of those individuals that I have mentioned. It is designed to address all of the major causes of the greenhouse effect and the global ecological crisis.

There are 10 titles in this bill. Let me summarize some of them now.

First, I am proposing a new Council on World Environmental Policy to replace the Council on Environmental Quality with a body better able to link the scientists' research with the policymakers' plans and, to introduce to that process a global perspective that recognizes the full reach of these issues.

Second, this bill proposes the complete phaseout of the production of the chloroflourocarbons which are rapidly destroying the stratospheric ozone layer and contributing to the greenhouse effect.

It mandates improvements in fuel economy standards for passenger cars and light trucks to reduce the carbon dioxide emissions that contribute to the greenhouse effect.

This bill instructs the EPA, NASA, and NOAA to identify methane emission sources, analyze methane's role in global change processes, and recommend methods for controlling emissions and, it amends the Solid Waste Disposal Act to minimize emissions of methane from landfills.

In addition, Mr. President, this bill addresses the complex and difficult issue of recycling and the reduction of solid wastes. This bill is designed to reduce the mountains of garbage our throwaway society will soon be unable, literally, to throw away. Three thousand landfills have been closed in the past 5 years and, by 1993, one-third of those that remain will be closed as well.

This bill creates a research program to examine alternatives for recycling, a clearinghouse for information on existing, successful recycling programs, and a national recycling education program. It presents a program for the complete phaseout of nonrecyclable packaging within 5 years. Simply put, 5 years after enactment, this bill would prohibit the production of any packaging that cannot be recycled unless it is biodegradable, photodegradable, or naturally degradable. Items could be excluded only where the EPA Administrator determines that recycling is not feasible or threatens national security. The standards would be Federal, the authority to implement them would be with the States.

This bill would establish a national policy for the conservation of biological diversity. It would require assessments of the effects on biological diversity in all evaluations of the environmental impacts of major Federal actions and it would establish a Federal strategy for preserving biological diversity, coordinating that effort among Federal, State, and private initiatives. It calls for a study of our Nation's biological diversity and, it supports basic research.

Finally, Mr. President, this bill will help sustain and protect our world's forests by specifically addressing tropical wood products, deforestation, and protection of the Amazon basin.

I am proposing a phased-in ban on the importation of tropical wood products not obtained from regimes of sustained yield management. The uncontrolled logging of such woods is a major threat to the rain forests. The United States, the European Communities, and Japan are the major markets for such woods. This bill proposes that the principle consuming nations support a lending facility to help the producers of tropical woods develop substained yield management systems.

To stop global deforestation, this bill would instruct the Director of AID to assess the potential gains and costs of a program to help small landholders with the capital needed to make improvements—in may cases, minor doses of capital could produce major improvements. The intent is to expand the use of the Micro-Enterprises Act as a channel to bring such aid directly to small landholders.

And, because we know that a substantial increase in reforested areas would not only help alleviate regional environmental and economic problems, but also ameliorate the greenhouse effect, this bill would provide a report identifying the potential for expanded areas of reforestation around the world, an estimate of costs, and a plan for allocating those costs internationally.

I am also proposing that our Secretary of State propose to the Government of Brazil that the Brazilians take the lead in protecting the Amazon basin by convening a conference focused on identifying programs to conserve the basin's resources. There is a finding that the major industrial nations, recognizing the need for this action on global environmental grounds, should be prepared to consider substantial material contributions toward that end. At the same time, the Congress directs the U.S. directors of multilateral development banks to urge reconsideration of and restraint in lending that would exacerbate the problem.

Mr. President, this bill is intentionally comprehensive and far reaching. Just as the environmental fate and future of our Nation is tied to those of every other nation, so too are these issues tied to each other and to the resolution of the problems we face here and around the glode.

These are priority issues for me and, I believe for many of my colleagues and many of our constituents. In Tennessee, there is grave concern about hazardous wastes, about the quality of the air we breathe and the water we drink, about the protection of our parks and wilderness. That concern stretches across our country and beyond our borders. There is a vital and important connection between the rainforests of Brazil, the frozen wilderness of Antarctica, and the natural resources we enjoy in our home States. That connection is our future, our quality of life today and our children's quality of life tomorrow. We must recognize that connection and act now.

I appreciate the courtesy, Mr. President. Let me just say in closing that I believe very deeply that this issue and the complexity of problems which make up the global ecological crisis pose the most serious environmental challenge we have ever faced, bar none. It will tax our ability to design policies capable of confronting that problem.

I look forward to making this my own top priority and working with others who are deeply involved in addressing these problems.

I ask unanimous consent that a summary of the bill be printed at this point.

There being no objection, the summary was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 201—THE WORLD ENVIRONMENT POLICY ACT OF 1989, SUMMARY

TITLE I.—COUNCIL ON WORLD ENVIRONMENTAL POLICY

To replace the Council on Environmental Quality with a new Council on World Environmental Policy better able to coordinate research and policy making and, to introduce a global perspective to research and policy-making activities.

TITLE II.—SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH AND PUBLIC AWARENESS

U.S. support of the International Geosphere-Biosphere Program, an international scientific effort that will provide new insights into the processes of global change;

Support of IGBP effort to study Antarctica's role in global change and for corresponding research on the Arctic and tropical forests;

Support of NASA's Mission to Planet Earth initiative;

Designates 1990 the "International Year of the Greenhouse Effect" to focus and promote attention on the issue, and on research and policy findings.

TITLE III.—REGULATION AND PHASE OUT OF ANTHROPOGENIC EMISSIONS THAT DEGRADE THE ENVIRONMENT

Provides for a freeze, effective Jan. 1, 1990, on the production of ozone-depleting chemicals at 1986 production levels. A gradual phase-out follows until all production is banned in the year 2000, with exceptions for medical and national security reasons.

Instructs the EPA, NASA, and NOAA to identify methane emission sources, analyze methane's role in global change processes, and recommend methods for controlling emissions;

Amends the Solid Waste Disposal Act to minimize emissions of methane from landfills.

Provides for the control of other trace greenhouse gases, such as ground level ozone.

TITLE IV.—VEHICLE FUEL EFFICIENCY IMPROVEMENTS

Mandates improvements in fuel economy standards for passenger cars and light trucks.

TITLE V.—WASTE MINIMIZATION AND RECYCLING

Creates research program to examine alternatives for recycling;

Establishes clearinghouse for information on existing, successful recycling programs;

Establishes national education program on waste minimization and recycling.

Program for complete phase-out of non-recyclable products within five years (prohibits, five years after enactment, production of any goods that cannot be recycled, exceptions for biodegradable, photodegradable or naturally degradable goods, and where the EPA administrator determines recycling is not feasible or threatens national security), federal standards, implementing authority with the states.

TITLE VI.—THE WORLD BANK AND SUSTAINABLE ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

Directs Secretary of the Treasury to work with major contributors to the World Bank, and with Bank leadership, to develop a method to assess, for major donor governments, the environmental soundness of lending projects prior to final approval by the Bank.

TITLE VII.—ASSISTANCE TO INTERNATIONAL FAMILY PLANNING ORGANIZATIONS

Return U.S. policy to pre-1984, to provide support for family planning efforts.

TITLE VIII.—BIODIVERSITY

Establishes national policy for the conservation of biological diversity;

Requires assessments of the effects on biological diversity in all evaluations of the environmental impacts of all federal actions;

Establishes a federal strategy for preserving biological diversity and coordinates that effort among federal, state, and private initiatives;

Undertakes study of nation's biological diversity and supports basic research.

TITLE IX.—REPLANTING AND CONSERVING THE WORLD'S FORESTS

Phased-in import ban of tropical wood products other than those obtained from regimes of sustained yield management, principle consuming nations support lending facility to help producers of tropical woods establish sustained yield management systems;

Instructs AID Director to assess potentual gains and costs of a program to help small land holders with the capital needed to make improvements that could stop global deforestation, intent is to expand the use of the Micro Enterprises Act as a channel to bring such aid directly to small landholders;

Provide report identifying the potential for expanded areas of reforestation around the world, an estimate of costs and a plan for allocating those costs internationally;

Directs the Secretary of State to propose to the government of Brazil that the Brazilians take the lead in protecting the Amazon Basin by convening a conference focused on identifying programs to conserve the Basin's resources;

Includes finding that the major industrial nations should be prepared to consider substantial material contributions toward that end;

Congress directs the U.S. directors of multilateral development banks to urge reconsideration of and restraint in lending that would exacerbate deforestation.

TITLE X.—INTERNATIONAL COOPERATION

Promotes U.S. participation in international initiatives and global environmental problems such as those initiated under the auspices of the United Nations.

Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, as we begin the 101st Congress, environmental issues have gained a new and needed prominence. The new President has made clear that he is firmly committed to progress in this area, and he has appointed a respected environmentalist to head the Environmental Protection Agency.

In this Chamber, Mr. President, we have a new majority leader who is second to none in his leadership on the environment. I look forward to working with him as he shapes the environmental agenda for this Congress.

Mr. President, I am especially concerned about the global dimensions of our environmental problems. In recent years, we have gained more compelling evidence that we may be on the verge of a substantial global warming, caused by the emission of heat trapping gases like carbon dioxide and methane. The results of such a warming could be devastating and irreversible for much of the world. The problem demands our attention.

Last year, as a special delegate to the United Nations, I called on the United Nations to push for greater international cooperation on research on global warming and the development of response options. We in the Congress can do much to facilitate that cooperation, and I intend to introduce my own legislation in that area soon.

Today I am happy to join Senator GORE as an original cosponsor of the World Environmental Policy Act of 1989. This bill is a broad, visionary statement, and it will provoke needed debate on this issue.

The bill calls for U.S. support of international scientific efforts to better understand global warming. It calls for a more aggressive program to eliminate CFC's, which threaten the ozone layer.

This legislation also stresses sound environmental policies in our aid to developing countries. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to work with the World Bank in developing ways to assess the environmental soundness of projects prior to their final approval by the Bank. It also includes efforts to stop the rapid deforestration going on in many parts of the world.

In a bill of this magnitude, it is natural that I would not agree with every provision. I have consistently supported the administration's Mexico City policy, for instance, and I do not support the change in that policy called for in this bill.

But the basic outlines of this legislation are both bold and needed. It is my hope that this bill and any subsequent legislation in this area will begin a debate that will lead to thoughtful and effective action.

By Mr. DASCHLE (for himself and Mr. PRESSLER):

S. 202. A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to construct, operate, and maintain the Lake Andes-Wagner Unit and Marty II Unit, South Dakota Pumping Division, Pick-Sloan Missouri Basin Program, South Dakota; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION OF CERTAIN SOUTH DAKOTA WATER PROJECTS

● Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, today I am introducing, along with my colleague from South Dakota, Senator LARRY PRESSLER, a bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to construct the Lake Andes-Wagner-Marty II irrigation project as a unit of the Pick-Sloan Missouri River Basin. Extensive hearings on this bill were held in the 100th Congress, and I hope that authorization can be considered quickly by the Congress.

Nineteen-eighty-nine marks the 20th year since the planning for this project first began. During that period, the project has been refined and improved. Today, it is generally recognized that the Lake Andes-Wagner-Marty II project is the best reclamation project being considered in the country. It combines environmental sensitivity, cost effectiveness, and overwhelming local need and support.

The Lake Andes-Wagner-Marty II project is to be authorized as partial compensation for the prime farmland lost from flooding by the main stem dams on the Missouri River, as mandated by the Pick-Sloan Missouri River Basin Program of 1944. To remind my colleagues, Pick-Sloan provided flood control, power and navigation benefits for downstream States. The States which lost their most productive land—more than 500,000 acres were lost in South Dakota alone—were promised irrigation development. This promise remains largely unrealized.

Most of my colleagues have heard the stark facts of lost income, lost jobs, and lost business activity that have resulted from Pick-Sloan in South Dakota. The people of South Dakota have not forgotten about securing our end of Pick-Sloan, despite Federal inactivity. I believe that it is time to end this inactivity, and Lake Andes-Wagner-Marty II should become a reality.

The Lake Andes-Wagner-Marty II project will bring needed water to approximately 51,000 acres, less than one-tenth that lost under Pick-Sloan. The area to be served includes Charles Mix County in southeastern South Dakota, and about 3,000 acres in the Yankton Sioux Indian Reservation.

These are areas desperately in need of the project. The population of the project area has declined by 58 percent since 1950. Where there were 100 school districts, now there are 4. Unemployment in the Marty II area of the project hovers around 85 percent.

Several concerns about the project have been raised in the past 20 years, and, I believe, all have been addressed. First, is the question of the environment. The project sponsors have undertaken rigorous environmental assessments, and tailored the project to avoid environmental harm. Furthermore, thousands of acres will be set aside to compensate for the loss of wildlife habitat. Some 1,320 acres of wetlands, 175 acres of woodlands, and 2,180 acres of grasslands will be enhanced as a result of the project. In addition, a fish-stocking impoundment will be constructed under the project. From an environmental aspect, this project must be considered a model for responsible water development.

Concerns have been raised that the State of South Dakota will not bear enough of the financial burden of the project. The total cost of the project is $157 million for the Lake Andes-Wagner portion, and $15 for the Marty II portion. During the last session of Congress, negotiations resulted in a broad cost-sharing plan for the project. Under this agreement, which is reflected in the bill I am introducing, the State will pay more than $45 million, or 29 percent of the Lake Andes-Wagner project. This reduces the Federal burden to $126 million. I believe that this shows the State's commitment to the project, and the importance of the project to the people of South Dakota.

Many sincere individuals have expressed concern over the so-called double subsidy afforded to irrigated crops by Federal projects. The imagined double subsidy comes from the fact that water users of reclamation projects pay only those irrigation costs which are within their repayment ability, with the balance being repaid from other project revenues, such as project power revenues. The other subsidy referred to is the payment paid to the farmer under the farm program. I wish to make two brief points on this subject.

First, many of the surplus crops produced in the project do not reach the marketplace, and thus do not add to existing Federal crop surpluses. A typical Charles Mix County farm is an integrated livestock and feed grain operation, meaning that much of the increased production from irrigation will be consumed onsite.

Second, the legislation I introduce makes sure that there can be no inclusion of increases in crop yield in Federal subsidy payments by requiring that the feed grain program be based upon dryland production and acreage. Irrigation will not add to Federal subsidies. In fact, I contend that irrigation will reduce Federal subsidies.

Today, the types of crops grown in the project area are determined largely by the availability of water. There can be no diversification of the crop base if irrigation is not available. The production of subsidized crops will continue, as it does today, absent a dependable water supply. I would not feel so strongly about this project if it were not for the diversification and opportunity it presents the people and State of South Dakota. South Dakota, and much of the Midwest, suffered badly in 1988 due to drought. Early indications show that 1989 may be just as bad, if not worse. The headlines will again discuss the plight of the farmer, and as lawmakers, we will grasp for temporary remedies. I suggest that Lake Andes-Wagner-Marty II represents a partial solution—the availability of easily accessible water in times of localized drought. The reduction in subsequent drought payments is another part of the cost equation that should be considered in conjunction with the Lake Andes-Wagner-Marty II project.

Mr. President, from an economic and environmental standpoint, there is simply no project being proposed today which can surpass this small, manageable, riverside irrigation project. From an equity standpoint, the people of Charles Mix County, many of whom watched helplessly as their family farm was engulfed forever by the Fort Randall Dam reservoir, also have compelling arguments to make.

If there is a future in irrigation development in America—and I think most Senators agree that there should be—the Lake Andes-Wagner-Marty II project constitutes the type of undertaking that should serve as a guide on how the Federal Government can deliver responsible irrigation development to family-sized farms without draining the Treasury or compromising the environment.

At this time I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill, along with the attached list of environmental commitments made by the project, be inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 202

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. AUTHORIZATION OF THE LAKE ANDES-WAGNER UNIT AND THE MARTY II UNIT, SOUTH DAKOTA.

(a) AUTHORIZATION.—In partial recognition of the inundation of lands in South Dakota, including lands in the Yankton Sioux Indian reservation, by mainstem Missouri River reservoirs constructed and operated by the United States under the comprehensive plans approved and authorized by section 9 of the Flood Control Act of December 22, 1944 (58 Stat. 887, 891) (hereafter in this Act referred to as the "Pick-Sloan Missouri Basin Program"), the Secretary of the Interior (hereafter in this Act referred to as the "Secretary") is authorized to construct, operate, and maintain the Lake Andes-Wagner Unit and the Marty II Unit, South Dakota, as Units of the South Dakota Pumping Division, Pick-Sloan Missouri Basin Program.

(b) LAKE ANDES-WAGNER UNIT.—The Lake Andes-Wagner Unit shall be constructed, operated, and maintained to serve approximately 45,000 acres substantially as provided in the Lake Andes-Wagner Unit Planning Report and Final Environmental Impact Statement filed September 17, 1985.

(c) MARTY II UNIT.—(1) The Marty II Unit shall include a river pump, irrigation distribution system, booster pumps, irrigation sprinkler systems, farm and project drains, electrical distribution facilities, and the pressurization to serve approximately 3,000 acres of Indian-owned land in the Yankton Sioux Indian Reservation.

(2) Construction of the Marty II Unit shall not begin until—

(A) the Secretary certifies the irrigability of the lands; and

(B) the completion of an environmental impact statement or a finding of no significant impact and, if required, the completion of a mitigation plan for any adverse effects which may be caused by the Marty II Unit.

SEC. 2. CONDITIONS AND RESTRICTIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Lake Andes-Wagner Unit and the Marty II Unit shall be integrated physically and financially with other Federal works constructed under the Pick-Sloan Missouri Basin Program.

(b) LAKE ANDES-WAGNER UNIT.—The Lake Andes-Wagner Unit shall include on-farm pumps, irrigation sprinkler systems, and other on-farm facilities necessary for the irrigation of approximately 1,700 acres of Indian-owned lands. The use of electric power and energy required to operate the facilities for the irrigation of such Indian-owned lands and to provide pressurization for such Indian-owned lands shall be considered to be a project use.

(c) CONSTRUCTION COSTS.—The construction costs for the Lake Andes-Wagner Unit and the Marty II Unit allocated to irrigation (both those assigned for return by the water users and those assigned for return from power revenues of the Pick-Sloan Missouri Basin Program) shall be repayed for each unit no later than 40 years following the development period, except that repayment of such costs allocated to irrigation of Indian-owned lands shall be governed by the Act of July 1, 1932 (47 Stat. 564 Chapter 369; 25 U.S.C. 386a).

(d) INDIAN-OWNED LANDS.—Indian-owned lands, or interests therein, required for the Lake Andes-Wagner or Marty II Units may, as an alternative to their acquisition under authority available to the Secretary under existing law, be acquired by exchange for lands or interests therein of equal or greater value which are owned by the United States and administered by the Secretary or which may be acquired for that purpose by the Secretary.

(e) AGRICULTURE PROGRAMS.—For purposes of participation of lands in the Lake Andes-Wagner and Marty II Units in programs covered by title V of the Agricultural Act of 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1461 et seq.), the crop acreage base determined under section 504 of such Act (7 U.S.C. 1464) and the program payment yield determined under section 506 of such Act (7 U.S.C. 1466) shall be the crop acreage base and program payment yield established for the crop year immediately preceding the crop year in which the development period for each Unit is initiated. For any successor programs established for crop years subsequent to 1990, the acreage and yield on which any program payments are based shall be determined without taking into consideration any increase in acreage or yield resulting from the construction and operation of such Units.

SEC. 3. FEDERAL RECLAMATION LAWS GOVERN.

This Act is a supplement to the Federal reclamation laws (Act of June 17, 1902, 32 Stat. 388, and Acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto). The Federal reclamation laws shall govern the construction, operation, and maintenance of the works authorized by this Act, except as otherwise provided in this Act.

SEC. 4. COST SHARING.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Proposal dated September 29, 1987, supplemented October 30, 1987 (on file with the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs of the House of Representatives and with the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the Senate), pursuant to which the State of South Dakota (hereafter in this Act referred to as the "State") and the Lake Andes-Wagner Irrigation District (hereafter in this Act referred to as the "District") would provide funding for certain costs of the Lake Andes-Wagner Unit, and the District would also assume certain responsibilities with respect thereto, is approved. The Secretary shall promptly enter into negotiations with the State and the District to conclude an agreement between the United States, the State, and the District implementing the proposal.

(b) TERMS AND CONDITIONS.—The agreement shall include provisions for—

(1) the establishment and capitalization of the non-Federal fund, including, subject to the Secretary's approval, investment policies and selection of the administering financial institution, and including also provisions dealing with withdrawals of moneys in the fund for construction purposes;

(2) the District to administer the design and construction, which shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary, of the distribution and drainage systems for the Lake Andes-Wagner Unit;

(3) financing, from moneys in the fund referred to in paragraph (1), the construction cost of the ring dike, not exceeding $3,500,000, the construction cost, if any, of such dike in excess of that amount being the responsibility of the United States but any such excess cost remains reimbursable, subject to the condition that construction of the ring dike shall not commence earlier than the sixth year of full operation; and

(4) financing, from moneys in the fund referred to in paragraph (1) the construction cost of the Unit's closed drainage system, not exceeding $36,000,000, the construction cost, if any, of the closed drainage system in excess of that amount being the responsibility of the United States but any such excess cost remains reimbursable, subject to the condition that—

(A) construction of the closed drainage system shall commence not earlier than the sixth year of full operation of the Unit and shall continue over a period of thirty-five years as required by the Secretary subject to such modifications in the commencement date and the construction period as the Secretary determines to be required on the basis of physical conditions; and

(B) the District, in addition to such annual assessments as may be required to meet its expenses (including operation and maintenance costs and any annual repayment installments to the United States) shall, commencing three years after construction of the Unit (other than drainage facilities) has been completed, levee assessments annually of not less than $1.00 per irrigable acre calculated to provide moneys sufficient, together with other moneys in the fund, including anticipated accruals, referred to in paragraph (1), to finance not to exceed $36,000,000 of the construction costs of the closed drainage system.

(c) ANNUAL BUDGET REPORTS.—(1) Subject to the provisions of paragraph (2), the Secretary of the Interior shall request that there be included in the annual budget documents submitted by the President to Congress funds permitting completion of construction of the Lake Andes-Wagner Unit (other than the ring dike and closed drainage features) over a period of six years beginning no later than the fiscal year that commences in the second calendar year following the calendar year in which this Act becomes law.

(2) In the event of a delay in construction occasioned by an act of God, or of the public enemy, or any major catastrophe or other unforseen and unavoidable cause of a similar nature, appropriate extensions of time shall be afforded the District in the making of assessments to finance construction of the closed drainage system as specified in subsection (b)(4).

SEC. 5. AUTHORIZATION.

(a) LAKE ANDES-WAGNER UNIT.—(1) There are authorized to be appropriated—

(1) $150,000,000 (October 1984 price levels) for construction of the Lake Andes-Wagner Unit (other than the facilities described in section 2(b)); and

(2) $1,200,000 (October 1984 price levels) for construction of the facilities described in section 2(b), which amounts include costs of the Lake Andes-Wagner Irrigation district in administering design and construction of the irrigation distribution and drainage systems.

(b) MARTY II UNIT.—There are authorized to be appropriated $15,000,000 (October 1984 price levels) for construction by the Bureau of Reclamation in consultation with the Bureau of Indian Affairs of the Marty II Unit.

(c) ENGINEERING COSTS ADJUSTMENTS.—The amounts authorized to be appropriated by subsections (a) and (b) shall be plus or minus such amounts, if any, as may be required by engineering cost indexes applicable to such construction.

(d) OPERATION AND MAINTENANCE.—There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary for the operation and maintenance of each Unit.

LIST OF ENVIRONMENTAL COMMITMENTS

1. Pumping Plant: a. ¼-mesh fish screens will be installed on each pumping bay; b. intake velocity at .5 foot per second; and c. top lip of intakes will be maintained at a depth of 20 feet during spawning and rearing periods.

2. To mitigate for wetland losses, up to 4,500 acre-feet of water (Lake Francis Case quality) will be provided to Owens Bay and Red Lake via turnouts and 365 acres of existing wetlands will be purchased and provided a controlled water supply. When practical, operational wastes wil be used. In addition, a wetland easement will be acquired for 4 acres.

3. Approximately, 2,185 acres will be purchased and seeded to native grasses. Canal and lateral rights-of-way would be seeded to native grasses. All seeded areas will be protected from grazing and other disturbances until the grasses have been established (generally 3 years). Habitat values on acquired tracts will be estimated using habitat evaluation procedures, and purchases will continue until lost habitat values are replaced.

4. Approximately 175 acres of land will be purchased in concert with grassland acres for the planting of woody vegetation.

5. To the extent possible, lands purchased for mitigation of grasslands and woodlands would be adjacent to existing Federal and State wildlife areas or existing wetlands to provide wildlife complexes. If lands in these areas cannot be purchased from willing sellers, other parcels will be sought, with a minimum size of 40 acres. These units would be managed by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service or South Dakota Department of Game, Fish and Parks.

6. The mitigation plan will be implemented concurrently with the construction of the rest of the project.

7. Uneconomical land remnants retained in Federal ownership will be managed to offset grassland habitat losses.

8. New project powerlines will be buried except for the 0.5-mile 115-kV line to the main pumping plant. Installation of powerlines will be in accordance with Suggested Practices for Raptor Protection in Powerlines, the State of the Art in 1981, Raptor Research Report No. 4. Raptor Research Foundation, Inc., 1981.

9. Water quality sampling and analysis of Choteau Creek and Lake Andes will continue for TDA, nutrient levels, dissolved oxygen, trace elements, and pesticides and herbicides. After construction, the cost of this program will be part of the project OM&R. A ring dike will be constructed to dilute project return flows into Choteau Creek to meet State water quality standards of 2.50 mg/1 TDS. Water will also be added to Lake Andes to meet the State water quality standard.

10. Ring dike construction may require habitat mitigation. Upon final site selection a habitat evaluation team will be assembled and recommend appropriate mitigation measures. After the appropriate review the recommendations will be incorporated into the construction plan.

11. Known sites will be avoided where possible. If any cultural resource sites cannot be avoided, determinations of their significance/eligibility for the National Register of Historic Places will be made. If any sites are determined to be significant, appropriate mitigation measures will be developed in consultation with the State Historic Preservation Officer and Advisory Council on Historic Preservation.

12. The South Dakota Department of Game, Fish and Parks will be consulted regarding appropriate measures to be taken during the spawning season during construction of the main pumping plant.

13. The project may require modification of 15 miles of existing drainageways. When these sites are identified, South Dakota Department of Game, Fish and Parks and U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service will be contacted and appropriate mitigation measures will be established.

14. Proposed 50-acre fish rearing pond is included as a project feature.

15. Topsoil will be stripped to a predetermined depth, stockpiled, protected from erosion and compaction, and replaced in all disturbed areas.

16. The following permits will be obtained:

1. Section 10 permit required by the River and Harbor Act,

2. Sections 402 and 404 permits required by the Clean Water Act,

3. Soil and water compatability permit from the State of South Dakota,

4. Water right from the State of South Dakota.

17. It is recognized that certain agricultural chemicals can pose hazards to wildlife and water supplies. As part of the Irrigation Management System, chemical types used on the project will be updated every 5 years and usage of less hazardous chemicals will be encouraged.●

By Mr. BURDICK (for himself, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. DURENBERGER, Mr. LAUTENBERG, Mr. SYMMS, Mr. REID, Mr. GRAHAM, Mr. LIEBERMAN, Mr. BAUCUS, Mr. CHAFEE, and Mr. MITCHELL):

S. 203. A bill to authorize research into ground water contamination and remediation, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

GROUND WATER RESEARCH, MANAGEMENT, AND EDUCATION ACT

● Mr. BURDICK. There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. President, today I am pleased to introduce the Ground Water Research, Management and Education Act of 1989 with my colleagues Senator MOYNIHAN of New York, Senator DAVID DURENBERGER of Minnesota, and Senator SYMMS of Idaho. A bill identical to this one actually passed the Senate during the 100th Congress but we were unable to meet in conference with our colleagues in the House prior to adjournment last October.

This bill is the product of extensive work on the part of Senators MOYNIHAN, DURENBERGER, SYMMS, and MITCHELL over the course of the past 2 years. The bill builds three ground water proposals which we introduced during the last Congress. I introduced S. 1105. Senator MOYNIHAN'S proposals was embodied in S. 20 and Senator DURENBERGER was the principle architect of a comprehensive ground water proposal, S. 2091. The bill which we introduce today is an amalgamation of those three bills.

Ground water is a resource of great value and importance. One in two Americans and almost everyone living in rural areas rely on ground water for drinking water. In North Dakota, over half the population relies on ground water for domestic supply. Increasingly ground water is being used to irrigate crops and grassland during periods of low rainfall.

Ground water is being threatened with contamination on a wide scale. The Environmental Protection Agency and other entities have documented ground water contamination problems in virtually every State. The threat of ground water contamination is real and it is worthy of our attention and corrective action. The sources of ground water contamination include hazardous waste disposal sites, solid waste landfill sites, leaking underground storage tanks, and the application of fertilizers and pesticides. Contaminants from these sources are known to cause serious adverse health and environmental effects. Ground water contamination impose significant costs in treatment and remediation.

We have taken our ground water resources for granted. There is sufficient information readily available to raise concerns that pervasive problems exist. We can no longer ignore these problems. Each of us has a duty to act before this problem becomes unmanageable.

This bill expands the national ground water research program and attempts to clarify and better coordinate the efforts of the Federal agencies involved in ground water research. Under the bill EPA is authorized to perform a number of special studies and demonstration programs including those on health and environmental effects of ground water contaminants, risk assessments on those contaminants, and various control technologies.

The bill authorizes the Department of Interior to develop a national ground water quality inventory based on available information from across the United States. In addition, the bill would augment the ongoing effort of the U.S. Geological Survey to map and describe ground water resources nationally.

The bill establishes an Agricultural Nitrogen Best Management Task Force. This task force will research the use of agricultural nitrogen in crop production and develop educational and training materials for farmers. This provision was part of my original bill and it has the broad support of the agricultural community.

Finally the bill authorizes the Federal Government to provide 50 percent matching grants to States for planning and implementation of State strategies for sound ground water management. The bill also reauthorizes the State Water Research Institutes which have in the past received about $100,000 a year to perform water research under the auspices of the Department of Interior. This would create eight new ground water institutes under the Interior Department, which will focus on health and environmental effects research.

As I mentioned earlier, this bill is a composite of several other ground water bills. Many members of the Committee on Environment and Public Works have devoted a great deal of time and effort in developing this ground water research proposal. I am grateful for their efforts. Because an identical bill passed the Senate last session, it will be my intention to press for expeditious consideration by the Senate, so that we can conference with our colleagues in the other House this year. Coordinated, comprehensive, and accurate research concerning our ground water resources is the first major step toward our goal of protecting this precious resource. This bill takes that first step. Now is the time to act.

I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD in its entirety.

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

(a) The Congress finds that—

(1) ground water in the United States is a vast and complex resource comprising 96 per centum of the freshwater available for use;

(2) approximately one-half of the population of the United States and 95 per centum of those living in rural areas rely on ground water for drinking water supplies;

(3) recent surveys of the Environmental Protection Agency and by other agencies and organizations have identified ground water contamination problems in each of the several States including thousands of incidents which have forced abandonment of water supply wells or contaminated public water supply systems;

(4) sources of ground water contamination are diverse, including waste and nonwaste products and activities, point and nonpoint sources, and hazardous and nonhazardous substances;

(5) ground water contaminants are known to cause adverse health and environmental effects and to impose large costs in treatment and remediation;

(6) ground water and surface water are interconnected as related parts of the hydrologic cycle;

(7) ground water resources, uses and sources of contamination are of such diversity across the Nation that ground water protection and management must rely upon the States and local government institutions to identify priorities and implement programs to prevent, detect, and correct contamination;

(8) the Federal Government is making a substantial effort to control and clean up hazardous wastes and hazardous substances which may adversely impact ground water quality and consistent with that role has an interest in programs, developed in coordination with the States, which have a goal of preventing ground water contamination;

(9) most States already have ground water protection and management programs or are developing such programs;

(10) although considerable scientific progress has been made in knowledge about ground water resources and ground water contamination, including the transport, transformation, and fate of ground water contaminants and the effects of ground water contamination on human health and the environment, there remain significant gaps in developing and making available needed scientific knowledge;

(11) there is not an adequate effort by the Federal Government or by the States to collect and disseminate data and information concerning the location and characteristics of ground water;

(12) additional Federal research efforts in ground water are necessary to provide the States with adequate technical information and guidance upon which they can develop and implement ground water management programs and can better evaluate the effects of the contamination on human health and environmental resources, and so that States can develop ground water standards where appropriate;

(13) presently available technologies to detect, monitor, and mitigate ground water contamination are expensive and highly limited in utility;

(14) there is not an adequate effort by the Federal Government or by the States to investigate, develop, and demonstrate methods, practices and techniques that may be effective in preventing, detecting, and correcting the contamination of ground water resources;

(15) there should be a continuing national investment in ground water and related research and technology commensurate with growing national needs;

(16) there is a shortage of qualified individuals schooled in the fields related to ground water hydrology, toxicology, geochemistry, and other pertinent disciplines, and a need to strengthen research and associated undergraduate and graduate education to provide qualified scientists and engineers, and technicians trained in fields related to ground water resources so that Federal and State agencies will have the personnel necessary to detect, assess, prevent, and remediate contaminated ground water resources;

(17) current Federal programs of research and development with respect to ground water require improved coordination; and

(18) the Federal Government lacks a clear and comprehensive statutory mandate to conduct ground water research.

(b) It is the policy of Congress that the authority of each State to allocate quantities of water within its jurisdiction shall not be superseded, abrogated, or otherwise impaired by this Act. It is the further policy of Congress that nothing in this Act shall be construed to supersede or abrogate rights to quantities of water which have been established by any State.

SEC. 3. DEFINITIONS.

As used in this Act, the term—

(1) "Administrator" means the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency;

(2) "Agency" means the United States Environmental Protection Agency;

(3) "assessment" when used with respect to ground water or ground water resources, means the description of the extent and hydrogeologic properties of aquifers; recharge and discharge areas, and flow paths; and the status of and trends in the quantity and quality of ground water at national, regional, and local levels;

(4) "assistance" means any assistance provided by any agency pursuant to provisions of this Act in the form of grants, loans, loan guarantees, property, contracts (except those for the procurement of goods and service of the Government of the United States), cooperative agreements or technical assistance, whether the recipient is a State or local government, a nonprofit organization or other person;

(5) "contaminant" means any solid, liquid, semi-solid, dissolved solid, or gaseous material naturally occurring or anthropogenic chemical, or parameter for measurement of water quality, or biological organism which in its original form or as a metabolite or degradation or waste product may impair the quality of ground water or may have an adverse effect on human health, welfare, or the environment as a constituent of ground water;

(6) "contract" means any contract, grant, agreement, understanding or other arrangement, which includes research, development, or demonstration work, and includes any assignment, substitution of parties, or subcontract executed or entered into thereunder;

(7) "contractor" means any person having a contract with or on behalf of the Administrator;

(8) "demonstration" means the initial exhibition of a new technology, process or practice or a significantly new combination or use of technologies, processes, or practices, for the purpose of proving technological feasibility and cost effectiveness;

(9) "develop" includes activities which assist in the transfer of technology to users of practices, methods, or techniques which may be effective in preventing, detecting or correcting ground water contamination;

(10) "Federal agency" or "agency of the United States" means any department, agency or other instrumentality of the Federal Government, including any independent agency or establishment of the Federal Government, any Government corporation, and the Tennessee Valley Authority;

(11) "ground water" means water below the land surface in the zone of saturation;

(12) "invention" means inventions or discoveries, whether patented or unpatented;

(13) "local government" means any city, town, borough, county, parish, district, or other public body which is a political subdivision of a State and which is created pursuant to State law;

(14) "made" when used in relation to any invention, means the conception or first actual reduction to practice of such invention;

(15) "nonprofit organization" means any organization, association, or institution described in section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 which is exempt from taxation pursuant to the provisions of section 501(a) of such Code;

(16) "person" means an individual, trust, firm, joint stock company, corporation (including any government corporation), partnership, association, consortium, joint venture, State, local government, commission, regional agency, interstate agency, or Federal agency;

(17) "source" or "source or potential source of contaminants" includes, but is not limited to—

(A) any facility, building structure, installation, equipment, pipe, pipeline (including any pipe into a sewer or publicly owned treatment works), well, pit, pond, lagoon, impoundment, ditch, landfill, storage container, tank, or activity which causes contaminants to migrate to ground water, or

(B) any site or area where a contaminant has been deposited, stored, disposed of, or placed, or otherwise come to be located so as to allow the discharge of such contaminant to ground water;

(18) "State" means any of the several States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, Guam, American Samoa, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, and federally recognized Indian tribes; and

(19) "vadose zone" or "unsaturated zone" means the zone between the land surface and the zone of saturation.

TITLE I—COORDINATION OF FEDERAL GROUND WATER RESEARCH AND EDUCATION PROGRAMS

SEC. 101. DUTIES OF THE PRESIDENT.

(a) The President shall provide for coordination of activities conducted by agencies of the United States Government related to ground water research, assessment, and monitoring, including technology development and transfer, information dissemination, training, and education.

(b) The President shall establish, within 90 days from the date of enactment of this title, an Interagency Ground Water Research Task Force to provide for the coordination of research, development, demonstration, technology transfer, training, and information dissemination activities authorized in this title.

SEC. 102. ESTABLISHMENT OF INTERAGENCY GROUND WATER RESEARCH TASK FORCE.

(a) The President shall appoint the members of the Interagency Ground Water Research Task Force from each Federal agency involved in ground water related activities, including the Environmental Protection Agency, the Department of the Interior, the Department of Agriculture, the Department of Energy, the Department of Defense, the National Science Foundation, and the Department of Health and Human Services. The Task Force shall be chaired by the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency. The Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture shall each serve as vice chairmen. The Task Force shall meet no less often than 4 times per year.

(b) The Interagency Ground Water Research Task Force shall—

(1) identify major research data needs and scientific uncertainties regarding ground water assessment, monitoring, protection, management, and remediation;

(2) recommend overall priorities and a coordinated research plan and where appropriate, disseminate such information to the President and Congress and other Federal agencies for addressing the data needs and scientific uncertainties identified;

(3) facilitate information collection, data management, and storage;

(4) review the academic and related institutional capabilities for education and training of scientists, geologists, hydrologists, and other ground water research related professions and identify opportunities for improving and strengthening education and training programs;

(5) otherwise facilitate, through joint funding and other means, interagency cooperation and coordination on ground water research, development and demonstration programs;

(6) consult with State and local governments, environmental organizations, scientific and professional organizations, industry, academia, and other appropriate institutions to determine the ground water research and information needs of State and local governments and other persons who have responsibilities for protecting or managing ground water resources; and

(7) recommend priorities for the assessment of ground water resources based on the threat to human health or the environment posed by contamination or likely contamination of those resources.

(c)(1) The Task Force shall submit an annual report to the President and Congress describing the results of the preceding year's research, progress and schedule updates, complete and incomplete programs, new problems to be addressed, revisions of priorities for the program as a whole and for each agency or institution.

(2) The annual report shall serve as the management plan for the National ground water research program of the Federal Government and shall provide for coordination of all research, development and demonstration activities relating to the protection, maintenance, restoration, and management of ground water resources.

(3) The annual report of this section shall reflect an itemized list and discussion of major policy decisions as determined by individual agencies affecting all aspects of protection, maintenance, and restoration of ground water resources which are pending before the Federal Government or which will arise in the foreseeable future and shall specify in a comprehensive manner the type of research relevant to such policy decisions, and define the research and studies necessary to address the deficiencies in the available information.

(4) Every 2 years, the Task Force shall submit an analytical report which summarizes research findings and results of research, education, technical assistance, and demonstration programs.

(d)(1) Coordination shall recognize the principal roles of the participating agencies:

(A) The United States Department of Interior, acting through the Geological Survey, for research in the hydrologic sciences appraising the Nation's water resources, and providing hydrology and geochemical information;

(B) The Environmental Protection Agency for research relating to health and environmental effects of contaminants, the fate and transport of contamination in ground water, risk assessment, source control, and mitigation methods; and

(C) The United States Department of Agriculture, for research on pesticide and nutrient impacts on ground water, plant and animal health effects, and development of farming and forestry practices designed to reduce or prevent contamination.

(2) Nothing in this title shall be construed to diminish or alter the statutory mandates assigned to these agencies, nor their budgetary authorities or appropriations as determined by Congress.

(3) Each participating agency in the Interagency Ground Water Research Task Force shall submit an annual research plan which shall be made available to Congress and which shall be reviewed by the Task Force within 60 days of submission to ensure that—

(A) programs are not unnecessarily duplicative;

(B) memoranda of understanding are in place where necessary;

(C) high priority research topics are given appropriate attention; and

(D) information exchanges among Federal agencies and between Federal agencies and States are facilitated.

(e)(1) Not later than 3 years after enactment of this Act, the Task Force shall organize a national conference on ground water research, to review the national ground water research programs. The Task Force will invite participation by academia, State and local government, and the public.

(2) A proceedings shall be published from the conference presentations.

SEC. 103. ADVISORY COMMITTEE.

(a) There is established an Advisory Committee on Ground Water Research (hereinafter referred to in this subsection as the "Advisory Committee").

(b) The Advisory Committee shall be established within 180 days of the date of enactment of this Act, and shall be exempt from section 14 of the Federal Advisory Committee Act.

(c) The Advisory Committee shall be composed of not more than 15 individuals to be appointed by the President in consultation with the majority and minority leaders of the Senate and the Speaker and minority leader of the House of Representatives, no less than 5 of whom shall be elected or appointed State or local officials or their representatives.

(d) Members shall serve terms of not to exceed 3 years. Members shall be selected from State and local government officials, environmental organizations, scientific and professional organizations, industry, representative of the Water Research Institutes, and the general public. Members should possess a knowledge of ground water and should represent various regions of the country.

(e) A chairman of the Advisory Committee shall be elected by its members on an annual basis.

(f) The Advisory Committee shall advise the President on matters related to ground water research and shall represent to the Interagency Ground Water Research Task Force the views of State and local governments and other interested parties concerning the ground water research programs and policies carried out by participating agencies of the Task Force.

(g) The Advisory Committee shall review and comment on the annual report by the Interagency Ground Water Research Task Force required by subsection (c)(1) of section 102.

(h) The Advisory Committee shall meet on a regular basis and shall meet jointly with the Interagency Task Force at least semiannually.

(i) Such clerical and technical assistance as may be necessary to discharge the duties of the Advisory Committee shall be provided by personnel of the Environmental Protection Agency and the other agencies of the Interagency Ground Water Research Task Force.

(j) Members of the Advisory Committee shall, while attending meetings or conferences of the Committee or otherwise engaged in the business of the Committee, be compensated at a rate to be fixed by the Chairman of the Interagency Task Force, but not to exceed the daily equivalent of the base rate of pay in effect for grade GS-15 of the General Schedule under section 5332 of title 5 of the United States Code, for each day (including traveltime) during which they are engaged in the actual performance of duties vested in the Committee. While away from their homes or regular places of business in the performance of services for the Committee, members of the Committee shall be allowed travel expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence, in the same manner as persons employed intermittently in the Government service are allowed expenses under section 5703(b) of title 5 of the United States Code.

SEC. 104. ESTABLISHMENT OF CLEARINGHOUSE COMMITTEE AND AGENCY INFORMATION CENTERS.

(a) The Interagency Ground Water Research Task Force shall appoint a Clearinghouse Committee within 180 days following the date of the enactment of this Act.

(b) The Clearinghouse Committee shall consist of no more than five individuals, who are not Task Force members, who are knowledgeable in the field of data management and retrieval systems, and who are familiar with the existing data systems at the United States Geological Survey, the Environmental Protection Agency, the United States Department of Agriculture and the Water Research Institutes.

(c) The Clearinghouse Committee shall facilitate coordination of information systems among participating agencies by improving compatibility among systems, including data input and output; bibliographic searches, and other means.

(d)(1) Each participating agency of the Interagency Ground Water Research Task Force shall establish a technical transfer and information center that is responsible as a repository of reliable ground water information relevant to their authorities and related information, and each such agency technical transfer center shall be coordinated through the efforts of the Clearinghouse Committee.

(2) At a minimum the information center at each agency shall establish and make available reports, programs, and materials developed pursuant to this Act.

(3) Each center shall facilitate ready access to data and information gained under the program to Federal, State, and local agencies and other interested persons and shall facilitate requests for data and information from all interested persons by coordinating and communicating with other agencies' systems.

(4) The Clearinghouse Committee shall include in its first annual report recommendations for a National Ground Water Hotline and identification of a Federal public information officer to respond to public inquiries.

(e) The Clearinghouse Committee shall submit a report to the Interagency Ground Water Research Task Force 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act, evaluating the current capabilities of each agency, abilities to exchange information and data between different information systems; recommendations for improving communication links, requests for necessary monies and equipment, procedures, and personnel to fully implement the necessary changes for a fully cross-linked computerized system for information retrieval.

SEC. 105. ESTABLISHMENT OF EDUCATION COMMITTEE.

(a) The Task Force shall appoint an Education Committee within 180 days following the date of enactment of this Act.

(b) The Education Committee shall be chaired by the Task Force representative from the National Science Foundation and shall consist of no more than 14 individuals who are not Task Force members and who have scientific or educational expertise relevant to ground water research and management. The remaining 13 members shall include the President's Science Advisor, a representative from the Water Research Institutes, the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Agriculture, a representative of the States, two representatives from private academic institutions active in ground water, two representatives from industry, and two representatives from nonprofit environmental organizations.

(c) The Education Committee shall evaluate existing academic training programs at the university and postgraduate levels to identify weaknesses in existing programs, and to recommend a plan to strengthen such programs through Federal grants and fellowships and improved curricula.

(d) The Education Committee shall prepare a report describing its findings and making such recommendations as it deems necessary and appropriate not less than 2 years from the date of enactment of this Act. Such report shall be included in full in the report provided for in section 102(c)(1).

(e) Such clerical and technical assistance as may be necessary to discharge the duties of the Advisory Committee shall be provided by personnel of the United States Geological Survey and the other agencies of the Interagency Task Force.

(f) Members of the Task Force, other than Federal employees, shall, while attending meetings or conferences of the Committee or otherwise engaged in the business of the Committee, be compensated at a rate to be fixed by the Chairman of the Interagency Task Force, but not to exceed the daily equivalent of the base rate of pay in effect for grade GS-15 of the General Schedule under section 5332 of title 5 of the United States Code, for each day (including travel time) during which they are engaged in the actual performance of duties vested in the Task Force. While away from their homes or regular places of business in the performance of services for the Task Force, members of the Task Force shall be allowed travel expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence, in the same manner as persons employed intermittently in the Government service are allowed expenses under section 5703(b) of title 5 of the United States Code.

SEC. 106. AUTHORIZATIONS.

For the purposes of carrying out the activities authorized in sections 102 through 105 of this title, there are authorized to be appropriated $3,000,000 for each fiscal year to the Administrator commencing with fiscal year 1989 and ending with fiscal year 1993.

SEC. 107. WATER RESOURCES RESEARCH ACT OF 1984.

(a) Section 104(b)(1) of the Water Resources Research Act of 1984 (42 U.S.C. 10302(b)(1)) is amended to read as follows:

"(1) plan, conduct, or otherwise arrange for competent research that fosters (A) the entry of new research scientists into the water resources fields, (B) the training and education of future water scientists, engineers, and technicians, (C) the preliminary exploration of new ideas that address water problems or expand understanding of water and water-related phenomena, and (D) the dissemination of research results to water managers and the public, and.".

(b) Section 104(c) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 10302(c)) is amended to read as follows:

"(c) From the sums appropriated pursuant to subsection (f) of this section, the Secretary shall make grants to each institute to be matched on a basis of no less than one non-Federal dollar for every Federal dollar during the fiscal year ending September 30, 1989, and each of the next four following fiscal years, such sums to be used only for the reimbursement of the direct cost expenditures incurred for the conduct of the water resources research program.".

(c) Section 104(e) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 10303(e)) is amended to read as follows:

"(e) The Secretary shall conduct a careful and detailed evaluation of each institute at least once every 5 years to determine that the quality and relevance of its water resources research and its effectiveness as an institution for planning, conducting, and arranging for research warrants its continued support under this section. If, as a result of any such evaluation, the Secretary determines that an institute does not qualify for further support under this section, then no further grants to the institute may be made until the institute's qualifications are reestablished to the satisfaction of the Secretary.".

(d) Section 104(f)(1) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 10303(f)(1)) is amended by deleting "September 30, 1985, through September 30, 1989" and inserting in lieu thereof "September 30, 1989, through September 30, 1993,".

(e) Section 104(f)(2) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 10303(f)(2)) is amended by deleting "section 106 of this Act" and inserting in lieu thereof "section 105 of this Act".

(f) Section 105(a)(1) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 10304(a)(1)) is amended by deleting the following: ", on a dollar-for-dollar matching basis,".

(g) Section 105(a)(3) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 10304(a)(3)) is repealed.

(h) For the purposes of carrying out the activities authorized by section 105(c) of the Water Resources Research Act of 1984, there are authorized to be appropriated $10,000,000 for each fiscal year commencing with 1989 and ending with 1993.

(i) Section 108(6) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 10307(6)) is amended by inserting immediately after "depletion" a comma and the word "contamination".

(j) Section 108(8) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 10307(8)) is amended by inserting immediately after "water" the words "quality and quantity".

(k) Section 104 of such Act is amended by adding the following:

"(l)(1) There is further authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary of the Interior the sum of $5,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1989, 1990, 1991, 1992, and 1993, only for reimbursement of the direct cost expenses of additional research or synthesis of the results of research by institutes which focuses on water problems and issues of a regional or interstate nature beyond those of concern only to a single State and which related to specific program priorities identified jointly by the Secretary and the institutes. Such funds when appropriated shall be matched on a not less than dollar-for-dollar basis by funds made available to institutes or groups of institutes, by States or other non-Federal sources. Funds made available under this subsection shall remain available until expended.

"(2) Research funds made available under this subsection shall be made on a competitive basis subject to the merit of the proposal, the need for the information to be produced, and the opportunity such funds will provide for training of water resources scientists or professionals.".

TITLE II—GROUND WATER RESEARCH PROGRAMS OF THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

PART A—PROGRAMS OF THE ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION AGENCY

SEC. 201. AUTHORITY.

(a) The Administrator shall, in consultation and coordination with the Interagency Ground Water Research Task Force established under title I, establish a research, development, and demonstration program to support the protection, maintenance, and restoration of the ground water resources of the United States, and as part of such program shall conduct and promote the coordination and acceleration of research, investigations, experiments, demonstrations, surveys, and studies relating to the causes, sources, effects, extent, prevention, detection, and correction of ground water contamination. In carrying out the provisions of this Act, the Administrator is authorized to—

(1) collect and make available through publications and other appropriate means, information from research, development, and demonstration activities (including pertinent recommendations by the Administrator) conducted pursuant to this section;

(2) cooperate with other Federal agencies, States, local governmental entities, interstate and regional agencies, other public agencies and authorities, nonprofit institutions and organizations, and other persons, in the preparation and conduct of such research, development, and demonstration activities;

(3) make grants to the States and to local governmental entities, to other public agencies and authorities, nonprofit institutions and organizations and to other persons;

(4) conduct investigations and research and make surveys concerning any specific problem of ground water contamination in cooperation with any State or local governmental entity with a view to recommending a solution to such problem;

(5) enter into contracts (including contracts for construction) or cooperative agreements with public agencies and authorities, nonprofit institutions and organizations, and other persons without regard to section 3648 and 3709 of the Revised Statutes (31 U.S.C. 529; 41 U.S.C. 5);

(6) conduct, in cooperation with the Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services, studies, including epidemiological studies of the effects of ground water contaminants or potential contaminants on mortality and morbidity and clinical and laboratory studies on the immunologic, biochemical, physiological, and the toxicological effects including the carcinogenic, teratogenic, mutagenic, and neurotoxic effects of ground water contaminants or potential contaminants;

(7) develop and disseminate informational documents on ground water contaminants describing the nature and characteristics of such contaminants at various concentrations;

(8) collect and disseminate, in cooperation with other agencies of the United States, and with other public agencies and authorities, nonprofit institutions and organizations having related responsibilities, basic data on the chemical, physical, and biological contaminants that may affect ground water quality and other information pertaining to ground water contamination and the prevention, detection, and correction thereof;

(9) develop effective and practical processes, methods, and techniques for the prevention, detection, and correction of ground water contamination;

(10) construct such facilities and staff and equip them as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section;

(11) call conferences concerning the potential or actual contamination of ground water resources giving opportunity for interested persons to be heard and to present papers at such conferences;

(12) establish and maintain research fellowships in the Environmental Protection Agency and at public or nonprofit private educational institutions or research organizations;

(13) utilize, on a reimbursable basis, facilities and personnel of existing Federal scientific laboratories and research centers; and

(14) acquire secret processes, technical data, inventions, patent applications, patents, licenses, and an interest in lands, plants, equipment and facilities, and other property or rights, by purchase, license, lease, or donation.

(b) In carrying out the provisions of this section, the Administrator (and the Agency Ground Water Research Committee established by section 202 of this Act) shall give priority to research, development, and demonstrations projects which—

(1) assess the fate and transport characteristics of contaminants or potential contaminants in ground water;

(2) develop practices, methods, techniques, or processes effective in controlling sources or potential sources of ground water contaminants with emphasis on sources which discharge or release nonhazardous waste or contaminants not considered to be waste which shall be in addition to similar development activities already conducted pursuant to the Solid Waste Disposal Act (42 U.S.C. 6901, et seq.) and the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act (42 U.S.C. 9601, et seq.) with respect to sources of hazardous waste;

(3) determine the effects on human health and the environment of the contaminants which are or may be present in ground water;

(4) develop field, laboratory, and other analytical procedures for monitoring and evaluating ground water quality and the flow characteristics of aquifer systems;

(5) develop methods or techniques to restore ground water resources that have been damaged by contamination; and

(6) develop practices, methods, or techniques effective in reducing the quantity or toxicity of waste materials from the processes or activities which have a potential to contaminate ground water resources.

(c) For purposes of this title, the term "develop" shall include research projects, demonstration projects, or activities which assist in the transfer of technology to users of the practices, methods, or techniques identified.

(d) The Administrator shall conduct or assist research, investigations, studies, surveys, or demonstrations with respect to (but not limited to) the following—

(1) the effects on human health of contaminants or combinations of contaminants whether natural or anthropogenic that are found in or that are likely to be found in the ground waters of the United States;

(2) the exposure of persons to contaminants that are found in ground water, including exposure to such substances from sources other than ground water contamination including air, diet, and workplace exposures;

(3) the effects on the environment including aquatic life, wildlife, and other environmental resources of contaminants that may be found in ground water discharged to the surface;

(4) the hydrologic relationship between surface water and ground water and the likely impact of contamination in one medium on the quality and uses of the other;

(5) methods and techniques for characterizing and modeling subsurface hydrogeology in both the saturated and unsaturated zones;

(6) the transport and dispersion of particular contaminants in the saturated and unsaturated zones;

(7) the fate, including the degradation and transformation, of particular contaminants in the saturated and unsaturated zone including the native ability of the ground water system to modify the nature and threat of human induced or generated contaminants;

(8) methods and techniques to characterize the vulnerability of locations to contamination based on factors including climate, vegetation, topography, soil characteristics, and subsurface hydrology;

(9) methods and techniques to characterize and model zones of influence and wellhead protection areas which contribute recharge to water production wells;

(10) methods and techniques for sampling ground water including well construction, sample collection, and the storage of samples before analysis;

(11) methods for detecting and quantifying contaminants in ground water samples including screening methods to improve the efficiency and reduce the cost of analysis;

(12) methods and techniques for monitoring, sampling, and analyzing the discharge from sources or potential sources of contaminants in various categories and subcategories;

(13) methods and techniques for monitoring, sampling, and analyzing contaminants in the unsaturated zone and correlating the results of such methods and techniques with likely future impacts of ground water quality;

(14) methods and techniques of water conservation in household, agricultural, commercial, and industrial uses;

(15) conduct economic, legal, institutional, engineering, social, biological, geographic, ecological, and other studies related to the protection of ground water quality.

(16) processes and technologies to assure the more efficient use of toxic chemicals and other substances which are potential ground water contaminants including pesticide and fertilizer products;

(17) methods or techniques for controlling discharges, whether intentional, or accidental, from sources or potential sources of contaminants in various categories and subcategories;

(18) the design and operation of waste treatment systems including septic systems, land treatment systems, and containment systems that minimize the potential for contaminants to reach ground water;

(19) methods and techniques for the closure and post-closure care of sources or potential sources of contaminants to minimize the potential for further discharge of contaminants to ground water;

(20) methods and techniques for the remediation and restoration of contaminated ground water resources;

(21) methods and techniques for the treatment of contaminated water supplies to render such supplies potable; and

(22) methods and techniques for remediation, restoration, and treatment of contaminated water resources in the saturated or unsaturated zones utilizing in situ biological, chemical, or physical treatment.

(e) Nothing in this title shall be construed, interpreted, or applied to limit or diminish in any way the authority or responsibility of any Federal agency to conduct monitoring of the quality or quantity of the Nation's ground or surface water resources or any other activity which is necessary or appropriate to carry out the duties assigned to such Agency by this Act or other Federal statutes.

SEC. 202. RESEARCH COMMITTEE AND MANAGEMENT PLAN.

(a) In carrying out the functions pursuant to this part, the Administrator shall establish a media-specific research committee for ground water resources (in addition to the media-specific research committees already established) to be cochaired by the Assistant Administrator for Water and by the Assistant Administrator for the Office of Research and Development. The membership of the committee established by this subsection shall be broadly representative of the program and research concerns within the Agency related to the protection, maintenance, and restoration of ground water resources.

(b)(1) The research committee shall make an annual report, which shall cover a period of at least 5 fiscal years, summarizing the major research issues concerning the protection, maintenance and restoration of ground water resources as identified by the committee, describing the research accomplishments of the preceding fiscal year, identifying the status of ongoing research, and outlining the ground water research program for the Agency for the 3 succeeding fiscal years.

(2) The annual report of the committee shall serve as the management plan for the ground water research program of the Agency and shall assure the coordination of all research, development and demonstration activities relating to the protection, maintenance, and restoration of ground water resources conducted by the Agency and shall facilitate and accelerate the development of control technologies as authorized by this Act. The annual report shall constitute the basis upon which requests for appropriations to carry out this title are to be made for the succeeding fiscal year.

(3) The annual report required by this section shall include an itemized list of all major policy decisions affecting all aspects of the protection, maintenance, and restoration of ground water resources which are pending before the Agency or which will arise in the forseeable future and shall specify in a comprehensive manner the type of information relevant to such policy decisions, evaluate the adequacy of available information in each category, and define the research and studies necessary to address the deficiencies in the available information.

(4) The annual report required by this section shall include a description and assessment of each project conducted pursuant to section 203 of this Act.

(5) The annual report required by this section shall include a description of the status of health effects and related research for each contaminant listed pursuant to this part. The report shall identify any additions to the list and summarize any proposals, including applications, recommendations, petitions, for listing pursuant to section 204 and indicate the disposition of such proposals. The report shall identify the status of all research in progress pursuant to this part.

(6) The annual report required by this section shall include a description of the status of environmental effects and related research for each contaminant listed pursuant to section 204 of this Act.

(7) The annual report required by this section shall be released in draft form for review including review by the Science Advisory Board, and shall be available for public comment for a period of 60 days after its submission in draft form. The annual report shall be released to the Congress in final form, not later than April 15 of each year, and shall incorporate such needed revisions as arise from comments received during the review period.

(8) This annual report shall also serve as the annual report to the Interagency Ground Water Research Task Force as required in section 102(d)(3).

(c)(1) The Administrator shall appoint a Ground Water Research Manager in the Office of Research and Development who shall be charged with carrying out the management plan, as incorporated in the annual report required by subsection (b) of this section, and who shall provide central direction for ground water research within the Office of Research and Development.

(2) The Research Manager shall serve as liaison with Clearinghouse Committee and shall ensure that results of all appropriate research and demonstration projects be available through the information centers established by this Act.

SEC. 203. CONTROL TECHNOLOGIES.

(a) The Administrator is authorized and directed to carry out a program of research, evaluation, testing, development, and demonstration of practices, methods, technologies, and processes which are (or may be) effective in controlling sources or potential sources of ground water contaminants and preventing the occurrence of ground water contamination. In addition to research, development, and demonstration activities conducted by the Administrator pursuant to section 201 and by the ground water research institutes established by section 210 of this Act, the Administrator may enter into contracts or cooperative agreements, or provide financial assistance in the form of grants, to public agencies and authorities, nonprofit institutions and organizations or other persons, to demonstrate such practices, methods, technologies, or processes only if the Administrator finds that—

(1) such contract, cooperative agreement or grant will serve to demonstrate a new or significantly improved practice, method, technology or process or the feasibility and cost effectiveness of an existing, but unproven, practice, method, technology, or process, and will not duplicate other Federal, State, local, or commercial efforts to demonstrate such practice, method, technology, or process;

(2) such contract, cooperative agreement or grant meets the requirements of this section and serves the purposes of this Act; and

(3) the demonstration of such practice, method, technology, or process will comply with all other laws and regulations for the protection of human health, welfare, and the environment.

(b) The demonstration program established by this section shall include solicitations for demonstration projects; selection of suitable demonstration projects from among those proposed; supervision of such demonstration projects, evaluation of the results of the demonstration projects which are conducted; dissemination of information on the effectiveness and feasibility of the practices, methods, technologies, and processes which are proven effective in controlling sources or potential sources of contaminants through demonstration under this section. The Administrator shall issue regulations to assure satisfactory implementation of each element of the demonstration program authorized by this section.

(c) Within 365 days after the date of enactment of this Act, and no less often than every 24 months thereafter, the Administrator shall publish a solicitation for proposals to demonstrate, prototype or at full-scale, practices, methods, technologies, and processes which are (or may be) effective in controlling sources or potential sources of contaminants. The solicitation notice shall prescribe the information to be included in the proposal, including technical and economic information derived from the applicant's own research and development efforts, and other information sufficient to permit the Administrator to assess the potential effectiveness and feasibility of the practice, method, technology, or process proposed to be demonstrated.

(d) Any person and any public or private nonprofit entity may submit an application to the Administrator in response to the solicitations required by subsection (c) of this section. The application shall contain a proposed demonstration plan setting forth how and when the project is to be carried out and such other information as the Administrator may require.

(e) In selecting practices, methods, technologies or processes to be demonstrated, the Administrator shall fully review the applications submitted and shall evaluate each project according to the following criteria—

(1) the potential for the proposed practice, method, technology, or process to effectively control sources or potential sources of contaminants (including control through improved use, management, storage, handling, transfer, or disposal of contaminants) which present the greatest risk to human health or the environment or present the greatest likelihood of ground water contamination and which are not effectively controlled by existing practices, methods, and technologies;

(2) the capability of the person or persons proposing the project to successfully complete the demonstration as described in the application;

(3) the likelihood that the demonstrated practice, method, technique or process could be applied in other locations and circumstances to control sources or potential sources of contaminants, including considerations of cost effectiveness, and feasibility;

(4) the extent of financial support from other persons to accomplish the demonstration as described in the application; and

(5) the capability of the person or persons proposing the project to disseminate the results of the demonstration or otherwise make the benefits of the practice, method, or technology widely available to the public in a timely manner.

(f) The Administrator shall select or refuse to select a project for demonstration under this section within 120 days of receiving the complete application for such project. In the case of a refusal to select a project, the Administrator shall notify the applicant within such 120-day period of the reasons for the refusal. In each 12-month period the administrator shall select at least ten qualified demonstration projects for support according to the provisions of this section.

(g) Each demonstration project under this section shall be performed by the applicant, or by a person satisfactory to the applicant, under the supervision of the Administrator. The Administrator shall enter into a written agreement with each applicant granting the Administrator the responsibility and authority for testing procedures, quality control, monitoring, and other measurements necessary to determine and evaluate the results of the demonstration project. The Administrator may pay the costs of testing, monitoring, quality control, and other measurements required by the Administrator to determine and evaluate the results of a demonstration project, including the use of innovative or alternative waste treatment technologies, and the limitations established by subsection (i) of this section shall not apply to such costs.

(h) The Administrator shall enter into arrangements, wherever practicable and desirable, to provide for monitoring, testing procedures, quality control, and such other measurements necessary to evaluate the results of demonstration projects or facilities intended to control sources or potential sources of contaminants, including hazardous waste treated in situ, whether or not such projects or facilities are constructed and operated under the provisions of this section, for the purpose of obtaining information concerning the performance, and other aspects of such facilities, methods, practices, technologies, or processes. Where the Administrator provides only monitoring and evaluation of personnel and provides no other financial assistance to a facility or project, title to any invention made or conceived of in the course of developing, constructing, or operating such facility or demonstrating such practice, method, technology, or process, notwithstanding the provisions of title IV of this Act, shall not be required to rest in the United States and patents respecting such invention shall not be required to be issued to the United States.

(i) Each demonstration project under this section shall be completed within such time as is established in the demonstration plan. The Administrator may extend any deadline established under this subsection by mutual agreement with the applicant concerned.

(j) In providing financial assistance under this section to a demonstration project, the Administrator shall endeavor to enter into agreements and make other arrangements for maximum practicable cost sharing with other Federal, State, and local agencies, private persons or any combination thereof. Total Federal funds for any full-scale demonstration project under this section shall not exceed 50 per centum of the total cost of such project estimated at the time of the award of such assistance. In cases where the Administrator determines, in accordance with criteria established by regulation, that research under this section is of a basic nature which would not otherwise be undertaken, the Administrator may approve grants under this section with a matching requirement other than that specified in this subsection, including full Federal funding.

(k) In carrying out the demonstration program under this section, the Administrator shall conduct a technology transfer program including the collection and dissemination of information, data and recommendations relating to the practices, methods, technologies, and processes for controlling sources or potential sources of contaminants demonstrated under the provisions of this section. In consultation with the Clearinghouse Committee the Administrator shall make available such information through a technical transfer and information center as required in section 104 of this Act. The information maintained by the Administrator shall be made available to the public, subject to the provisions of section 552 of title 5, United States Code, and section 1905 of title 18, United States Code, and to other government agencies in a manner that will facilitate its dissemination; except that upon a satisfactory showing to the Administrator by any person that records, reports, or information, or a particular part thereof (except data on discharges), to which the Administrator has access under this section if made public, would divulge methods or processes entitled to protection as trade secrets of such person, the Administrator shall consider such records, report or information or particular portion thereof confidential in accordance with the provisions of section 1905 of title 18, United States Code, except that such record, report, or information may be disclosed to other officers, employees, or authorized representatives of the United States concerned with carrying out this Act or when relevant in any proceeding under this Act. Notwithstanding any provision contained in this section or any other provision of law, all information reported to, otherwise obtained by, the Administrator (or any representative of the Administrator) under this Act shall be made available upon written request of any duly authorized committee of the Congress, to such committee (including records, reports, or information obtained by representatives of the Environmental Protection Agency).

SEC. 204. HEALTH AND ENVIRONMENTAL EFFECTS OF CONTAMINANTS.

(a)(1) Within 6 months after the date of enactment of this Act, the Administrator shall prepare and publish in the Federal Register a list of the contaminants which are known to occur (or which may be expected to occur) in the ground waters of the United States. The Administrator shall, from time to time and as necessary to carry out the provisions of this section but not less often than annually, review and revise such list adding other contaminants pursuant to the requirements of this section. The listing of a contaminant under this subsection is not an agency rulemaking and is not subject to the requirements of section 553 of title 5, United States Code.

(2) The initial list of contaminants shall include, but is not limited to, the following—

(A) contaminants for which the Administrator is required to promulgate a national primary drinking water regulation pursuant to the provisions of the Safe Drinking Water Act (42 U.S.C. 300f, et seq.);

(B) other contaminants for which a health advisory has been prepared by the Office of Drinking Water at the Environmental Protection Agency;

(C) contaminants listed according to the provisions of section 104(i)(2) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act and which are known to occur in ground water;

(D) contaminants listed pursuant to section 307(a) of the Clean Water Act; and

(E) pesticides which the Administrator determines have the potential to leach to ground water.

(3)(A) The Administrator shall promptly revise the list of contaminants established by paragraph (1) of this subsection to include any contaminant which is found in ground water samples at three or more locations or which is listed pursuant to section 104(i)(2) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act.

(B) Upon application of the Governor of a State, showing that a contaminant or potential contaminant of ground water which is not on the list established by paragraph (1) of this subsection may be reasonably anticipated to endanger public health, public welfare or the environment as a result of its presence or potential for presence in ground water, the Administrator shall, within 90 days, revise the list established by paragraph (1) of this subsection to include such contaminant or publish in the Federal Register a statement of the reasons for not making such revision.

(C) Within 90 days of receiving a recommendation from the Director of the National Toxicology Program, the National Institute of Environmental Health Sciences, and the Administrator of the Agency for Toxic Substances and Disease Registry that a particular contaminant be added to the list established by paragraph (1) of this subsection, the Administrator shall revise the list to include such contaminant or publish in the Federal Register a statement of the reasons for not making such revision.

(D) Any person may petition the Administrator requesting that a contaminant or potential contaminant be added to the list established by paragraph (1) of this subsection. The Administrator shall, within 90 days, either grant or deny the petition based on a showing by the petitioner that the contaminant may have an adverse effect on human health, welfare or the environment due to its presence or potential for presence in ground water. If the petition is granted the Administrator shall revise the list established under paragraph (1) of this subsection to include such contaminant.

(E) The Administrator may remove from the list any contaminant not known to occur in ground waters of the United States.

(b) For each contaminant listed according to the provisions of subsection (a) of this section, the Director of the National Toxicology Program in consultation with the Director of the Agency for Toxic Substances and Disease Registry shall, within 120 days of the listing of that contaminant, develop and transmit to the Administrator a proposed research program for that contaminant including a description of a program of toxicological testing which in the judgment of the Director is necessary to supplement information needed to prepare a risk assessment document described in section 205 for such contaminant. The Director shall consider data, criteria, and analyses developed pursuant to other Federal environmental laws in developing the research programs. In the case of a contaminant listed pursuant to subsections (a)(1) and (a)(2) a research program shall be developed within 120 days of the listing or as soon thereafter as practicable but not later than 3 years after the date of listing. Upon receipt, the Administrator shall publish the proposed research program in the Federal Register and seek comment thereon. Within 60 days after receipt of a proposed research program, the Administrator shall approve such program or make such amendments as the Administrator deems necessary to fulfill the purposes of this title. The research program shall, in combination with available data and information, assure complete and adequate information necessary to prepare a risk assessment pursuant to section 205, including—

(1) studies of the chemical and physical properties and characteristics of the contaminant;

(2) studies of the dispersion, persistence, and fate (including the degradation products and metabolites) of the contaminant when released into the environment;

(3) studies of human exposure to the contaminant as a result of its presence in ground water and through other pathways of contact with human populations;

(4) studies (including, but not limited to, laboratory and epidemiological studies) of the health effects of the contaminant (and its degradation products and metabolites) including studies to determine acute toxicity, subacute toxicity, chronic toxicity, and the potential for the contaminant to cause cancer, gene mutations, or birth defects; and

(5) studies of the ecological effects (including the propensity of the contaminant to bioaccumulate when discharged to surface waters) of the contaminant as a result of its presence in ground water.

The Administrator may use the authorities of section 104(i) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act to conduct research programs outlined under this section, and shall coordinate with the development of contaminant profiles under section 104(i)(3) and research under section 104(i)(5) of such Act. To the extent practicable the research program developed pursuant to this subsection shall be completed within a 2-year period. Approved research programs shall be transmitted to the States and other interested persons. Nothing in this section shall limit the authority of the Administrator to conduct any study with respect to a contaminant in addition to the studies included in the research program.

(c)(1) The Administrator shall implement research programs developed pursuant to subsection (b). The Administrator shall consult with the Director of the National Toxicology Program and the Administrator of the Agency for Toxic Substances and Disease Registry and may delegate implementation of the research program to the Administrator of the Agency for Toxic Substances and Disease Registry.

(2) It is the sense of Congress that the costs of implementing research programs under this section be borne by the manufacturers and processors of the hazardous substance in question as required in programs of toxicological testing under the Toxic Substances Control Act and Federal Insecticide, Fungicide and Rodenticide Act.

(d) Funds authorized under section 111(m) of the Superfund Amendments and Reauthorization Act may be used to develop and implement research programs pursuant to this part to the extent that the Administrator, in consultation with the Administrator of the Agency for Toxic Substances and Disease Registry, determines that such use will not in any way limit or constrain the full and effective implementation of the activities otherwise authorized to be funded under section 111(m) of the Superfund Amendments and Reauthorization Act.

SEC. 205. GROUND WATER CONTAMINANT RISK ASSESSMENT.

(a) The President shall designate the Administrator as the lead official for the purposes of carrying out the activities authorized in this section. The Administrator shall carry out such activities in consultation and coordination with the members of the Interagency Ground Water Research Task Force and such other agencies as the President may designate.

(b) The Administrator shall conduct and publish a risk assessment for ground water contaminants as identified in section 204. Such risk assessment shall use scientifically sound methodologies to assess the risk to human health and the environment associated with a range of concentrations of the ground water contaminant.

(c) Each risk assessment shall include—

(1) the most recent scientific knowledge on the physical, chemical, biological, and radiological properties of the contaminant and its effects on human health and the environment;

(2) an assessment of factors, including contaminant sources, variable aquifer conditions, and ground water uses, which may influence the effect of the contaminant on human health and the environment;

(3) an assessment of the assumptions, scientific uncertainties, ranges of risk, and data gaps contained in the risk assessments;

(4) the association of the contaminant with various human activities which have the potential to be sources of the contaminant in ground water; and

(5) a comparison of the risks posed by such contaminants to risks posed by other ground water contaminants.

(d) The Administrator shall establish and use a standard format for the presentation of risk assessments to facilitate the use of such analyses by State and local officials in setting ground water standards or in monitoring ground water quality and by the public.

(e) In carrying out this section, the Administrator shall use, to the fullest extent practicable, existing data or analyses developed by other agencies, including the Department of Health and Human Services. The Administrator shall also consider data and analyses developed pursuant to the Federal Water Pollution Control Act, title XIV of the Public Health Service Act (relating to safe drinking water), the Toxic Substances Control Act, the Comprehensive Environmental Responses, Compensation and Liability Act of 1980, and the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide, and Rodenticide Act. The Administrator may conduct such additional studies under the authorities of such Acts to gather data necessary to reduce scientific uncertainties in the risk assessments. Such additional studies may be conducted in consultation with the National Institute of Environmental Health Sciences and the Agency for Toxic Substances and Disease Registry.

(f) The Administrator shall publish, with an opportunity for public notice and comment, risk assessment analyses for not less than 30 contaminants within 24 months after the date of enactment of this title, and not less than 30 additional contaminants within 36 months after the date of enactment of this title. The Administrator shall distribute copies. The Administrator shall continue to publish such assessments for additional contaminants at a rate which is consistent with the needs of the State and local governments in developing ground water quality standards.

(g) The Administrator shall publish risk assessments giving priority to contaminants posing the most significant potential threat to human health due to their known or suspected toxicity to humans and the potential for human exposure to such substances.

SEC. 206. CONTAMINANT SOURCE SURVEYS.

(a) The Administrator, in consultation with other appropriate Federal agencies and officials of the several States, shall conduct nationwide ground water quality surveys to identify the frequency and concentration of contaminants in ground water associated with various categories of current or potential sources of contaminants. The surveys authorized by this section shall include monitoring as feasible and practicable at wells which supply public water systems and at wells which supply private households to determine effects or potential effects of such sources on public health and at other ground water sampling points to determine effects of such sources on the general quality of the Nation's ground water resources.

(b) The surveys conducted pursuant to the authority of subsection (a) shall include, but need not be limited to, surveys with respect to the categories and subcategories of sources or potential sources of contaminants hereafter listed in clauses (1) through (9). Nothing in this section shall preclude the use of coordinated collection and field efforts. Each survey shall be completed and a report of the survey transmitted to the President and to the Congress not later than the date indicated in the following schedule for each category or subcategory—

(1) pesticide applications, January 1, 1991;

(2) septic tanks and cesspools, January 1, 1992;

(3) landfills, surface impoundments and wastepiles, July 1, 1992;

(4) class V injection wells including agricultural drainage wells, January 1, 1993;

(5) fertilizer applications, January 1, 1993;

(6) irrigation return flows, July 1, 1993;

(7) publicly owned treatment works, July 1, 1993;

(8) light industry, January 1, 1994; and

(9) transportation corridors, January 1, 1994.

(c) The Governor of any State may petition the Administrator to initiate a nationwide survey of a category or subcategory of sources in addition to those listed in subsection (b). The Administrator shall respond to the petition within 90 days and shall include a copy of the petition and any response in the annual plan required by subsection (j).

(d) In conducting the surveys authorized by subsection (a) the Administrator is directed to complete the following preliminary phases for each survey—

(1) in cooperation with the several States, the Administrator shall conduct an analysis to determine the number, type, and geographic distribution of sources in each category or subcategory;

(2) in cooperation with the directors of the national laboratories, the Administrator shall develop the analytical techniques necessary to test for the major contaminants of national concern which may be associated with any category or subcategory of sources;

(3) the Administrator, acting through the Office of Drinking Water, shall prepare health advisories for each of the contaminants which are likely to be associated with any particular category or subcategory of sources;

(4) the Administrator shall publish general guidance on the design of such survey including sampling and analytical protocols, based on the human health and environmental threat of such sources and shall take comment, including comment from the Science Advisory Board, on the elements of the survey; and

(5) the Administrator shall conduct pilot studies as appropriate for each survey the results of which shall be reviewed by the Science Advisory Board before the followup analyses are begun.

(e) The ground water quality surveys conducted pursuant to this section shall be adequate to provide the Administrator with a clear understanding of the need for instituting contaminant source control strategies on a local, state, or national basis. Such surveys may provide data to—

(1) determine the interaction between various characteristics of the saturated and unsaturated zone related to ground water vulnerability and the likelihood that particular source within the category or subcategory will have adverse effects on ground water quality; and

(2) determine the effectiveness of various control strategies and technologies that are practiced or employed in association with particular sources in the category or subcategory to reduce or prevent ground water contamination.

(f) Subject to the provisions of section 104, the data from these and ongoing ground water surveys shall be stored in an electronic data base for use by the States and the public.

(g)(1) To the extent that a contaminant is found in any well supplying a public water system as the result of a survey authorized by this section, the Administrator shall notify the public water system of the presence of such contaminant and the public water system shall in response take all steps required by the Safe Drinking Water Act (42 U.S.C. 300f, et seq.) including notification of the persons served by such system as provided in sections 1414(c) and 1445(a) of such Act.

(2) To the extent that contaminants are found in any well supplying a private household as the result of a survey authorized by this section, the Administrator shall notify the owner of the well (and any other person residing on the property who depends on the well for a potable water supply) and include with the notification a copy of the health advisories for the contaminants detected and shall provide counseling to the owner of the well on the appropriate steps to take in response to the contaminant, but shall assure that information released to the public does not divulge information with respect to water quality in any specific well but is only of a general nature.

(3) To the extent a contaminant is found at any drinking water well or ground water sampling point as the result of a survey authorized by this section and it is possible to identify a particular source of contaminants, the Administrator shall notify appropriate officials of the local, State, or Federal Government for response, including action to abate or correct the contamination as provided in other law.

(h) In conducting the surveys authorized by this section, the Administrator shall to the maximum extent possible, involve appropriate officials of the States in each phase of the survey including: survey of existing sources; conduct of the pilot study; selection of the wells to be sampled; interviews and sampling done as part of the survey; notification of owners of wells where contaminants are found; and actions taken to abate or correct sources of contamination.

(i) In seeking and incorporating the views of the Science Advisory Board in the conduct of the surveys authorized by this section, the Administrator shall provide members of the Board (or the appropriate subcommittee) with all necessary materials in a timely fashion so as to assure prompt completion of each survey. In no event shall the report required by subsection (k) be delayed by the process of consultation with the Science Advisory Board, but such report shall include comments from the Board to the extent that the Board is in full accord with the findings as reported.

(j) To the maximum extent possible (consistent with the need for confidentiality of the results as provided in subsection (e)(2)), the Administrator shall involve the public in the design and conduct of the survey authorized by this section and the Advisory Committee established under section 103 for the purpose of providing the Administrator with technical assistance in the design and conduct of each survey and notice and opportunity for public comment on each report before it is submitted.

(k) The Administrator shall provide to Congress within 2 years following the date of enactment of this Act and annually thereafter, a plan for implementing this section including a report on the status of each survey required by subsection (b) and any plans to initiate surveys for categories or subcategories not listed in that section.

(l) The Administrator shall prepare a report on the findings of each survey together with any recommendations for Federal, State or local regulatory or legislative modifications which the Administrator determines to be appropriate in light of such findings. The Administrator shall complete draft reports for each survey not later than 90 days before the schedule of completion dates listed in subsection (b). The draft reports shall then be made available for public comment for a period of at least 45 days. The final report shall be submitted to the President and to the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives and to the Committee on Environment and Public Works of the Senate, to the several States and to the public.

SEC. 207. HEALTH EFFECTS OF NITRATES AND NITROSAMINES.

(a) The Administrator, in consultation with the Director of the National Institute of Environmental Health Sciences, shall conduct a study of the effects on public health (including carcinogenic endpoints) of nitrates, nitrosamines and other metabolites of nutrients and nitrogen compounds in public and private drinking water supplies, the sources of such contaminants, current and projected levels of exposure to such contaminants under various conditions, technologies or measures to reduce exposure including modification in agricultural and domestic practices and treatment techniques for water supplies (including private water supplies), and the costs of such technologies, measures or treatment techniques. Such report shall include an evaluation of current standards for such contaminants promulgated pursuant to the Safe Drinking Water Act and whether additional steps are necessary to protect public health (including the health of persons relying on private water supplies) from exposure to such contaminants.

(b) In furtherance of this study, the Administrator may review studies and research conducted by other Federal agencies and State agencies with respect to such contaminants and may invite participation by other concerned persons including other Federal agencies, State and local governments and nonprofit institutions in the conduct of the study.

(c) The Administrator shall publish a report on such study not later than 18 months after the date of enactment of this Act, unless a longer period is necessary to conduct laboratory research, in which case, a preliminary report shall be published on such date and the final report shall be published no later than 48 months after the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 208. STUDY OF ABANDONED WELLS.

(a) Not later than September 1, 1989, the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency shall report to the Committee on Environment and Public Works in the Senate and the Committee on Energy and Commerce in the House of Representatives information summarizing the available data on abandoned production and injection wells and the impacts that such wells may have on ground water quality. The Administrator's report shall include data and recommendations with respect to—

(1) the number of abandoned wells and their regional distribution including identification of areas where underground sources of drinking water do not exist;

(2) impacts of abandoned wells on ground water quality including information on actual damage cases which have resulted from migration of contaminants through abandoned wells including an indication as to the likelihood that current regulatory requirements would have prevented the damage;

(3) practices and technologies which are available for locating and capping or closing abandoned wells;

(4) the cost of locating and capping or closing abandoned wells including an estimate of the probability of successfully locating, reentering, remediating, and closing abandoned wells;

(5) programs developed by the States or other nations to address the abandoned well problem;

(6) assistance which may currently be available under Federal or State programs to land owners to share the cost of locating and closing or capping abandoned wells; and

(7) programs or requirements which may be adopted by the Federal Government or by the States to assure that ground water quality will not be impaired by abandoned wells, including recommendations with respect to closure requirements at the time the well is abandoned, title to the property on which the well is located is transferred or other schedule.

(b) For purposes of this section—

(1) the term "abandoned well" means an injection or production well including, but not limited to, drinking water wells, industrial supply water wells, mining, storage, oil and gas wells, and wells defined as injection wells under the Safe Drinking Water Act the use or construction of which has been permanently discontinued or which is in such disrepair that its continued use or existence may cause or allow a threat to human health or ground water contamination; and

(2) the term "closing" means the act or process of stopping or preventing the flow of water or other fluids into or out of an underground zone through a borehole or well penetrating that zone.

SEC. 209. ADDITIONAL PROVISIONS.

(a) Nothing in this Act shall be interpreted, construed or applied to limit or diminish the authorities granted to the Administrator, the Secretary of the Interior, or any other head of any Federal agency under any other statute or Executive order or to preclude the collection of information or the conduct of any research, development, or demonstration activities for other purposes including the development of regulatory or remediation measures.

(b) All studies and results of studies conducted under this Act shall be reported or adopted only after appropriate peer review. Such peer review shall be completed, to the extent practicable within 60 days, and shall be conducted by panels of no less than three and no more than seven members, who shall be disinterested scientific experts selected for such purposes by the Administrator or the head of the agency conducting the study in consultation with the National Science Foundation on the basis of their reputation for scientific objectivity and the lack of institutional ties with any person involved in the conduct of the study or research under review. Not later than 12 months after the date of enactment of this Act, the Administrator shall issue guidelines for the implementation of this subsection at the agency including criteria to be used in determining which persons qualify as "disinterested" scientific experts.

(c)(1) A contract or cooperative agreement of the Agency for research, development or demonstration, may provide for the acquisition or construction by, or furnishing to, the contractor, of research, developmental, demonstration, or test facilities and equipment that the Administrator determines to be necessary for the performance of the contract or cooperative agreement. The facilities and equipment may be acquired or constructed at the expense of the United States, and may be lent or leased to the contractor with or without reimbursement, or may be sold to the contractor at a fair value. This subsection does not authorize new construction or improvements having general utility.

(2) Facilities or equipment that would not be readily removable or separable without unreasonable expense or unreasonable loss of value may not be installed or constructed under this section on property not owned by the United States, unless the contract or cooperative agreement contains—

(A) a provision for reimbursing the United States for the fair value of the facilities at the completion or termination of the contract or within a reasonable time thereafter;

(B) an option in the United States to acquire the underlying land; or

(C) an alternative provision that the Administrator considers to be adequate to protect the interests of the United States in the facilities or equipment.

(3) Proceeds of sales or reimbursements under this subsection shall be paid into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts, except to the extent otherwise authorized by law with respect to property acquired by the contractor.

SEC. 210. GROUND WATER RESEARCH INSTITUTES.

(a) The Administrator shall make grants to institutions of higher learning or other research institutions (or consortia of such institutions) which are nonprofit organizations to establish and operate 8 ground water research institutes in the United States.

(b) The responsibility of each Ground Water Research Institute established under this section shall include, but not be limited to, the conduct of research and training relating to the protection, maintenance, and restoration of ground water resources and the publication and dissemination of the results of such research.

(c) Any institution of higher learning or other research institution (or consortium of such institutions) which is a nonprofit organization and which is interested in receiving a grant under this section shall submit to the Administrator an application in such form and containing such information as the Administrator may require by regulation.

(d) The Administrator, acting jointly with the Secretary of the Interior shall select recipients of grants under this section on the basis of the following criteria—

(1) each Ground Water Research Institute shall be located in a region which makes significant use of ground water to meet drinking water, agricultural or other needs and is representative of a given region of the Nation;

(2) each Ground Water Research Institute shall, to the extent practicable, be located in an area which has experienced significant ground water contamination or depletion problems;

(3) each Ground Water Research Institute shall have available for carrying out this section demonstrated research capability;

(4) each Ground Water Research Institute shall have the capability to provide leadership in making national and regional contributions to the solution of both long-range and immediate ground water contamination or depletion problems;

(5) each Ground Water Research Institute shall make a commitment to support ongoing ground water research programs with budgeted institutional funds; and

(6) each Ground Water Research Institute shall have an interdisciplinary staff with demonstrated expertise in ground water management and research.

(e) The Federal share of a grant under this section shall not exceed 50 percent of the costs of establishing and operating each ground water research institute and related activities carried out by the grant recipients.

(f) No funds made available to carry out this section shall be used for the acquisition of real property (including buildings) or the construction or substantial modification of any building.

(g) Not less than 20 percent of the funds made available to carry out this section for any fiscal year shall be available to carry out technology transfer activities.

(h) Prior to, and as a condition of receipt each year of funds appropriated to carry out this section, each research institute shall submit to the Administrator for approval a ground water research program that includes assurances, satisfactory to the Administrator, that such program was developed in consultation with the States, local governmental entities, and other agencies and institutions within the region having ground water protection or management responsibilities and interested members of the public. Such program shall include plans to promote research, training, information dissemination, and other activities meeting the needs of the region and the Nation, and shall encourage regional cooperation among institutions in research into areas of ground water protection, maintenance, and restoration that have a regional or national character. The Agency Ground Water Research Committee established under section 202 shall review proposed research programs and advise the Administrator concerning approval of proposed programs.

(i)(1) The Administrator shall establish procedures for a careful and detailed evaluation of each Ground Water Research Institute to determine whether the quality and relevance of its ground water resources research and its effectiveness as an institution for planning, conducting and arranging for research warrants its continued support under this section in the national interest. The evaluation of each Ground Water Research Institute shall be made by a team of knowledgeable individuals including research personnel of the Environmental Protection Agency, other agencies of the United States including the Geological Survey, university faculty or administrators, personnel from State and local governmental entities with ground water management or protection responsibilities, and private citizens selected for this purpose. The Administrator may also secure the cooperation of the National Research Council and the National Academy of Sciences for the purpose of this evaluation. The evaluation team shall visit each Ground Water Research Institute and shall assess the scientific quality of its research program, the potential effectiveness of its research in meeting ground water protection and management needs, and the demonstrated performance in making research results available to users in the region and elsewhere in the Nation. Criteria for making the determination that a Ground Water Research Institute is an effective instrument for ground water resources research shall include the following: accreditation in sufficient disciplines to successfully mount a multidisciplinary research program; sufficient resources, including laboratory, library, computer and support facilities; a sufficiently close proximity to a university to provide an effective working relationship with other researchers, faculty and students in a wide range of disciplines; and an institutional commitment to the support and continuation of an effective ground water resources research and education program.

(2) The Administrator, acting jointly with the Secretary of the Interior shall arrange for each of the Ground Water Research Institutes supported under this section to be evaluated within 2 years after its establishment and to be reevaluated at intervals not to exceed 5 years. If, as a result of any such evaluation, the Administrator and the Secretary of the Interior determine that a Ground Water Research Institute does not qualify for further support under this section, then no further grants to the Ground Water Research Institute may be made until the Ground Water Research Institute's qualification is reestablished to the satisfaction of the Administrator and the Secretary.

SEC. 211. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

(a) For the purpose of carrying out the activities authorized by section 201 and 202 of this Act, there are authorized to be appropriated $40,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1989, 1990, 1991, 1992, and 1993.

(b) For the purpose of carrying out the activities authorized by section 203 of this Act, there are authorized to be appropriated $20,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1989, 1990, 1991, 1992, and 1993.

(c) For the purpose of carrying out the activities authorized by sections 204 and 205 of this Act, there are authorized to be appropriated $20,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1989, 1990, 1991, 1992, and 1993.

(d) For the purpose of carrying out the activities authorized by section 206 of this Act, there are authorized to be appropriated $10,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1989, 1990, 1991, 1992, and 1993.

(e) For the purpose of carrying out the activities authorized by section 207 of this Act, there is authorized to be appropriated $2,000,000 without fiscal year limitation.

(f) For the purpose of carrying out the activities authorized by section 208 of this Act, there are authorized to be appropriated such sums as necessary for each of the fiscal years 1989, 1990, 1991, 1992, and 1993.

(g) For the purpose of carrying out the activities authorized by section 210 of this Act, there are authorized to be appropriated $16,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1989, 1990, 1991, 1992, and 1993.

PART B—PROGRAMS OF THE DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR

SEC. 221. GEOLOGICAL SURVEY.

(a)(1) The United States Department of the Interior, acting through the Geological Survey, has the principal Federal responsibility for research in the hydrologic sciences, for appraising the Nation's water resources, and for providing hydrologic information.

(2) The Secretary of the Interior, acting through the Geological Survey in consultation and cooperation with the Interagency Ground Water Research Task Force, is authorized to undertake basic and applied research; collect hydrologic and related data on surface and ground water quantity and quality; conduct national, regional, and local investigations, resource assessments, and surveys; and undertake other activities related to maintaining a continuing assessment of the state of the Nation's water resources. The Secretary is authorized to undertake such activities in cooperation with other Federal, State, and local governments and agencies, and academic institutions. The Secretary of the Interior is further authorized to disseminate the results of such activities by means of publication, data dissemination, cataloging and referral services, training and education, and technical assistance to Federal, State, and local governments, and to private persons.

(b)(1) The Secretary shall appoint a Ground Water Research Manager in the Department of the Interior who shall be charged with carrying out the research and education plan, as incorporated in the annual report required by section 102(c)(1) of this Act, and who shall provide central direction for ground water research within the appropriate bureau.

(2) The Research Manager shall serve as a liaison with the Clearinghouse Committee and ensure that results of all appropriate research and demonstration projects be available through the Technical Transfer and Information Center established in section 104 of this Act.

(c)(1) The Secretary may undertake the activities authorized by subsection (a) of this section on a reimbursable or cooperative basis with other Federal agencies, State and local governments, and Federal permittees or licensees but only after execution of a written agreement which outlines for whom such reimbursable or cooperative activities are being undertaken, and the purpose, cost and duration of the activities.

(2) The activities authorized by subsection (a) of this section shall include, but are not limited to, a Federal-State cooperative program to determine the quantity and quality of surface water and ground water of the United States and the uses of the Nation's water resources through a series of projects jointly funded on an equal matching basis by the Geological Survey and the States or their political subdivisions and interstate compacts.

(3) In the case of cooperative program activities for mapping of ground water resources, the Secretary shall provide 60 percent of project costs.

(4) The activities authorized by subsection (a) of this section shall include, but are not limited to, a program to investigate ground water quality and flow characteristics in various hydrologic regions of the United States to—

(A) determine the availability and chemical quality of water stored in each aquifer system;

(B) determine the discharge and recharge characteristics of each aquifer system;

(C) determine the hydrogeologic and chemical controls that govern the response of each aquifer system to stress;

(D) develop models to improve understanding of the affects of human activities on each system; and

(E) develop maps at a consistent scale to be determined in consultation with the States delineating ground water resources, aquifer systems and the recharge areas of such systems.

(5) The activities authorized by subsection (a) of this section shall include, but are not limited to, a program to improve understanding of the processes which control the movement, fate, and alteration of toxic and hazardous substances and other contaminants in ground water.

SEC. 222. NATIONAL GROUND WATER QUALITY INVENTORY.

(a)(1) The Secretary of the Interior, acting through Geological Survey and in consultation with the Interagency Ground Water Research Task Force, and the several States, shall prepare a report which shall include, but need not be limited to, the following:

(A) an assessment of the Nation's ground water quantity and quality based on existing and readily available data and information, including a description of areas where insufficient quantity and quality information is available;

(B) an evaluation of the adequacy of existing ground water data collection and monitoring programs conducted by Federal, State, and local governments and private industry including an assessment of monitoring protocols and recommendations for improvement to such protocols;

(C) a description of changes and trends in the quantity and quality of the Nation's ground water resources to the extent that existing data and information are available; and

(D) an assessment of the water supply needs of the Nation including water supply for public, agricultural, industrial, and other uses and the impact of water supply needs in the future on available ground water quality and quantity.

(2) The Secretary shall complete a draft of the report authorized by paragraph (1) no later than 12 months following the date of enactment of this Act. Such report shall then be made available for public comment for a period of at least 45 days. The final report shall be submitted to the House Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs and the Senate Committee on Environment and Public Works, the several States, and to the public no later than 30 months after the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 223. NATIONAL GROUND WATER QUALITY ASSESSMENT.

(a) The Secretary of the Interior, acting through the Geological Survey, is authorized and directed, based on information contained in the report prepared pursuant to section 102(d)(3) and after consultation with the Interagency Ground Water Research Task Force and the several States, to establish and conduct a National Ground Water Quantity and Quality Assessment Program to—

(1) identify, assess, and monitor the quantity and quality of the Nation's ground water resources; and

(2) describe changes and trends in the quantity and quality of the Nation's ground water.

(b) In conducting the program authorized by subsection (a) of this section, the Secretary shall ensure that the program—

(1) includes agreements or memorandum of understanding, where appropriate, with the Environmental Protection Agency, other Federal agencies, the several States, local governments, private organizations and individuals detailing the ground water monitoring and assessment responsibilities of each entity in order to assure consistency and avoid duplication of effort;

(2) recommends and seeks to achieve, to the extent possible considering other statutory mandates, uniform data collection protocols for Federal agencies, State and local governments, and private organizations and individuals to use in the collection of reliable ground water data and information;

(3) provides guidance on the use of existing ground water quantity and quality data and information including means to integrate and analyze data collected under varying protocols and various monitoring and assessment programs;

(4) assists Federal agencies in meeting their responsibilities under this Act and the Safe Drinking Water Act (42 U.S.C. 300f, et seq.), the Federal Water Pollution Control Act (33 U.S.C. 1151, et seq.), the Solid Waste Disposal Act (42 U.S.C. 6901, et seq.), the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide and Rodenticide Act (7 U.S.C. 135, et seq.), the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act (42 U.S.C. 9601, et seq.), the Toxic Substances Control Act (15 U.S.C. 2601, et seq.), the Hazardous Liquid Pipeline Safety Act (49 U.S.C. App. 2001, et seq.), the Surface Mining Control and Reclamation Act (49 U.S.C. 1201, et seq.), the Federal Land Policy and Management Act (43 U.S.C. 1701, et seq.), the Uranium Mill Tailings Radiation Control Act (42 U.S.C. 7901, et seq.), and other Federal statutes with respect to the protection and management of ground water resources;

(5) improves the generic knowledge and understanding of the nature, extent, causes and effects of ground water contamination;

(6) assists State and local governments in the protection and management of ground water resources and the design of ground water monitoring programs; and

(7) is specifically designed to obtain complementary surface water quality data to provide an integrated knowledge of water quality conditions within specific hydrologic regions and subregions.

(c) The Secretary shall report every 3 years to the Congress on the results of the assessment program established by this subsection.

SEC. 224. AUTHORITIES OF THE ADMINISTRATOR AND ANY OTHER FEDERAL AGENCIES.

Nothing in this part shall be construed, interpreted or applied to limit or diminish in any way the authority or responsibility of the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency or any other Federal agency to conduct monitoring of the quality or quantity of the Nation's ground water or surface water resources or any other activity which is necessary or appropriate to carry out the duties assigned to the Administrator and the Agency by this Act or other Federal statutes.

SEC. 225. GROUND WATER RESEARCH PROGRAM FOR THE BUREAU OF RECLAMATION.

(a) The scope of research involving the Bureau of Reclamation shall include the effect of existing and proposed dams, reservoirs, and other water diversion projects on the local and regional ground water recharge and the effects of such projects on quality and quantity of ground water aquifers and surface streams, rivers, and lakes.

(b) The Secretary of the Interior, acting through the Bureau of Reclamation, and in consultation with the Interagency Ground Water Research Task Force and with the several States, shall conduct an investigation and analysis and prepare a Ground Water Reclamation Study for Congress, which shall include—

(1) an assessment of the impacts of existing and proposed Bureau of Reclamation projects on the quality and quantity of ground water resources;

(2) analyses of regional water budgets and the impact of the water projects on these budgets under varying annual weather conditions;

(3) a description of methods for optimizing Bureau of Reclamation project operations to ameliorate adverse impacts on ground water, if any;

(4) an analysis of the potential for ground water recharge facilities and the need to demonstrate artificial recharge technologies under a variety of hydrogeologic conditions taking into account the activities and information generated by Public Law 98-434;

(5) an analysis of how the Federal government could assist State and local governments in using artificial recharge facilities and technologies; and

(6) a description of the Federal technical assistance available to State and local agencies on economic engineering and other factors relating to the design and construction of ground water management facilities.

(c) The Secretary of the Interior shall submit his recommendations, along with the recommendations of the Governors of the affected States, concerning the establishment of a Ground Water Management and Technical Assistance Program in the Bureau of Reclamation in order to minimize adverse impacts of projects on ground water through development and implementation of management plans and activities.

(d) The report shall be delivered to Congress prior to the expiration of the 24-month period following the date on which funds are first appropriated pursuant to an authorization contained in this Act.

SEC. 226. INVESTIGATION OF MINING IMPACT ON GROUND WATER.

(a) The Secretary of the Interior acting through the Bureau of Mines and in consultation with the Interagency Ground Water Research Task Force and the several States, shall conduct an investigation and analysis and prepare a report on Ground Water and Mining, which shall include—

(1) a summary of the national mining activities; including a discussion of the methods and impact of these activities on the ground water resulting from tailings ponds, leach pads, tailing pads, and mine water leachates;

(2) an evaluation of procedures or practices that may be adopted that would reduce the amount of waste or mitigate leaching of contaminants into the ground water systems; and

(3) an evaluation of the mine reclamation procedures for open pit and drift mines to determine if reclamation methods are adequately mitigating the potential for ground water contamination.

(b) The report shall be delivered to Congress prior to the expiration of the 24-month period following the date on which funds are first appropriated pursuant to an authorization contained in this Act.

SEC. 227. AUTHORIZATIONS.

(a) For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of sections 221 and 222 of this Act, there are authorized to be appropriated to the Geological Survey $160,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1989, 1990, 1991, 1992, and 1993.

(b) For the purposes of carrying out the activities authorized in section 223 there are appropriated $10,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1989, 1990, 1991, 1992, and 1993.

(c) For the purposes of carrying out section 225 of this Act, there are authorized to be appropriated $500,000 to the Bureau of Reclamation for each of the fiscal years 1989 and 1990.

(d) For the purposes of carrying out provisions of section 226 of this Act, there are authorized to be appropriated $1,000,000 to the Bureau of Mines for each of the fiscal years 1989, 1990, 1991, 1992, and 1993.

PART C—GROUND WATER RESEARCH PROGRAM OF THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

SEC. 231. DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

(a) The Secretary of Agriculture, in consultation and cooperation with the Interagency Ground Water Research Task Force, shall be responsible for planning and coordinating the ground water research program within the divisions of the Department.

(b) The Secretary shall oversee the activities of the various divisions to ensure proper cooperation, and timely execution, of all ground water activities within the Department.

(c) In the conduct of such research, development, and demonstration, the Secretary of Agriculture shall give highest priority to projects and activities which improve the efficiencies of agricultural chemicals including nutrients and pesticides in use; reduce water requirements for irrigation; demonstrate integrated pest management techniques; reduce the number of agricultural chemicals in use through the demonstration of effective alternatives; and improve chemical disposal practices.

(d) Participation in the Department of Agriculture ground water research program shall include the Agricultural Research Service Division, the Cooperative State Research Service, the Extension Service, the Soil Conservation Service, the Economic Research Service, the Forest Service, Land Grant Colleges and Universities, the State Agricultural Experiment Stations, and the Cooperative Extensions Services.

(e)(1) The Secretary shall appoint a Ground Water Research Manager who shall be charged with carrying out the management plan, as incorporated in the annual report required by section 102(c)(1) of this Act, and who shall provide central direction for ground water research among the Department's Divisions.

(2) The Research Manager shall serve as liaison with the Interagency Clearinghouse Committee and ensure that results of all appropriate research and demonstration projects be available through the information center established in this Act.

SEC. 232. EVALUATION.

(a) The Secretary of Agriculture shall conduct in consultation and coordination with the Interagency Ground Water Research Task Force, an investigation and analysis and prepare reports to the Congress on the relationship between agricultural practices, policies, and ground water use that shall include—

(1) the current status and level of effort of programs at the Department of Agriculture to evaluate, prevent, and mitigate ground water quality problems; evaluate present water use and predict future use for agricultural and rural residents based upon geohydrological conditions and current and predicted levels of use and withdrawal;

(2) procedures for disseminating data and information and reports both to the public, farming communities, and other researchers, and computerization of data and information based systems;

(3) a detailed description of how ground water quality issues are included in management plans for lands of the Department of Agriculture;

(4) a listing of major policy decisions relating to agricultural impacts on ground water quality which are likely to be pending before the Department of Agriculture within the succeeding 3 fiscal years, and the types of scientific information needed for such policy decisions;

(5) a national overview of the impacts of agricultural operations, including the effect of size and different practices on the quality of ground water, and including identification of specific organic and inorganic sources of pollution, to the extent that current scientific knowledge and data coverage permit;

(6) a review of the roles of the various divisions and services of the Department and recommendations for eliminating duplication in research efforts; and

(7) specific recommendations for changes in existing programs and new initiatives in monitoring research, extension, and technical assistance efforts to address present and potential water quality and quantity problems.

(b) The Agriculture Research Service (ARS) shall fund basic and applied research in ground water, including, but not limited to, control and monitoring technologies as they pertain to agricultural practices and uses of ground water in rural areas as follows:

(1) The Agriculture Research Service shall direct its research toward improving understanding of basic physical processes that govern the movement and fate of agricultural chemicals, including the role of different soil types, and agricultural practices.

(2) The Agriculture Research Service shall direct research efforts into non-chemical alternatives and agricultural practices for controlling insects, pests, weed control, and plant nutrients.

(c) The Cooperative State Research Service shall fund and coordinate the agricultural research program in the Land Grant University system.

(d) The Cooperative State Research Service is directed to coordinate the research program efforts around the State and local data and information needs regarding the identification of contaminants, contaminant sources and prevention; fate and transport research and as established through the Cooperative Extension System.

(e) The Cooperative State Research Service, acting through the State Agricultural Experiment Stations, shall be responsible for research in the effects of various soil types, tillage, and conservation practices have on pesticide and fertilizer contamination in local ground waters. Such effort shall be coordinated with the Agricultural Research Service and with the regional Water Research Institutes to determine the effect of different soil types and climatic conditions.

(f) There is authorized to be appropriated to the Soil Conservation Service such sums as may be necessary to carry out a study of the impact of conservation tillage and other soil and water conservation practices on ground water quality, including the effect of this practice on the use and leach potential of agrichemicals.

SEC. 233. RESEARCH PROGRAM.

(a) The Secretary of Agriculture acting through the Agricultural Research Service and the Cooperative State Research Service, and in consultation and cooperation with the Interagency Ground Water Research Task Force, shall establish a national research, development and demonstration program with respect to the impact of agricultural practices on ground water quality. For purposes of this section agricultural practices shall include, but not be limited to, the application of pesticides and nutrients, irrigation practices and the operation of animal feedlots. In carrying out such program the Secretary may—

(1) conduct, and promote the coordination and acceleration of research, investigations, experiments, demonstrations, surveys and studies relating to the causes, effects, extent, prevention, detection, and correction of ground water contamination which results, or may result, from agricultural practices, including storage, preparation, application and disposal practices (including back-siphoning and the rinsing and disposal of containers);

(2) encourage, cooperate with, and render technical assistance to the States and to local governmental entities, other appropriate public agencies and authorities, nonprofit institutions and organizations, and other persons in the conduct of such activities;

(3) establish technical advisory committees and interagency working groups composed of recognized experts in various aspects of ground water protection and the agricultural sciences to assist in the examination and evaluation of research progress and proposals and to avoid duplication of research;

(4) exercise in the same manner and to the same extent those authorities granted to the Administrator in section 201 of this Act.

(b) The Secretary shall conduct or assist research, investigations, studies, surveys, or demonstrations with respect to (but not limited to) the following—

(1) chemical and biological interactions and processes including—

(A) the fate and transport of organic and inorganic substances released by agricultural practices from the point of release through the soil, vadose and saturated zones (and including releases and transport through air and surface waters),

(B) the biological, chemical and physical factors that govern nutrient transformation and mediate pesticide efficacy, stability, fate and transport in the soil, vadose and saturated zones,

(C) the source, extent and occurrence of agricultural chemicals and their metabolites and degradation products including pesticides, nutrients and salts resulting from irrigation in the soil, vadose and saturated zones;

(2) analytical models and testing methodology including—

(A) physical process models to describe the movement of water and agricultural chemicals through the soil, vadose and saturated zones,

(B) methods of measuring, sampling and characterizing the spatial and temporal variability, flux rate, and other features of the physical environment in the soil, vadose and saturated zones,

(C) predictive models to manage the impact of alternative agricultural chemical applications, water management programs, and production systems on ground or surface water quality,

(D) management systems to enable users to determine optimal nutrient and pesticide applications while minimizing effects on ground water quality for various soils, geomorphology and cultural conditions, and

(E) data bases and data base management systems for model testing and validation; and management and control including—

(i) the effects of changing application technology, irrigation and agricultural production systems on chemical and water flux in the soil, vadose and saturated zones,

(ii) the effectiveness of water management and tillage practices in controlling the movement of water and its constituents through the interacting soil medium,

(iii) the effect of various water management and agricultural production systems on soil microbiota which may effect the efficacy, persistence and breakdown of agricultural chemicals, and

(iv) new agricultural chemical products including controlled release pesticides and nutrients which may improve the efficacy, reduce application variability, and minimize the possibility of soil and ground water contamination.

SEC. 234. AGRICULTURAL NITROGEN BEST MANAGEMENT COMMITTEE.

(a) The purpose of this section is to protect public health and the environment through development of education programs on agricultural best management practices to minimize nitrogen losses from all potential agricultural sources and practices. The Extension Service, through the Cooperative Extension System, shall be responsible for the development and delivery of these programs.

(b) The Secretary of Agriculture and the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency shall establish and cochair an Agricultural Nitrogen Best Management Practices Committee consisting of—

(1) the Administrator of the Agriculture Research Service;

(2) the Administrator of the Extension Service;

(3) the Chief of the Soil Conservation Service;

(4) the Administrator of the Agriculture Stabilization and Conservation Service;

(5) the Administrator of the Cooperative State Research Service;

(6) the Manager of the National Fertilizer Development Center, Tennessee Valley Authority;

(7) the Director of the Office of Water Regulations and Standards, Environmental Protection Agency;

(8) the Director of the Office of Ground Water Protection, Environmental Protection Agency;

(9) a representative of the United States Geological Survey;

(10) an individual selected by the Board of Agriculture of the National Research Council of the National Academy of Science;

(11) a representative of National Association of Conservation Districts;

(12) a representative of farmers nationwide, to be selected by the Secretary of Agriculture;

(13) a representative of State government officials with knowledge of ground water selected by the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency;

(14) a representative of national environmental organizations selected by the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency;

(15) a representative of the State Agricultural Experiment Stations selected by the Secretary of Agriculture; and

(16) a representative of the State Extension Services selected by the Secretary of Agriculture.

(c) The Committee shall—

(1) develop agricultural best management practices for agricultural nitrogen utilization in crop production and protection of public health and surface and ground water quality;

(2) develop educational and training materials including slide presentations, brochures, and video tapes; and

(3) disseminate the educational materials to American farmers and other information users through appropriate means, including—

(A) county Agricultural Soil Conservation Services offices, and county soil water conservation district offices; and

(B) extension agents.

(d) The Committee shall report back to Congress 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act on the progress of its efforts. The report shall include a description of—

(1) the agricultural best management practices developed, with particular emphasis on practices to minimize the impact of agricultural nitrogen on ground water and surface water quality;

(2) material developed to promote agricultural best management practices;

(3) the strategy for dissemination;

(4) the number of farmers exposed to the information; and

(5) the number of farmers adopting agricultural best management practices.

(e) For the purpose of this section—

(1) the term "agricultural nitrogen" means nitrogen in all forms which may be present and available for crop production (whether natural, physical, manmade, chemical, or biological) including nitrogen supplied by leguminous plants (such as soybeans and alfalfa), animal manure, decaying leaves and other vegetation, commercial fertilizers, human and industrial sewage, precipitation, dustfall, soil and soil bacteria; and

(2) the term "agricultural best management practices" means management practices designed to protect public health and to reduce and prevent contamination of ground water and surface water and erosion and runoff from cropland, including, but not limited to, use of conversion tillage, no till, ridge planting, strip tillage, contour farming, strip cropping, irrigation water management, judicious fertilizer application, slow-release fertilizers, soil and tissue testing, and vegetative buffer strips.

(f) There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section such sums as may be necessary for each of the first 5 fiscal years beginning after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(g)(1) Section 319(c) of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(3) Any approved management program and report required by subsection (b) shall be made available to the Interagency Ground Water Research Task Force established in section 102 of the Ground Water Research, Management, and Education Act of 1988.".

(2) Section 319(m)(2) of such Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"In preparing reports under this paragraph, the Administrator shall consider the report of the Agricultural Nitrogen Best Management Practices Committee required under section 234 of the Ground Water Research, Management, and Education Act of 1988.".

SEC. 235. EFFICIENT USE OF NUTRIENTS.

(a)(1) The Secretary of Agriculture, in cooperation with the Administrator and the Director of the National Fertilizer Development Center, shall conduct research and investigations on practices, methods and techniques for improving the efficiency of fertilizer uses in agriculture including practices which would change the timing, rate or methods of fertilizer application to reduce the potential for nitrates and other fertilizer constituents or degradation products to leach to ground water, and soil management practices and animal waste management.

(2) The Secretary of Agriculture shall report the preliminary results of such research and investigations to the Congress within 24 months after the date of enactment of this Act. Such report shall include recommendations as to the policies and programs that may be implemented by Federal agencies or the States to encourage the use of practices that are more efficient. The report shall also include an estimate of the benefits to be derived from the adoption of such practices, methods and techniques and an estimate of any increase in costs associated with such practices, methods and techniques.

(3) There are authorized to be appropriated for purposes of carrying out this subsection not to exceed $3,500,000 in each of the fiscal years 1989, 1990, 1991, 1992, and 1993.

(b)(1) The Administrator, after consultation with the Secretary of the Department of Agriculture and the Director of the National Fertilizer Development Center, shall conduct a study of commercial fertilizer products sold for use in the United States to determine the chemical constituents including the presence of trace elements in such products and the potential for such constituents to leach and to contaminate ground water resources. The study shall include a survey of fertilizer products used in agriculture and sold in commerce for use on lawns, gardens and golf courses.

(2) The Administrator shall report to the Congress the results of the study not later than 18 months after the date of enactment of this Act including any steps which the Administrator will take or will recommend to other Federal agencies to protect human health or the environment from any adverse effect which may result from the use of such products.

(3) There are authorized to be appropriated without fiscal year limitation $1,000,000 to carry out the study and issue the report required by this subsection.

(4) The Administrator shall take such actions as are necessary and appropriate pursuant to the authorities granted the Administrator in the Toxic Substances Control Act (15 U.S.C. 2601, et seq.) to prevent any adverse effect on the human health or the environment which may result from the presence of hazardous constituents in fertilizer products distributed in commerce within the United States.

SEC. 236. STUDY.

(a) The Administrator and the Secretary of Agriculture shall conduct a study of agricultural drainage wells including the impact of such wells on ground water quality, the alternatives to wells for drainage purposes and the costs of plugging or otherwise closing existing wells.

(b) The Administrator shall report the results of such study to the Congress within 24 months after the date of enactment of this Act. Such report shall include an inventory of agricultural drainage wells in each State and a description of Federal or State programs that may be available to assist the owners of such wells with the cost of closure and the installation of alternative practices.

(c) There are authorized to be appropriated for purposes of carrying out this section not to exceed $750,000 without fiscal year limitation.

(d) For the purposes of carrying out the activities authorized by sections 232 and 233 there are authorized to be appropriated $16,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1989, 1990, 1991, 1992, and 1993.

SEC. 237. EDUCATION.

(a) The Secretary of Agriculture, acting through the Extension Service and the Soil Conservation Service, shall establish a training program for staffs of both agencies. The Cooperative Extension System shall establish an education program for the public to ensure that information on farming practices, alternatives to pest control, soil management practices, leach potential of agrichemicals, and other pertinent information regarding the protection of ground water, resulting from the research programs authorized in this part, is available to the farming communities and individuals.

(b) For the purposes of carrying out the activities authorized in this section, there are authorized to be appropriated $12,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1989, 1990, 1991, 1992, and 1993.

PART D—ADDITIONAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 261. LAKE OKEECHOBEE ECOSYSTEM, FLORIDA.

(a)(1) The Administrator, in cooperation with the Secretary of the Army, shall conduct a program of research of the Lake Okeechobee ecosystem on the relationship between surface and ground water quality and the management and control of aquatic plants. The Secretary of the Army shall provide such resources and services as may be necessary to assist the Administrator in conducting such program.

(2) The program conducted under this subsection shall—

(A) examine, interpret, and summarize existing data relating to surface and ground water quality and the management and control of aquatic plants, and identify the location of major collections of such data;

(B) examine the impact of existing methods for the management and control of aquatic plants on the Lake Okeechobee ecosystem;

(C) conduct any research which the Administrator determines is necessary for the development of effective methods of management and control of aquatic plants and surface and ground water quality; and

(D) be conducted in coordination with similar programs conducted by other Federal agencies and State, regional, and local authorities engaged in research involved in Lake Okeechobee.

(3) Methods developed under this subsection shall—

(A) be capable of application in a variety of combinations as separate components of systems for such management and control;

(B) be adaptable for application, without a significant loss of accuracy and utility, to a wide variety of surface and ground water ecosystems and regions of the United States; and

(C) be compatible with all aspects of each ecosystem to which they may be applied.

(4) Subject to the availability of appropriations, the Administrator and the Secretary of the Army may each enter into contracts for the performance of research required for the development of methods under this subsection.

(5) The Administrator shall provide information about methods developed under this subsection to any official of State, regional, or local government upon receipt by the Administrator of a request submitted by the official.

(b) The Administrator shall conduct a project demonstrating methods developed under subsection (a) at the Lake Okeechobee ecosystem. Such project shall—

(1) assess the utility of methods developed under subsection (a) as components of a variety of comprehensive systems for the management and control of aquatic plants and surface and ground water quality; and

(2) identify any further research required to allow development of effective methods for the management and control of aquatic plants and surface and ground water quality.

(c) The Administrator shall solicit recommendations regarding activities under subsections (a) and (b) from—

(1) scientists other than those participating directly in activities under such subsections, including scientists representative of the Federal, State, regional, and local scientific communities, universities, and private industry; and

(2) management and operational personnel involved in the management and control of aquatic plants, and shall utilize such recommendations in the development of methods under subsection (a).

(d) The Administrator shall complete the research program under subsection (a) and demonstration project under subsection (b) not later than 3 years after the date of the enactment of this title.

(e) Not later than 180 days after the date of the enactment of this title, the Administrator and the Secretary of the Army shall each transmit to the Congress a report outlining a plan for carrying out the functions of the Administrator or Secretary of the Army, as the case may be, with respect to the research program and demonstration project to be conducted under this section.

Such reports shall each include a description of the cooperative measures to be undertaken by the Administrator or the Secretary of the Army, as the case may be.

(f) Any department or agency of the United States may utilize any recommendation contained in a report on the results of the research program and demonstration projects conducted under this section—

(1) if the recommendation may be utilized without interfering with any management or demonstration project already in progress; or

(2) after consultation with each person conducting such a management or demonstration project.

(g) For the purposes of this section, the term "Lake Okeechobee ecosystem" means Lake Okeechobee, Florida, all rivers and streams entering into and carrying water away from such lake, the surrounding marsh area, the associated 100-year flood plain, and associated ground water resources.

(h) There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section $2,500,000 for each of the fiscal years 1989, 1990, and 1991. Upon request of the Secretary of the Army, the Administrator may transfer to the Secretary of the Army such funds as may be necessary for the Secretary of the Army to comply with the provisions of this section applicable to the Secretary of the Army.

SEC. 262. ANNUAL REPORT.

Not later than January 15, 1989, and each January 15 thereafter, the President shall prepare and submit to Congress an annual report on the activities carried out by the Administrator, the Secretary, the Interagency Ground Water Research Task Force, other Federal agencies as appropriate, and State and local governments regarding ground water assessment, protection, management, and remediation activities under this title for Lake Okeechobee. The annual report shall contain a discussion of the ground water assessment and research findings to date, needs of the Federal Government and State and local governments, and an evaluation of the extent to which the programs authorized by this title are addressing those needs.

SEC. 263. WESTERN CENTER FOR NUCLEAR AND GROUND WATER RESEARCH.

(a) DEFINITIONS.—As used in this part, the term—

(1) "Center" means the Western Center for Nuclear and Ground Water Research established by this section;

(2) "Board" means the Board of Directors as established by this section; and

(3) "Administrator" means the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency.

(b) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) the protection of ground water from nuclear and hazardous wastes requires further research in the containment of those wastes and in the monitoring of the environment;

(2) growing demands for ground water in arid regions require further research to protect and monitor existing aquifers and locate future aquifers;

(3) a variety of Federal agencies are conducting research in ground water, with a variety of research centers throughout the Nation being utilized;

(4) the Nevada Test Site and surrounding area has been selected as an area where nuclear weapons are tested, nuclear wastes may be stored, and hazardous materials and activities may be evaluated;

(5) unique research capabilities exist within Nevada because of the Nevada Test Site; and

(6) utilization and enhancement of research at universities can be economical, lead to high-quality research, and further lead to the training of additional scientists and professionals to address critical environmental issues.

(c) PURPOSE.—The purposes of this section are to—

(1) establish a Western Center for Nuclear and Ground Water Research within Nevada to evaluate the suitability of man made and natural materials for the isolation of hazardous and nuclear wastes from the environment;

(2) increase research in monitoring the movement and concentration of contaminants in ground water and to coordinate the research with other Federal departments and agencies, and State and private agencies, institutions, and entities;

(3) utilize the resources of the Center to independently review methods for the containment of nuclear or hazardous wastes, and the use of man made or geologic materials for such containment; and

(4) promote and coordinate research in the availability, usage, management, and monitoring of ground water.

(d) ESTABLISHMENT OF CENTER.—(1) The Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, in consultation with the Governor of the State of Nevada, is authorized to take such action as may be necessary to establish, in the State of Nevada, the Western Center for Nuclear and Ground Water Research.

(2) The Center shall be under the control, jurisdiction, and direction of the Board.

(3) The Center shall be located at such place or places as the Administrator, after consultation with the Governor and the Board, shall designate.

(4) The Administrator of General Services is authorized, subject to the availability of funds, to assist the Administrator in providing necessary facilities for the purposes of this part. In providing such facilities, the Administrator of General Services shall consult with the Governor of Nevada and the Board.

(5) The Administrator is authorized to enter into such agreements or other arrangements with the State of Nevada and other public and private agencies, institutions, or entities, as may be necessary to enable the Administrator to carry out the purposes of this part.

(e) BOARD OF DIRECTORS.—(1) There is established the Western Center for Nuclear and Ground Water Research Board of Directors.

(2) The Board shall be composed of 9 members, selected by the Administrator as follows:

(A) one member designated by the Governor of the State of Nevada;

(B) one member designated by the Administrator;

(C) one member designated by the United States Geological Survey;

(D) one member designated by the Bureau of Reclamation;

(E) one member designated by the Environmental Research Center;

(F) one member designated by the University of Nevada, Las Vegas;

(G) one member designated by the University of Nevada, Reno;

(H) one member designated by the Department of Energy; and

(I) one member designated by the Desert Research Institute.

(3) The member designated by the Governor of Nevada shall be Chairman.

(4) Members of the Board shall be appointed for a term of 4 years.

(5) Five members of the Board shall constitute a quorum, but a lesser number may conduct meetings.

(6) The first meeting of the Board shall be called by the Administrator and shall be held within 60 days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(7) A vacancy on the Board resulting from death or resignation by a member shall not affect its powers and shall be filled in the same manner in which the original appointment was made.

(f) DUTIES OF THE CENTER.—The Center shall—

(1) study and evaluate, on a continuing basis, the suitability of man made and natural materials for the isolation of hazardous and nuclear wastes from the environment;

(2) study and evaluate, on a continuing basis, ways and means of increasing research in monitoring the movement and concentration of contaminants in ground water and to assist the Center in coordinating such research with other Federal departments and agencies, and State and private agencies, institutions, and entities;

(3) study and evaluate the availability, usage, and management of ground water in arid regions;

(4) take such action as may be necessary to promote and coordinate research, governmental and private, in the areas of nuclear and hazardous waste containment and disposal, including methods and materials used or to be used in connection therewith;

(5) review and study existing and proposed Federal, State, and local public and private programs and projects, including research relating to the suitability of the methods for the containment of nuclear or hazardous wastes, and the use of man made or geologic materials for such containment;

(6) make recommendations to the Congress on the creation of interstate compacts and other forms of interstate or interregional cooperation to help further the purposes of this part;

(7) provide a forum for consideration of problems involving the protection of ground water from nuclear and hazardous substances, and, as appropriate, utilize citizens, and special advisory councils; and

(8) make the Center accessible to the public by holding scheduled, well publicized public meetings throughout the State of Nevada.

(g) COMPENSATION.—Each member of the Board who is not otherwise employed by the United States Government shall receive compensation at a rate equal to the daily rate prescribed for GS-15 under the General Schedule contained in section 5332 of title 5, United States Code, including traveltime, for each day he or she is engaged in the actual performance of his or her duties as a member of the Board. A member of the Board who is an officer or employee of the United States Government shall serve without additional compensation. All members of the Board shall be reimbursed for travel, subsistence, and other necessary expenses incurred by them in the performance of their duties.

(h) POWERS AND ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS.—(1) The Board is authorized to obtain the services of experts and consultants in accordance with the provisions of section 3109 of title 5, United States Code.

(2) The Board is authorized to enter into agreements with the General Services Administration for procurement of necessary financial and administrative services, for which payment shall be made by reimbursement from funds of the Board in such amounts as may be agreed upon by the Chairman and the Administrator of General Services.

(3) The Board is authorized to procure supplies, services, and property, and make contracts in any fiscal year, only to such extent or in such amounts as are provided in appropriation Acts.

(4) The Board is authorized to enter into contracts with Federal or State agencies, private firms, institutions, and agencies for the conduct of research or surveys, the preparation of reports, and other activities necessary to the discharge of its duties.

(5) The Board or, on the authorization of the Board, a member thereof, may, for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this part, hold such hearings and sit and act at such times and places, and request the attendance and testimony of such witnesses and the production of books, records, memoranda, papers, and documents as the Board or such member deems advisable.

(6) The Board, or on the authorization of the Board, any member thereof, may, for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this part, have such printing and binding done, enter into contracts and other arrangements to such extent or in such amounts as are provided in appropriation Acts, and make such expenditures as the Board or such member deems advisable.

(7) The Board may acquire directly from any executive department, bureau, agency, board, commission, office, independent establishment, or instrumentality, information, suggestions, estimates, and statistics for the purpose of this Act. Each such department, bureau, agency, board, commission, office, establishment, or instrumentality is authorized and directed to furnish, to the extent permitted by law, such information, suggestions, estimates, and statistics directly to the Board, upon request by the Chairman.

(8) The Chairman of the Board is authorized to appoint, terminate, and fix the compensation, without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointments in the competitive service, and without regard to chapter 51 and subchapter III of chapter 53 of such title relating to classification and General Schedule pay rates, of an Executive Director and such additional personnel as the Chairman finds necessary to enable the Board to carry out its duties. The annual rate of compensation of the Executive Director may not exceed a rate equal to the rate provided for level V of the Executive Schedule under section 5316 of such title and the annual rate of compensation of all other personnel may not exceed a rate equal to the maximum rate for GS-15 of the General Schedule under section 5332 of such title.

(9) Upon request of the Board, the head of any Federal agency is authorized to make any of the facilities and services of such agency available to the Board or to detail any of the personnel of such agency to the Board, on a reimbursable basis, to assist the Board in carrying out its duties under this part, unless the head of such agency determines that overriding reasons will not permit the agency to make such facilities, services, or personnel available to the Board and so notifies the Chairman in writing.

(10) The Board may use the United States mails in the same manner and under the same conditions as other departments and agencies of the United States.

(11) Any member of the Board may administer oaths or affirmations to witnesses appearing before the Board or before such member.

(12) The Board may expend funds made available for purposes of this part for printing and binding, notwithstanding any other provision of law.

(13) No sums appropriated for this part may be used to lease, construct, or purchase physical facilities.

(i) REPORTS.—Not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act, and thereafter upon the request of the Congress, the Board shall prepare and transmit to the Congress, the President, and the governor of the State of Nevada a report describing the findings and activities of the Board, together with any recommendations regarding specific actions necessary to be taken to enable the Center to carry out its mission under this part.

TITLE III—STATE GROUND WATER STRATEGIES

SEC. 301. STATE GROUND WATER STRATEGIES.

(a)(1) The Administrator is authorized to make grants to the States to support the development and implementation of State strategies designed to detect, prevent, and correct ground water contamination which have as an objective the protection of human health and the environment and which are designed to control sources or potential sources of ground water contaminants in that State.

(2) Subject to the requirements of this section, activities assisted may include, but are not limited to—

(A) planning;

(B) identification and mapping of ground water resources within the State, done in consultation with the United States Geological Survey;

(C) identification, control, and regulation of sources or potential sources of ground water contaminants within the State;

(D) research, development, and demonstration of practices, methods, and techniques effective in preventing, detecting, and correcting ground water contamination;

(E) monitoring, including ambient monitoring and monitoring to identify the nature and frequency of ground water contamination problems;

(F) data collection and management including management programs that assure the compatibility of data systems maintained by the State with data systems of other States and agencies of the United States;

(G) assessment of the legal authorities of the State or its political subdivisions for the protection and management of ground water resources and recommendations for new authorities;

(H) enforcement of permits, standards, regulations, conditions, requirements, prohibitions, or orders with respect to the detection, prevention, or correction of ground water contamination;

(I) public education and awareness programs;

(J) programs to increase the expertise and capabilities of the personnel employed by the State or by local governments within the State in ground water protection and management activities; and

(K) program administration.

(3) The strategy of each State should—

(A) identify a lead agency and provide an institutional framework for protection of ground water quality;

(B) identify legal authorities for the protection of ground water;

(C) identify major sources of ground water contamination and the contaminants associated with each source;

(D) assure coordination among Federal, State, and local agencies involved in ground water protection; and

(E) assure coordination of ground water protection programs with surface water protection programs and with the activities of public water supply systems.

(4) From such sums as are appropriated to carry out the purposes of this section in any fiscal year, the Administrator shall make allotments to the several States in accordance with regulations promulgated for that purpose which determine the amount of the allotment for each State on the basis of the extent of ground water contamination in that State or of factors (including the number and nature of the sources of contamination in that State) which contribute to or are likely to contribute to ground water contamination in that State, the geographic area of the State, and the number of persons relying on ground water for drinking water supplies. No eligible State shall receive less than $75,000 or one-half of 1 percent whichever is greater or more than 10 percent of the total allotment or allotments made under this section except that such minimum shall not apply in the case of Guam, the Virgin Islands, American Samoa, the Northern Mariana Islands, or the Trust Territories, or federally recognized Indian tribes.

(5) The grant to any State under this subsection shall not exceed 50 percent of the cost of carrying out, during a 1-year period, a State program eligible under this subsection.

(6) The Administrator shall include no maintenance of effort requirement in the regulations for any grant program authorized under this section.

(7) Grants authorized by this section, but not obligated by a State during the fiscal year for which they were first authorized, or during the fiscal year immediately following, shall revert to the Administrator, and shall be added to the funds available for grants under this section.

(8) Grants to the State for the purpose of developing ground water protection strategies shall be made under the authority of this section and not section 106 of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act or other statute.

(9) Federal funds received by a State from other sources shall not be used to pay the State's share of the cost of a program which receives a grant under this section nor shall any funds authorized by this Act be used as a State share to match Federal funds from other sources.

(10) Of the funds received by any State under the authority of this section, not less than 30 percent shall be used to carry out the provisions of sections 1427 and 1428 of the Safe Drinking Water Act.

(b) Each State, which receives any grant according to the provisions of subsection (a), shall submit an application for such grant at least 90 days prior to the beginning of the fiscal year for each fiscal year for which funds are to be received by the State. The manner and form of the application shall be prescribed by the Administrator. The application required by this subsection shall include a statement of the State's plan for use of the funds, information on the types of activities to be supported, and assurances that all requirements of this Act will be met by the State. Applications prepared by the States shall be made available to the public in such State before submission to the Administrator.

(c) The Administrator shall approve or disapprove any application submitted according to the provisions of subsection (b) of this section and if disapproved, the Administrator shall state the reasons for disapproval in writing. The State may modify and resubmit an application that has been disapproved. If the application (or resubmitted application) is approved, the Administrator shall distribute the funds authorized by this Act to the State.

(d) Each State receiving assistance under this Act shall, to the maximum extent practicable, establish procedures including, but not limited to, public hearings and the establishment of technical and citizens advisory committees, to encourage public participation in developing the ground water strategy assisted under this section.

(e) With the approval of the Administrator, a State may allocate to a local government, to a regional planning agency, to an interstate agency, to a public water system, or to a resource management district organization any portion of a grant made under this section to accomplish the purposes of this Act. A State may use funds from grants made pursuant to this section for financial assistance to persons only to the extent that such assistance is related to the costs of demonstration projects.

(f) No funds provided to a State under the authority of this section may be used to assist any person or governmental entity in complying with any requirement of the Safe Drinking Water Act (42 U.S.C. 300f, et seq.), the Solid Waste Disposal Act (42 U.S.C. 6901, et seq.), the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act (42 U.S.C. 9601, et seq.), the Clean Water Act (33 U.S.C. 1251, et seq.), the Toxic Substances Control Act (15 U.S.C. 2601, et seq.), or other Federal statutes involving the construction, operation, or maintenance of facilities (or connections thereto) or requirements for monitoring of particular sources of contamination for the presence of pollutants or contaminants or releases of contaminants; or used to clean up any source of contamination or bring any source or potential source of contamination into compliance with Federal, State, or local statutes.

(g) The Administrator or the Comptroller General of the United States may request such information, data, and reports as deemed necessary to carry out their responsibilities to assure that funds made available pursuant to this section are properly used and that only eligible activities are assisted.

(h) No grant shall be made to a State under this section unless the Administrator determines, on the basis of information provided by the State and from other relevant sources, that the State is implementing the provisions of this Act satisfactorily.

(i) Each State receiving funds under this section in any fiscal year shall make a report, not later than 60 days after the close of the fiscal year, to the Administrator on the use of such funds, which report shall be sent to the Interagency Ground Water Research Task Force.

(j) Upon request of a State, the Administrator, or another Federal agency, shall, to the extent resources and statutory limitations allow, provide technical assistance to such State in development or implementation of programs addressing ground water protection, management, and restoration. Such assistance may include but shall not be limited to—

(1) design and implementation of surveys of the location and occurrence of ground water contaminants in the State;

(2) design and implementation of public information and education programs;

(3) design and implementation of State or local programs to control sources of ground water contamination;

(4) delineation of wellhead protection areas, and other areas of recharge that are vulnerable to ground water contamination; and

(5) design and implementation of ground water monitoring programs.

(k) There are authorized to be appropriated for grants under this section $50,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1989, 1990, 1991, 1992, and 1993.

SEC. 302. ASSISTANCE FOR SMALL COMMUNITIES WITH GROUND WATER RADIUM CONTAMINATION.

(a) The Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, in cooperation with State public authorities, may assist local governments in demonstrating mitigation of radium contamination in ground water. Upon application of any State public authority, the Administrator may make a grant to that authority for such purposes. Assistance provided pursuant to this subsection shall be used for financing the acquisition and installation of ground water treatment technologies needed to remove radium from ground water used as a source of public drinking water for residents of small communities under the jurisdiction of such local governments.

(b) A grant may only be made under subsection (a) for removal of radium from ground water if the level of contamination from such radium exceeds the maximum contaminant level for radium established under title XIV of the Public Health Service Act (relating to safe drinking water).

(c) Funds made available through grants under subsection (a) may only be used by the grant recipient for one or both of the following purposes:

(1) Providing insurance or prepaying interest for local debt obligations issued by a local government to finance the acquisition and installation of treatment technologies described in subsection (a).

(2) Paying for the costs of administration for establishment and operation by such authority of a program to provide financing for such acquisition and installation.

(d) For purposes of this section—

(1) The term "small community" means a political subdivision of a State the population of which does not exceed 20,000 individuals.

(2) The term "State public authority" means an agency or instrumentality of a State which is established for the purpose of assisting local governments in financing capital improvements on a statewide or regional basis.

(e) For the purpose of carrying out the activities authorized by this section, there are authorized to be appropriated $4,000,000 for fiscal year 1989 and $5,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1990 and 1991.

SEC. 303. EXTENSION FOR WELLHEAD PROTECTION AREA PLANS.

(a) Section 1428(a) of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by striking "3 years of the date of enactment" and inserting in lieu thereof "5 years of the date of enactment".

(b) Section 1428(d) of such Act is amended by striking "3 years after the enactment of this section" and inserting in lieu thereof "5 years after the enactment of this section".

SEC. 304. EXTENSION OF SOLE SOURCE AQUIFER DESIGNATIONS.

Section 1427(b) of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by striking "24 months after the enactment" and inserting in lieu thereof "48 months after the enactment of".

TITLE IV—PATENT POLICY

SEC. 401. PATENT POLICY.

It is the policy and objective of the Congress to use the patent system to promote the utilization of inventions arising from federally supported research or development arising out of any contract or other agreement with the Environmental Protection Agency; to ensure that such inventions made by nonprofit organizations and small business firms are used in a manner to promote free competition and enterprise; to promote the commercialization and public availability of such inventions made in the United States by United States industry and labor; to ensure that the Government obtains sufficient rights in such federally supported inventions to meet the needs of the Government and protect the public against nonuse or unreasonable use of such inventions; and to minimize the costs of administering policies in this area.

SEC. 402. DEFINITIONS.

As used in this title—

(1) The term "Agency" means the Environmental Protection Agency.

(2) The term "funding agreement" means any contract, grant, or cooperative agreement entered into between the Agency and any contractor for the performance of experimental, developmental, or research work funded in whole or in part by the Federal Government. Such term includes any assignment, substitution of parties, or subcontract of any type entered into for the performance of experimental, developmental, or research work under a funding agreement as herein defined.

(3) The term "contractor" means any person, small business firm, or nonprofit organization that is a party to a funding agreement.

(4) The term "invention" means any invention or discovery which is or may be patentable or otherwise protectable under this title or any novel variety of plant which is or may be protectable under the Plant Variety Protection Act (7 U.S.C. 2321 et seq.).

(5) The term "subject invention" means any invention of the contractor conceived or first actually reduced to practice in the performance of work under a funding agreement: Provided, That in the case of a variety of plant, the date of determination (as defined in section 41(d) of the Plant Variety Protection Act (7 U.S.C. 2401(d)) must also occur during the period of contract performance.

(6) The term "practical application" means to manufacture in the case of a composition or product, to practice in the case of a process or method, or to operate in the case of a machine or system; and, in each case, under such conditions as to establish that the invention is being utilized and that its benefits are to the extent permitted by law or Government regulations available to the public on reasonable terms.

(7) The term "made" when used in relation to any invention means the conception or first actual reduction to practice of such invention.

(8) The term "small business firm" means a small business concern as defined at section 2 of Public Law 85-536 (15 U.S.C. 632) and implementing regulations of the Administrator of the Small Business Administration.

(9) The term "nonprofit organization" means universities and other institutions of higher education or an organization of the type described in section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (26 U.S.C. 501(c)) and exempt from taxation under section 501(a) of the Internal Revenue Code (26 U.S.C. 501(a)) or any nonprofit scientific or educational organization qualified under a State nonprofit organization statute.

SEC. 403. DISPOSITION OF RIGHTS.

(a) Each nonprofit organization or small business firm may, within a reasonable time after disclosure as required by paragraph (c)(1) of this section, elect to retain title to any subject invention: Provided, however, That a funding agreement may provide otherwise (i) when the contractor is not located in the United States or does not have a place of business located in the United States or is subject to the control of a foreign government, (ii) in exceptional circumstances when it is determined by the Agency that restriction or elimination of the right to retain title to any subject invention will better promote the policy and objectives of this chapter, (iii) when it is determined by a Government authority which is authorized by statute or Executive order to conduct foreign intelligence or counter-intelligence activities that the restriction or elimination of the right to retain title to any subject invention is necessary to protect the security of such activities, or (iv) when the funding agreement includes the operation of a Government-owned, contractor-operated facility of the Department of Energy primarily dedicated to that Department's naval nuclear propulsion or weapons related programs and all funding agreement limitations under this subparagraph on the contractor's right to elect title to a subject invention are limited to inventions occurring under the above two programs of the Department of Energy. The rights of the nonprofit organization or small business firm shall be subject to the provisions of paragraph (c) of this section and the other provisions of this chapter.

(b)(1) The rights of the Government under subsection (a) shall not be exercised by the Agency unless it first determines that at least one of the conditions identified in clauses (i) through (iii) of subsection (a) exists. Except in the case of subsection (a)(iii), the Agency shall file with the Secretary of Commerce, within 30 days after the award of the applicable funding agreement, a copy of such determination. In the case of a determination under subsection (a)(ii), the statement shall include an analysis justifying the determination. In the case of determinations applicable to funding agreements with small business firms, copies shall also be sent to the Chief Counsel for Advocacy of the Small Business Administration. If the Secretary of Commerce believes that any individual determination or pattern of determinations is contrary to the policies and objectives of this title or otherwise not in conformance with this title, the Secretary shall so advise the head of the Agency and the Administrator of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy, and recommend corrective actions.

(2) Whenever the Administrator of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy has determined that the Agency is utilizing the authority of clause (i) or (ii) of subsection (a) of this section in a manner that is contrary to the policies and objectives of this title the Administrator is authorized to issue regulations describing classes of situations in which the Agency may not exercise the authorities of those clauses.

(3) At least once each year, the Comptroller General shall transmit a report to the Committees on the Judiciary of the Senate and House of Representatives on the manner in which this title is being implemented by the Agency and on such other aspects of Government patent policies and practices with respect to federally funded inventions as the Comptroller General believes appropriate.

(4) If the contractor believes that a determination is contrary to the policies and objectives of this title or constitutes an abuse of discretion by the agency, the determination shall be subject to section 404(b).

(c) Each funding agreement with a small business firm or nonprofit organization shall contain appropriate provisions to effectuate the following:

(1) That the contractor disclose each subject invention to the Agency within a reasonable time after it becomes known to contractor personnel responsible for the administration of patent matters and that the Federal Government may receive title to any subject invention not disclosed to it within such time.

(2) That the contractor make a written election within 2 years after disclosure to the Agency (or such additional time as may be approved by the Agency) whether the contractor will retain title to a subject invention: Provided, That in any case where publication, on sale, or public use, has initiated the 1-year statutory period in which valid patent protection can still be obtained in the United States, the period for election may be shortened by the Agency to a date that is not more than 60 days prior to the end of the statutory period: And provided further, That the Federal Government may receive title to any subject invention in which the contractor does not elect to retain rights or fails to elect rights within such times.

(3) That a contractor electing rights in a subject invention agrees to file a patent application prior to any statutory bar date that may occur under this title due to publication, on sale, or public use, and shall thereafter file corresponding patent applications in other countries in which it wishes to retain title within reasonable times, and that the Federal Government may receive title to any subject inventions in the United States or other countries in which the contractor has not filed patent applications on the subject invention within such times.

(4) With respect to any invention in which the contractor elects rights, the Agency shall have a nonexclusive, nontransferable, irrevocable, paid-up license to practice or have practiced for or on behalf of the United States any subject invention throughout the world: Provided, That the funding agreement may provide for such additional rights; including the right to assign or have assigned foreign patent rights in the subject invention, as are determined by the Agency as necessary for meeting the obligations of the United States under any treaty, international agreement, arrangement of cooperation, memorandum of understanding, or similar arrangement, including military agreements relating to weapons development and production.

(5) The right of the Agency to require periodic reporting on the utilization or efforts at obtaining utilization that are being made by the contractor or his licensees or assignees: Provided, That any such information, as well as any information on utilization or efforts at obtaining utilization obtained as part of a proceeding under section 404 of this title shall be treated by the Agency as commercial and financial information obtained from a person and privileged and confidential and not subject to disclosure under section 552 of title 5 of the United States Code.

(6) An obligation on the part of the contractor, in the event a United States patent application is filed by or on its behalf or by any assignee of the contractor, to include within the specification of such application and any patent issuing thereon, a statement specifying that the invention was made with Government support and that the Government has certain rights in the invention.

(7) In the case of a nonprofit organization, (A) a prohibition upon the assignment of rights to a subject invention in the United States without the approval of the Agency, except where such assignment is made to an organization which has as one of its primary functions the management of inventions (provided that such assignee shall be subject to the same provisions as the contractor); (B) a requirement that the contractor share royalties with the inventor; (C) except with respect to a funding agreement for the operation of a Government-owned-contractor-operated facility, a requirement that the balance of any royalties or income earned by the contractor with respect to subject inventions, after payment of expenses (including payments to inventors) incidental to the administration of subject inventions, be utilized for the support of scientific research, or education; (D) a requirement that, except where it proves infeasible after a reasonable inquiry, in the licensing of subject inventions shall be given to small business firms; and (E) with respect to a funding agreement for the operation of a Government-owned-contractor-operated facility, requirements (i) that after payment of patenting costs, licensing costs, payments to inventors, and other expenses incidental to the administration of subject inventions, 100 percent of the balance of any royalties or income earned and retained by the contractor during any fiscal year, up to an amount equal to 5 percent of the annual budget of the facility, shall be used by the contractor for scientific research, development, and education consistent with the research and development mission and objectives of the facility, including activities that increase the licensing potential of other inventions of the facility provided that if said balance exceeds 5 percent of the annual budget of the facility, that 75 percent of such excess shall be paid to the Treasury of the United States and the remaining 25 percent shall be used for the same purposes as described above in this clause (D), and (ii) that, to the extent it provides the most effective technology transfer, the licensing of subject inventions shall be administered by contractor employees on location at the facility.

(8) The requirements of sections 404 and 405 of this title.

(d) If a contractor does not elect to retain title to a subject invention in cases subject to this section, the Agency may consider and after consultation with the contractor grant requests for retention of rights by the inventor subject to the provisions of this title and regulations promulgated hereunder.

(e) In any case when an employee of the Agency is a coinventor of any invention made under a funding agreement with a nonprofit organization or small business firm, the Agency is authorized to transfer or assign whatever rights it may acquire in the subject invention from its employee to the contractor subject to the conditions set forth in this title.

(f)(1) No funding agreement with a small business firm or nonprofit organization shall contain a provision allowing the Agency to require the licensing to third parties of inventions owned by the contractor that are not subject to inventions unless such provision has been approved by the head of the Agency and a written justification has been signed by the Administrator of the Agency. Any such provision shall clearly state whether the licensing may be required in connection with the practice of a subject invention, a specifically identified work object, or both. The Administrator of the Agency may not delegate the authority to approve provisions or sign justifications required by this paragraph.

(2) The Agency shall not require the licensing of third parties under any such provision unless the Administrator of the Agency determines that the use of the invention by others is necessary for the practice of a subject invention or for the use of a work object of the funding agreement and that such action is necessary to achieve the practical application of the subject invention or work object. Any such determination shall be on the record after an opportunity for a hearing by the Agency. Any action commenced for judicial review of such determination shall be brought within 60 days after notification of such determination.

SEC. 404. MARCH-IN RIGHTS.

(a) With respect to any subject invention in which a small business firm or nonprofit organization has acquired title under this title, the Agency shall have the right, in accordance with such procedures as are provided in regulations promulgated hereunder, to require the contractor, an assignee or exclusive licensee of a subject invention to grant a nonexclusive, partially exclusive, or exclusive license in any field of use to a responsible applicant or applicants, upon terms that are reasonable under the circumstances, and if the contractor, assignee, or exclusive licensee refuses such request, to grant such a license itself, if the Agency determines that such—

(1) action is necessary because the contractor or assignee has not taken, or is not expected to take within a reasonable time, effective steps to achieve practical application of the subject invention in such field of use;

(2) action is necessary to alleviate health or safety needs which are not reasonably satisfied by the contractor, assignee, or their licensees;

(3) action is necessary to meet requirements for public use specified by Federal regulations and such requirements are not reasonably satisfied by the contractor, assignee, or licensees; or

(4) action is necessary because the agreement required by section 405 has not been obtained or waived or because a licensee of the exclusive right to use or sell any subject invention in the United States is a breach of its agreement obtained pursuant to section 405.

(b) A determination pursuant to this section or section 403(b)(4) shall not be subject to the Contract Disputes Act (41 U.S.C. 601 et seq.). An administrative appeals procedure shall be established by regulations promulgated in accordance with section 407. Additionally, any contractor, inventor, assignee, or exclusive licensee adversely affected by a determination under this section may, at any time within 60 days after the determination is issued, file a petition in the United States Claims Court, which shall have jurisdiction to determine the appeal on the record and to affirm, reverse, remand or modify, as appropriate, the determination of the Agency. In cases described in paragraphs (1) and (2), the Agency's determination shall be held in abeyance pending the exhaustion of appeals or petitions filed under the preceding sentence.

SEC. 405. PREFERENCE FOR UNITED STATES INDUSTRY.

Notwithstanding any other provision of this title, no small business firm or nonprofit organization which receives title to any subject invention and no assignee of any such small business firm or nonprofit organization shall grant to any person the exclusive right to use or sell any subject invention in the United States unless such person agrees that any products embodying the subject invention or produced through the use of the subject invention will be manufactured substantially in the United States. However, in individual cases, the requirement for such an agreement may be waived by the Agency upon a showing by the small business firm, nonprofit organization, or assignee that reasonable but unsuccessful efforts have been made to grant licenses on similar terms to potential licensees that would be likely to manufacture substantially in the United States or that under the circumstances domestic manufacture is not commercially feasible.

SEC. 406. CONFIDENTIALITY.

The Agency is authorized to withhold from disclosure to the public information disclosing any invention in which the Federal Government owns or may own a right, title, or interest (including a nonexclusive license) for a reasonable time in order for a patent application to be filed. Furthermore, the Agency shall not be required to release copies of any document which is part of an application for patent filed with the United States Patent and Trademark Office or with any foreign patent office.

SEC. 407. UNIFORM CLAUSES AND REGULATIONS.

The Secretary of Commerce may issue regulations which may be made applicable to the Agency implementing the provisions of sections 403, 404, and 405 of this title and shall establish standard funding agreement provisions required under this title. The regulations and the standard funding agreement shall be subject to public comment before their issuance.

SEC. 408. DOMESTIC AND FOREIGN PROTECTION OF FEDERALLY OWNED INVENTIONS.

(a) The Agency is authorized to—

(1) apply for, obtain, and maintain patents or other forms of protection in the United States and in foreign countries on inventions in which the Federal Government owns a right, title, or interest;

(2) grant nonexclusive, exclusive, or partially exclusive licenses under federally owned patent applications, patents, or other forms of protection obtained, royalty-free or for royalties or other consideration, and on such terms and conditions, including the grant to the licensee of the right of enforcement pursuant to the provisions of chapter 29 of title 35 of the United States Code as determined appropriate in the public interest.

(3) undertake all other suitable and necessary steps to protect and administer rights to federally owned inventions on behalf of the Federal Government either directly or through contract; and

(4) transfer custody and administration, in whole or in part, to another Federal agency, of the right, title, or interest in any federally owned invention.

(b) For purposes of assuring the effective management of Government-owned inventions, the Secretary of Commerce is authorized to—

(1) assist the Agency's efforts to promote the licensing and utilization of Government-owned inventions;

(2) assist the Agency in seeking protection and maintaining inventions in foreign countries, including the payment of fees and costs connected therewith; and

(3) consult with and advise the Agency as to areas of science and technology research and development with potential for commercial utilization.

SEC. 409. REGULATIONS GOVERNING FEDERAL LICENSING.

The Secretary of Commerce is authorized to promulgate regulations specifying the terms and conditions upon which any federally owned invention under this title may be licensed on a nonexclusive, partially exclusive, or exclusive basis.

SEC. 410. RESTRICTIONS ON LICENSING OF FEDERALLY OWNED INVENTIONS.

(a) The Agency shall not grant any license under a patent or patent application on a federally owned invention unless the person requesting the license has supplied the Agency with a plan for development and/or marketing of the invention, except that any such plan may be treated by the Agency as commercial and financial information obtained from a person and privileged and confidential and not subject to disclosure under section 552 of title 5 of the United States Code.

(b) The Agency shall normally grant the right to use or sell any federally owned invention in the United States only to a licensee that agrees that any products embodying the invention or produced through the use of the invention will be manufactured substantially in the United States.

(c)(1) The Agency may grant exclusive or partially exclusive licenses in any invention covered by a federally owned domestic patent or patent application only if, after public notice and opportunity for filing written objections, it is determined that—

(A) the interests of the Federal Government and the public will best be served by the proposed license, in view of the applicant's intentions, plans, and ability to bring the invention to practical application or otherwise promote the invention's utilization by the public;

(B) the desired practical application has not been achieved, or is not likely expeditiously to be achieved, under any nonexclusive license which has been granted, or which may be granted, on the invention;

(C) exclusive or partially exclusive licensing is a reasonable and necessary incentive to call forth the investment of risk capital and expenditures to bring the invention to practical application or otherwise promote the invention's utilization by the public; and

(D) the proposed terms and scope of exclusivity are not greater than reasonably necessary to provide the incentive for bringing the invention to practical application or otherwise promote the invention's utilization by the public.

(2) The Agency shall not grant such exclusive or partially exclusive license under paragraph (1) of this subsection if it determines that the grant of such license will tend substantially to lessen competition or result in undue concentration in any section of the country in any line of commerce to which the technology to be licensed relates, or to create or maintain other situations inconsistent with the antitrust laws.

(3) First preference in the exclusive or partially exclusive licensing of federally owned inventions shall go to small business firms submitting plans that are determined by the Agency to be within the capabilities of the firms and equally likely, if executed, to bring the invention to practical application as any plans submitted by applicants that are not small business firms.

(d) After consideration of whether the interests of the Federal Government or United States industry in foreign commerce will be enhanced, the Agency may grant exclusive or partially exclusive licenses in any invention covered by a foreign patent application or patent, after public notice and opportunity for filing written objections, except that the Agency shall not grant such exclusive or partially exclusive license if it determines that the grant of such license will tend substantially to lessen competition or result in undue concentration in any section of the United States in any line of commerce to which the technology to be licensed relates, or to create or maintain other situations inconsistent with antitrust laws.

(e) The Agency shall maintain a record of determinations to grant exclusive or partially exclusive licenses.

(f) Any grant of a license shall contain such terms and conditions as the Agency determines appropriate for the protection of the interests of the Federal Government and the public, including provisions for the following:

(1) periodic reporting on the utilization or efforts at obtaining utilization that are being made by the licensee with particular reference to the plan submitted: Provided, That any such information may be treated by the Agency as commercial and financial information obtained from a person and privileged and confidential and not subject to disclosure under section 552 of title 5 of the United States Code;

(2) the right of the Agency to terminate such license in whole or in part if it determines that the licensee is not executing the plan submitted with its request for a license and the licensee cannot otherwise demonstrate to the satisfaction of the Agency that it has taken or can be expected to take within a reasonable time, effective steps to achieve practical application of the invention;

(3) the right of the Agency to terminate such license in whole or in part if the licensee is in breach of an agreement obtained pursuant to paragraph (b) of this section; and

(4) the right of the Agency to terminate the license in whole or in part if the Agency determines that such action is necessary to meet requirements for public use specified by Federal regulations issued after the date of the license and such requirements are not reasonably satisfied by the licensee.

SEC. 411. PRECEDENCE OF CHAPTER.

(a) Except to the extent provided in section 203 of this Act, this title shall take precedence over chapter 38 of title 35 of the United States Code, and any other Act which would require a disposition of rights in subject inventions of small business firms or nonprofit organizations contractors in a manner that is inconsistent with this title, including but not necessarily limited to the following:

(1) section 10(a) of the Act of June 29, 1935, as added by title I of the Act of August 14, 1946 (7 U.S.C. 427i(a); 60 Stat. 1085);

(22) section 408 of the Water Resources and Development Act of 1978 (42 U.S.C. 7879; 92 Stat. 1360).

This title shall be construed to take precedence over any future Act unless that Act specifically cites this Act and provides that it shall take precedence over this Act.

(b) Nothing in this title is intended to alter the effect of the laws cited in subsection (a) of this section or any other laws with respect to the disposition of rights in inventions made in the performance of funding agreements with persons other than nonprofit organizations or small business firms.

(c) Nothing in this title is intended to limit the authority of the Agency to agree to the disposition of rights in inventions made in the performance of work under funding agreements with persons other than nonprofit organizations or small business firms in accordance with the Statement of Government Patent Policy issued on February 18, 1983, agency regulations, or other applicable regulations or to otherwise limit the authority of the Agency to allow such persons to retain ownership of inventions, except that all funding agreements, including those with other than small business firms and nonprofit organizations, shall include the requirements established in sections 403(c)(4) and 404 of this title. Any disposition of rights in inventions made in accordance with the Statement or implementing regulations, including any disposition occurring before enactment of this section, are hereby authorized.

(d) Nothing in this title shall be construed to require the disclosure of intelligence sources or methods or to otherwise affect the authority granted to the Director of Central Intelligence by statute or Executive order for the protection of intelligence sources or methods.

SEC. 412. RELATIONSHIP TO ANTITRUST LAWS.

Nothing in this title shall be deemed to convey to any person immunity from civil or criminal liability, or to create any defenses to actions, under any antitrust law.

SEC. 413. DISPOSITION OF RIGHTS IN EDUCATIONAL AWARDS.

No scholarship, fellowship, training grant, or other funding agreement made by the Agency primarily to an awardee for educational purposes will contain any provision giving the Agency any rights to inventions made by the awardee.

SEC. 414. TITLE 35, UNITED STATES CODE.

The provisions of chapter 38 of title 35, United States Code, shall not be applicable to any patent or invention within the purview of this title.●

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, today I am pleased to join my chairman, Senator BURDICK and colleagues, Senators DURENBERGER, SYMMS, REID, GRAHAM, LIEBERMAN, BAUCUS, CHAFEE, and MITCHELL in reintroducing the Ground Water Research, Management and Education Act. This is the same bill that was reported unanimously by the Environment and Public Works Committee on September 30, 1988, as a substitute bill for H.R. 791, and which passed the Senate unanimously on October 7, 1988.

Unfortunately, despite the cooperation of the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee and Senate Agriculture Committee, as well as the five House committees which reported H.R. 791, we were not able to conference before the end of the 100th Congress. However, we made important progress by passing for the first time a ground water law in the Senate, and by reaching agreement among five committees and passage of a ground water bill in the House. It is my hope that we can build on this foundation and pass a similar bill early in the 101st Congress, so that we can complete a conference and have this bill enacted.

OBJECTIVES OF THIS LEGISLATION

This legislation does not create any new regulations or bureaucracies to govern ground water. It does not interfere with States' prerogatives or water rights. Instead, it coordinates Federal agencies' existing research and attempts to transfer that research and technology to the States. The bill accomplishes this goal in three main ways:

First, it establishes an Interagency Ground Water Task Force in the Office of the President to coordinate the Federal agencies' research, to identify gaps in research, and to consult with State and local governments regarding information which States require to manage ground water programs;

Second, it authorizes research programs and studies at EPA, the USGS, and the Department of Agriculture which we believe are essential to advance our understanding of ground water contamination and of control technologies for ground water pollution;

Third, it provides for a 50 percent Federal-State matching grant program to assist States in their ground water management efforts. The money may be used by the States for planning, mapping, identification, and control of sources, research, monitoring, enforcement, and education. The States have the widest latitude to use these moneys to suit their own varied and individual needs.

NEED FOR LEGISLATION

Ground water is the source of drinking water for more than 50 percent of the total population in the United States, and for 97 percent of rural residents. According to the General Accounting Office [GAO], the use of ground water is increasing at a faster rate than the use of surface water. The United States used 34 billion gallons of ground water per day in 1950. In 1980 that figure almost tripled to 89 billion gallons of ground water each day. Ground water supplies 40 percent of America's agricultural irrigation and 26 percent of its industrial withdrawal—excluding electric powerplants.

Most ground water supplies in the United States are of sufficient quality that most of the water can be used without treatment. However, in many localities, contamination of ground water has caused well closures, public health problems and economic losses. In 1984 the Environmental Protection Agency reported that water in 8,000 private, public and industrial wells was unuseable or degraded from contamination.

Sources of ground water contamination may be grouped into three main categories: (1) natural sources, (2) waste-disposal practices—intentional discharges by man—and (3) nondisposal sources due to human activities. In 1984 the Office of Technology Assessment [OTA] assembled a list of known ground water contaminants. OTA's research found over 200 substances present in ground water, including 175 organic chemicals and 50 inorganic chemicals, organisms, and radionuclides.

Natural sources of ground water contaminants include leaching and evaporation of ground water which concentrate the dissolved salts present in all ground water. This is a particular problem in the West and Southwest where irrigation practices may further exacerbate salinity problems. Salt water intrusion is a natural source of ground water contamination in coastal areas, which is accelerated by high rates of ground water withdrawal, such as in Florida. Naturally occurring radioactive materials such as radium and uranium may be present in ground water which percolates through formations containing high concentrations of these elements.

Waste disposal practices which may contaminate ground water include use of septic tanks and cesspools, injection wells which pump hazardous and nonhazardous wastes into the ground, land application of wastewater, and sludge disposal. Facilities designed to contain wastes or other products may discharge them through leaks or accidents. These include landfills which handle industrial wastes, municipal sanitary landfills, pipelines and vehicles that transport industrial byproducts and domestic wastes, and radioactive disposal sites.

Nondisposal sources resulting from human activities encompass such practices as irrigation, pesticide and fertilizer use, animal feedlots, deicing salts, nonpoint source runoff from urban and rural areas, mining operations and associated tailings piles, and underground storage tanks.

GROUND WATER RESEARCH

Ground water research is divided among various Federal, State, and private agencies—including the U.S. and State Geological Surveys, Environmental Protection Agency [EPA], the National Institutes of Health, the U.S. Department of Agriculture, the National Water Research Institutes, various land grant colleges, and other universities.

Although at present there is no comprehensive Federal statute regulating ground water, the Clean Water Act, Safe Drinking Water Act, Resource Conservation and Recovery Act, Federal Insecticide, Fungicide and Rodenticide Act, the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act, and other Federal statutes all address ground water.

At the request of the Senate Committee on Environment and Public Works, in March of 1988, GAO completed a study on management of ground water by the States. In its survey of 57 States and territories, GAO found that no State lacked a statute enabling it to protect ground water quality, but that many States used general environmental or water statutes to protect ground water, rather than a specific ground water statute. GAO found 15 States with specific ground water statutes, and 22 States with written ground water plans. GAO listed 41 States with either numeric standards—which specify contaminant levels which should not be exceeded—or narrative standards—which prohibit certain discharges that might contaminate ground water. The number of contaminants which States regulate range from 14 to 160—in New York. Over half the States relied on EPA's 22 primary drinking water standards for their own ground water standards. GAO concluded that States usually do not perform original research on toxicology or on health risks of ground water contaminants; instead they rely upon the Federal Government.

In responding to GAO, States reported that, in general, information from the Federal Government concerning ground water contaminants is inadequate. Some States indicated that lack of data has deterred them from implementing standards. For example, although over 260 contaminants have been identified in ground water, information remains incomplete for even the 83 contaminants regulated by the Safe Drinking Water Act, passed in 1974.

According to States' responses to GAO, 12 categories of information are needed by States: human health effects, existing guidelines and standards, analytical chemistry, environmental fate of contaminants, presence in ground water, amount and location of production and disposal, monitoring methods, technological feasibility control, references for additional information, and descriptions of how to use the information for setting standards. What information is available is often scattered among numerous documents. About one third of the States also report a lack of technical expertise among staff to initiate and implement a ground water protection program.

Mr. President, I ask that a table of contents and a section-by-section summary of the bill be printed in the RECORD at the appropriate point.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Sec. 2. Findings.
Sec. 3. Definitions.

The Findings contain a statement that nothing in this act shall be construed to change existing state water rights.

TITLE I—COORDINATION OF FEDERAL GROUND WATER RESEARCH AND EDUCATION PROGRAMS

SEC. 101: DUTIES OF THE PRESIDENT.—This Section provides that the President shall assure coordination of ground water research and directs the President to establish an Interagency Ground Water Research Task Force.

SEC. 102. INTERAGENCY GROUND WATER RESEARCH TASK FORCE.—This section outlines general authority for the Interagency Ground Water Research Task Force. The Task Force is to be made up of key Federal agencies involved in ground water research and is to be chaired by the Administrator of the EPA. The Task Force is to identify research data needs, recommend research priorities, facilitate interagency coordination, and consult with State and local governments concerning ground water research needs.

The Task Force is to submit an annual report which is to serve as a management plan for Federal government research of ground water and is to identify ground water policy issues on which research is needed. Each participating agency is to submit a research plan to the Task Force on an annual basis.

Section 103. Advisory Committee.—This section establishes an Advisory Committee on Ground Water Research to advise the President and the Interagency Task Force on ground water research issues and needs. The Advisory Committee is to be made up of not more than 15 individuals representing States and local government, environmental organizations, industry, and other groups.

Section 104. Clearinghouse Committee.—This section provides for establishment of a Clearinghouse Committee. The Committee is to assure coordination of data and information systems relating to ground water.

This section also provides that each participating agency of the Interagency Task Force is to establish a technology and information center to make available reports and related material concerning ground water research.

Section 105. Education Committee.—This section provides for establishment of an Education Committee to be chaired by the National Science Foundation and made up of individuals with scientific and educational expertise related to ground water research. The Committee is to evaluate ground water related programs for public education and training of professionals and technicians and to make recommendations to strengthen such programs.

Section 106. Authorizations.—There is authorized to be appropriated $3 million for implementation of sections 101, 102, 103, 104, and 105 for fiscal years 1989 through 1993.

Section 107. Water Research Institutes.—This section amends P.L. 98-242 which reauthorizes a broad research program in water resources, including quantity and quality issues, at Water Research Institutions established in each State and territory. The research programs are to be evaluated every 5 years by the Secretary of the Interior. Grants to each institution are used as seed money for research programs. The authorization for these research programs is $20 million for fiscal years 1989 through 1993.

TITLE II—GROUND WATER RESEARCH PROGRAMS OF THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

PART A—PROGRAMS OF THE ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION AGENCY

Section 201. Authority.—This section establishes a general ground water research program at the Environmental Protection Agency. The Administrator is given general authorities to conduct research, cooperate with others doing research, make grants, enter into contracts, acquire patents and so on.

Six priorities are established for the research program: (1) fate and transport of contaminants; (2) control technologies for sources; (3) health and environmental effects of ground water contaminants; (4) analytical procedures for ground water monitoring; (5) remediation and treatment of contaminated ground water; and (6) waste minimization.

Twenty-two specific areas of investigation are listed including: health and environmental effects of contaminants; exposure assessment; hydrogeologic studies; transport and fate of contaminants; analytical methods; control of discharges; and remediation and treatment.

The program is to include development of techniques for detection, prevention and correction of ground water contamination and is to go beyond basic research to demonstration projects that aid in technology transfer.

Section 202. Research Committee and Management Plan.—Research programs at EPA are generally monitored and guided by media-specific research committees. There are currently five such committees (air, waste, water, energy and toxics). This section adds a sixth group for ground water research. The group is to be jointly chaired by the Office of Water and the Office of Research and Development. Members of the committee are drawn from offices within EPA.

The research committee is to issue a report annually which is to be a five-year (the preceding fiscal year, the current fiscal year, and three succeeding fiscal years) plan and which is to serve as the management tool for the ground water research program. The report is to include a list of upcoming ground water policy decisions and the research needs of the policymakers with respect to those decisions. The report is to be published in draft form for comment and the final report is to be transmitted to Congress each April 15.

This section provides for the appointment of a ground water research manager in ORD who is to provide central direction for the ground water research program.

Section 203. Control Technologies.—This section requires EPA to establish a program to develop control technologies for sources of ground water contaminants in various categories. In general, EPA will be assisting persons who have "invented" control technologies with the "demonstration" and "dissemination" of those techniques.

EPA is to make a biennial solicitation for proposals. The legislation includes criteria for project selection including: 1) potential for the technology to effectively control sources of ground water contaminants; 2) the capability of the person proposing the demonstration to complete the project; 3) the applicability of the technology under a wide range of circumstances; 4) financial support from other sources; and 5) the capability of the developer to disseminate the technology to the public.

EPA is to provide assistance for at least 10 proposals each year. Assistance is generally limited to 59% of the project cost, but the Administrator is authorized to provide full Federal funding for basic and essential research projects. EPA is required to make every effort to disseminate the control technologies proven effective. The patent policy of Title IV of this bill applies to technologies developed.

Section 204. List of Contaminants.—This section requires EPA to prepare and update a list of ground water contaminants.

The initial list of contaminants is to include: each substance for which a primary drinking water regulation is required under the Safe Drinking Water Act; contaminants for which a health advisory has been issued; contaminants listed pursuant to section 104(i) of CERCLA; contaminants listed pursuant to section 307 of the Clean Water Act; and pesticides with a potential to leach to ground water. There is considerable overlap among these lists.

EPA will work with other Federal agencies to determine whether adequate health and environmental effects information is available for each contaminant on the list. If not, a research program to fill the data gaps will be prepared and conducted by the Agency using existing research authorities of CERCLA.

The Director of the National Toxicology Program is to propose a research program for each of the contaminants listed which describes the research necessary to adequately characterize the risk to human health and the environment as the result of the presence of the contaminant in ground water. After public comment on the research program, the Administrator is to make needed changes and publish the program. The Administrator is to assure that the research program is implemented and shall assure coordination with CERCLA, TSCA and FIFRA authorities. The Administrator may also use funds authorized under section 111(m) of CERCLA to conduct such research.

Section 205. Ground Water Contaminant Risk Assessment.—This section requires the Administrator to prepare risk assessment documents on 30 contaminants within 24 months and an additional 30 contaminants within an additional 36 months. The risk assessments are to serve a role comparable to criteria documents now published under authority of the Clean Water Act.

The risk assessments are to include: 1) a summary of recent scientific information about the contaminant; 2) factors which contribute to the effects of the contaminant on human health and the environment; 3) clarification of the assumptions and uncertainties in the science related to the contaminant; 4) a comparison with risks posed by other contaminants.

Section 206. Contaminant Source Survey.—This section requires the Administrator to conduct a series of surveys of major sources of ground water contamination similar to the National Pesticide Survey which the Agency is now conducting. The purpose of the surveys is to determine whether additional controls on sources in the category are necessary to adequately protect ground water supplies. The other source categories to be covered by the surveys include septic tanks and cesspools; landfills, surface impoundments and wastepiles; class V injection wells; fertilizer applications; irrigation return flows; POTWs; light industry; and transportation corridors. Governors may petition EPA to add categories to this list.

Prior to conducting any survey, EPA is to complete (or update) a health advisory for each contaminant which the Agency expects to find in drinking water wells as part of the survey. This information is to be made available to the owners of wells when contamination is found. In addition, referrals for corrective action or compliance action under the Safe Drinking Water Act is to be taken where contamination is found.

Section 207. Study of Health Effects of Nitrates and Nitrosamines.—This section authorizes a study of the health effects of nitrates (a widespread ground water contaminant) and nitrosamines (a metabolite of nitrates thought to be carcinogenic).

Section 208. Study of Abandoned Wells.—This section authorizes a study, to be completed by September 1, 1989, of abandoned production and injection wells, including former drinking water wells, and the impact of abandoned wells on ground water quality. The study is to include recommendations on the most cost effective steps which can be taken to assure that further damage to ground water by abandonded wells is prevented.

Section 210. Ground Water Research Institutes.—This section authorizes EPA to establish and provide grant assistance to eight regional ground water research institutes at universities across the country.

The legislation provides criteria for selecting the locations of the institutes. Federal funding is limited to 50% of the research program. The institutes must submit an annual proposal and report. The bill provides for an explicit, on-site review of the institutes every five years. The institutes are to be selected and evaluated by the Administrator acting jointly with the Secretary of the Interior, but are to be funded and managed on a regular basis by EPA.

PART B—PROGRAMS OF THE DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR

Section 221. Amendment Authority.—This section amends the original act establishing the Geological Survey to define the role of the Survey in ground water research. This builds on an existing research program at the Geological Survey that includes studies of both surface water and ground water. The current authorization are increased by $10 million in this section to $160 million total.

Section 222. Ground Water Inventory Report.—This section directs the United States Geological Survey to prepare an inventory of the ground water resources based on existing data, and an evaluation of the adequacy of existing ground water data collection and monitoring programs conducted by the Federal, State and local governments. The report for this section is required within 12 months.

Section 223. National Assessment of Ground Water Quality.—This section authorizes the United States Geological Survey to develop, based on the information and recommendations of the Inventory in Section 222, an assessment of the ground water quality. The assessment is to be based on a nationwide sampling and monitoring program and to identify changes and trends in the nation's ground water quantity and quality.

Section 224. Authorities of the Administrator.—This section states that nothing in this part shall limit the authorities of the Administrator or other head of any Federal agency.

Section 225. Research Program of the Bureau of Reclamation.—This section directs the Department of Interior, acting through the Bureau of Reclamation, to research the effects of existing and proposed water projects on the quantity and quality of ground water and surface waters. $500,000 is authorized for FY 1989 and 1990.

Section 226. Research Program of the Bureau of Mines.—This section authorizes the Bureau of Mines to study the impact of mining on ground water quality with an authorization of $1 million per fiscal year.

PART C—GROUND WATER RESEARCH PROGRAM OF THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Section 231. Department of Agriculture.—This section authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to develop a research program with the participation of the Agricultural Research Service and the Cooperative State Research Service. The plan to be submitted to the Interagency Ground Water Research Task Force and include an evaluation of the current level of effort, a listing of major policy decisions and practices that may impact the quality of ground water.

Section 233. Agricultural Nitrogen Best Management Practices.—This section provides for the establishment of a Nitrogen Best Practices Committee to develop a study and education program on best management practices to minimize the impact of agricultural nitrogen on ground water quality.

Section 234. Efficient Use of Nutrients.—This section directs the Secretary of Agriculture to conduct research on practices, methods, and techniques for improving the efficiency of fertilizer uses in agriculture.

Section 235. Agricultural Drainage Well Study.—This section authorizes a study of agricultural draining wells and their impact on ground water quality, and includes a provision for the study of alternative drainage methods.

Section 236. Education.—This section directs the Secretary of Agriculture to establish a public education program for the dissemination of information to farmers and rural residents, and a training program for professionals and technicians in issues related to agricultural practices, methods, alternatives and the ground water quality.

PART D—ADDITIONAL PROVISIONS

Section 241. Lake Okeechobee Ecosystem Research System.—This section directs the Administrator in cooperation with the Secretary of the Army to study the relationship between the quality and quantity of surface and ground waters and the control of aquatic plants. Authorizations are incremental over 3 years, starting at $5 million and increasing a million each year to $7 million.

Section 242. Western Center and Research Program.—This section establishes a Western Center for Nuclear and Ground Water Research within Nevada to evaluate the potential for leaching of radionuclides and the migration of these contaminants in ground water in an arid climate. The Center shall review existing and proposed programs and projects relating to containment of radioactive waste.

TITLE III—STATE GROUND WATER STRATEGIES

Section 301. State Ground Water Strategies.—This provision authorizes the Federal government to provide 50% matching grants to states for planning and implementation of state strategies for ground water management. The states may use the grants for planning, mapping, identification and control of sources, research, monitoring, enforcement of permits or standards of education. There is no requirement that any State program contain any specific element(s).

Grants monies are allotted based on the amount and severity of contamination in the state, the geographic area, and the number of person relying on ground water for drinking water. Each state is to receive a minimum of not less than $75,000 under this.

Section 302. Assistance to Small Communities for Radium Contamination in Ground

Water.—This section directs the Administrator to assist local governments in demonstrating mitigation technologies for radium contamination in ground water. Assistance is used to finance acquisition and installation of technologies that would remove radium from drinking water.

Section 303. Extension of Wellhead Protection Area Plans.—This provision extends by 2 years the time for states to designate wellhead protection areas.

Section 304. Extension of Sole Source Aquifer Protection Areas.—This provision extends by 2 years the time for states to designate areas for sole source aquifer protection under the Safe Drinking Water Act, passed by the 99th Congress.

TITLE VI—PATENT POLICY

This title assures that the Environmental Protection Agency will have a consistent patent policy for developing new technologies for the source controls, monitoring, or other applications related to ground water protection, maintenance, and restoration.

This title is based on the existing statute (Chapter 38 of Title 35 of the U.S. Code) and has been changed only to make it specifically apply to EPA.●

● Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I am pleased to join with the distinguished chairman of the Environment and Public Works Committee, Senator BURDICK, and our good friend the senior Senator from New York, Mr. MOYNIHAN, to introduce ground water research legislation on the first day of the 101st Congress.

Ground water legislation has proven to be a controversial subject here in the Senate. That is understandable. First, it is an important resource. Fifty percent of our people depend upon ground water for their drinking water supplies. And it plays a major role in agricultural production.

Second, the resource is under a growing threat of contamination from literally millions of sources of discharge. From spills of hazardous waste to underground storage tanks to agricultural practices to contamination through overdrafting and saltwater intrusion, there is a wide range of human activities that threaten our ground water quality. And, of course, there are interests organized around those activities that are determined to protect the status quo.

And third, there is a great deal of diversity in the nature of the ground water resource and in the way it is managed across the country. This diversity spawns concern at the State and local level about any Federal program for ground water protection or management.

Several Federal agencies have been assigned ground water responsibilities by statute. In a 1984 study the Office of Technology Assessment reported that 22 different agencies had some ground water protection or management responsibility. The principal agencies assigned research responsibilities under this bill are the Environmental Protection Agency, the Geological Survey, and the Department of Agriculture. We want those agencies to coordinate their efforts and to avoid unnecessary duplication. And so we have established a coordinating task force in the first title of this bill.

But coordination can be overdone. It can stifle important research. If all of the jobs are divided upon into mutually exclusive boxes on some organization chart, it can become impossible to move forward as the priorities of agencies conflict and gaps in the knowledge base necessary to get from one point to the next remain unfilled. So there can be too much coordination—to much central direction—in a huge research undertaking like this.

In my view the task force is to be an honest broker—a point where agencies can come to share their resources and make arrangements of mutual advantage on a voluntary basis—and not a central committee with dictatorial powers. No agency should be denied the authority to conduct the research that is necessary to carry out its basic mission.

For instance, EPA is charged by law with protecting human health and the environment from the adverse effects of manmade pollutants. Fulfilling this responsibility requires knowledge over a broad range of physical and biological phenomena. Although we hope that the work of the Geological Survey on basic hydrologic questions will be of the greatest benefit to EPA in meeting its responsibilities—we don't wish to deny to EPA the authority to conduct the necessary basic research in the event that the Geological Survey has other priorities. Thus, this bill gives EPA a very broad and general grant of authority for ground water research.

In the same vein, it is not expected that EPA would in any way interfere with the mission of the Geological Survey either by excluding it from research in particular areas—the fate and transport of contaminants in soil and ground water—or supporting extramural research that would be more appropriately conducted through the Survey. We have given each agency a broad mission statement to provide direction and a sense of priorities to ground water research at the agency, but these mission statements are not intended to preclude similar work by other agencies when it is essential to complete an assigned task.

Mr. President, I have emphasized this issue of coordination and the division of responsibility among agencies because it is quite important. We must enter this area carefully because the authority to coordinate or assign research responsibilities between agencies is an authority that can be used and abused for policy ends that might not be supported here in the Senate.

We have too often seen decisions from the Office of Management and Budget which shift research and study responsibilities from one agency to another with the intent of preventing the development of a new program or new regulation which doesn't match the policy predisposition of the Budget Office and its anonymous analysts. I hope we won't see that kind of policy manipulation practiced by any majority of the interagency task force established by this bill. This is a research bill. And the coordinating mechanism is included in the hope that we can maximize the value of the resources that we invest in ground water research. This is not a tool to control policy outputs across the Federal Government.

Another theme that I would touch upon is the role of the Federal Government in ground water protection in relation to the role of the States. Mr. President, I began working on the subject of ground water protection in 1983 as chairman of the Toxic Substances and Environmental Oversight Subcommittee. In November of that year I chaired a hearing of the subcommittee on the general problem of ground water contamination. It was really my first exposure to the ground water issues, although other members of the committee had been working on solving ground water problems for a long time.

The witnesses at that hearing included three assistant administrators from EPA. I asked the simple question—what is the major threat to ground water quality in the Nation today? In response we heard for the first time, I believe, that leaking underground storage tanks and leaching pesticides are a significant threat to our ground water supplies. The headline maker that day was a witness from Maine who said that 11,000,000 gallons of gasoline were being lost from underground tanks to soil and ground water in that State every year.

I am pleased to say that since the 1983 hearings the Congress has tried to respond to the LUST and pesticide issues. In 1984 we passed a regulatory program for tanks. In 1986 we passed a tank cleanup program. And in 1986 both the House and Senate unanimously adopted ground water protection amendments on the bill to reauthorize FIFRA.

I recount that history to make a simple point. Those were ground water protection programs, but nobody ever claimed that either one of those bills threatened the right of any State to control its ground water resources. Early on the service station owners were concerned that leak-proof tanks would be too expensive. On the pesticide bill, the chemical manufacturers will tell you that the standards of the drinking water program are too stringent for their products to meet.

But nobody has claimed that the tank program threatened the fundamental and traditional role of the State of Idaho or New York or Maine or Minnesota to regulate its ground water. Nobody from Nebraska or Kansas or Colorado has ever said that the pesticide bill threatened their water rights established under State law.

My point is this, Mr. President. Those of us who support comprehensive ground water protection legislation have no interest in regulating ground water or water rights. We do want to protect ground water quality. Some regulation may be necessary to accomplish that. But there is no State tradition for preventing ground water contamination from pesticides. There aren't many good State programs for sanitary landfills or surface impoundments or the long list of other threats. Maybe the Federal Government can provide a little leadership in these areas. Maybe even some regulations.

But we don't need to regulate ground water. The underground storage tank program hardly even mentions ground water. There is no water quality standard. There isn't any elaborate aquifer classification scheme. The tank program just says, "Build a better tank. Do a better job installing the tank. Monitor your tank for leaks." It's a technology program. It requires that better technology and better practices be applied to a major source of ground water contamination. And it does so without threatening the water law or traditional authorities of any State. In fact, practically all of the States have duplicated our Federal legislation with new underground storage tank laws of their own, because they had no traditional program in this area.

I could have made just exactly the same case using the 1984 RCRA amendments which include a comprehensive, technology-based program for the disposal of hazardous waste in a wide variety of settings.

The bill we are introducing today is not a regulatory bill. It is just a research bill. It won't of itself protect ground water from contamination. It will simply provide for us the information that we need to undertake that task. Furthermore, it does not assign responsibilities as between the Federal Government and the States. This bill doesn't say that the States shall today and forever have primacy with respect to ground water protection. And it doesn't presume a stronger Federal role in the future either. It puts off that difficult question for another day.

I have outlined the existing Federal ground water protection responsibilities simply to demonstrate that the Federal Government already does a great deal in this area and has done so without in any way threatening the traditional responsibilities of the States. In fact, we have undertaken these programs in close cooperation with the States. They are the foundation for these Federal efforts and the States support their continuation.

Mr. President, this bill has eight major elements.

GENERAL RESEARCH AUTHORITY

The Environmental Protection Agency is given broad authority to conduct research and investigations with respect to the prevention, detection, and correction of ground water contamination. Priorities for this research include methods to predict the fate and movement of contaminants in ground water, the development of analytical methods for detecting contaminants, efforts to reduce the generation and discharge of waste, and research on the health and environmental effects of contaminants when present in ground water. The bill provides $40 million per year for this EPA research program and establishes a ground water research committee at EPA to manage the effort.

EPA currently conducts ground water related research principally under authority of the Solid Waste Disposal Act and the Superfund program. In 1985 EPA spent approximately $18 million on ground water research. As one might expect, most of this research was focused on remediation and correction efforts. It is our intent in this legislation to broaden that focus and to put added emphasis on research efforts that will improve our ability to prevent ground water contamination.

CONTROL TECHNOLOGIES

EPA is directed to assist in the development and demonstration of methods and technologies which would be effective in reducing or preventing ground water contamination. Research under this authority might include the development of leak detection systems for underground storage tanks, the development of new pesticide products which are less likely to leach or pest management practices which do not rely on chemicals, the demonstration of best management practices for fertilizer applications, and the development of new caps and liners for waste disposal facilities. This section of the bill authorizes applied research. EPA is to solicit proposals for the demonstration of new methods and technologies and can provide grants for up to 50 percent of the development cost for 10 projects each year. The legislation emphasizes rapid transfer of the new technologies to other users and wide commercial distribution.

HEALTH EFFECTS RESEARCH

EPA in cooperation with the National Toxicology Program and the Agency for Toxic Substances and Disease Registry is to conduct a series of studies to determine the health and environmental effects of contaminants which are found in ground water. A recent study by the Office of Technology Assessment indicated that as many as 200 different chemical and biological contaminants have been found in ground water supplies across the country. For most of these contaminants the toxicological and environmental data is incomplete. Under the authority provided in this bill the NTP will propose a battery of tests for each known contaminant which would be adequate to determine the full range of possible health and environmental effects. The proposed research program is to be reviewed and approved by EPA.

RESEARCH INSTITUTES

EPA is authorized to establish and provide assistance to eight ground water research institutes which are to be located at universities in different regions of the United States. The institutes will conduct basic research using multidisciplinary scientific teams and will provide advanced education in the ground water sciences. In addition, the institutes are to play a strong role in disseminating the information and practices which are developed under the research programs authorized in this bill. The work of the institutes will be reviewed periodically by EPA and representatives of the National Academy of Sciences. The bill provides $16 million per year to assist the institutes.

CONTAMINATION ASSESSMENTS

The bill requires EPA to conduct seven nationwide surveys of potential ground water problems associated with specific sources of contamination: pesticide applications, septic tanks, fertilizer applications, injection wells, irrigation return flows, landfills and solid waste disposal facilities, light industry, transportation corridors, and publicly owned sewage treatment facilities. These assessments would identify the population of such sources nationwide, the types of contamination that might be associated with each source, the likely health effects of the possible contaminants, and the degree of contamination that has already been experienced. EPA has already begun the pilot stages on one such assessment for pesticides.

USGS PROGRAMS

The bill authorizes various ground water quality and quantity research programs at the U.S. Geological Survey. Many of these programs are already in place, but have not received a congressional authorization. These programs include the basic water resources research effort of USGS; the Federal-State cooperative program which makes national resources and expertise available to solve problems identified by State officials; the Regional Aquifer System Analysis Program which is studying the flow characteristics of 28 major aquifer systems in the United States; and a national ground water quality inventory which USGS has begun on a pilot basis.

Mr. President, this portion of the bill owes much to the efforts of our colleagues in the House of Representatives and in particular Congressman SAM GEJDENSON who has over several years worked in this effort in that body. We are indebted to the sponsors of the House counterpart to this title of our bill for the leadership they have shown on these issues.

WATER RESOURCES RESEARCH INSTITUTES

This bill reauthorizes the Interior Department program which supports water resources institutes at land-grant universities in each of the 50 States. This program was begun in 1984 and has proved highly successful. In the past each institute has received a grant of about $100,000 per year. Under this new legislation we would also make available a pool of funds for competitive grants that go beyond the basic program to support special projects that maximize the strengths of the university receiving a competitive award.

AGRICULTURAL RESEARCH

The bill also authorizes a small program of research at USDA which is to focus on the use of agricultural chemicals—pesticides and fertilizer—the impact of such chemicals on ground water quality and steps that can be taken to reduce the negative effects including nonchemical solutions to pest problems. In particular we are concerned about technology transfers and getting the results of all this research out into the hands of those who can and will use it to protect ground water resources.

COORDINATION

The bill requires the President to establish an interagency program to coordinate the ground water research of the various Federal agencies. In addition, the separate agencies are required to consult and cooperate in the conduct of those programs which are assigned to each agency.

Mr. President, that is a brief summary of the major provisions of the bill.

Before concluding, Mr. President, I would make just a few brief comments with respect to other aspects of this legislative effort.

This bill results from the work of many. I have mentioned the chairman and members of our committee and the Members of the House who have been working on the various provisions of this bill. But we also need to offer our thanks to the members of the Ground Water Research Review Committee of EPA's Science Advisory Board. This committee was chaired by John Quarles, a former deputy administrator of the agency. The committee made its report in July 1985. The members of the committee bear no responsibility for the mistakes we have made, but their report did serve as a point of departure for our work on this bill and I hope each member of the committee can see fruit for some part of their commitment in this legislation.

We need also to mention the report of the Office of Technology Assessment, the report of the Environmental and Energy Study Institute, and the work of the National Ground Water Forum which was directed by the staff of the Conservation Foundation including Toby Clark which have played such a large part in shaping our thinking on the ground water protection issues.

Mr. President, let me just conclude by once again thanking the distinguished chairmen of our committee, Senator BURDICK, and the subcommittee, Senator MOYNIHAN, for taking the lead on this issue. That the Senator from North Dakota and the Senator from New York have been able to make time for this issue among all the other pressing priorities is most gratifying and speaks well of their commitment to protect the environmental resources of our Nation.●

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, in terms of volume, Idaho ranks in the top five ground water-using States in the Nation, pumping over 6.3 billion gallons of ground water every day. Naturally, therefore, the quality of that ground water is of vital interest to my state.

That is why I have asked the Senator from New York [Mr. MOYNIHAN] to be added as a cosponsor of the Ground Water Research Management and Education Act of 1989, which he is introducing today. This bill is identical to the Senate version of H.R. 791 which passed in this body by unanimous consent in the last Congress.

I would like to commend the sponsor of the bill for realizing the importance of good science in addressing the problems facing the Nation's ground water supply. The research program being advanced in this legislation would greatly enhance interagency communication, clarify research responsibilities, and establish specific end goals—all of which should improve the body of scientific knowledge available.

This is a research bill, and I am especially relieved to see that it contains no directive or requirement for ground water regulation. The two hearings held by the Environment and Public Works Committee early last year contained significant testimony to the effect that regulation legislation would be inappropriate at this time, and that when appropriate, it should be a responsibility of the State, not Federal Government. The idea that we should proceed with a research initiative now, allowing future regulatory decisions to be made from a more enlightened perspective, seems to me to be very prudent. It is for this reason that I have asked to be a cosponsor of the legislation.

That said, the bill is not what I myself would have drafted. For example, I believe the issue of State preeminence in ground water is not strongly enough expressed in the bill's findings or in the tone of later sections.

According to a February 5 U.S. Geological Survey report on Idaho's ground water quality, "the chemical characteristics and suitability for use of Idaho's ground water differ throughout the State. Its chemical quality is generally suitable for most uses and meets national drinking water standards."

I find it significant that the USGS notes how ground water characteristics differ dramatically even with a single State like Idaho. The differences are even greater from State to State. Heavily water-dependent Western States, in particular, face ground water conditions dramatically different from those in the Midwest and Eastern portions of the country. For this reason, the importance of State supremacy in ground water priority decisions cannot be overemphasized.

I also have concerns about the seemingly mechanistic creation of a list of "groundwater contaminants" upon which the bill requires significant research programs to be based. In working with the Senator from New York last year, we made significant progress to improve this process. Still, I would hope this year that additional consideration will be given to making this part of the bill more flexible, allowing for greater discretion in directing research priorities and goals.

There has also been a great deal of debate over the role to be played by the U.S. Geological Survey in the research effort. I for one, am very impressed with the USGS program, and would favor giving that agency an upper hand in groundwater research efforts governmentwide. Language in the bill introduced today may too narrowly define the scope of USGS efforts, and I believe it should be reviewed again this year.

The Environmental Protection Agency is, by definition, an "independent regulatory agency." As such, it is, in my opinion, much more oriented toward regulation than is an agency such as the USGS for example. I am not comfortable with the role played by EPA in this legislation and, again, hope that this section of the bill will be scrutinized a little closer this year.

In spite of these few remaining concerns, however, the bill on the whole is a good one, and I am not insensitive to the fact that not all members of this body may share my views—so some compromise is necessary. As long as this legislation is directed toward ground water research, Mr. President, I am committed to working toward a balanced compromise in good faith. I must forewarn my colleagues, however, that any attempt to transform this research bill into a regulatory proposal will be very detrimental to such good faith negotiations.

There is general consensus on the need for a groundwater research bill, and one can be achieved early in this Congress in a productive bipartisan manner. On the other hand, there is no consensus on the imposition of Federal groundwater regulations, and any such proposal will immediately result in an adversarial battle which would be, in my opinion, very unproductive. I believe the sponsor of the bill, the good Senator from New York, is aware of this situation, and I commit to him my support in maintaining the integrity of the bill as a research initiative.

● Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, today I am joining Senators BURDICK, MOYNIHAN, DURENBERGER, and others in introducing the Ground Water Research, Management, and Education Act. This bill authorizes a comprehensive research, management, and education program for preventing, controlling, and correcting ground water pollution.

According to the Office of Technology Assessment, ground water contamination has occurred in every State and is being detected with increasing frequency. This contamination has adverse health, social, environmental, and economic impacts, which are likely to increase if we fail to act. Although a number of statutes address aspects of the ground water problem, there is an urgent need to fill the gaps and weaknesses left by these laws. The time has come to establish a program to protect the quality of the Nation's ground water.

Ground water is of special significance in my State. Over 50 percent of the people in New Jersey get their drinking water from ground water supplies. EPA has designated six ground water sources in New Jersey covering 90 percent of the State and serving over 4 million people as sole source aquifers.

Fortunately, New Jersey has a sufficient supply of good quality ground water for most users throughout the State. There are, however, some serious local problems. Since 1970, nearly 1,200 wells have been closed because of contamination from organic compounds and another 200 wells have been closed because of other contaminants. And a 1985 State survey found that 18 percent of New Jersey's public water supplies had detectable concentrations of one or more organic contaminants. These figures should provide sufficient warning to us of the need to take strong action to prevent ground water contamination.

The Ground Water Research, Management, and Education Act establishes a comprehensive program to deal with ground water pollution. It has three main objectives:

First, it establishes a ground water research task force in the Office of the President to coordinate the Federal agencies' research, to identify gaps in research and to consult with State and local governments regarding information States require to manage ground water programs.

Second, it authorizes research programs and studies at EPA, the U.S. Geological Survey and the Department of Agriculture which will advance our understanding of ground water contamination and of control technologies for ground water.

Third, it authorizes $50 million for a 50-percent Federal matching grant program for States to use for such activities as planning, mapping, identification, and control of sources, research, monitoring, enforcement, and education.

This bill is exactly the same as one which passed the Senate last September. Unfortunately, there was not enough time to resolve differences between the House and Senate bills before Congress adjourned.

Mr. President, enactment of this legislation should be one of the highest priorities for environmental legislation during this Congress. I urge my colleagues to join us in supporting this legislation.●

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my distinguished colleagues on the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee, Senator MOYNIHAN, Senator BURDICK, and Senator DURENBERGER, in introducing the Ground Water Research, Management, and Education Act. This bill was unanimously approved by the Environment and Public Works Committee during the 100th Congress.

Ground water is an important national resource, providing about half of the population's drinking water, 80 percent of rural and livestock needs and 40 percent of irrigation needs. As in many States, ground water availability is an issue of major concern in Nevada—the most arid State in the Union. According to the U.S. Geological Survey, ground water provides about 24 percent of the total water withdrawn and supplies about 40 percent of the State's population—more than 400,000 people. In many areas, ground water provides the entire supply. Further development must rely on ground water sources or the reallocation of surface water supplies; supplies which have been fully appropriated.

Concern over the quality of our Nation's ground water is also increasing. A 1984 Office of Technology Assessment study notes that ground water contamination has been detected in every State with increasing frequency. Various activities in Nevada, including waste disposal, mining, nuclear bomb testing, and other defense related activities, threaten the quality of the ground water. Arsenic, radon, and uranium are trace elements that are present naturally in ground water; and these elements are potentially hazardous to water users.

Certainly the need to protect this precious resource is apparent. There is no question that considerable attention has focused on the Nation's ground water supply. There are more than two dozen agencies or offices involved in ground water related activities; efforts that many believe are duplicative and disorganized. The Ground Water Research, Management, and Education Act seeks to coordinate our national ground water research program and to clarify the roles of the Federal agencies involved.

A plethora of valuable research about ground water is underway in Nevada. To address concerns about coordinating activities at the local level, the bill authorizes the establishment of a western center for nuclear and ground water research in Nevada. This center will consolidate existing environmental research in the State and permit our Federal agencies and university system to focus on the isolation of hazardous and nuclear wastes from our environment and the protection of ground water from contamination and overuse.

Mr. President, the Senate adopted this worthwhile proposal during the last Congress; although time constraints precluded negotiations with the House on the measure. By introducing the Ground Water Research, Management, and Education Act today, we demonstrate our commitment to developing a balanced proposal that will expand and strengthen research of ground water and ground water pollution problems. Thank you.

By Mr. HATCH (for himself and Mr. THURMOND):

S. 204. A bill to provide procedures for calling Federal constitutional conventions under article V for the purpose of proposing amendments to the United States Constitution; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION IMPLEMENTATION ACT

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I am pleased to introduce today the Constitutional Convention Implementation Act of 1989. This important proposal was approved by the full Judiciary Committee in both the 98th and 99th Congresses.

Article V of the U.S. Constitution provides that constitutional amendments may be proposed in either of two ways. The first—the means by which every successful amendment to the Constitution has been proposed—requires the agreement of two-thirds of each House of Congress. The second requires the agreement of a convention called by Congress in response to the applications of two-thirds of the State legislatures. Ratification of amendments proposed through either method is to be done either by the legislatures, or by conventions, in three-fourths of the States, depending upon the determination of Congress.

Largely as a result of the fact that the convention method of constitutional revision has never been successfully employed, there are substantial questions that relate to it:

What constitutes a valid application to the Congress?

What procedures must a State follow in submitting an application?

Must the precise language of the proposed amendment be included within the application?

How similar must the language be in applications of various States in order to allow them to be aggregated?

How long does an application remain valid? May such applications be rescinded by the States?

What is the extent of congressional power to review applications? What is the extent of congressional power to restrict the deliberations of the convention?

What is the extent of State power to restrict the deliberations of the convention?

How is the convention to be organized? How are the States to be represented at the convention?

May Congress refuse to submit the product of a convention to the States for ratification?

How are constitutional convention-proposed amendments to be ratified by the States?

With respect to most of these questions, there is very little constitutional guidance. The relevant language of article V states simply:

> The Congress "on the application of the legislature of two-thirds of the several states, shall call a convention for proposing amendments."

Nor are there useful precedents in view of the fact that there has never been a constitutional convention under article V. Each of the questions involved in this, the alternative means of amending the Constitution, is therefore a threshold question.

OBJECTIVES OF ACT

Article I, section 8, clause 18 of the Constitution invests authority in Congress to:

> Make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States.

This provision clearly authorizes the Congress to pass legislation that would give effect to the convention method of constitutional alteration. This would be a direct function of its article V authority to call a convention pursuant to applications of two-thirds of the States.

I am introducing legislation, the Constitutional Convention Implementation Act, which would fill in the interstices of article V. It is similar to legislation which I have introduced during the previous four Congresses, and which was unanimously approved by the Subcommittee on the Constitution during the 97th Congress. It is particularly important that this body act on this, or similar legislation, in view of the fact that numerous State legislatures have already purported to submit applications to Congress for the convening of a constitution convention on the subject of a balanced budget amendment. I would only hope that this act, however, could be considered separately from the merits of this or any other specific amendment effort.

The Constitutional Convention Implementation Act is designed to establish what are basically neutral procedures to guide the conduct of constitutional conventions generally. While the imminence of a convention on the matter of a balanced budget has clearly created the urgency for this legislation, the act is designed neither to facilitate nor obstruct the eventual achievement of a balanced budget amendment, or any other constitutional amendment. The purpose of this legislation is primarily to insure that Congress has clear standards and criteria by which to judge convention applications before it, and that any convention that takes place under article V is conducted in an orderly and nonchaotic manner.

One must look to the policy underlying the establishment of the convention form of amendment in order to construct an appropriate procedures bill. Even a cursory analysis of the original Constitutional Convention—convened under the auspices of the Articles of Confederation—makes clear that the final provisions of article V resulted from a compromise between those delegates who sought to invest proposal authority solely in Congress and those who sought to invest it solely in the State legislature. The two modes of initiating amendments were viewed as essentially equivalent alternatives, each of which was to serve as a check upon the intransigence of either the national legislature or the State legislature in the matter of proposing constitutional revision.

In view of this fundamental purpose, I believe that legislation giving effect to the convention method of amendment should be such that resort to its use will not render the Constitution too mutable—the Federalist No. 43—while at the same time insuring that it will not be rendered null and void because it remains too cumbersome a method. The amendment process should never be one that can be successfully employed with great ease, yet neither should it be a process totally incapable of being used to alter the Constitution. The requirement that State convention applications relate to the same general subject or subjects serves to ensure the existence of some real consensus among the States with respect to the need for constitutional revision in some relatively circumscribed area.

PROVISIONS OF ACT

I would like to briefly discuss the provisions of this act and explain their justification. I should add at the outset my debt to the efforts of our former colleague, Senator Sam Ervin. While my bill differs in a number of respects from legislation that Senator Ervin successfully shepherded through the Senate in 1971 and 1973, its basic structure is closely related to that measure. That legislation was approved unanimously on one occasion by this body, and by a voice vote on the other occasion.

Section I of my bill states that its short title is the "Constitutional Convention Implementation Act of 1989."

CONVENTION APPLICATIONS

Section 2 specifies the manner in which States are to make applications for a constitutional convention. It states simply that the legislature shall specify within its application for a convention, the general subject of the amendment or amendments to be proposed. The objective of this standard is to ensure that two-thirds of the States have a sufficiently similar purpose to warrant the aggregation of their applications.

The purpose of the application process is to determine that there exists some form of consensus among the States on the matter of a relatively well-defined area of amendment. This consensus cannot fairly be said to be in evidence if aggregation is to be permitted of applications that are, at best, only incidentally related.

On the other hand, it cannot be reasonably expected that identical, or even nearly identical, language be employed in petitions that ought to be aggregated. Such a requirement is highly unrealistic with respect to 50 diverse State legislative bodies; the imposition of such a rigid rule would effectively render the alternative method of amendment provided in article V useless. Further, to the extent that a petition was required to be precise, either with respect to the specific amendment sought, or the specific language sought, there would be little use for the convention itself. To limit the convention to the consideration of a single, meticulously worded amendment is to make the convention a farce. In order for the convention to be a meaningful part of the article V process, it must have some leeway within which to exercise its legitimate discretion.

LIMITED CONVENTIONS

That this discretion, however, is not without its limits is the subject of section 2(b), and, indeed, is the basic theme of the Constitutional Convention Implementation Act. This section states that the procedures provided in the act are to be followed only in the case applications for what are commonly referred to as "limited" conventions. Such conventions are defined for the purposes of this act as conventions designed to consider one or more specific predefined areas of amendment to the Constitution of the United States. Implicit in this section is the recognition that the States may call for the convening of either limited or general conventions; it is, however, simply with respect to the former that the terms of this act apply.

A general convention would be one in which the States petitioned for a convention, not with any specific or limited purposes in mind, but for the purpose of making whatever revisions were deemed necessary or desirable by the convention itself. It is this sort of convention that poses such great concerns to most observers, including myself. I am far from confident that a contemporary general convention could do much to improve upon the work of Madison, Hamilton, and Wilson. While there is no way that Congress, through passage of a simple statute, could preclude the States from requesting a general convention—this is their right under article V—neither is Congress precluded from clarifying that the States are fully within their rights in seeking a limited convention.

There is academic dispute as to the possibilities of a limited constitutional convention. Prof. Charles Black of the Yale Law School, for example, believes that the constitutional convention is a free agent, sovereign and without limitations. According to this theory, the convention represents the premier assembly of the people, and is therefore supreme to all other Government branches and agencies. It cannot be limited in the scope of its deliberations, whatever the limited nature of the grievances that brought the convention into being.

I would disagree with this interpretation. The constitutional convention, while clearly a unique and separate element of the Government—a temporary new branch of the Government—a new branch of the Government, so to speak—is subject to the same limitations and checks and balances as the other, permanent branches of the Government. A constitutional conventions, as its name clearly implies, is a constitutional entity; it is appointed under the terms of the Constitution and subject to all of the express and implied limitations imposed by that document. As observed by Professor Jameson in his classic work on constitutional conventions:

> The convention's principal features is that it is subaltern—it is evoked by the side and at the call of a Government preexisting and intended to survive it, for the purpose of administering to its special needs. It never supplants the existing organization. It never governs. Though called to look into and recommend improvement in the fundamental laws, it enacts neither them nor the statute laws; and it performs no act of administration.

The Federal constitutional convention is an instrument of the Government, and acts properly only when it acts in comformity to its authorized powers.

There is nothing in the language of article V to suggest that the convention method of amendment cannot be limited to a single area of amendment. The symmetry between the competing processes of constitutional amendment is emphasized by Madison in the Federalist No. 43 in discussing the objectives of article V:

> That useful alteration will be suggested by experience, could not be foreseen. It was requisite therefore that a mode for introducing them should be provided. The mode preferred by the convention seems to be stamped with every mark of propriety. It guards equally against that extreme facility which would render the Constitution too mutable; and that extreme difficulty which might perpetuate its discovered faults. It moreover equally enables the general and the State governments to originate the amendment of errors as they may be pointed out by the experience on one side or on the other.

It was clearly contemplated that the article V primarily anticipated specific amendment or amendments, rather than general revisions, and that no distinction was to be drawn between the competing methods of amendment in this respect.

To enable Congress to propose specific constitutional amendments while allowing the States only to propose general constitutional revision is to confer markedly unequal powers of amendment upon these governments, an intention contradicted by the unanimous weight of documentary evidence. If the States are to have no ability to control the actions of a convention in the form of their convention applications, then there will be strong disincentives for them to seek such conventions. In the absence of broad-based dissatisfaction with the existing constitutional system, why should they want to risk the possibility of a convention acting beyond the scope of their application? Why, in seeking to originate the "amendment of errors" described by Madison should the State have to risk total revision of the constitutional system?

It is anomalous that in seeking to correct what might be a narrow defect in the system that the States should have to place the entire system in jeopardy. What better means could there be to perpetuate the discovered faults of the system? What better means could there be to place the convention system of amendment in an unequivalent position to the congressional system of amendment? What better means could there be to completely discourage any and all resort to the convention means of constitutional amendment?

As Prof. William Van Alstyne has remarked:.

> I find it perfectly remarkable that some have argued for a construction of article V which not only limits the power of State legislatures to have a convention, but would limit that power to its least expected, least appropriate, most difficult (and yet most dangerous) use.

It is the States, not Congress, that ought to properly have the ability to limit the scope of the convention, through their convention applications. While Congress, under section 6 of the Constitutional Implementation Act, is empowered to specify in its call for the convention the scope of permissible deliberations, it is performing basically an administrative, nondiscretionary function in doing so; it is simply translating the State applications into formal convention call.

APPLICATION PROCEDURES

Section 3(a) of the act specified that the procedures to be followed in making a convention application are those adopted by the States themselves. Although a State is free to adopt procedures uniquely applicable to the convention application process—as the State of Illinois, for example, has done with respect to the amendment ratification process—it is anticipated that most States will follow procedures that govern the adoption of simple statutes or resolutions.

Section 3(b) provides further that questions concerning the extent to which States have acted in compliance with their own rules of procedure are also to be determined by the State legislatures themselves. While recognizing that, in pursuit of their authority under article V, the States are acting in quasi-Federal capacity rather than in a purely State role, Leser v. Garnett (258 U.S. 130, 137 (1922)), it would nevertheless be incongrous for anybody to determine whether or not there has been procedural regularity in a State legislative action other than the legislature itself.

In Field v. Clark (143 U.S. 649 (1882)), the Supreme Court held that the procedural requirements of the legislative process were presumed to have been satisfied when legislation was formally certified by the appropriate legislative officer. Rather than intruding Congress or the courts into these matters, there is no reason why this traditional rule ought not continue to apply with respect to convention application actions. There is no compelling reason why article V should require sacrifice by State legislatures of their inherent right to regulate their own proceedings.

Whatever the procedures in the State legislatures, such actions are to be considered valid without the assent of the Governor of the State. Thus, the term "legislatures" in article V is treated in the same manner, for the purposes of convention applications, as it has traditionally been treated for the purposes of amendment ratification, Hollingworth v. Virginia (3 Dall. 376 (1878)); Hawke v. Smith (253 U.S. 221 (1920)).

TRANSMISSION OF APPLICATIONS

Section 4 of the act specifies the means by which the States are to transmit their applications for a convention to Congress. Section 4(a) states that, within 30 days of the adoption by a State of an application, the appropriate official is to transmit copies to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Section 4(b) directs the States to include within their applications: The title of the resolution, the date of adoption, and an official certification. In addition, States are encouraged, but not required, to list in the application other pending State applications which are felt to relate to substantially the same subject. While such a listing is not to be considered conclusive with respect to Congress, it is nevertheless considered that such a listing will be useful to Congress in carrying out it responsibilities in aggregating applications.

Section 4(c) requires each House to establish a public record of each State application, and to notify each State legislature of the fact of each application. Through internal procedures to be determined by each House, Congress would be charged with making an initial decision on whether or not to aggregate applications within the 10-day period following each new application. The criteria would be whether or not the applications referenced the same "general subject or subjects."

These initial decisions, however, would not be binding. Under article V, Congress would not be compelled to make its final decision on aggregation of applications until that point at which it was required to make a decision with respect to an actual convention call. The requirement of an ongoing effort at determining the aggregation question is designed primarily to limit opportunities for political manipulation at this point of the application process, as well as to allow States which are not aggregated in what they consider the proper manner to amend their convention applications.

As observed earlier, it is the objective of the "same general subject or subjects" standard to ensure the existence of some real consensus among the States with respect to the need for constitutional revision in some relatively circumscribed area. At the same time, in order not to interfere with the legitimate freedom of action of a convention, there ought not to be the requirement of extreme precision, either in the text or the subject-matter. The language contained in the bill is designed to draw some rough balance between these considerations.

In order to ensure that the consensus for a constitutional amendment remains a relatively contemporaneous one, Dillion v. Gloss (256 U.S. 368 (1921)), section 5(a) states that an application shall be effective for no longer than a 7-year period, with shorter effective periods contained within the body of an application to be respected. The court in Dillion stated that:

> Proposal and ratification are not related as unrelated acts but as succeeding steps in a single endeavor, the natural inference being that they are not to be widely separated in time . . . We do not find anything in article V which suggests that an amendment once proposed is to be open for ratification for all time, or that ratification in some of the states may be separated from that in others by many years and yet be effective.

Similarly, State convention applications and the calling of a constitutional convention are not unrelated acts, but necessary, succeeding steps in a single endeavor. There should be a reasonable relationship in time, between these actions, Coleman. v. Miller, (307 U.S. 433 (1938)). There is the same need to avoid staleness of applications to Congress as there is to avoid staleness of amendment proposals to the States.

In view of the fact that every amendment proposed by Congress, except one, since the 18th amendment, has contained a 7-year time limitation, either in the body or in the enacting clause, it has been decided to use this same period for determining effectiveness applications.

Language has also been included in this section which maintains the effectiveness, for a minimum of 2 years, of those applications which have been submitted to Congress within the previous 16-year period, notwithstanding the expiration of the regular 7-year period. This provision is designed to ensure that those applications, submitted in recent years which have not had the statutory guidance of procedures legislation, are kept temporarily effective for a short transitional period.

Section 5(b) authorizes States to withdraw their applications at any time prior to the time that there are a sufficient number of valid applications before Congress to enable it to call a convention. There would seem to be no valid policy reason for denying them this right. Indeed, in order to ensure that the amendment process reflects the notion of contemporaneous consensus, it is vital that the States should not be dragooned unwillingly into an artificial consensus because of an inability to rethink earlier application decisions.

CALLING OF THE CONVENTION

Section 6 of the Constitutional Convention Implementation Act relates to the actual calling by Congress of the convention. It provides that, upon receipt in each House of the application putting two-thirds of the States in agreement on the need for some particular amendment or amendments, it is the duty of that House to call for convening of a Federal constitutional convention on the general subject or subjects. Congress is to designate the time and place of the meeting of the convention, and set forth the general subject of the amendment or amendments for consideration. The convention is to be convened not later than 8 months following the adoption by Congress of its resolutions.

Despite some misconceptions on this point, it is obligatory that Congress call a convention upon the receipt of valid applications by two-thirds of the States. Alexander Hamilton observed in the Federalist No. 85 that—

> The national rulers, whenever nine states concur, will have no option upon the subject. By the fifth article of the plan, the Congress will be obliged "on the application of the legislatures of two-thirds of the states to call a convention for proposing amendments" . . . the words of this article are peremptory. The Congress "shall call a convention." Nothing in this particular is left to the discretion of that body.

James Madison, in a 1789 letter, remarked further—

> It is to be observed however that the question concerning a general convention will not belong to the Federal legislature. If two-thirds of the States apply for one, Congress cannot refuse to call it.

CONVENTION DELEGATES

Section 7 relates to the selection of delegates to the constitutional convention. The language is taken nearly verbatim from article II, section 1, paragraph 2 of the Constitution concerning the selection of Presidential electors. The great compromise between the larger and the smaller States is carried over into the selection of convention delegates with each State being entitled to that number of delegates equal to the combined number of its Senators and Representatives in Congress. The States are given a free hand in selecting their delegates in whatever—constitutional—manner they deem appropriate.

If the experience of the electoral college is at all relevent—and I believe that it is—each of the States will no doubt introduce some means of popular election for the delegate positions. I would be personally opposed to any other manner of selection, although I do not believe that it is the business of this body to specify particular procedures for the States.

While there are those who would prefer to see a delegate selection system more precisely based upon population. I see no reason not to extend smaller States that slight disproportionate influence in the proposal of amendments through the convention system that they currently enjoy in the proposal of amendments through the congressional system. The apportionment procedures in section 7 is the method of delegate selection that most closely conforms to the basis for congressional representation and which would most closely aline the alternative systems of proposing amendments.

Section 7 also excludes Members of Congress, the very embodiment of the national influence, from serving as convention delegates and confers the same immunity from arrest upon convention delegates, for the duration of the convention, that article I, section 6 of the Constitution confers upon Members of Congress.

CONVENING OF CONVENTION

Section 8 directs each delegate to the convention to subscribe to an oath by which he commits himself, during the conduct of the convention, to comply with the Constitution of the United States.

Administering the oath of office to the delegates would be the senior chief judge of the highest courts of the States. Rather than having the Vice President or Chief Justice of the United States, fill this function, it is my belief that what is basically a State convention should remain that and not run any unnecessary risks, however remote, of being influenced by national officials. I emphasize again the basic purpose of including the convention method of amendment in article V—the need for the States to be able to amend the Constitution in the face of an intransigent National Government.

CONVENTION PROCEDURES

Section 8 states that the convention itself is to have responsibility for drawing up its own rules of procedures, rather than Congress, except that there is to be no unit-rule voting procedures. No Federal funds may be appropriated specifically for the payment of the expenses of the convention, except that the Administrator of the General Services Administration is authorized to provide facilities for the convention, and incur whatever incidental expenses are necessary related to this provision of facilities. At the request of the convention, the Federal Government is also permitted to provide sundry technical information and assistance to the convention.

Section 9 provides that the convention is to maintain a daily verbatim record of the proceedings, analogous to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. All records of official proceedings are to be transmitted by the convention to the National Archives within 30 days following termination of the proceedings of the convention. This section also requires the termination of the convention within 6 months of its convening unless Congress agrees to extend it at the convention's request.

Section 10 again underscores that premise of this act that a limited convention may properly be called. It restates what is already implicit in the act that the convention called under its terms may not propose amendments of a general subject different from that stated in the convention's charter—the resolution approved by Congress. The convention exercises no legitimate governmental authority beyond that granted by the States through Congress. The convention thus is morally obliged to limit its considerations to the subjects set forth in the State applications; I believe further that it is appropriate for Congress to establish a legal obligation to this same effect.

SUBMISSION OF AMENDMENTS TO STATES

Section 11 concerns the procedures through which the convention product is submitted to the States for ratification. Within 30 days after the completion of the convention, its presiding offficer is to transmit the exact text of any proposed amendments to Congress. The officers to each House, within 30 more days of continuous session, are to transmit the amendments to the General Services Administration who, in turn, is to submit the amendments to the States. The amendments are to be accompanied by a congressional resolution specifying, pursuant to article V, the model of ratification—whether it is to be ratified by the State legislatures or by special ratifying conventions within each of the States.

Congress may refuse to transmit an amendment and resolution to the States only if it makes the determination that the amendment relates to or includes a general subject which differs from, or was not included as one of the general subjects within the scope of the convention's authority. The objective is to provide some remedy for a failure by the convention to honor the limitations on its authority to propose amendments to the Constitution. Congress has no power whatsoever to refuse to submit an amendment because of disagreement with its substantive merits. Nor is it empowered to refuse to submit an amendment because of what it perceives as procedural irregularities in the proceedings of the convention. Convention procedure is not within the ambit of congressional concern; checks upon procedural abuse must come from the States themselves in the form of the ratification process. Because this check also exists with respect to conventions acting in an ultra vires manner, it is hoped that Congress will resolve any doubts as to whether or not the convention acted within the scope of its authority in favor of an affirmative finding.

RATIFICATION OF AMENDMENTS

Section 12 of the act, borrowing language directly from article V, states simply that amendments proposed by "limited" constitutional conventions are to become part of the Constitution when ratified in accordance with the terms of article V—by three-forths of the States in a timely and proper manner. Certified copies of the ratification documents are to be forwarded by the States to the General Services Administration, although the ratification itself becomes effective once action is completed within the State legislature, Dillion v. Gloss (256 U.S. 368, 376 D(1921)).

Section 13 expressly holds that the States are free to reconsider and reverse their ratification decisions, at least until that point at which an amendment has been ratified by three-fourths of the States. Thus, any State may ratify a proposd amendment after having previously rejected it, or may rescind an earlier ratification of a proposed amendment. It is again my view that the most reliable determination of the existence—or lack thereof—of a contemporaneous consensus can be made if the States are free to reconsider and rethink their ratification decisions until that point at which three-fourths of the States are in agreement in support of amendment, or until that point that a reasonable period of time has passed for ratification. My views on the matter of rescission of ratifications are discussed at far greater length in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of October 4, 1978, at pages S17043-S17045.

Section 14 imposes upon the General Services Administration the duty to proclaim the final ratification of an amendment once it is in receipt of certifications of ratification from three-fourths of the States. As section 16 clarifies, however, this is an administrative duty of a symbolic nature, not one with an impact upon the actual effectiveness of an amendment. Under article V—and section 16—the amendment becomes part of the Constitution at the moment the final State has ratified, or on any date specified in the body of the amendment itself.

JUDICIAL REVIEW

Finally, section 15 relates to the role of the judicial branch in the constitutional convention process. It establishes two express situations in which an allegedly aggrieved State may bring a direct action in the Supreme Court, pursuant to article III, section 2 of the Constitution. The first involves cases in which a State disputes any determination or finding by Congress, or the failure of Congress to make a determination or finding, with respect to its section 6 responsibilities. Section 6 requires Congress to "call" a convention upon determining the existence of valid applications for such a convention from two-thirds of the States.

The second situation involves cases in which Congress' actions, with respect to its section 11 responsibilities, are questioned. Section 11 requires Congress to submit amendments proposed by the convention to the States unless it determines that the convention acted on subject matter outside the purview of its authority.

Section 15(c) expressly states that these two actions may not be inclusive with respect to the right to a Supreme Court hearing, and that nothing in the act limits the right to judicial review of any other decision made under the act or such review as is otherwise provided by the Constitution or any other law of the United States. Section 15 further requires suit to be brought within 60 days of a claim against the Secretary of the Senate, the Clerk of the House, the General Services Administrator, or any other party as may be necessary to afford the relief sought.

Thus, the act would reject that version of the so-called political questions doctrine that suggests that all interpretative matters deriving from article V are to be resolved by Congress soley at its discretion. I find it ironic that so many individuals who have been so sympathetic to the advance of judicial activism in recent years are also those who would deny the Federal courts, particularly the Supreme Court, their constitutional obligation to interpret the plain language of that document. My views on the political questions doctrine are explained more throughly in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of October 4, 1978, at pages S17044-5.

CONCLUSION

Mr. President, the convention method of constitutional amendment has been defended and described as an essential component of our Constitution by such statesmen as James Madison, Alexander Hamilton, George Washington, Benjamin Franklin, and Abraham Lincoln. While no amendment has ever been ratified that has been proposed through this method, it has nevertheless exerted its influence in indirect ways. The 17th amendment to the Constitution, for example—providing for the direct election of U.S. Senators—was proposed by Congress in 1912 in response to an effort in the States to call a convention on this subject. Other convention efforts on such matters as Federal tax limitation and State legislative apportionment have also evoked a significant congressional response. It is clear, too, that the present balanced budget movement is having an impact upon national public policy.

It is necessary in order to insure some measure of symmetry in the alternative amendment processes under article V to establish clearcut procedures for resort to the convention method. While the absence of legislation such as the Constitutional Convention Implementation Act will not preclude the States from exercising their right to call a convention, it will insure that the amendment process will become bogged down in constant litigation, partisan political decisions, and constitutional uncertainty. The effect on this can only be to undermine the integrity of our constitutional system. In the process, also, we will erode one of the basic institutions for preserving some semblance of balance between the national and the State governments. As observed by Alexander Hamilton:

> The most powerful obstacle to the members of Congress betraying the interest of their constituents is the State legislatures themselves, who will be standing bodies of observation, possessing the confidence of the people, jealous of Federal encroachments and armed with every power to check the first essarys at treachery.

While there is not one who respects more than I do the achievement of the Founding Fathers, nor anyone who would place a greater burden of proof upon those who propose to alter the Constitution, I would nevertheless agree with Prof. Malcolm Eiselen who stated:

> To assume, as many apparently do, that a second convention could alter the Constitution only for the worse . . . is an unwarrantable libel upon the creative statesmanship and political sagacity of the American people.

The purpose of the Constitutional Convention Implementation Act is to prevent both Congress and the constitutional convention from acting outside the scope of each of their proper authority. It is designed to insure that the States, in the event that Congress remains intransigent with respect to some issue of constitutional controversy, are able to circumvent Congress and act on their own to remedy such a situation. It is designed also to insure that the States—and Congress—are not forced to surrender totally their sovereignty to the convention. It is designed to insure that the same matrix of constitutional checks and balances is applicable to the constitutional convention as to the other permanent institutions within our governmental system.

There can be no runaway convention unless, ultimately, the dissatisfaction of the people are so broad and pervasive that it is a runaway convention that they expressly desire. The best way that Congress can work to insure that this never becomes the case is to allow the people and the States to work their will under established procedures when their grievances are more narrow and more limited, rather than allowing them to fester as a result of contrived procedural irregularities. It is occasionally sobering to some of my colleagues, yet it is true, that ultimately it is the citizenry, not Congress, that is the responsible party in our political system.

S. 205. A bill to amend title XVIII of the Social Security Act to eliminate the reimbursement differential between hospitals in different areas; to the Committee on Finance.

ELIMINATION OF HOSPITAL REIMBURSEMENT DIFFERENTIAL

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, today, I am pleased to join my colleagues, the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. MCCLURE] and the distinguished Senator from Alabama [Mr. SHELBY] in introducing a bill designed to correct the gross inequity of the Medicare reimbursement rates for rural hospitals and referral centers.

Our rural hospitals are in dire straits. Over the past 8 years, 161 rural hospitals have closed their doors and approximately 600 additional rural hospitals are on the brink of bankruptcy.

The closing of these hospitals is endangering the health and well-being of millions of Americans. Following such closures, residents of communities in many parts of Idaho and other Western States must often travel in excess of 150 miles to seek even simple checkups.

The present Medicare payment system doesn't adequately account for the fact that small rural hospitals compete for the same doctors and nurses, buy from the same suppliers, and have other costs comparable to those paid by hospitals in metropolitan areas. In fact the rural-urban differential is entirely capricious, penalizing a hospital if it happens to be located in an area which is certainly in need of health care providers, but is termed rural, when just across some imaginary line is a hospital with the same underlying costs, but receiving higher payments.

Medicare payments have a particularly large impact on rural hospitals. Because most rural hospitals are small, they cannot adjust easily to fluctuations in inpatient admissions or case mix, whereas larger hospitals can average the fluctuations from year to year and over many cases. For small rural hospitals which tend to operate closer to the margins of their costs, and cannot take advantage of spreading Medicare losses across large numbers of patients, as done by large metropolitan hospitals, these fluctuations can be devastating financially. Because a large proportion of rural hospital patients are Medicare patients, rural health providers are doubly at risk when the prospective payment system fails to compensate them adequately for their special circumstances or when inequitities in payment policies exist.

If this differential is not adjusted, my State of Idaho will likely lose at least 5 hospitals in the near future, not to mention numerous facilities around the country.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD following my remarks.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 205

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. ELIMINATION OF SEPARATE AVERAGE STANDARDIZED AMOUNTS FOR HOSPITALS IN DIFFERENT AREAS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 1886 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395ww) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(i)(1)(A) On or before April 1, 1990, the Secretary and the Prospective Payment Assessment Commission established under subsection (e) (in this subsection referred to as the 'Commission') shall each submit to the Congress a report recommending a methodology that provides for the elimination of the system of determining separate average standardized amounts for subsection (d) hospitals (as defined in subsection (d)(1)(B)) located in large urban, other urban, or rural areas. The methodologies set forth in such reports shall provide for a graduated reduction of the differences in the average standardized amounts applicable to large urban, other urban, or rural area hospitals during the 36-month period beginning October 1, 1990 and shall provide for the complete elimination of such differences for discharges occurring on or after October 1, 1992. Such methodologies may provide for such changes to any of the adjustments, reductions, and special payments otherwise authorized or required by this section as the Secretary or the Commission determines to be necessary and appropriate to carry out the purposes of this subsection.

"(B) Not later than May 1, 1990, the Congressional Budget Office (in this subsection referred to as 'CBO') shall submit to the Congress an analysis of each of the reports submitted under subparagraph (A).

"(C) Not later than June 1, 1990, the Secretary shall promulgate proposed regulations to implement the recommendations of the Secretary under subparagraph (A) (including any recommended changes in the adjustments, reductions, and special payments otherwise authorized or required by this section).

"(D) Not later than August 30, 1990, the Secretary shall promulgate final regulations to implement the recommendations and changes described in subparagraph (C).

"(E) If the Congress does not enact legislation after the date of the enactment of this subsection and before October 1, 1990, with respect to the average standardized amounts applicable to large urban, other urban, or rural area hospitals, then, notwithstanding any other provision of this section, the average standardized amounts for such hospitals for discharges occurring on or after October 1, 1990, shall be determined in accordance with the final regulations promulgated under subparagraph (D).

"(2)(A) On or before April 1, 1991, the Secretary and the Commission shall each submit to the Congress a report specifying the manner in which the average standardized amounts determined under the regulations becoming effective in accordance with paragraph (1)(E) should be adjusted appropriately to reflect legitimate differences in the operating costs of inpatient hospital services (as defined in subsection (a)(4)) for different categories of subsection (d) hospitals.

"(B) Not later than May 1, 1991, CBO shall submit to the Congress an analysis of each of the reports submitted under subparagraph (A).

"(C) Not later than June 1, 1992, the Secretary shall promulgate proposed regulations to implement the recommendations of the Secretary under subparagraph (A).

"(D) Not later than August 30, 1992, the Secretary shall promulgate final regulations to implement the Secretary's recommendations under subparagraph (A).

"(E) If the Congress does not enact legislation after the date of the enactment of this subsection and before October 1, 1992, with respect to adjustments to the average standardized amounts applicable to large urban, other urban and rural area hospitals, then, notwithstanding any other provision of the section, the average standardized amounts for such hospitals for discharges occurring on or after October 1, 1992, shall be determined in accordance with the final regulations promulgated under paragraph (1)(D) and subparagraph (D) of this paragraph".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall become effective on the date of enactment of this Act.

By Mr. SYMMS:

S. 206. A bill to amend the 1986 Tax Act to provide that certain loans between a domestic international sales corporation and a member of the same controlled group of corporations be treated as qualified export assets; to the Committee on Finance.

CLASSIFICATION OF EXPORT ASSETS

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, today I am introducing a bill intended to correct an inequity under the tax law prior to 1986 for agricultural exporters—a problem that has come to light only in the past few years, during the period of the strong dollar.

The Treasury Department Office of Tax Policy was consulted when I introduced an amendment substantially the same as this bill last year to address this problem. Their position, I understand, was one of "no opposition" because the problem is narrow, technical, and affects only a few agricultural exporters today.

The Domestic International Sales Corporation [DISC] provision of the Tax Code prior to 1984 and the Foreign International Sales Corporation [FISC] of present law were designed specifically to promote the sale of American products and to put exporters on the same financial and tax basis as their foreign competitors.

The DISC and FISC programs, while important to major manufacturing industries of the country, have been shown to be of great significance to the agricultural industry. Due to the unique factors of agriculture, it is composed mostly of small businesses, both the farms themselves and export organizations. It is my opinion that a number of agricultural exporters were unfairly disadvantaged when the fairly technical definitions of "qualified export assets" were drafted by the Treasury Department in the late 1970's. This amendment corrects that inequity.

The export market is essential to agriculture both in terms of moving surplus products and developing price levels that are satisfactory to the farmer. The ability to export U.S. agricultural produce in the world marketplace requires at a minimum that U.S. products be competitive in price and competitive in sales terms and conditions with foreign sellers. In all instances we are competing with extensive direct and indirect subsidies given to foreign producers by their governments.

To compete effectively in this environment requires substantial investments of time, energy, and money. It also requires a great deal of work, traveling, financing, and planning to develop these markets.

During the years of 1980 through 1984, the international pulse trade—that is, beans and related crops—was an extremely important method of providing the lowest cost convertible protein to the people of the lesser developed nations of Latin America and Africa. This source of protein was crucial to the citizens of countries whose meat supply, or their ability to pay for imported meat, made that source of protein difficult or impossible to obtain.

Pulse sales from the United States during these years were substantial due to aggressive export programs. The States of California, Colorado, Idaho, Michigan, Minnesota, Nebraska, North Dakota, Oregon, Texas, Washington, and Wyoming benefited economically from the growing and exporting of pulse produce. These exports were successful despite the difficult environment of a strong U.S. dollar and difficult competitors from foreign subsidized producers. American exports reached record volume and price levels. This favorable balance of trade returned to the American farmers prices and per-acre profits substantially higher than in subsequent years. In addition, U.S. growers received this income during times when their alternative coarse grain crops were at record low levels.

I view this amendment as an important one because I view the growing, sale, and export of pulses as an important industry; because I view the agricultural business in general as an important part of America's economic strength; because I think we need to support the export of American products as a whole; and because I think we should not play "bait and switch" with exporters who did expand their foreign trade on the basis of the tax perferences specifically meant to encourage such expansion.

Therefore we need legislation now and in the future to encourage participation in exporting and to show the U.S. Government is prepared to help meet the intense foreign competition we face.

Such provisions of the law should not have operated as a series of obstacles and traps, which only work to destroy the benefits Congress intended to provide, but in a number of cases, this was what in fact occurred. This was especially true when the exporters relied upon those benefits in establishing prices and financing programs. A loss of faith in the assistance of the Government to stimulate exports would be a serious blow to agriculture, the American farmer, and our trade balance.

It was a mistake to restrict and complicate what existing assistance the U.S. Government is giving the American farmer in the form of the DISC program by overcomplicating its operations and the interpretation of regulations, to the detriment of those trying to work within the program.

I should note that some DISC's, namely the so-called commission DISC's, were very superficial entities. The sponsoring corporation of such a DISC would sell its products overseas and record a transaction on its books to create a commission in favor of the DISC. On the other hand, there were genuine exporting DISC entities—so-called buy-sell DISC's—and these are the kind I believe the Congress needs to direct some attention to, in the form of this legislation. This kind of DISC made specific sales, assumed risks, and conducted its business in its own name. The legislation here proposed provides relief to these buy-sell DISC's and not to "Commission DISC's."

I would ask unanimous consent for the text of the bill to be printed in the RECORD following my remarks.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 206

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. (a) Section 933(b) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (defining qualified export assets) is amended by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (8), by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (9) and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon, and by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(10) obligations issued to the corporations which includes such corporation, but only to the extent of $7,500,000 of such obligations outstanding at each taxable year end.".

(b) The amendment made by this section shall apply to any corporation which derived over 80 percent of its gross income from sales of non-program agricultural products, as principal and not as a commission agent, in all of its taxable years ending before December 31, 1984, and the amendment shall apply to such corporation's taxable years beginning after December 31, 1979 and ending December 31, 1984.

S. 207. A bill to amend the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974 to require expeditious consideration by the Congress of a proposal by the President to rescind all or part of any item of budget authority of the proposal is transmitted to the Congress on the same day on which the President approves the bill or joint resolution providing such budget authority; pursuant to the order of August 4, 1977, referred jointly to the Committee on the Budget and the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

By Mr. DIXON (for himself and Mr. SIMON):

S.J. Res. 23. Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution authorizing the President to disapprove or reduce an item of appropriations; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

LINE ITEM VETO AND LINE ITEM RESCISSIONS

● Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I rise today to reintroduce a joint resolution proposing a constitutional amendment authorizing the President to disapprove or reduce individual items or appropriations, subject to a majority vote override. I am joined in this effort by my warm friend and distinguished colleague, Senator PAUL SIMON.

I am also reintroducing legislation to expand the President's rescission authority, because action on the constitutional amendment will necessarily take a substantial period of time, and we need the benefits to be garnered from the item veto now.

I do not propose this constitutional amendment and expand rescission authority lightly, but I am convinced we need fundamental changes in our budgeting procedures if we are ever to restore fiscal discipline to the Federal Government. Our looming deficit cuts into our ability to deal with the many other problems facing the Nation. Until we significantly reduce the deficit, we will not be able to fully fund many other vital domestic programs. The budget deficit was $220 billion in fiscal 1986, $150 billion in fiscal year 1987. Unfortunately, the reduction is not due to fundamental budget reform, however, but rather to budgetary "blue smoke and mirrors." Further, a $150 billion deficit is still $6 billion over the fiscal year 1987 Gramm-Rudman-Hollings target of $144 billion, and the prospects for meeting future Gramm-Rudman-Hollings targets, despite their upward adjustments, and balancing the budget by 1991 are questionable at best. Let us not forget a number of costly initiatives have been discussed by President Bush. Where does the money come for those initiatives when the deficit continues to eat away at our ability to meet the needs of the country. Budgetary legerdemain will not solve our ongoing fiscal crisis; fundamental reform of our budget processes is required if Federal deficits are to be controlled over the long run.

Solving our budget problems will require strong action in a number of areas. I am convinced that adding an item veto provision to our Constitution is probably the single most important action we could take if we really want to end the deficit nightmare.

The item veto has a long and distinguished history. It first appeared in the Confederate Constitution. In the years since the Civil War it has been included in the Constitutions of 43 of the 50 States. The States gave their Governors this authority because it was needed, because it strengthens their budget processes, and because it works. No State that has adopted the item veto has ever repealed it.

While the idea has demonstrated its merit at the State level, however, it has never seriously been considered at the Federal level. Numerous item veto proposals have been introduced in Congress since the first one in 1876. At least seven different Presidents have requested item veto authority. But none of these proposals or requests has ever been sent to the States or been acted on by either the House or the Senate.

Mr. President, it is long past time to change that situation and act on an item veto provision that helps restore the President's veto power. I say restore, because the truth is that the Presidential veto is now a much weaker weapon than it once was.

Under our Constitution, a President can only veto an entire bill. He or she cannot veto individual items of spending within the bill—the veto is an all-or-nothing proposition. When our Constitution was written, that was a reasonable and workable balance of powers between the legislative and executive branches. Government was smaller and simpler. Over the past two centuries, though, Congress has tipped the balance in its favor and substantially eroded the President's veto power. The growth in Government, together with the increasing use of omnibus legislation, now make it significantly more difficult for a President to play the role envisioned by the Nation's founders.

At times, a President has the choice of either shutting down the Government, or signing into law billions of dollars of spending which he or she does not support. In 1987, you will recall, all Government spending was included in a single omnibus bill instead of the 13 annual appropriation bills that Congress usually acts on to exercise its control over Government spending.

Congress did pass each appropriation bill on its own in 1988, rather than in one lump sum, but the practice of attaching controversial items to "must" bills in an effort to make it more difficult for a President to use his veto power was just as evident. Logrolling, and packaging good and bad programs into a single appropriations bill, have become a way of life.

These practices are near and dear to the hearts of many legislators, but they work to undermine our ability to budget in a fiscally sound and responsible manner. They are clearly wasteful, extravagant, and destructive.

Congress will never resolve the deficit problems, Mr. President, if it continues this "business as usual" approach. Congress must surrender some of the prerogatives it has accumulated over the years, and allow at least a partial restoration of the President's veto power.

Many Members, as well as those who benefit from the current way of doing things, may not want to surrender all the power they have gained. To ensure that the proper balance of powers between the legislative and executive branches of Government is maintained—to ensure no possibility of the creation of an imperial presidency—I am proposing only a partial restoration, giving the President item veto authority, but allowing Congress to override it by a simple constitutional majority.

Under my proposal, a President would have to choose: Either veto an entire bill, forcing Congress to attempt to override by two-thirds vote, or use the item veto, recognizing that it would be easier for Congress to override.

Stated another way, it simply allows a President to put the Congress on record, to see whether there is, in fact, majority support for certain individual items of spending in an omnibus bill. As we all know too well, most Members of Congress have never seen and do not know about many of the literally thousands of individual items in the hundreds of pages of appropriations bills enacted every year. We rely on staff, and the knowledge, character, and ability of the Senators and Representatives that are the subcommittee chairmen and ranking members that handle the bills. Yet all these items are presumed to have majority support, because they were included in a major bill that majorities in both the House and the Senate supported.

If a President opposes an item, why shouldn't he or she have the right to ask the Congress to go on record, and to determine whether the majority that is presumed to exist actually exists? In the early days of our Republic, Presidents often effectively had that right, because bills were narrower and did not deal with more than one subject. We have now reached the point, however, where a single appropriations bill contains over $558 billion in spending authority, a practice which I believe usurps the President's constitutionally mandated role in the legislative process.

Majority override means that a President could not overturn strong congressional support for a single item through use of the item veto and the support of "one-third plus one" in either the House or the Senate. Only the veto of an entire bill would take a two-thirds vote to override. An item veto would be sustained if the President commanded majority support, and would be overturned if the item had majority backing.

Mr. President, the Line-Item Rescission Act is based on similar principles. I am introducing this proposal reluctantly, because I believe a constitutional amendment is the better way to proceed. Further, some of the past rescission proposals would have given the President unilateral rescission authority, thus effectively giving a President two bites at the same apple. Under these proposals a President could sign a bill and rescind various items of spending. Congress would have to effectively act on a new bill repassing the items to overturn the rescission, and this action would be subject to Presidential veto, requiring a two-thirds vote to override.

My proposal is merely a small expansion of authority already available to Presidents under the Budget Act. It does not give a President unilateral rescission authority. It is designed to make the rescission mechanism as close to a majority override line item veto constitutional provision as is possible through statutory means while not violating constitutional principles. It can be put into effect far more quickly than a constitutional change, and would provide at least part of the benefits of the constitutional amendment.

The legislation permits a President to defer items of spending contained in an appropriations bill for 60 days while Congress considers rescission resolutions under expedited procedures. Each rescission resolution would cover a single item and would have to be voted on separately, as the veto of an individual item would be.

Both Houses of Congress would have to vote on the resolution or resolutions within 60 days of their transmittal to Congress by a President. If the President had majority support, the resolution would pass, and the item would be rescinded. If the item had majority support, the spending would go forward without being subject to further Presidential veto.

The rescission resolutions would not be amendable since veto messages are not amendable, and the expedited procedures would guarantee a vote on the resolutions. This provision, of course, is different from the way a veto message is considered. There is no guarantee that a veto message will be voted on at all. However, a veto is effective unless overturned by both houses of Congress, while a rescission is effective only when approved in both houses. The combination of the limited deferral authority, and the expedited procedures guaranteeing a vote, is necessary to ensure that Congress faces the issues raised by a President's opposition to particular items.

Neither the item veto constitutional amendment nor the Line-Item Veto Rescission Act is a cure-all for the budget problems we are facing, Mr. President. Dealing with the deficit will require action in every area of the budget, action that will be difficult and distasteful. However, either proposal can and will make a real difference. If a Federal item veto with majority override works as well at the Federal level as it does in my own State of Illinois, it could save $27 billion a year or more.

I urge the Senate to consider these proposals very carefully. I am convinced that the result of this fair and reasonable examination will be enactment of a Line-Item Veto Rescission Act and early submission of the constitutional amendment to the States for ratification. I look forward to working with my colleagues toward these objectives. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the bill and the joint resolution be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 207

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Line-Item Rescission Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. EXPEDITED CONSIDERATION OF CERTAIN PROPOSED RESCISSIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Part B of title X of the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974 is amended by redesignating sections 1013 through 1017 as sections 1014 through 1018, respectively, and inserting after section 1012 the following new section:

"EXPEDITED CONSIDERATION OF CERTAIN PROPOSED RESCISSIONS

"SEC. 1013. (a) TRANSMITTAL OF SPECIAL MESSAGE.—The President may, on the same calendar day the President approves any appropriation bill, transmit to both Houses of the Congress, for consideration in accordance with this section, one or more special messages proposing to rescind all or part of any item of budget authority provided in the appropriation bill.

"(b) CONTENTS OF SPECIAL MESSAGE.—

"(1) No special message may be considered in accordance with this section if the special message proposes to rescind more than one item of budget authority.

"(2) Each special message transmitted under subsection (a) shall specify, with respect to the item of budget authority (or part thereof) proposed by the message to be rescinded, the matters referred to in paragraphs (1) through (5) of section 1012(a).

"(3) Each special message transmitted under subsection (a) shall be accompanied by a draft bill or joint resolution that would, if enacted, rescind the budget authority proposed to be rescinded.

"(c) PROCEDURES.—

"(1)(A) On the day on which a special message proposing to rescind an item of budget authority is transmitted to the House of Representatives and the Senate under subsection (a), the draft bill or joint resolution accompanying such special message shall be introduced (by request) by the majority leader of the House of the Congress in which the appropriation Act providing the budget authority originated. If such House is not in session on the day on which a special message is transmitted, the draft bill or joint resolution shall be introduced in such House, as provided in the preceding sentence, on the first day thereafter on which such House is in session.

"(B) A draft bill or joint resolution introduced in the House of Representatives or the Senate pursuant to subparagraph (A) shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations of such House. The committee shall report the bill or joint resolution without substantive revision (and with or without recommendation) not later than 20 calendar days of continuous session of the Congress after the date on which the bill or joint resolution is introduced. A committee failing to report a bill or joint resolution within the 20-day period referred to in the preceding sentence shall be automatically discharged from consideration of the bill or joint resolution, and the bill or joint resolution shall be placed on the appropriate calendar.

"(C) A vote on final passage of a bill or joint resolution introduced in a House of the Congress pursuant to subparagraph (A) shall be taken on or before the close of the 30th calendar day of continuous session of the Congress after the date of the introduction of the bill or joint resolution in such House. If the bill or joint resolution is agreed to, the Clerk of the House of Representatives (in the case of a bill or joint resolution agreed to in the House of Representatives) or the Secretary of the Senate (in the case of a bill or joint resolution agreed to in the Senate) shall cause the bill or joint resolution to be engrossed, certified, and transmitted to the other House of the Congress on the same calendar day on which the bill or joint resolution is agreed to.

"(2)(A) A bill or joint resolution transmitted to the House of Representatives or the Senate pursuant to subparagraph (C) of paragraph (1) shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations of such House. The committee shall report the bill or joint resolution without substantive revision (and with or without recommendation) not later than 20 calendar days of continuous session of the Congress after the bill or joint resolution is transmitted to such House. A committee failing to report the bill or joint resolution within the 20-day period referred to in the preceding sentence shall be automatically discharged from consideration of the bill or joint resolution, and the bill or joint resolution shall be placed upon the appropriate calendar.

"(B) A vote on final passage of a bill or joint resolution transmitted to a House of the Congress pursuant to subparagraph (C) of paragraph (1) shall be taken on or before the close of the 30th calendar day of continuous session of the Congress after the date on which the bill or joint resolution is transmitted to such House. If the bill or joint resolution is agreed to in such House, the Clerk of the House of Representatives (in the case of a bill or joint resolution agreed to in the House of Representatives) or the Secretary of the Senate (in the case of a bill or joint resolution agreed to in the Senate) shall cause the engrossed bill or joint resolution to be returned to the House in which the bill or joint resolution originated, together with a statement of the action taken by the House acting under this paragraph.

"(3)(A) A motion in the House of Representatives to proceed to the consideration of a bill or joint resolution under this section shall be highly privileged and not debatable. An amendment to the motion shall not be in order, nor shall it be in order to move to reconsider the vote by which the motion is agreed to or disagreed to.

"(B) Debate in the House of Representatives on a bill or joint resolution under this section shall be limited to not more than 10 hours, which shall be divided equally between those favoring and those opposing the bill or joint resolution. A motion further to limit debate shall not be debatable. It shall not be in order to move to recommit a bill or joint resolution under this section or to move to reconsider the vote by which the bill or joint resolution is agreed to or disagreed to.

"(C) Motions to postpone, made in the House of Representatives with respect to the consideration of a bill or joint resolution under this section, and motions to proceed to the consideration of other business, shall be decided without debate.

"(D) All appeals from the decisions of the Chair relating to the application of the Rules of the House of Representatives to the procedure relating to a bill or joint resolution under this section shall be decided without debate.

"(E) Except to the extent specifically provided in the preceding provisions of this subsection, consideration of a bill or joint resolution under this section shall be governed by the Rules of the House of Representatives applicable to other bills and joint resolutions in similar circumstances.

"(4)(A) A motion in the Senate to proceed to the consideration of a bill or joint resolution under this section shall be privileged and not debatable. An amendment to the motion shall not be in order, nor shall it be in order to move to reconsider the vote by which the motion is agreed to or disagreed to.

"(B) Debate in the Senate on a bill or joint resolution under this section, and all debatable motions and appeals in connection therewith, shall be limited to not more than 10 hours. The time shall be equally divided between, and controlled by, the majority leader and the minority leader or their designees.

"(C) Debate in the Senate on any debatable motion or appeal in connection with a bill or joint resolution under this section shall be limited to not more than 1 hour, to be equally divided between, and controlled by, the mover and the manager of the bill or joint resolution, except that in the event the manager of the bill or joint resolution is in favor of any such motion or appeal, the time in opposition thereto, shall be controlled by the minority leader or his designee. Such leaders, or either of them, may, from time under their control on the passage of a bill or joint resolution, allot additional time to any Senator during the consideration of any debatable motion or appeal.

"(D) A motion in the Senate to further limit debate on a bill or joint resolution under this section is not debatable. A motion to recommit a bill or joint resolution under this section is not in order.

"(d) AMENDMENTS PROHIBITED.—No amendment to a bill or joint resolution considered under this section shall be in order in either the House of Representatives or the Senate. No motion to suspend the application of this paragraph shall be in order in either House, nor shall it be in order in either House for the Presiding Officer to entertain a request to suspend the application of this paragraph by unanimous consent.

"(e) REQUIREMENT TO MAKE AVAILABLE FOR OBLIGATION.—Any item of budget authority proposed to be rescinded in a special message transmitted to the Congress in accordance with subsection (a) shall be made available for obligation unless, not more than 60 days after the transmittal of the special message, both Houses of the Congress have agreed to the bill or joint resolution accompanying such special message.

"(f) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) 'item' means any numerically expressed amount of budget authority set forth in an appropriation bill;

"(2) 'appropriation bill' means any general or special appropriation bill, and any bill or joint resolution making supplemental, deficiency, or continuing appropriations; and

"(3) 'appropriation Act' means any appropriation bill that has been approved by the President and become law.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Section 1011(5) of the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974 is amended—

(A) by striking out "1012, and" and inserting in lieu thereof "1012, the 20-day periods referred to in paragraphs (1)(B) and (2)(A) of section 1013(c), the 60-day period referred to in section 1013(e) and";

(B) by striking out "1012 during" and inserting in lieu thereof "1012 or 1013 during";

(C) by striking out "of 45" and inserting in lieu thereof "of the applicable number of"; and

(D) by striking out "45-day period referred to in paragraph (3) of this section and in section 1012" and inserting in lieu thereof "period or periods of time applicable under such section".

(2)(A) Section 1011 of such Act is further amended—

(i) in paragraph (4) by striking out "1013" and inserting in lieu thereof "1014"; and

(ii) in paragraph (5)—

(I) by striking out "1016" and inserting in lieu thereof "1017"; and

(II) by striking out "1017(b)(1)" and inserting in lieu thereof "1018(b)(1)".

(B) Section 1012 of such Act is amended—

(i) by striking out "1012 or 1013" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "1012, 1013, or 1014";

(ii) in subsection (b)(1) by striking out "1012" and inserting in lieu thereof "1012 or 1013";

(iii) in subsection (b)(2) by striking out "1013" and inserting in lieu thereof "1014"; and

(iv) in subsection (e)(2)—

(I) by striking out "and" at the end of subparagraph (A),

(II) by redesignating subparagraph (B) as subparagraph (C),

(III) by striking out "1013" in subparagraph (C) (as so redesignated), and

(IV) by inserting after subparagraph (A) the following new subparagraph:

"(B) he has transmitted a special message under section 1013 with respect to a proposed rescission; and".

(C) Section 1015 of such Act is amended by striking out "1012 or 1013" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "1012, 1013, or 1014".

(D) Section 1016 of such Act is amended by striking out "or 1013(b)" and inserting in lieu thereof ", 1013(e), or 1014(b)".

(E) Section 1012(b) of such Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "The preceding sentence shall not apply to any item of budget authority proposed by the President to be rescinded under this section that the President has also proposed to rescind under section 1013 and with respect to which the 60-day period referred to in subsection (e) of such section has not expired.".

(3) The table of sections for subpart B of title X of the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974 is amended—

(A) by redesignating the items relating to sections 1013 through 1017 as items relating to sections 1014 through 1018; and

(B) by inserting after the item relating to section 1012 the following new item:

"Sec. 1013. Expedited consideration of certain proposed rescissions.".

SEC. 3. APPLICATION.

The amendments made by this section shall apply to items of budget authority (as defined in subsection (f)(1) of section 1013 of the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974, as added by section 2 of this Act) provided by appropriation Acts (as defined in subsection (f)(3) of such section) that become law after the date of the enactment of this Act.

S.J. RES. 23

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution if ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States within seven years after its submission to the States for ratification:

"ARTICLE —

The President may reduce or disapprove any item of appropriation in any Act or joint resolution, except any item of appropriation for the legislative branch of the Government. If an Act or joint resolution is approved by the President, any item of appropriation contained therein which is not reduced or disapproved shall become law. The President shall return with his objections any item of appropriation reduced or disapproved to the House in which the Act or joint resolution containing such time originated. The Congress may, in the manner prescribed under section 7 of article I for Acts disapproved by the President, reconsider any item disapproved or reduced under this article, except that only a majority vote of each House shall be required to approve an item which has been disapproved or to restore an item which has been reduced by the President to the original amount contained in the Act or joint resolution.".●

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I wish to join my senior Senator ALAN DIXON in sponsorship of this constitutional amendment to provide for a line-item veto. Every available weapon must be put in place to fight our growing national deficit. It takes a President who will present to Congress a balanced budget, it takes a Congress with the institutional fortitude to pass one, and it also takes the line-item veto.

The line-item veto plan my colleague Senator DIXON and I propose today takes from the very successful history of our State of Illinois. According to some studies, the Illinois State government is able to reduce its annual budget by about 3 percent because of the line-item veto. Similar success on a Federal basis will bring us that much closer to reducing the national debt.

Our bill is relatively simple. It is a constitutional amendment to permit the President to reduce or disapprove any item of appropriations. If he does not reduce or disapprove it, the item becomes law. If he does reduce or disapprove it, then Congress is empowered to override that veto by a simple majority vote of each house. There are those who are concerned that the line-item veto takes away power from the legislative branch and puts it into the hands of the executive. That might be so if this veto were like all others and required a two-thirds override. But our legislation is faithful to the principle of majority rule in passage of legislation. It threatens only those appropriations which do not have majority support and it is those appropriations items which often are the least credible in the eyes of the American people and most difficult to justify.

Forty-three States now have the line-item veto. As chairman of the Constitution Subcommittee, I will be calling on members of the executive branch, constitutional scholars, and those most involved with the line-item veto at the State level for their guidance on this most important matter. The line-item veto is by no means a panacea. It is, however, a big step in the right direction for any serious attempt to put our fiscal affairs in order.●

By Mr. HELMS:

S. 208. A bill to inhibit the proliferation of ballastic and cruise missiles in the Middle East; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

PREVENTION OF MISSILE TRANSFERS IN THE MIDDLE EAST

● Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, this legislation poses a very simple and clear cut question. Is Congress going to sit back and watch the United States assist the Chinese missile program at a time when the Chinese are supplying—or are preparing to supply—missiles to Iran, Iraq, Libya, Syria, and Saudi Arabia?

Over the past year, the People's Republic of China has engaged in blatantly reckless behavior in the Middle East, the effect of which has been to threaten America's interests in a stable Middle East and a secure Israel.

Communist China fueled the Iran-Iraq war with its arms-for-profit business. The Communist Chinese have provided Silkworm missiles to the Ayatollah. They have posed new and deadly threats to the safety of Israel by providing Saudi Arabia with the CSS-2 missile. And, as news reports suggest, they might well be preparing to provide missiles to such radical anti-American, rabidly anti-Israel regimes as Syria, and Libya.

Mr. President, it is now apparent that missile sales to Iran, Iraq, Syria and Libya are an even graver threat than was recognized last year, as the involvement of all of these countries in developing chemical weapons has come to light.

As incredible as it might seem, our Government is actively supporting the aerospace programs of Communist China at the same time the Chinese are peddling missiles to the Middle East. Specifically, the State Department has sanctioned the export of satellites utilizing United States technology for launch by the Chinese Long-March missile, and has promoted the transfer to China of high-technology avionics.

Exporting satellites for launch by the Chinese would provide the Chinese missile program with valuable new technology, additional funds and new-found credibility. The transfer of high-technology avionics increases China's military capabilities, and gives its fighter aircraft a certain prestige which carries over to sales on the world market.

Assisting China's aerospace programs in this manner sends the wrong signal to the Chinese about their missile sales. It will help the Chinese build better, more advanced, more accurate, and more deadly missiles for sale to the Ayatollah, or to Qadhafi, or to Iraq, Syria, or Saudi Arabia, so that these countries will have better missiles to fire at Israel.

Last year, Americans watched with horror as the Chinese single-handedly ignited a missile race in the tinderbox of the Middle East. Senators came to the Senate floor to denounce the Chinese for this practice. The Senate passed resolutions condemning the Chinese. And the Senate passed my amendment to 1989 Foreign Operations appropriation bill prohibiting assistance to the Chinese missile program until the President certifies that China is not selling missiles to Libya, Syria, Iran, Iraq, and Saudi Arabia. Unfortunately, the House rejected this amendment.

Now that we are aware of the chemical weapons programs of some of the countries reported to be in line to receive Chinese missiles, it is even more urgent that Congress take action not just to deter these sales, but also to assure that our Government is not inadvertently assisting these sales.

The legislation I am introducing today aims to do just that. Specifically, it would require an annual report on missile transfers to Libya, Iran, Iraq, Syria, and Saudi Arabia by Communist China and other countries. In addition, 1 year from date of enactment, all United States assistance to Chinese aerospace programs would be terminated unless the President certifies that during the preceding year, China has not supplied any ballistic or cruise missiles, directly or through third parties, to Iran, Iraq, Syria, Libya, or Saudi Arabia, and has provided reliable assurances that no future sale or transfer of any ballistic or cruise missiles to such country is planned.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of this bill be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 208

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Prevention of Missile Transfers to the Middle East Act".

SEC. 2. REPORT.

On April 1, 1989, and January 1 of each year thereafter, the President shall submit to Congress a report, in classified and unclassified form if necessary, describing—

(1) efforts undertaken by the People's Republic of China during the previous year to sell, directly or through third parties, any ballistic or cruise missile to Iraq, Iran, Syria, Libya, or Saudi Arabia;

(2) the receipt by or transfer to Iraq, Iran, Syria, Libya, or Saudi Arabia during the previous year of any ballistic or cruise missile, and the source of such missile;

(3) the provision of any ballistic or cruise missile by the People's Republic of China, directly or through third parties, to Iraq, Iran, Syria, Libya, or Saudi Arabia during the previous year;

(4) the transfer to or receipt by Iraq, Iran, Syria, Libya, or Saudi Arabia during the previous year of any ballistic or cruise missile component technology; and

(5) the transfer to or receipt by Iraq, Iran, Syria, Libya, or Saudi Arabia during the previous year of any nuclear technology, whether civilian or military, or any chemical or biological weapons technology.

SEC. 3. SANCTIONS.

(a) SANCTION.—No later than one year from the date of enactment of this Act, the United States shall terminate all assistance to the aerospace programs of the People's Republic of China.

(b) Termination of assistance under this section shall include prohibition on the transfer of avionics for military aircraft and the revocation of licenses for the export of satellites employing United States technology for launch by Chinese missiles.

(c) WAIVER.—The President is not required to implement the sanctions provided for in this section for any year in which he certifies to the Congress that China has not—

(1) during the preceding year, supplied any ballistic or cruise missile, directly or through third parties, to Iran, Iraq, Syria, Libya, or Saudi Arabia and

(2) has provided reliable assurances that no future sale or transfer of any ballistic or cruise missile to such country is planned.

S. 209. A bill to amend section 547 of title 11, United States Code, to provide that certain withdrawal transactions made by depositors from certain financial institutions not be avoided as preferential transfers; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

TREATMENT OF CERTAIN WITHDRAWAL TRANSACTIONS

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, today I am reintroducing legislation that I developed during the last Congress in order to maintain the fairness and the spirit of our Bankruptcy Code. I am pleased that Senators SASSER, BOREN, and NICKLES are again joining me in sponsoring this important legislation.

A tragic application of a little-known provision of the Federal Bankruptcy Code has victimized some 800 former depositors of the Southern Industrial Banking Corp. [SIBC] in Tennessee. These good faith depositors accepted the risk of losing their money because the institution in which they kept it was not a federally insured bank. However, they never imagined that by withdrawing their money at the wrong time they could be sued as preferred creditors. These individuals did not realize that the SIBC was going to declare bankruptcy within the next 90 days. The SIBC's catastrophe has brought to light a grave unfairness in the preference language of the Bankruptcy Code—a loophole that allows the possibility of depositors being sued as the equivalent of preferred trade or business creditors in the event that an uninsured financial institution declares bankruptcy.

At first, bankruptcy experts and laymen alike thought that SIBC, an industrial loan and thrift company, was a unique hybrid institution that was not covered by Federal or State bankruptcy or banking laws. Time is proving that assessment wrong. Two years ago, two trust companies in Oklahoma declared bankruptcy. Now many depositors of Oklahoma Trust and Oklahoma Finance are on the brink of SIBC's preference depositors' 6-year-old nightmare, and it has become apparent that the problem is much broader than originally envisioned. Approximately 800 and possibly hundreds of thousands of their depositors may be at risk of a similar preference tragedy. While only bankruptcy courts decide whether or not a particular depository institution can file for bankruptcy, the threat of a bank filing bankruptcy and its depositors facing a subsequent preference suit has been demonstrated to be very real.

Under U.S. bankruptcy law, a preferred payment is one made to a creditor by a debtor during the 90 days before the debtor files for bankruptcy. Preferred payments are subject to repayment to the general pool of recovered funds which are then used to pay creditors on a percentage basis in a bankruptcy case. Congress drafted section 547 of the Bankruptcy Code with a view toward preventing a debtor from unjustly favoring certain of its creditors prior to bankruptcy.

But Congress also has the foresight to carve out certain exceptions to these preference laws. Among these, Congress exempted one class of businesses able to file for bankruptcy. This special group is comprised of banks, savings and loans, and virtually all depository institutions. Congress exempted these institutions for good reason: A person's relationship with a depository institution is not a debtor/creditor relationship but rather a fiduciary relationship.

The goal of our bill is to close an unintended and unjust loophole in the bankruptcy law by clarifying the concept of preferred creditors. The legislation would exempt from this preference language withdrawals from an entity that is in the business of accepting deposits but is a debtor eligible to file bankruptcy. Such withdrawals must have been made without insider knowledge of the financial condition of the business or its impending bankruptcy.

These former SIBC depositors were not insiders. They withdrew their money during the ordinary course of business and during the ordinary course of day-to-day life. They withdrew their money to pay hospital bills, put a down payment on a house, and to send their children to college. After 5 years of court battles, many of these hardworking people and retirees face losing their life savings, their homes, or their children's opportunity to attend college. Congress never intended the preferred creditor provisions in its bankruptcy laws to apply to the type of uninsured financial institutions that are now subject to its harsh effects.

I ask my colleagues to help restore the spirit and the credibility of our bankruptcy laws by joining me in support of this legislation.

I ask unanimous consent to insert the text of the bill:

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 210. A bill to extend compulsory OASDI and Medicare coverage to State and local government employees hired after December 31, 1989, or performing service after such date not subject to any public retirement system; to the Committee on Finance.

OASDI AND MEDICARE COVERAGE OF CERTAIN EMPLOYEES

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I am today introducing legislation to extend compulsory Old-Age, Survivors, and Disability Insurance [OASDI] coverage to all State and local government workers hired after December 31, 1989. The bill would also extend compulsory OASDI and Medicare coverage to State and local government workers already hired but not already covered by a State or local government retirement plan, with respect to services performed after the same date. I note that President Reagan's final budget, submitted to the Congress on January 9, includes a provision similar to that part of my bill dealing with the expansion of Medicare coverage for State and local government workers.

Under current law, State and local government workers are covered under the OASDI program only by means of voluntary agreements entered into by States and the Secretary of Health and Human Services. Prior to 1983 legislation, States could terminate their agreements and withdraw coverage for their workers. The termination, once in effect, was irrevocable and the same group could not be covered again. The Social Security Amendments of 1983 provided that States can no longer terminate coverage and may now reinstate it for those workers whose coverage had been previously terminated.

All States now have coverage agreements with the Secretary for at least some categories of State and local government workers. Approximately 10 million, or 69 percent, of the 14.5 million State and local government employees in 1984 were covered by the OASDI program. In 19 States those covered represented at least 90 percent of the State and local employees, and in only 8 States were coverage rates lower than 50 percent in 1984. In New York, 88 percent of State and local government workers were covered in that year.

Coverage under the Social Security Act of 1935 was limited to industrial and commercial employment—about 6 of every 10 jobs at that time. However, universal coverage was always a goal of the program, and coverage was expanded significantly in the early 1950's, to most self-employed, farm and household workers, members of the Armed Forces, and State and local government workers at the option of the State. Today about 95 percent of the jobs in paid employment and self-employment are covered under the OASDI program.

A national, compulsory social insurance system is most effective when coverage is as wide as possible. State and local government workers were originally excluded, then included only at State option, out of a concern about the constitutionality of the Federal Government laying taxes on the States. But more recent Supreme Court decisions, particularly Garcia versus San Antonio Metropolitan Transit Authority (1985), indicate that the doctrine of State immunity from Federal taxation would not bar the imposition of compulsory Social Security taxes on the States. With the constitutional impediment removed, there is no longer any rationale for excluding State and local government workers from Social Security protection.

For this reason, 1985 legislation extended compulsory Medicare coverage to State and local government employees hired after March 1986. Prior to April 1986, Medicare coverage for State and local government workers was also at State option. This bill would expand the Medicare coverage for those employees by including all State and local workers already hired but not covered by a State or local government retirement plan. As I noted earlier, President Reagan included a similar proposal in his final budget.

Aside from achieving the policy goals of wider national participation and improved protection for State and local government workers, the bill would also enhance the financial position of the Social Security and Medicare trust funds. According to Social Security Administration estimates, the bill would raise about $16 billion over the period 1990–1994.

Mr. President, I ask for the support of my colleagues in enacting this important policy initiative, and I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my statement.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

By Mr. MOYNIHAN:

S. 211. A bill to amend the Social Security Act to increase the allocation of employment taxes to the Federal Disability Insurance Trust Fund; to the Committee on Finance.

ALLOCATION OF EMPLOYMENT TAXES

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce a bill to make a small but necessary change in the allocation of Social Security tax revenues. Without affecting the overall Social Security tax rate, the bill would shift a portion of the tax revenue from the Old-Age and Survivors Insurance [OASI] Program to the Disability Insurance [DI] Program. The financial soundness of the DI Program would be strengthened for the long term, and the OASI program would remain in close actuarial balance.

Simply put, Mr. President, the combined programs are actuarially sound for the next 75 years, but taken separately, the DI Program is underfunded and the OASI Program is overfunded. This was noted in the 1988 report of the Social Security Board of Trustees. The report also indicated that the situation could be rectified by shifting a small portion of the revenues allocated to the OASI Program to the DI Program. At a hearing last year of the Senate Finance Subcommittee on Social Security and Family Policy, which I chair, we heard testimony from the distinguished former Social Security Chief Actuary Robert J. Myers, who recommended that we make such a reallocation. Based, then, on the 1988 trustees report and the testimony of Mr. Myers, I offer this legislation to make the needed change.

Mr. President, as you know, the current tax rate for the Old-Age, Survivors, and Disability Insurance Program is 6.06 percent of covered wages for employees and employers, each. Of this, 5.53 percent is allocated to the OASI trust fund and 0.53 percent to the DI trust fund. The bill would change the mix to 5.35 percent and 0.71 percent, respectively, thus leaving the overall tax rate the same. As I indicated, this would bring the DI Program into close actuarial balance over the long-range, 75-year projection period of the actuaries, while leaving the OASI program financially sound over the same period.

I urge the Senate's favorable consideration of this technical but important matter. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the rule be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 211

SECTION 1. INCREASED ALLOCATION OF EMPLOYMENT TAXES TO FEDERAL DISABILITY INSURANCE TRUST FUND.

Section 201(b) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 401(b)) is amended—

(1) by striking out "(O) 1.20 per centum of the wages (as so defined) paid after December 31, 1989, and before January 1, 2000, and so reported, and (P) 1.42 per centum of the wages (as so defined) paid after December 31, 1999, and so reported" in clause (1) and inserting in lieu thereof " and (O) 1.42 per centum of the wages (as so defined) paid after December 31, 1989, and so reported", and

(2) by striking out "(O) 1.20 per centum of the amount of self-employment income (as so defined) so reported for any taxable year beginning after December 31, 1989, and before January 1, 2000, and (P) 1.42 per centum of the self-employment income (as so defined) so reported for any taxable year beginning after December 31, 1999" in clause (2) and inserting in lieu thereof "and (O) 1.42 per centum of the amount of self-employment income (as so defined) so reported for any taxable year beginning after December 31, 1989".

By Mr. MOYNIHAN:

S. 212. A bill to amend title II of the Social Security Act to require the Secretary of Health and Human Services to provide personal earnings and benefits statements to individuals covered by Social Security, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

PROVISION OF EARNINGS AND BENEFIT STATEMENTS TO SOCIAL SECURITY EMPLOYEES

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce a very simple bill. This bill will require the Secretary of Health and Human Services to periodically inform workers covered by Social Security about their personal earnings records, about their Social Security tax contributions, and about their future Social Security benefits.

This is an idea whose time has come. I have described before for my colleagues the apocalyptic pronouncement made about the Social Security trust funds, not 8 years ago, by the then newly appointed Director of Management and Budget in the newly elected Reagan administration. Mr. Stockman told us then that the world's most devastating bankruptcy was but months away.

Today we contemplate trust fund reserves of unprecedented amounts. The reason? Because in 12 days in January 1983, a small group of us, spearheaded by the distinguished Republican leader and myself, reached agreement on changes in the Social Security system that assure its robust health far into the next century. Even as I speak, the reserves are building up at the rate of $109 million per day.

Notwithstanding this good news, many Americans have serious doubts. As recently as 1985, the public opinion survey firm of Yankelovich, Skelly & White conducted a survey on Social Security. I ask my colleagues to take note that fully two-thirds—66 percent—of nonretired adults thought it almost certain that they would not receive their Social Security benefits when they reached retirement age. Although recent data compiled by the American Council of Life Insurance indicate some improvement in 1988, lack of public confidence remains the biggest problem facing Social Security. Our fellow citizens do not trust their Social Security system.

And I think I may understand why. First there was the "World's Biggest Bankruptcy" scare, courtesy of David Stockman. That silliness is now behind us. But there is another reason, Mr. President. All of us pay into Social Security but rarely, until we become beneficiaries, do we ever hear from Social Security. We pay our taxes to Federal, State, and local governments and we hear back from them every year—reminding us to tote up how much we've paid in and how much we still owe or are due back. We receive monthly statements from our banks and credit card companies. Yet every month, in every paycheck, we see money withheld for Social Security, but we hear nary a word from the Social Security Administration.

And so, Mr. President, I propose that we rectify this situation. My bill, which I also introduced in the 100th Congress, would simply require that the Social Security Administration [SSA] provide us with statements on a regular basis. This is a large administrative undertaking and we must proceed carefully. Consequently, the bill phases in the new requirement over time.

To begin with, SSA must provide the new earnings record and benefit estimate statements to those who write in and request the information. On August 4, 1988, the day I introduced this legislation in the 100th Congress, SSA voluntarily inaugurated this component of the bill.

The second phase of my bill would require SSA to automatically send such statements to all individuals as they attain the age of 60 and near retirement. This requirement would become effective October 1, 1993.

The third phase of the bill requires the Secretary, by 2000, to provide annual statements to all workers covered by Social Security aged 25 or older. The Secretary must submit a plan to the Congress, not later than October 1, 1993, indicating how the Social Security Administration will accomplish this.

Finally, my bill will require the General Accounting Office to conduct a study of wage-reporting systems now in use by SSA, the Internal Revenue Service, and the States. This study will review options for avoiding unnecessary duplication of effort and for improving the accuracy of wage reporting.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to join me in this effort. Let us take this simple step to reassure Americans that Social Security will be there for them.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 212

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1 MANDATORY PROVISION OF PERSONAL EARNINGS AND BENEFITS STATEMENT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Title II of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 401-433) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"PERSONAL EARNINGS AND BENEFITS STATEMENTS

"Provision Upon Request

"SEC. 234. (a)(1) Beginning on October 1, 1990, the Secretary shall provide upon the request of an eligible individual a personal earnings and benefits statement (hereinafter referred to as the 'statement').

"(2) Each statement shall contain—

"(A) the amount of wages paid to and self-employment income derived by the eligible individual as shown by the records of the Secretary at the date of the request;

"(B) the old age, survivors, and disability insurance contributions, and the hospital insurance contributions of the eligible individual as shown by the records of the Secretary at the date of the request;

"(C) an estimate of the individual's future benefits upon retirement; and

"(D) a statement describing the basic benefits provided under medicare.

"(3) For purposes of this section, the term 'eligible individual' means an individual who—

"(A) has a social security number,

"(B) has attained age 25, and

"(C) has wages or net earnings from self-employment.

"Notice to Eligible Individual

"(b) The Secretary shall to the maximum extent practicable take such steps as are necessary to assure that eligible individuals are informed of the availability of the Statement described in subsection (a).

"Mandatory Provision of Statements

"(c)(1) Beginning not later than October 1, 1993, the Secretary shall provide a statement to each eligible individual who has attained age 60 and for whom a mailing address can be determined through such methods as the Secretary deems appropriate. The Secretary shall provide with each statement to an eligible individual notice that such statement is updated annually and is available upon request.

"(2) Beginning on October 1, 2000, the Secretary shall provide a statement annually to each eligible individual for whom a mailing address can be determined through such methods as the Secretary deems appropriate.".

(b) REPORT TO CONGRESS AND STUDY.—

(1) Not later than October 1, 1993, the Secretary shall submit to Congress a report describing the methods by which the Secretary plans to provide statements annually to all eligible individuals by the year 2000.

(2) The Comptroller General of the United States shall conduct a study of the wage-reporting systems now in use by the Social Security Administration, the Internal Revenue Service, and the States. Such study shall review options for avoiding unnecessary duplication of efforts between the different systems and improving accuracy in wage reporting. A copy of such study shall be provided to the Secretary not later than October 1, 1992.

(c) DISCLOSURE OF ADDRESS INFORMATION BY INTERNAL REVENUE SERVICE TO SOCIAL SECURITY ADMINISTRATION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 6103(m) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to disclosure of taxpayer identity information) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph :

"(6) PERSONAL EARNINGS AND BENEFITS STATEMENTS FURNISHED BY SOCIAL SECURITY ADMINISTRATION.—Upon written request by the Commissioner of Social Security, the Secretary may disclose the mailing address of any taxpayer who is entitled to receive a personal earnings and benefits statement pursuant to section 234(c) of the Social Security Act, for use only by officers, employees, or agents of the Social Security Administration for purposes of mailing such statement to such taxpayer.".

(2) SAFEGUARDS.—The last sentence of section 6103(p)(4) of such Code (relating to safeguards) is amended by striking out "Subsection (m)(2) or (4)" and inserting in lieu thereof "paragraphs (2), (4), or (6) of subsection (m)".

(3) UNAUTHORIZED DISCLOSURE PENALTIES.—Paragraph (2) of section 7213(a) of such Code (relating to unauthorized disclosure of returns and return information) is amended by striking out "(m)(2) or (4)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(m) (2), (4), or (6)".

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall take effect on the date of enactment of this Act.

S. 213. A bill to amend the Social Security Act to reduce the effect of the disability benefits offset; to the Committee on Finance.

REDUCTION OF EFFECT OF DISABILITY BENEFITS OFFSET

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, today I offer legislation to remedy an inequity in the Social Security Program that involves the disability benefit offset. Presently, the offset applies differently to two groups of disabled individuals—those whose earnings were all from employment covered by the Social Security Program, and those whose earnings were partially from covered employment and partially from noncovered public employment—to the unfair disadvantage of the latter group. This bill would provide for more uniform application of the disability offset.

Under the disability offset, if an individual receives both a Social Security disability benefit and a workmen's compensation benefit based on the same injury, the disability benefit is offset to the extent that the combined benefits exceed 80 percent of predisability earnings. The rule was designed to prevent people from getting too much in benefits, compared to what they had previously earned, and this of course is reasonable. But for an individual who has both covered earnings and noncovered earnings from public employment, the offset works in a way that curtails Social Security disability benefits much more sharply, and more than can be justified. For an individual who has both covered earnings and noncovered earnings from public employment and who receives both a Social Security disability benefit and a benefit based on his public employment, the Social Security disability benefit is offset to the extent that combined benefits exceed 80 percent of only the Social Security covered earnings.

For those with noncovered earnings from public work, the offset works in an arbitrary fashion that goes beyond the rationale of the provision. To achieve parallel treatment to those whose earnings are all from covered employment, the Social Security disability benefit should be offset to the extent that combined benefits exceed 80 percent of the combined covered and noncovered earnings. This is the legislative correction that would be accomplished by this bill, a correction that would end an anomolous and unfair treatment of disabled public servants.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 213

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. EFFECT ON DISABILITY BENEFITS OFFSET REDUCED.

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 224(a) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 424a(a)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "For purposes of the preceding sentence, an individual's wages and self-employment income shall include wages and self-employment income not subject to the provisions of this title for service performed in the employ of the United States, a State, or any political subdivision of a State, or any instrumentality of any one or more of the foregoing, if evidence of such wages and self-employment income is provided by such individual to the Security in such form and manner as the Secretary prescribes.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by this section shall apply with respect to applications for disability insurance benefits filed on or after the date of the enactment of this Act.

S. 214. A bill to direct the Secretary of Health and Human Services to develop a prototype of a counterfeit-resistant Social Security card, and to provide for a study and report on the development of such card; to the Committee on Finance.

DEVELOPMENT OF COUNTERFEIT-PROOF SOCIAL SECURITY CARD

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, it was 12 years ago that I first proposed we produce a new tamper-resistant Social Security card to reduce fraud and enhance public confidence in our Social Security system. This has been an ongoing battle, and I rise yet again to continue the effort.

The bill I offer today is very simple, really. It would require two things. First, it would require the Secretary of Health and Human Services to develop a prototype of a counterfeit-proof Social Security card. The prototype card would be designed with the security features necessary so that it could be used more reliably than the present card to verify eligibility for employment under the Immigration Reform and Control Act of 1986, and could also be used as a voter registration card.

Second, it would require the Secretary to study and report to Congress on ways to improve the Social Security card application process so as to reduce the processes' vulnerability to fraud.

When the Social Security amendments were before us in 1983, we approved a provision to require the production of a new tamper-resistant Social Security card. The law, section 345 of Public Law 98-21, stated:

> The social security card shall be made of banknote paper, and (to the maximum extent practicable) shall be a card which cannot be counterfeited.

What a disappointment when late that year, the Social Security Administration began to issue the new card, and it became clear that the agency simply had not understood what Congress intended. The new card looks much like the old, a pasteboard card really much like the first ones produced by Social Security in 1936. It has the same design framing the name and nearly the same colors. It feels the same. An expert examining a card with a magnifying glass can certainly detect whether or not one of the new ones is genuine, but the average employer cannot distinguish a counterfeit card from the real article.

By so doing—or not so doing—the Social Security Administration did not succeed in protecting the integrity of the Social Security system, or American taxpayers from the massive amounts of fraud perpetrated with the help of counterfeit cards. Nor did they help the young Hispanic worker who needs a document that can quickly establish his legal status to an employer's satisfaction.

There is a history here. The Social Security Administration, from its earlier years, has resisted any use of the Social Security card for identification purposes. At one time, the card actually said it could not be so used.

It 1977, when I first proposed that we produce a new card, the Social Security Administration objected and the proposal was not adopted. I tried again and again, and succeeded only on the fifth try.

Or so I thought.

The use of counterfeit Social Security cards is costly. According to estimates by the Department of Health and Human Services and the Department of Transportation, crimes based on false identification, which frequently include counterfeit and fraudulently obtained Social Security cards, cost Americans more than $15 billion annually.

A new Social Security card—one very difficult to counterfeit and easily verified as genuine—could be manufactured at a very small cost. Today, the average high-technology credit card with a magnetic stripe costs 8 cents to produce. A Social Security card could be designed along just these lines. The card could be highly tamper-resistant, and its authenticity could be readily discerned by the untrained eye. It must be seen as a special document; one which would be visually and tactilely more difficult to counterfeit than the current paper card.

The magnetic stripe would contain the Social Security number, encoded with an algorithm known only to the Social Security Administration. A so-called watermark stripe could be placed over it, making it nearly impossible to counterfeit without technology that currently costs $10 million. The decoding algorithm could be integrated with the Social Security Administration computers.

Any employer could verify that the card was genuine with the simple hardware now used for credit cards at just about every airline and grocery checkout counter, magnetic card readers. The information is transmitted from the card to the reader, to verify if the card contains a valid coded number to be interpreted by the algorithm, and then, if necessary, the validity of that Social Security number could be verified by phone link with a central Social Security file.

Let me repeat. According to Malco, the largest manufacturer of credit cards with magnetic stripes, these cards cost 8 cents apiece, when purchased in quantities of 1 million or more. For a bit more, each card could include a hologram, which is also very difficult for counterfeiters to reproduce.

The new cards will not eliminate all fraudulent use of Social Security cards. But it will close down the shopfront operations that flood America with false Social Security cards. And once implemented, a young worker could bring an employer a document which could be authenticated on the spot, and declare without trepidation, I am legal; I am eligible to work for you in the United States.

That is what the Congress intended in the 1983 legislation. Not a card to be authenticated solely by Immigration and Naturalization Service technicians, but a card to be sized up by employers with relative ease and certainty.

Let us try again.

In March 1988, the General Accounting Office released a report on ways to improve the integrity of the Social Security card, particularly for employment eligibility verification purposes under the Immigration Reform and Control Act of 1986. The report was required by an amendment to the immigration bill, which I offered in the Senate. The report points out the present card's vulnerability to fraud and identifies a number of counterfeit-resistant technologies that could be used to enhance the card's integrity, such as holograms and magnetic stripes. It notes, however, that even with a tamper-resistant card there is still potential for fraud due to weaknesses in the card application process.

Based on this report, I offer the present bill, which, as I said earlier, would require only the development of a prototype counterfeit-resistant card and a study on ways to reduce the vulnerability of the card application process to fraud. The bill further specifies that the prototype card should be one that could also be used as a voter registration card. The Attorney General would assist the Secretary of Health and Human Services with determining what is needed here. This, obviously, is an attempt to see if there isn't something we can do about our depressingly low rates of voter turnout.

I ask for the support of my colleagues on this important matter once again—this time for a simple phototype card and a study. And I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be included in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 214

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. DEVELOPMENT OF PROTOTYPE OF COUNTERFEIT-RESISTANT SOCIAL SECURITY CARD REQUIRED.

(a) IN GENERAL.—(1) The Secretary of Health and Human Services (hereinafter referred to as the "Secretary") shall in accordance with the provision of this section develop a prototype of a counterfeit-resistant Social Security card. Such prototype card shall—

(A) be made of a durable, tamper-resistant material such as plastic or polyester,

(B) employ technologies that provide security features, such as magnetic stripes, holograms, and integrated circuits,

(C) be developed to provide a more reliable means of verifying eligibility for employment under the Immigration Reform and Control Act of 1986, and

(D) contain features allowing it to be utilized as a voter registration card.

(2) The Attorney General of the United States shall provide such information and assistance as the Secretary deems necessary to achieve the purposes of this Act.

(b) STUDY AND REPORT.—(1) The Secretary shall conduct a study and issue a report to Congress which examines different methods of improving the current Social Security card application process.

(2) Copies of the report described in this subsection along with a facsimile of the prototype card as described in subsection (a) of this section shall be submitted to the House Ways and Means and Judiciary Committees and the Senate Finance and Judiciary Committees within 1 year of the date of enactment of this Act.

(c) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated from the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Insurance Trust Fund such sums as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this section.

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The provisions of this section shall become effective upon the date of enactment of this Act.

By Mr. MOYNIHAN:

S. 215. A bill entitled the "Social Security Trust Funds Management Act"; to the Committee on Finance.

SOCIAL SECURITY TRUST FUNDS MANAGEMENT ACT

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, on this first day of legislation in the 101st Congress, I rise to offer the Social Security Trust Funds Management Act of 1989, legislation to reform current investment practices governing the Social Security trust funds. During the 99th and 100th Congresses, the Senate thrice accepted identical language, but, due to House opposition, the provisions of this act have never been enacted into law. Upon reintroduction, I am happy to have the support of my distinguished colleague from Michigan, Senator RIEGLE.

The intent of this bill is to prevent from happening again what never should have happened at all: The disinvestment in 1984 and 1985 of Social Security trust fund assets in order to keep the Federal Government running. The Government resorted to this practice during those times when its ability to borrow additional funds to pay for the budget deficit had temporarily expired.

This legislation clarifies that the invested assets of the Social Security—old age, survivors, and disability insurance—trust funds may be redeemed and used only to pay Social Security benefits and never to fund, or temporarily float, other Government expenses.

Mr. President, it became clear in 1985 and 1986 that the Department of the Treasury manipulated Social Security trust fund moneys, in the fall of 1985 and 1984, in order to avoid the debt ceiling. I am afraid this is a problem which, unless addressed by corrective legislation, threatens public confidence in the security of the trust funds.

Most members of the Senate are acquainted with what occurred. But as a matter of record, those events bear restating. During 1985, the Secretary of the Treasury, as managing trustee of the Social Security trust funds, disinvested, or prematurely redeemed $6.9 billion of Social Security's long-term securities in September, another $4.8 billion in October and $13.7 billion in November, drawing down these trust funds from $37 billion at the end of August to about $11 billion by November 12—a level not sufficient to pay 1 month's worth of benefits. The interest that the trust funds could have lost by such premature redemptions was estimated by the Social Security Office of the Actuary to be some $875 million. Moreover, the Treasury Department took a similar step the previous year, during the September-October 1984 debt limit impasse. At that time, $5.1 billion of Social Security's long-term bonds were prematurely cashed in, which could have resulted in a $382 million loss of interest to the trust funds.

Disinvestment of this magnitude was unprecedented. So, equally, was the concealment. Neither the congressional committees with jurisdiction over the program nor the public trustees of the system received any notification of these extraordinary steps. In late 1985, Treasury officials defended themselves by citing an October 22, 1985, letter from Secretary Baker to the conferees on the debt limit bill. That letter warned that Treasury was prepared to take the extraordinary step of disinvesting trust fund assets if the debt limit impasse had not been resolved by October 31. But what of the large-scale—indeed extraordinary—disinvestment of over $11 billion in bonds that had already taken place in early September and again in early October? We were not told of these.

On September 10, 1985, John J. Niehenke, then Acting Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, testified before the Senate Finance Subcommittee on Taxation and Debt Management. In his testimony—given just after $6.9 billion in Social Security bonds had been redeemed—Mr. Niehenke stated:

Our current cash and debt projections indicate that the present debt limit of $1,823.8 billion should be adequate to meet the Treasury's needs until September 30.

Such was adequate to meet the Treasury's needs only after raiding the Social Security trust funds for nearly $7 billion. Yet, Mr. Niehenke made no mention of that.

On November 7, after much difficulty, I was able to have the Finance Committee's Subcommittee of Social Security and Public Assistance hold a hearing on this matter. We were allowed only one witness: former Treasury Deputy Assistant Secretary John J. Niehenke.

I believe the exchange I had with Mr. Niehenke reflects an extraordinary lack of candor. The transcript of that hearing will reveal an episode wherein I attempted to secure from Mr. Niehenke one basic, but important piece of information: The long-term investments held by the trust funds as of November 7—the day of the hearing. Such information would have revealed the disinvestments of early November. I had to drag this basic information out of him. Nor was he forthright about admitting to the September-October, 1984 disinvestment, let alone suggesting that the resultant loss of interest to the trust funds be restored.

In the wake of these hearings, Congress did act to make the trust funds whole. On November 12, 1985, the Senate adopted an amendment I offered along with Senator RIEGLE to fully correct the situation. The long-term bonds cashed in during the fall of 1985 were consequently restored to the trust funds, as was the interest lost as a result of the 1984 disinvestment.

Both the General Accounting Office and the Congressional Research Service have since looked into Treasury's practices. The GAO found that the Secretary's actions were "in violation of the Social Security Act," but that "we cannot say that the Secretary acted unreasonably given the extraordinary situation in which he was operating." More interesting, the CRS report on Social Security disinvestment speaks to the fiduciary responsibility of the Secretary of the Treasury, stating, "[t]he conclusion seems inescapable that in enacting the Social Security Act Congress to a greater or lesser extent had certain features of private trust law in mind." Comparing the Secretary's fiduciary responsibilities to those of private fiduciaries, CRS reasons that public officers who are responsible for holding, depositing, and investing public funds are properly held to an even higher standard than are private fiduciaries.

Mr. President, I am deeply disturbed by what has happened. Why weren't we informed in a timely manner of these disinvestments? Why were we left to our own devices to find out just what was being done with such large amounts of public money? Why weren't the other trustees, particularly the two public trustees, informed? Those of us who helped frame the 1983 Social Security Amendments, which established the two public trustees, intended that they would act as public guardians of the funds. If recent events are any indication, these trustees may be completely ignored, unless we change the law.

In the wake of our revelations about past disinvestment practices, the Department of Treasury tried to assure us that such covert disinvestment would cease. In a letter to me, Assistant Treasury Secretary Bruce Thompson stated:

> . . . as a matter of policy, the Secretary has directed that both Congress and the trustees be kept informed on significant matters affecting the trust funds.

Well and good. Since that time, the Department has made a real effort to keep us better apprised of anticipated problems. Yet the systemic weakness which precipitated massive disinvestment in the first place has yet to be addressed. Characteristic of a pattern we know all too well, we were unable to pass a timely debt limit increase again in 1986, and again in 1987, endangering a number of Federal trust funds, including the civil service retirement and disability fund, the defense military retirement fund, and the Social Security trust funds. Indeed, the first two did lose interest payments as a result.

Mr. President, past experience suggests to me that it is time, past time, to change the law. Put simply, Treasury should not be allowed to engage in creative financing schemes that are tantamount to using Social Security money to float the rest of Government.

For this reason, I am reintroducing the Social Security Trust Funds Management Act. This legislation would first prohibit disinvestment of OASDI trust fund assets during a debt ceiling crisis for anything other than the timely payment of Social Security benefits and administrative expenses.

Second, the proposal would mandate that uninvested Social Security tax receipts be invested in interest-bearing Government obligations as soon as the debt ceiling is increased. This provision would prohibit the Government from using such balances as a loan to pay for any other operating expenses.

Third, the Social Security Trust Funds Management Act also would make a permanent appropriation to restore to the trust funds any amounts that may be lost in future debt limit crises.

Fourth, the managing trustee would be required to notify the Social Security Board of Trustees and the Congress 15 days in advance of an anticipated disinvestment; he would also be required to carry out his Social Security investment duties, notwithstanding any other of his duties arising by reason of the debt limit.

Mr. President, the earlier disinvestment actions of the Treasury Department would not have withstood the scrutiny to which private fiduciaries are subject. Our proposal would require the managing trustee to exercise the same degree of care in managing the trust funds as would be required of a private fiduciary.

And finally, with respect to reporting requirements, our legislation would require the managing trustee to report monthly to the trustees on the operation and status of the trust funds. The Secretary ought to be required specifically to keep his fellow trustees informed so that they may all be held accountable for such actions. More frequent meetings of the trustees would also help. In the past, they have met only once a year to sign the annual trustee report. The Board of Trustees would be required to meet semiannually to review trust fund operations and report to Congress on that review. And finally, to avoid the temptation to manipulate trust fund moneys, the proposal would eliminate normalized tax transfers after June 30, 1990. All other provisions of the bill would be effective upon enactment.

In closing, Mr. President, I would like to point out that extremely large surpluses will be building up in the trust funds in the near future. The 1983 Social Security Amendments are working to restore the system to financial health. In fact, the funds are in better shape than we had anticipated—so much better that in January 1986, 2 years ahead of schedule, OASDI was able to fully repay the moneys it had previously borrowed from the HI fund.

Recent estimates by the Social Security Office of the Actuary indicate that by the end of calendar year 1992, OASDI will have accumulated a surplus of over a quarter of a trillion dollars—$283 billion. The cumulative surpluses are indicated in a table which I ask unanimous consent be printed in the RECORD following my remarks.

Longer-term projections indicate that the OASDI trust funds will reach over one-half trillion dollars by 1995 and well over $1 trillion by the year 2000.

If past, relatively small trust fund assets have proved tempting targets for the Treasury Department, just think how tempting a trillion dollars of such assets would be. The building of trust fund assets makes it even more important that we approve the legislation I propose in order to preclude any future manipulation of those funds.

My colleagues in the Senate recognized the need for more careful oversight of investment practices when they accepted the language of this bill in the 99th Congress—first, as a provision of the debt limit increase (H.J. Res. 668), and again on September 19, 1986, as an amendment to the Sixth Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act (S. 2706).

The House, however, insisted on its proposal (H.R. 5050) to prohibit disinvestment for any purpose, even if this resulted in Social Security checks not being mailed during a debt limit impasse. By the end of the 99th Congress, no legislation to prevent further disinvestment had been enacted.

The Senate again accepted this language in the 100th Congress, passing it by unanimous consent as an amendment to the Public Debt Limit Increase (H.J. Res. 324) on July 31, 1987. The language was again dropped in conference, however, due to House opposition.

On May 8, 1987, then Under Secretary of the Treasury George D. Gould spoke to this issue in testimony before the Committee on Finance Subcommittee on Taxation and Debt Management. In his testimony, Mr. Gould stated an unequivocal preference for the approach taken by this legislation over similar House versions:

> There has been a great deal of controversy in recent years regarding noninvestment or disinvestment of trust funds . . . Two approaches to resolving the issue were advanced . . . Under the first option, legislation would be enacted to require the Secretary to disinvest the trust funds in amounts sufficient to assure that cash could be raised through market borrowing to pay benefits in a timely fashion, and subsequently to restore any interest losses. The second option would be an outright statutory prohibition against disinvestments under any circumstances. We believe it is important to have this issue be resolved one way or the other so as to clarify responsibilities. We prefer the first option, with its greater reassurance to trust fund beneficiaries.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to again support this important legislation, and I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill and a table showing an increase in the fund be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 215

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the "Social Security Trust Funds Management Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. INVESTMENT AND RESTORATION OF TRUST FUNDS.

(a) Subsection (d) of section 201 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 401(d)) is amended—

(1) by striking out "(1) on original issue" and inserting in lieu thereof "(A) on original issue",

(2) by striking out "(2) by purchase" and inserting in lieu thereof "(B) by purchase";

(3) by striking out "It shall be" and inserting in lieu thereof "(1) It shall be", and

(4) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

(2) If—

"(A) any amounts in the Trust Funds have not been invested solely by reason of the public debt limit, and

"(B) the taxes described in clause (3) or (4) of subsection (a) with respect to which such amounts were appropriated to the Trust Funds have actually been received into the general fund of the Treasury of the United States, such amounts shall be invested by the Managing Trustee as soon as such investments can be made without exceeding the public debt limit and without jeopardizing the timely payment of benefits under this title or under any other provision of law directly related to the programs established by this title.

"(3)(A) Upon expiration of any debt limit impact period, the Managing Trustee shall immediately—

"(i) reissue to each of the Trust Funds obligations under chapter 31 of title 31, United States Code, that are identical, with respect to interest rate and maturity, to public debt obligations held by such Trust Fund that—

"(I) were redeemed during the debt limit impact period, and

"(II) as determined by the Managing Trustee on the basis of standard investment procedures for such Trust Fund in effect on the day before the date on which the debt limit impact period began would not have been redeemed if the debt limit impact period had not occurred, and

"(ii) issue to each of the Trust Funds obligations under chapter 31 of title 31, United States Code, that are identical, with respect to interest rate and maturity, to public debt obligations which—

"(I) were not issued during the debt limit impact period, and

"(II) as determined by the Managing Trustee on the basis of such standard investment procedures, would have been issued if the debt limit impact period had not occurred.

"(B) Obligations issued or reissued under subparagraph (A) shall be substituted for obligations that are held by the Trust Fund, and for amounts in the Trust Fund that have not been invested, on the date on which the debt limit impact period ends in a manner that will ensure that, after such substitution, the holdings of the Trust Fund will replicate to the maximum extent practicable the obligations that would be held by such Trust Fund if the debt limit impact period had not occurred.

"(C) In determining, for purposes of this paragraph, the obligations that would be held by a Trust Fund if the debt limit impact period had not occurred, any amounts in the Trust Fund which have not been invested, and any amounts required to be invested under paragraph (2), shall be treated as amounts which were required to be invested upon transfer to the Trust Fund.

"(4) The Managing Trustee shall pay, on the first normal interest payment date that occurs on or after the date on which any debt limit impact period ends, to each of the Trust Funds, from amounts in the general fund of the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, an amount determined by the Managing Trustee to be equal to the excess of—

"(A) the net amount of interest that would have been earned by such Trust Fund during such debt limit impact period if—

"(i) amounts in such Trust Fund that were not invested during such debt limit impact period solely by reason of the public debt limit had been invested, and

"(ii) redemptions and disinvestments with respect to such Trust Fund which occurred during such debt limit impact period solely by reason of the public debt limit had not occurred, over

"(B) the sum of—

"(i) the net amount of interest actually earned by such Trust Fund during such debt limit impact period, plus

"(ii) the total amount of the principal of all obligations issued or reissued under paragraph (3)(A) at the end of such debt limit impact period that is attributable to interest that would have been earned by such Trust Fund during such debt limit impact period but for the public debt limit.

"(5) For purposes of this section—

"(A) The term 'public debt limit' means the limitation imposed by subsection (b) of section 3101 of title 31, United States Code.

"(B) The term 'debt limit impact period' means any period for which the Secretary of the Treasury determines that the issuance of obligations of the United States sufficient to orderly conduct the financial operations of the United States may not be made without exceeding the public debt limit.".

(b) Subsection (a) of section 201 of the Social Security Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "All amounts so transferred shall be immediately available exclusively for the purpose for which amounts in the Trust Fund are specifically made available under this title or under any other provisions of law directly related to the programs established by this title.".

SEC. 3. REPEAL OF NORMALIZED TAX TRANSFER.

(a) Subsection (a) of section 201 of the Social Security Act is amended by striking out the matter following clause (4) and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "The amounts appropriated by clauses (3) and (4) shall be transferred from the general fund of the Treasury of the United States to the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Insurance Trust Fund, and the amounts appropriated by clauses (1) and (2) of subsection (b) shall be transferred from the general fund of the Treasury to the Federal Disability Insurance Trust Fund, upon receipt by the general fund of taxes specified in clauses (3) and (4) of this subsection (as estimated by the Secretary). Proper adjustments shall be made in amounts subsequently transferred to the extent amounts previously transferred were in excess of, or were less than, the taxes specified in such clauses (3) and (4). All amounts so transferred shall be immediately available exclusively for the purpose for which amounts in the Trust Fund are specifically made available under this title or under other provisions of law directly related to the programs established by this title.".

(b) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall take effect on July 1, 1990.

SEC. 4. FAITHFUL EXECUTION OF DUTIES BY MEMBERS OF BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF TRUST FUNDS.

Section 201(c) of the Social Security Act is amended by striking the last sentence and inserting the following: "A person serving on the Board of Trustees (including the Managing Trustee) shall not be considered to be a fiduciary, but each such person shall faithfully execute the duties imposed on such person by this section. A person serving on the Board of Trustees (including the Managing Trustee) shall not be personally liable for actions taken in such capacity with respect to the Trust Funds.".

SEC. 5. REPORTS REGARDING THE OPERATION AND STATUS OF THE TRUST FUNDS.

Subsection (c) of section 201 of the Social Security Act is amended—

(1) by striking "once" in the fourth sentence and inserting "twice",

(2) by redesignating paragraphs (1) and (2) as subparagraphs (A) and (B), respectively,

(3) by redesignating paragraphs (3), (4), and (5) as subparagraphs (D), (E), and (F), respectively,

(4) by inserting after subparagraph (B) (as redesignated by paragraph (2) of this section) the following:

"(C) Report to the Congress as soon as possible, but not later than the date that is 30 days after the first normal interest payment date occurring on or after the date on which any debt limit impact period for which the Managing Trustee is required to take action under paragraph (3) or (4) of subsection (d) ends, on—

"(i) the operation and status of the Trust Funds during such debt limit impact period, and

"(ii) the actions taken under paragraphs (3) and (4) of subsection (d) with respect to such debt limit impact period;",

(5) by striking out "in paragraph (2) above" and inserting in lieu thereof "in subparagraph (B) above",

(6) by inserting "(1)" after "(c)", and

(7) by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(2) The Managing Trustee shall report monthly to the Board of Trustees concerning the operation and status of the Trust Funds and shall report to Congress and to the Board of Trustees not less than 15 days prior to the date on which by reason of the public debt limit, the Managing Trustee expects to be unable to fully comply with the provisions of subsection (a) or (d)(1), and shall include in such report an estimate of the expected consequences to the Trust Funds of such inability.".

SEC. 6. ELIMINATION OF UNDUE DISCRETION IN THE INVESTMENT OF TRUST FUNDS.

(a) Section 201(d) of the Social Security Act is amended, in the first sentence—

(1) by inserting "immediately" after "to invest"; and

(2) by striking ", in his judgment,".

(b)(1) Paragraph (2) of section 201(d) of the Social Security Act, as added by section 2 of this Act, is amended to read as follows:

"(2) If any amount in either of the Trust Funds is not invested solely by reason of the public debt limit, such amount shall be invested as soon as such investment can be made without exceeding the public debt limit and without jeopardizing the timely payment of benefits under this title or under any other provision of law directly related to the programs established by this title."

(2) The amendment made by paragraph (1) shall take effect on July 1, 1990.

SEC. 7. SALES AND REDEMPTIONS BY TRUST FUNDS.

Section 201(e) of the Social Security Act is amended—

(1) by inserting "(1)" after "(e)"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following:

"(2)(A) The Managing Trustee may effect any such sale or redemption with respect to either Trust Fund only for the purpose of enabling such Trust Fund to make payments authorized by this title or under any other provisions of law directly related to the programs established by this title. If either of the Trust Funds holds any amounts which are not invested by reason of the public debt limit, the Managing Trustee is nevertheless directed to make such sales and redemptions if, and only to the extent, necessary to assure timely payment of benefits and other payments authorized by this title or by any other provisions of law directly related to the programs established by this title, but the principal amount of obligations sold or redeemed pursuant to this sentence shall not exceed the principal amount of obligations that would have been sold or redeemed under normal operating procedures in order to make such payments.".

SEC. 8. EFFECTIVE DATE.

Except as otherwise provided by this title, the amendments made by this title shall take effect on the date of enactment of this Act.

[1] Projected Net Increase in the Combined Old-Age and Survivors Insurance [OASI] and Disability Insurance (DI) Trust Funds, based on alternative II–B of the 1988 Trustees Report, calendar years 1988–32.

Alternative II–B of the 1988 Trustees Report refers to one of four sets of economic assumptions. Assumptions I and III refer to "optimistic" and "pessimistic" assumptions, respectively. Assumptions II–A and II–B are intermediate assumptions: II–B is the less optimistic of the two.

By Mr. MOYNIHAN:

S. 216. A bill to establish the Social Security Administration as an independent agency, which shall be headed by a Social Security Board, and which shall be responsible for the administration of the old-age, survivors, and disability insurance program under title II of the Social Security Act and the supplemental security income program under title XVI of such Act; to the Committee on Finance.

SOCIAL SECURITY ADMINISTRATIVE REFORM ACT OF 1989

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, at the outset of this 101st Congress, I rise to introduce legislation to reorganize the Social Security Administration as an independent agency, governed by a three-member, bipartisan board.

This bill would establish an independent agency to administer the Old-Age, Survivors, and Disability Insurance [OASDI] programs and the Supplemental Security Income [SSI] program. These programs comprise the core of America's social safety net. OASDI and SSI provide essential income support to families who have lost a bread winner, to aged and disabled individuals and their dependents, and to indigent aged and disabled adults, respectively.

Why should the Social Security Administration, which administers these vital programs, be made an independent agency?

The reason is simple: The operations of the Social Security Administration would be improved, and public confidence in the system strengthened, by establishing Social Security as an independent agency.

This is not a new idea—just one lately forgotten. The original Social Security Act of 1935 established an independent Social Security Board to administer the Old-Age Insurance program. In 1939, the Social Security program was made a part of the independent Federal Security Agency, where it remained until 1953. Only at that time, nearly 20 years after passage of the Social Security Act, was the Social Security Administration made part of the newly formed Department of Health, Education and Welfare. There it has remained.

Almost 30 year later in 1981, the National Commission on Social Security urged the President and Congress to create an independent agency to administer the OASDI and SSI programs. In 1983, the National Commission on Social Security Reform, on which I served, stated its support for the concept of an independent Social Security Administration. The time has come to act on these recommendations.

The size of these programs, and their importance to nearly every American, recommend an independent agency. Simply put, the Social Security Administration has outgrown the Department of Health and Human Services. The benefits paid through the Social Security and SSI programs today account for over 60 percent of the Department's entire budget. In 1953, 6 million Americans received monthly Social Security checks; 36 years later, that number has increased over sixfold. More than 38 million Americans receive monthly Social Security checks today. Another 4.5 million of our most needy blind, aged, and disabled citizens receive SSI assistance. Approximately one of every six Americans receives an OASDI and/or SSI benefit.

The independent agency established under this legislation would be governed by a bipartisan, three-member Board of Directors, appointed by the President for staggered 6-year terms. The appointment of the Directors would be subject to the advice and consent of the Senate. The Board would be responsible for developing Administration policy, and annual budget and legislative recommendations, as well as providing the President and Congress with research, policy, and actuarial analysis. A Board-appointed Executive Director would be responsible for overseeing day-to-day administrative operations and carrying out other duties prescribed by the Board.

A Board whose members served 6-year terms would likely be more stable than the current administrative structure of Social Security. Because the 6-year terms would overlap presidential administrations, the Board would help deter policy changes designed to further the short-term objective of any single administration, rather than to serve the long-term best interests of our Nation's Social Security system.

By assuring millions of Americans a dependable retirement income and protection in the event of disability, our social insurance programs have won widespread public support. The system has also earned a well deserved reputation for administrative efficiency, fairness and public responsiveness. In recent years, I'm sorry to say, this reputation has been somewhat tarnished. During the Reagan watch, for example, hundreds of thousands of disability beneficiaries had their benefits terminated. On appeal, over half had their benefits reinstated. Even more troubling, only 2 months ago, the New York Times reported the outgoing administration was considering changes in the appeals process which would severely limit an elderly or disabled citizen's ability to contest benefit denials. Why? Because the administration knew it was losing half of the appeals and that there is a growing backlog of cases on appeal. I do not dispute that there is a backlog of cases on appeal, nor even that some changes in procedures may be warranted. But as chairman of the Subcommittee on Social Security and Family Policy, I shall insist, Mr. President, that any proposed changes justly serve the beneficiaries who are entitled under the law to OASDI and SSI benefits, rather than promote—under the guise of efficiency—shortsighted budget-cutting goals. This is not one example of the politicization of the Social Security Administration, a trend that must be reversed.

By establishing the Social Security Administration as an independent agency governed by a bipartisan Board, we can help restore the high levels of efficiency and fairness for which SSA is deservedly famous, as well as insulate its vital programs from partisan politics.

I urge my colleagues to join me in support of this important initiative, and I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

S. 216

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SEC. 2. DECLARATION OF PURPOSE.

The purposes of this Act are as follows:

(1) to establish the Social Security Administration as an independent agency, separate from the Department of Health and Human Services;

(2) to charge the Social Security Administration with administration of the old-age, survivors, and disability insurance program and supplemental security income program;

(3) to establish a Social Security Board as head of the Social Security Administration and define the powers and duties of such Board;

(4) to establish an Executive Director of the Administration and define the powers and duties of the Executive Director; and

(5) to provide for delegating major management authorities to the Board and the Executive Director.

TITLE I—ESTABLISHMENT OF THE SOCIAL SECURITY ADMINISTRATION

SEC. 101. ESTABLISHMENT OF SOCIAL SECURITY ADMINISTRATION AS A SEPARATE, INDEPENDENT AGENCY; RESPONSIBILITIES OF THE AGENCY.

Section 701 of the Social Security Act is amended to read as follows:

"SOCIAL SECURITY ADMINISTRATION

"SEC. 701. There is hereby established, as an independent agency in the executive branch of the Government, a Social Security Administration. It shall be the duty of the Administration to administer the old-age, survivors, and disability insurance program under title II and the supplemental security income program under title XVI.".

SEC. 102. SOCIAL SECURITY BOARD; EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR; DEPUTY DIRECTOR; BENEFICIARY OMBUDSMAN; OTHER OFFICERS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 702 of the Social Security Act is amended to read as follows:

"SOCIAL SECURITY BOARD; EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR; OTHER OFFICERS

"Social Security Board

"SEC. 702. (a)(1)(A) The Administration shall be governed by a Social Security Board. The Board shall be composed of three members appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The members shall be chosen, on the basis of their integrity, impartiality, and good judgment, from among individuals who, by reason of their education, experience, and attainments, are exceptionally qualified to perform the duties of members of the Board.

"(B)(i) Except as provided in clauses (ii) and (iii), members of the Board shall be appointed for terms of six years. A member of the Board may be removed only pursuant to a finding by the President of neglect of duty or malfeasance in office. The President shall transmit any such finding to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the Majority Leader of the Senate not later than five days after the date on which such finding is made.

"(ii) Of the members first appointed—

"(I) one shall be appointed for a term ending January 31, 1992,

"(II) one shall be appointed for a term ending January 31, 1994, and

"(III) one shall be appointed for a term ending January 31, 1996, as designated by the President at the time of appointment. Such members shall be appointed after active consideration of recommendations made by the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and of recommendations made by the chairman of the Committee on Finance of the Senate.

"(iii) The President may not nominate an individual for appointment to a term of office as member of the Board before the commencement of the President's term of office in which the member's term of office commences. Any member appointed to a term of office after the commencement of such term may serve under such appointment only for the remainder of such term. A member may, at the request of the President, serve for not more than one year after the expiration of his or her term until his or her successor has taken office. A member of the Board may be appointed for additional terms.

"(C) Not more than two members of the Board shall be of the same political party.

"(D) A member of the Board may not, during his or her term as member, engage in any other business, vocation, profession, or employment. A member of the Board may continue as a member of the Board for not longer than the 30-day period beginning on the date such member first fails to meet the requirements of the preceding sentence.

"(E) Two members of the Board shall constitute a quorum, except that one member may hold hearings.

"(F) A member of the Board shall be designated by the President to serve as Chairperson of the Board for a term of 4 years.

"(G) The Board shall meet at the call of the Chairperson or two members of the Board.

"(2) Each member of the Board shall be compensated at the rate provided for level II of the Executive Schedule.

"(3) The Board shall—

"(A) govern by regulation the old-age, survivors, and disability insurance program under title II and the supplemental security income program under title XVI,

"(B) establish and oversee efficient and effective operations in the Administration,

"(C) devise long-term plans to promote and maintain the effective implementation of programs referred to in subparagraph (A),

"(D) appoint an Executive Director of the Administration, as described in subsection (b), to act as the chief operating officer of the Administration responsible for administering the programs referred to in subparagraph (A),

"(E) constitute three of the members the Board of Trustees of the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Insurance Trust Fund and the Federal Disability Insurance Trust Fund, with the Chairperson of the Social Security Board serving as Chairperson of such Board of Trustees,

"(F) make annual budgetary recommendations relating to the Administration, including program costs of the supplemental security income program under title XVI, and defend such recommendations before the appropriate committees of each House of the Congress,

"(G) study and make recommendations to the Congress and the President as to the most effective methods of providing economic security through social insurance and supplemental security income and as to legislation and matters of administrative policy concerning the programs referred to in subparagraph (A),

"(H) provide the Congress and the President with the ongoing actuarial and other analysis undertaken by the Administration with respect to the programs referred to in subparagraph (A) and any other information relating to such programs, and

"(I) conduct policy analysis and research relating to the programs referred to in subparagraph (A).

"(4)(A) The Board may prescribe such rules and regulations as the Board determines necessary or appropriate to carry out the functions of the Administration. The regulations prescribed by the Board shall be subject to the rulemaking procedures established under section 553 of title 5, United States Code.

"(B) The Board may establish, alter, consolidate, or discontinue such organizational units or components within the Administration as the Board considers necessary or appropriate to carry out its functions, except that this subparagraph shall not apply with respect to any unit, component, or position provided for by this Act.

"(C) The Board may, with respect to the administration of the old-age, survivors, and disability insurance program under title II and the supplemental security income program under title XVI, assign duties, and delegate, or authorize successive redelegations of, authority to act and to render decisions, to such officers and employees as the Board may find necessary. Within the limitations of such delegations, redelegations, or assignments, all official acts and decisions of such officers and employees shall have the same force and effect as though performed or rendered by the Board.

"Executive Director

"(b)(1) There shall be in the Administration an Executive Director who shall be appointed by the Social Security Board.

"(2)(A) The Executive Director shall be appointed for a term of four years, except that the individual first appointed to the office of Executive Director shall be appointed for a term ending September 30, 1995. An individual appointed to a term of office as Executive Director after the commencement of such term may serve under such appointment only for the remainder of such term. An individual may, at the request of the Chairperson of the Board, serve as Executive Director after the expiration of his or her term for not more than one year until his or her successor has taken office. An individual may be appointed as Executive Director for additional terms.

"(B) An individual may be removed from the office of Executive Director before completion of his or her term only for cause found by the Board.

"(3) The Executive Director shall be compensated at the rate provided for level II of the Executive Schedule.

"(4) The Executive Director shall—

"(A) constitute the chief operating officer of the Administration, responsible for administering, in accordance with applicable statutes and regulations, the old-age, survivors, and disability insurance program under title II and the supplemental security income program under title XVI,

"(B) maintain an efficient and effective operational structure for the Administration,

"(C) implement the long-term plans of the Board to promote and maintain the effective implementation of such programs,

"(D) make annual budgetary recommendations of the Administration for the ongoing administrative costs of the Administration and the program costs of the supplemental security income program under title XVI and defend such recommendations before the Board,

"(E) advise the Board and the Congress on the effect on the administration of such programs of proposed legislative changes in such programs,

"(F) serve as Secretary of the Board of Trustees of the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Insurance Trust Fund and the Federal Disability Insurance Trust Fund,

"(G) report in December of each year to the Board for transmittal to the Congress concerning the administrative endeavors and accomplishments of the Administration, and

"(H) carry out such additional duties as are assigned by the Board from time to time.

Any reference to the Board in this Act or any other provision of law in connection with the exercise of a function of the Board which is delegated to the Executive Director pursuant to this section shall be considered a reference to the Executive Director.

"Deputy Director of Social Security

"(c)(1) There shall be in the Office of the Executive Director a Deputy Director, who shall be appointed by the Board. The Deputy Director shall be appointed for a term coextensive with the term of the Executive Director. An individual may be removed from the office of Deputy Director before completion of his or her term only for cause found by the Board.

"(2) The Deputy Director shall be compensated at the rate provided for level III of the Executive Schedule.

"(3) The Deputy Director shall perform such duties and exercise such powers as the Executive Director shall from time to time assign or delegate. The Deputy Director shall be Acting Executive Director of the Administration during the absence or disability of the Executive Director and, unless the Board designates another officer of the Government as Acting Executive Director, in the event of a vacancy in the office of the Executive Director.

"General Counsel

"(d)(1) There shall be in the Administration a General Counsel, who shall be appointed by and serve at the pleasure of the Board. The General Counsel shall be the principal legal officer in the Administration.

"(2) The General Counsel shall be compensated at the rate provided for level IV of the Executive Schedule.

"Inspector General

"(e)(1) There shall be in the Administration an Office of the Inspector General. Such Office shall be headed by an Inspector General appointed in accordance with the Inspector General Act of 1978.

"(2) The Inspector General shall be compensated at the rate provided for level IV of the Executive Schedule.

"Beneficiary Ombudsman

"(f)(1) There shall be in the Administration an Office of the Beneficiary Ombudsman, to be headed by a Beneficiary Ombudsman appointed by the Board.

"(2)(A) The Beneficiary Ombudsman shall be appointed for a term of five years, except that the individual first appointed to the office of Beneficiary Ombudsman shall be appointed for a term ending September 30, 1995. An individual appointed to a term of office as Beneficiary Ombudsman after the commencement of such term may serve under such appointment only for the remainder of such term. An individual may, at the request of the Chairperson of the Board, serve as Beneficiary Ombudsman after the expiration of his or her term for not more than one year until his or her successor has taken office. An individual may be appointed as Beneficiary Ombudsman for additional terms.

"(B) An individual may be removed from the office of Beneficiary Ombudsman before completion of his or her term only for cause found by the Board.

"(3) The Beneficiary Ombudsman shall be compensated at the rate provided for level V of the Executive Schedule.

"(4) The duties of the Beneficiary Ombudsman are as follows:

"(A) to represent within the Administration's decisionmaking process the interests and concerns of beneficiaries under the old-age, survivors, and disability insurance program under title II and the supplemental security income program under title XVI;

"(B) to review the Administration's policies and procedures for possible adverse effects on such beneficiaries;

"(C) to recommend within the Administration's decisionmaking process changes in policies which have caused problems for such beneficiaries;

"(D) to help resolve the problems under such programs of individual beneficiaries in unusual or difficult circumstances as determined by the Executive Director; and

"(E) to represent within the Administration's decisionmaking process the views of beneficiaries in the design of forms and the issuance of instructions.

"(5) The Board shall assure that the Office of the Beneficiary Ombudsman has staff sufficient to enable the Beneficiary Ombudsman to efficiently carry out his or her duties. Such staff shall be located in the regional offices, program centers, and central office of the Administration.

"(6) The annual report of the Board under section 704 shall include a description of the activities of the Beneficiary Ombudsman.".

(b) INTERIM AUTHORITY OF THE COMMISSIONER.—The President shall nominate for appointment the initial members of the Social Security Board not later than April 1, 1990. In the event that, as of July 1, 1990, all members of the Social Security Board have not been appointed, until all members of the Board have been appointed, the officer serving on July 1, 1990, as Commissioner of Social Security in the Department of Health and Human Services (or Acting Commissioner, if applicable), or such officer's successor, shall, while continuing to serve as Commissioner of Social Security (or Acting Commissioner) in such Department, serve as head of the Social Security Administration established under section 701 of the Social Security Act (as amended by this Act) and shall assume the powers and duties of such Board and of the Executive Director under such Act (as amended by this Act).

SEC. 103. PERSONNEL; BUDGETARY MATTERS; FACILITIES AND PROCUREMENT; SEAL OF OFFICE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 703 of the Social Security Act is amended to read as follows:

"ADMINISTRATIVE DUTIES OF THE SOCIAL SECURITY BOARD

"Personnel

"SEC. 703. (a)(1) The Social Security Board shall appoint such additional officers and employees as it considers necessary to carry out its functions. Except as otherwise provided in any other provision of law, such officers and employees shall be appointed, and their compensation shall be fixed, in accordance with title 5, United States Code.

"(2) The Board may procure the services of experts and consultants in accordance with the provisions of section 3109 of title 5, United States Code.

"(3) Notwithstanding any requirements of section 3133 of title 5, United States Code, the Director of the Office of Personnel Management shall authorize for the Administration a total number of Senior Executive Service positions which is greater than the number of such positions authorized in the Social Security Administration in the Department of Health and Human Services as of immediately before the date of the enactment of the Social Security Administrative and Investment Reform Act of 1989, to the extent that the greater number of such authorized positions is specified in the comprehensive work force plan as established and revised by the Board under subsection (b)(1). The total number of such positions authorized for the Administration pursuant to such section 3133 shall not at any time be less than the number of such authorized positions as of immediately before such date.

"(4) In addition to the positions of the Administration in the Executive Schedule specified in section 702, the Administration is authorized six additional positions at level IV of the Executive Schedule and six additional positions at level V of the Executive Schedule.

"(5) All authority and functions of the Office of Personnel Management under section 4703 of title 5, United States Code (relating to demonstration projects), to the extent such section relates to personnel or positions in the Administration, shall be exercised exclusively by the Board. The Board shall report annually to the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Finance of the Senate on the demonstration projects undertaken by the Board pursuant to this paragraph.

"Budgetary Matters

"(b)(1) Appropriations requests for staffing and personnel of the Administration shall be based upon a comprehensive work force plan, which shall be established and revised from time to time by the Board. The entire amount of appropriations provided for the administrative costs of the Administration shall be apportioned in the time period provided in title 31, United States Code, for apportionment and shall be apportioned for the entire period of availability without restriction or deduction by the apportioning officer or employee of the Office of Management and Budget or any other entity within the executive branch of the Federal Government, except as otherwise provided in this subsection.

"(2) The report submitted pursuant to section 704 shall include a section reflecting the use of budget authority provided to the Administration by quarters.

"(3)(A) Authority of the Administration for automated data processing procurement and facilities construction shall be provided in the form of contract authority covering the total costs of such acquisitions, to be available until expended.

"(B) Amounts necessary for the liquidation of contract authority provided pursuant to this paragraph are hereby made available from the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Insurance Trust Fund and the Federal Disability Insurance Trust Fund to the extent that the Board, with the concurrence of the Secretary of the Treasury, determines that such amounts are not necessary to meet the current obligations for benefit payments from the Trust Funds.

"(C) Funds appropriated for the Administration to be available on a contingency basis shall be apportioned only upon the occurrence of the stipulated contingency, as determined by the Board and reported to each House of the Congress.

"Seal of Office

"(c) The Board shall cause a seal of office to be made for the Administration of such design as the Board shall approve. Judicial notice shall be taken of such seal.".

(b) DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS RELATING TO PERSONNEL MATTERS.—As soon as practicable after June 30, 1990, the Social Security Board and the Director of the Office of Personnel Management shall, in consultation with the Comptroller General, jointly implement one or more demonstration projects under this subsection. Under each such project, for the period of its duration—
